The aim of the project, he said yesterday, is the preparation of a list of all instances of desegregation in northern areas where Negroes and whites were separated. The list, he explained, will include instances resulting from court orders, official mandates, pressure by organized groups, voluntary action or mere accidents of population shifts.

The survey, he added, will match a similar study of the seventeen southern and border states being made by the Southern Regional Council.

Job Is Strictly Reporting

"Ours is strictly a reporting job," Mr. Loth said. "We are trying to assemble the bare facts of desegregation without any comment or explanation. We propose to make an inventory of institutions, organizations or opportunities which, formerly confined to one race, now are open to members of both.

"We have divided these into the following categories: education on all levels, housing, jobs whether in factories or the professions, recreation facilities, transportation and public accommodations, religion, health facilities, official bodies such as juries or school boards and organizations of all kinds whether voluntary agencies or clubs or service groups or civic organizations."

Researchers are collecting data from the files of publications and national organizations here and in Washington. In addition, letters asking for information have been sent to several hundred state and local antidiscrimination commissons, church and professional groups, service and civic bodies, unions and individuals with experience in race relations. The study was begun a month ago.

"We have received the most encouraging cooperation," Mr. Loth said.

The inventory is confined to instances of the last two years.

"One reason is that this reduces the task to manageable proportions," Mr. Loth said. "Another is that it has seemed most appropriate to focus the similar southern inventory on the period since the Supreme Court decision in the public school cases.

Complete Picture Sought

"It is expected that both studies, North and South, will be published together to provide as complete a picture as possible of just what has been happening in this highly controversial area of American life.

"While we do not believe we will learn of every single instance of desegregation in the thirty-one states we are covering, we hope to present a thoroughly representative picture of what has taken place in the North in the last two years."

Mr. Loth said that "many leaders of both races have told us that such an inventory as we are compiling will be valuable in maintaining and continuing the orderly progress of desegregation."

"They and we believe," he added, "that it can give help to those who may be hesitating in a desegregation program, ammunition to those who face resistance or apathy in similar attempts and a more balanced account of facts to offset the sensational aspects of some current racial problems."

National attention has been focused on the South and border states, Mr. Loth noted. "But segregation is no less unjust because it is practiced in the North, as southern spokesmen frequently point out. Our inventory, we hope, will provide really comprehensive factual data on which to base a judgment as to how successfully the North is proceeding."

Pulse of the Public

Constitution

'Those Who Attack Integrity and Motives Of Supreme Court Do the South an Injustice'

Mon. 4-16-56 P. 4 Atlanta, Ga.

Augusta—As a new Englander and as a temporary resident of Augusta, it has been my experience that in our newspapers and other outlets for public expression the views and motives of both North and South have been misrepresented.

The people I have known in the North have been brought up to consider the Negro race our equal as far as potential and rights are concerned and also to believe that existing cultural, social, and economic inequalities may be corrected through legal and social change. We have received this training in the family, in the school and in the church. Many of us have been brought up with Negroes as neighbors, played ball with them and gone to school with them, which has strengthened this basic attitude.

Questioning the sincerity of Northern people, and attacking the integrity of the Supreme Court is unrealistic, is resented as much as the South resents Northern intrusion and tends to set up a barrier to Northern understanding of your problems.

F. K. BERLEW.

* * *

GOP Foreign Policy Called Pure Bungling

Atlanta—Ralph McGill's analysis of Dulles' foreign policy bungling and mismanagement is as interesting as it is thought-provoking. The mistakes are so many and so obvious that one need not engage in partisan politics to detect them.

To cite just one example, we can cite Israel in the Middle East turmoil. If our State department would make an emphatic statement to Egypt's Nasser and the Arab leaders that Israel is here to stay as an independent nation, there might be hope for peace, at least in that part of the world.

JOSEPH D. FRANCO.

* * *

Pioneer Society Asks For Trash Containers

Atlanta — It is understandable why the members of Atlanta's pioneer families take special pride in the appearance of the streets of our city. Therefore, we suggest that containers be supplied to those points where the paper carriers assemble to arrange the papers for distribution to subscribers, leaving great quantities of paper wrappings, etc., to be blown over sidewalks making a most unsightly litter.

If this suggestion meets the approval of those with the authority to act upon this suggestion it will be deeply appreciated.

ATLANTA PIONEER WOMEN'S SOCIETY.

* * *

Tenseness in South Blamed on Radicals

Stone Mountain — Thinking persons today realize that radicals on both sides were responsible for the War Between the States.

Lincoln kept this element, even in his own cabinet, under control but having put him out of the way this evil influence prevailed.

The suggestion of a senator from Oregon that a police force patterned after the famed Canadian Mounties be sent into the South plainly shows that these same influences are again at work. Today

Conflict Over Segregation to Fear of Progress

Sun. 4-15-56

The "open conflict" over racial segregation in the South is caused by a fear of progress that prevails throughout the country, Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer of Washington, author and lecturer, declared here yesterday.

New York, N.Y.

MRS. MEYER ASKS BIRACIAL STUDIES

Times P. 44-L

Author-Lecturer Attributes

Mrs. Meyer delivered the principal address at the sixth annual alumni conference of the New York School of Social Work, Columbia University. More than 600 social workers attended the lecture, which was held in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth Avenue at Ninetieth Street.

"The all-prevailing tendency in our country today is to fear progress, accept conformity of thought and call everyone a socialist who recommends change," Mrs. Meyer said. "If continued, this can only lead to dangerous animosities and to open conflict, which at this moment is gaining headway in the South over segregation.

"This crucial problem must be seen as a more acute form of irrationalism, anti-intellectualism, intolerance and group hostilities, which exist in every community. Thus we are all at fault, not merely Southern politicians, for this alarming rebellion against the Supreme Court."

U. S. Commission Favored

Mrs. Meyer recommended that white and Negro community leaders work together in the South on a solution to the problem. She urged social workers to support the appointment of a biracial Federal commission to investigate segregation. Similar commissions should then be set up on state and local levels, she added.

In the afternoon there were panel discussions in the school, Fifth Avenue at Ninety-first Street, on civil liberties, legislation, local community activities and party politics.

In the civil rights panel, Dean Kenneth D. Johnson of the school called for withholding all Federal money from any state that defied the Supreme Court decision on segregation. In the discussion of politics, City Councilman Stanley Isaacs urged social workers to establish friendly relations with both political parties. Stanley H. Lowell, assistant to Mayor Wagner, also urged political activity, but not partisanship, upon social workers.

In the panel on legislation, Julius Edelstein, executive assistant to Senator Herbert H. Lehman, said that juvenile delinquency was a national problem but that the Federal Government had not yet taken responsibility for meeting it.

In the discussion of local community activities, Mrs. Mildred Galef, president of the White Plains Council of Community Services, cautioned social workers that they would be judged by what practical help they could give the people.

Says Negroes Ready To Pay Price For Justice, Freedom

Inferno P.1 Sat. 9-29-56 Houston, Tex.

NEW YORK —— The American Negro is prepared for trouble "if that is the price" in his fight for "justice and freedom," a prominent Negro writer said today.

Prize-winning reporter - author Carl Rowan described "What Negroes Really Want" in an article in the new issue of Look Magazine.

"From illiterate cotton pickers to college presidents," Mr Rowan said, "I heard the same story."

"The Negro wants his children to grow up free from the scourages of illness, ignorance and poverty.

He wants the opportunity to work at the best job for which his training qualify him.

"He wants to live in a society where individuals are free to associate, whatever their race or background.

"The Negro wants a voice in the government that shapes his life.

"Perhaps most of all, the Negro wants the dignity to which free men are entitled. He wants to be judged on his individual merits as a first-class American citizen, and not as a savage whose tastes remain close to the caterpillar and cockroach," as Judge Tom P. Brady of Brookhaven, Mississippi, put it."

"The Negro is confident," Mr Rowan said in Look, because, "There is a new Negro in the land. He is better educated, economically stronger, and he strides toward freedom with a determination bolstered by the knowledge that the major forces at work in the world are on his side."

Race Problem Seen More Important Than A-Bomb

Daily World P.1 Fri, 6-22-56 Atlanta, Ga.

NEW YORK—The race problem, a recently-completed national survey discloses, is considered more important by the American public than the atom bomb, international hostility, juvenile delinquency, or any other problem. It is the most frequently mentioned problem in the U. S. today.

In the second of a series of articles based on the first national race problem survey, the July Catholic Digest reveals that North and South, Negroes and whites combined, the Negro-white problem is viewed as most important by 45 percent of those interviewed. Juvenile delinquency trails far behind with only 36 percent considering it most important, while 32 percent regard the atom bomb as the big problem.

While more than half of the northern whites and Negroes of both sections think of the problem in terms of white prejudice, fear, and hatred, (and the resulting discrimination and inequality), only about one-fourth of southern whites would accept a definition along these lines.

Nearly half the southern whites think that the real problem is desegregation. In response to the query "What would you say seems to be standing most in the way of solving the Negro-white problem today?", prejudice is the obstacle named by most people, even among southern whites. But, in the opinion of Negroes and northern whites, the southern whites themselves are the second most serious obstacle.

Among southern whites, although 24 percent see "prejudice" as the major difficulty, 14 percent think desegregation blocks a solution, and 10 percent say it is "agitation and publicity."

Most people also, the Catholic Digest survey shows, think the race problem a difficult one to solve. The definition "hard problem" was given by 26 percent of northern whites; 88 percent of southern whites; 81 percent of the northern Negroes, and 72 percent of southern Negroes.

Negroes, however, are much more inclined to think that progress is being made towards a solution. About one-third of the whites interviewed think the problem will never be solved. But only one-tenth of the Negroes take so sombre a view.

Asked how long they thought it would take to solve the problem, northern whites estimated 27 years as compared with the southern white estimate of 16 years. Northern Negroes estimate a solution may be arrived at in 23 years while southern Negroes believe solution will come in 10.

Additional material gathered in this first nation-wide survey of attitudes towards the Negro-white problem will appear in subsequent issues of the Catholic Digest. The survey was made for the Digest by an independent opinion research firm.

Sees Integrated Society As Inevitable In U. S.

Daily World P.1 Sat. 6-9-56 Atlanta, Ga.

NASHVILLE, Tenn —The inevitability of an integrated America was heraled here this week by one of this country's top women newspaper executives.

Mrs. Robert L. Vann, publisher said "It (integration) may come too slowly for some of us and it may come too fast for others, but, as sure as night follows doy, it is coming."

Mrs. Vann was principal speaker at 1956 baccalaureate-commencement exercises at Jewell Academy. She addressed a graduating class to nearly 100 members and friends and relatives here to see the colorful program from 20 states.

She emphatically denied the claim that integration would lead to "mongrelization" of the races or that it would open the way for Negroes to marry whites.

"Negro men and women are not interested in marrying anybody just because of race," pointed out Mrs. Vann.

"Prepare," she told the graduates, "for integration when that sure day arrives."

Bishop M. L. Jewell, founder-director of Jewell Academy, reported "unusual progress in all departments of the academy for 1955-56." Bishop Jewell is senior bishop and chief overseer of the Church of the Living God. Pilar and Ground of Truth, which supports the school financially.

SEDITION POWER FOR STATES GAINS

Times P. 40-C

Senate Unit Approves Bill to Restore Rights Ended by High Court Ruling

Thu. 6-7-56 New York, N.Y.

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 31—A bill to restore the validity of state anti-sedition laws was approved today by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The measure would, in effect, wipe out a controversial decision by the Supreme Court that Congress had pre-empted the field for Federal Jurisdiction. The 6-to-3 decision was handed down last April 2 in the case of Steve Nelson, a Communist leader. He had been convicted under Pennsylvania law of encouraging the "seditious overthrow" of the United States.

The Supreme Court held that conspiracy to advocate overthrow of the Federal Government was punishable only under the Smith Act, passed by Congress in 1940. The decision did not limit the power of states to pupnish sedition against state governments.

The Nelson decision drew strong criticism from some members of Congress and state attorneys general. At a Senate Inteurnal Security subcommittee hearing on the case, Senators Joseph R. McCarthy, Republican of Wisconsin, and James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, attacked the Supreme Court justices as "politicians instead of lawyers."

Bridges Introduces Bill

Some forty-one states have their own sedition laws. At a meeting of the National Association of Attorneys General last weke, a resolution supporting Congressional action to reverse the effect of the Nelson decision was approved 31 to 10. The Justice Department also has endorsed the legislation.

The bill approved today was introduced by Senator Styles Bridges, Republican of New Hampshire, with eleven Republican and thre Democratic cosponsors. There was no record vote in the Judiciary Committee on the motion to send the legislation out.

Much broader and more drastic legislation also has been introduced in the field. It would provide that no law of Congress pre-empt any legislative subject for Federal control unless the law specifically provides so.

A bill like Senator Bridges', dealing only with the sedition law, also ispending before the House Judiciary Committee. A subcommittee of that group heard testimony favoring it today from the Massachusetts Commission to Investigate Communism and Subversive A ties. Members of the commiss said the Nelson decision virtually had "put them out of business."

VOICE Of The People

Herald P. 3-6
Sun. 9-9-56
Miami, Fla.

School Days

—Minneapolis Star

GENERAL

foreigners, how can we, here in the South, keep it from the Southern Negro? It is his right as a citizen of the United States and who are we to take it away.

Visit any northern city and you will find the foreign groups living all to themselves. They eat their native foods, speak only their native tongues. They refuse to integrate with other nationalities. I do not have anything against these people but I feel that they owe the United States a certain amount of loyalty.

The Negro is a patriotic American who eats the same food you and I do and who speaks the same language and yet we hold him back. We do not accept him because in the eyes of some, the Negro is beneath him in class.

It seems ridiculous to me that we spend millions of dollars each year in propaganda to send over to Europe and Asia about our wonderful land with "equal rights" for all. All the Communists need is one story about the burning of crosses in front of the homes of Supreme Court judges and all our money has gone to waste.

My only disappointment with the Southern Negro is that he hasn't fought for his rights all these years.

BARBARA WINN PAPE

Oh Yeah!

Defender P. 9
Sat. 9-22-56
Chicago, Ill.

Doesn't Make Sense

Herald P. 3-6
Sun. 9-9-56
Miami, Fla.

We Accept Foreigners But Segregate Negroes

Editor The Herald: This country opens its doors to scores of foreign people each year. They come here because they are oppressed in their native lands and they truly believe that America is "the land of the free."

Each year many of these people of foreign background reach the highest peaks in business and the arts.

If we are to give this wonderful gift of freedom to these

Most Say They Are 'Different'

Defender Sat. 8-4-56
Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK — Eight out of ten Whites agree with the Declaration of Independence that "all men are created equal." Seven out of ten say they like, rather than dislike, most Negroes. Yet only four out of ten Whites would be willing to live next door to Negroes. Only five of ten would even be willing to live in the same neighborhood.

Why? "Because Negroes are different, that's why." Approximately half the Whites in the U. S. say that and many of the reasons they give reveal extreme dislike for most Negroes.

There are some of the facts reported in the August Catholic Digest in the first naitonal survey of Negro-White relations. A wide gap between principle and practice was revealed by the answers to the survey questions.

PEOPLE CHANGE ANSWERS

People would tell the questioner that they believed one thing, then admit cheerfully a few minutes later that they practiced another. Certain persons kept a consistent point of view throughout the interview. But many kept switching about, according to whether the questions were abstract or concrete.

Despite the fact that seven out of 10 Whites claim to like Negroes the answers to specific questions showed very different reactions. In the South, though two-thirds of the Whites like Negroes, half would draw the line at working next to them. Fully eight out of ten would refuse to live next door. In the North, half the Whites would draw the line at living next door to a Negro family.

Confucious Says

THINK NEGROES DIFFERENT

Ideals apart, just about half of white Americans feel that Negroes are "different."

"Except for their color, in what ways would you say that Negroes are different from Whites". They aren't different; one-half of the northern Whites and a fourth of the southern Whites say that. Those who said the are different gave more derogatory explanations than did neutral or favorable ones.

The strange thing about all this is not so much the fact that many people look down on Negroes or wouldn't live next door to them. The strange thing is that so many people who believe in differences still say they like Negroes and say that all men are created equal.

In theory, most Whties accept Negroes. In practice, few do. How does this affect the race problem? It might indicate that most Whites are probably ready to admit Negroes as legal equals, though not as social equals. For when Whites think abstractly of the Negro race, they tend to think of Negroes as the equals of other Whites. But certainly not, in terms of the "different Negro next door, the equal of themselves."

Davis Stresses His Stand on Segregation

Journal + Constitution
Sun. 11-28-56
Atlanta, Ga.
P. 6-B

The segregation question has been raised as a campaign issue in the Fifth District congressional race by Rep. James C. Davis.

Meanwhile, his Republican opponent announced formation of a "Doctors for Thrower" organization, along with some new members of the "Democrats for Thrower."

Rep. Davis, in a major campaign speech, cited his own stand against integration and declared:

"You know how my Republican opponent stands on these questions. We cannot look to either candidate for president for help. Help will have to come from Congress. I offer you sincere, vigorous, aggressive support of our customs, institutions and way of life."

He read a Negro newspaper clipping on a speech by an Atlanta Republican official which cirticized the congressional investigation of Washington school integration headed by Rep. Davis.

* * *

THE SPEECH was made by John W. Lundeen of the Fulton County Republican Committee to the West Side Voters League, a Negro organization, according to Rep. Davis' speech. Mr. Lundeen was quoted as saying the Davis probe was "embarrassing not only to you but also to the entire United States. He did it to promote himself and the one-party system in Georgia."

Rep. Davis then read a statement from the chairman of the House District of Columbia Committee, which declared Rep. Davis and his committee had carried out the school investigation "without the thought of gaining any political advantage or for the purpose of embarrassing anyone."

His committee performed a service to the nation in bringing out "sordid facts" about the Washington school integration, Rep. Davis said. It worked against "frantic and determined" efforts by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and others to stop the probe, he said.

* * *

"YET I AM opposed by a vote-hunting Republican who, in his effort to obtain the votes of the minority pressure blocs who can be influenced by the NAACP, and to rouse their hostility and antagonism to me in this campaign is telling them that I created this subcommittee and carried out this investigation to embarrass the Negroes and the whole United States, and to promote myself and the one-party system in the Fifth District of Georgia," Rep. Davis asserted.

He also accused Mr. Thrower of taking no stand "upon any legislative program, even noncontroversial programs, to say nothing of those which are heated and controversial."

* * *

THROWER HEADQUARTERS announced formation of the doctors' group Saturday.

The group has written a letter to all members of the DeKalb and Fulton Medical Assns., urging support of Mr. Thrower as a means of abolishing the county unit system in Fifth District congressional races.

Listed as signers of the letter are Dr. R. Bruce Logue, Dr. H. Walker Jernigan, Dr. Robert L. Whipple, Dr. James P. Hanner, Dr. Arthur J. Merrill, Dr. Hal M. Davidson, Dr. Charles K. Howard and Dr. John Akin.

The doctors' letter said that "we have rarely had the privilege of placing a man of Mr. Thrower's position in public office."

New women members of the "Democrats for Thrower" were announced as: Mrs. J. Winston Huff, Mrs. George Goodwin, Mrs. F. Levering Neely, Mrs. James S. Moore, Mrs. William C. Pauley, Mrs. Josephine J. Heyman, Mrs. Paul Courtney Gaertner, Mrs. Cullen B. Gosnell, Mrs. Brad Ansley, Mrs. W. A. Alexander and Mrs. Richard Hocking.

38a 1956 GENERAL

Colored People Around The World

When Juan Peron, exiled Argentina dictator, and his new girlfriend left Panama Airport for Venezuela, S.A., he was accompanied by this colored aide.

This United States seaman smiles at a General Hospital nurse in far away Malay, Asia, after donating blood to the Red Cross.

Afro-American Sat. 9-1-56 Baltimore Md.

Thousands 'passed,' says Life in segregation series

Afro-American 9-15 Baltimore, Md. Sat. 9-15-56

NEW YORK — "Since 1900 several hundred thousand Americans having a portion of colored blood may have 'passed' or become 'white,'" says Life Magazine in its current (Sept. 10) issue, the second installment in a five-part series on the "Background of Segregation."

The current Life issue states that only 15 per cent of the American colored population is of unmixed African descent, all others having white, American Indian or both in their ancestry.

An Oregon miscegenation law once defined a colored person as anyone having one fourth colored blood. In Missouri, Florida, and South Carolina and other southern border states, various laws have defined a colored person as anyone having as little as one-eighth colored blood.

The ultimate is reached in Alabama, Georgia and Texas where for some legal purposes all persons of "African descent" have been held to be colored.

Integration Law Creates Suspicion, Says Byrnes

Post-Times Herald P. A-6 Sun. 9-23-56 Washington D.C.

MANCHESTER, Vt., Sept. 22 (UP)—Former South Carolina Gov. James F. Byrnes said tonight that "confidence and cooperation" between the South's Negroes and whites has been displaced by "suspicion and fear" since the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decrees.

Byrnes

The 76-year-old former Secretary of State and Supreme Court Justice said in an address prepared for delivery to the Vermont Bar Association that "in the South the court decision has undone all that was accomplished in half a century" by leaders of both races.

"Confidence and cooperation have been displaced by suspicion and fear," he said. "Instead of improving, the situation is worsening."

Byrnes discussing the court's rulings at the invitation of the president of the Vermont Bar Association, cited as examples racial disturbances in Kentucky, Tennessee and Texas where schools were integrated by court order.

"In those communities, the Negroes constitute less than 10 per cent of the population. When it is attempted to force integration in communities where the Negro population is greater, the problem will be greater."

Byrnes criticed the use of National Guard troops to escort Negro children to newly integrated schools in Tennessee and Kentucky, saying:

"The National Guard, which is not called out to escort a willing worker through a picket line in a labor controversy, cannot be called out to escort Negro students through a picket line in a school controversy without leaving scars."

He said southern white people will help Negroes provide segregated private schools if Federal courts "force the public schools to close."

Byrnes declared education should not be denied "innocent Negro children who are being used as pawns by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in an effort to solve overnight a great social problem."

BIAS ASSAILED AS 'SIN'

Times 38a New York

Vatican Paper Says Race Bans 'Deny Genius of U. S.'

VATICAN CITY, Sept. 6 (UP) —The Vatican newspaper Osservatore Romano today denounced discrimination against Negroes in the United States as a "sin against the nature of Christi-

anitz." Adv. 7-1-56

The unofficial newspaper based its editorial criticism on race disturbances over school integration at Oliver Springs, Tenn., and called racial discrimination a "historical paradox which mortifies" the United States.

The editorial was tempered with praise for the United States as a nation in its stand against oppression.

But it described race conflicts as a "contradiction which denies its [the United States'] genius."

It was the bluntest denunciation by the paper on the issue since last October when it castigated the congregation of the St. Cecelia Mission in Jesuit Bend, La., for having prevented a Negro priest from saying mass.

Segregation And U.S. Prestige Abroad

Advertiser Tues. 9-4-56

ONE of the favorite arguments of neo-abolitionists is that segregation must be broken down immediately to placate the colored peoples of the world who won't love the U.S. as long as racial separation continues.

Typical of this kind of argument was the speech the other day by Borough President Hulan E. Jack of Manhattan. Welcoming 200 delegates to the opening of the 31st annual convention of the National Bar Association (a Negro society, Jack said: P. 4-a

We cannot afford at this critical stage of international affairs to give aid to enemies of democracy. The hearts of the American people reach out to nations whose populations are throwing off the yoke of colonialism. If we are to retain world leadership as the symbol of freedom, we must set our own house in order as rapidly as possible to command the respect of awakening men desiring to walk on an equal basis with all mankind.

Since anti-American feeling is rampant in nations practicing more rigid forms of caste and class separation than are in effect anywhere in the U.S., this reason for desegregation seems to rest on a shaky predicate. But if the opinion of peoples of other nations should dictate American custom and laws, Jack must also believe that we should deliberately reduce America to a level of abject poverty so these "awakening men" may indeed walk on an equal basis with us.

For it has been demonstrated time and time again that the real basis of anti-American sentiment wherever it exists is envy: envy of our wealth, luxury and comparatively easy existence. Of course our detractors abroad always cite some other reason for disliking us—jealousy not being an accepted ground for criticism—but this is the heart of it.

American abundance is an infinitely more important barrier to our international popularity than U.S. social customs. If Jack and others who have advanced similar arguments are correct in placing top priority on the need for building American prestige abroad, the first order of business should be to blast our great coal mines, dynamite Wall Street, set fire to our great grain fields, lay waste our industries, and distribute the contents of Fort Knox to our critics. American popularity would soar overnight.

The Public's Right To Know

Advertiser Sat. 10-27-56 P. 4-a

Montgomery Ala.

Many Newspapers Are Carrying The Taboo Against 'Negro' To Absurd Extremes In Their News Columns, Reflecting Prejudice In Reverse

From Time Magazine

WHEN a woman kidnaped a six-week-old infant from a baby sitter's apartment in Brooklyn a fortnight ago, the police alarm included a detail essential to the hunt for the baby: both the kidnaper and the child were Negroes. But except for the New York Daily News, no Manhattan daily so identified the missing baby. And most of the papers buried the kidnaper's race deep in their stories, while the New York Journal-American described the hunted woman closely from her missing upper teeth to her open-toed shoes, without anywhere mentioning the color of her skin.

The case dramatized the absurd extreme resulting from one approach to a problem that worries thoughtful editors across the U.S.: When should a Negro be so identified in print? The Brooklyn story ended fortunately in the baby's recovery and the arrest of kidnaper Mary Jackson, 35. But in their reluctance to identify a Negro as such, most of the editors not only misled readers who might have offered important clues but also created the false, inflammatory impression that a Negro woman had kidnaped a white baby.

Pressure And Ads

THE taboo against using the Negro label is the product of pressure groups and the conscientious efforts of newspapers to be fair to a minority. Once it was hardly a problem, since newspapers ran little news about Negroes. But now newspapers are running far more news about the Negro than ever before, partly because of his gradual rise in U.S. society, partly because they are wooing him as a reader since his improved economic status has interested advertisers in the Negro market.

Though it varies from one newspaper to another, the ban on racial identification is usually lifted only when the story (1) is favorable, (2) involves a wanted felon, or (3) would make no sense otherwise, e.g., the report of a racial clash. The result: Negroes are seldom identified when they figure in crime stories.

But is a newspaper properly serving either its readers, its community or the interests of the Negro when it masks the fact that there is a heavier crime rate among Negroes than whites? In New York City, for example, it would come as a surprise to most newspaper readers that Negroes comprise 10% of the population but commit about 35% of the crime. Says a police official in a big California city: "Sixty percent of our crime lies squarely in [the Negroes'] lap, and the papers ought to show the community what the crime problem is and where it is. It's only fair reporting, no more. It would pressure responsible Negroes into doing something about it."

'Mexican-American'

SAYS a Los Angeles news executive: "Frankly, I do think there is a tendency in the press to be tender in handling Negro stories. But we are even more chary in using the word 'Mexican' or 'Mexican-descent.'" Says another Los Angeles editor: "Where we run into the most controversy is when we just give the names of boys involved in East Side gang fights. Then we get complaints from Mexican-American groups. We say: 'Well, we didn't say Mexican.' And their answer is: 'You don't have to.' They want us not to print the names at all."

The fact that the crime rate may be higher among certain minority groups, argue some editors, reflects not on their race but on their living conditions; only by airing the problem can any solution be stimulated. Furthermore, they argue that the public is entitled to full information, that race is as pertinent in many cases as is the fact that a man is a lawyer, doctor or executive. Says one Seattle editor: "Some newspapers are forgetting the readers in their zeal to follow an ideology. We favor integration in the schools, but we believe that in many cases, the readers are entitled to simple descriptions of the persons involved."

Sharp Split

OFTEN newspapers run a picture as a means of evading their rule. But this technique can sometimes be misleading. Last week Manhattan's Daily News and Daily Mirror, reporting the murder of one 15-year-old boy by another, made it plain with a photograph that the offender was a Negro. But in failing in the stories to identify the victim as a Negro, the papers left the reader to speculate whether or not the incident involved whites and reflected racial antagonism.

Sometimes it is hard for editors to decide when they would be justified in using a racial tag. They split sharply two months ago in their handling of agency stories from Germany reporting the court-martial conviction of seven U.S. soldiers for raping a 15-year-old German girl. Wire services reported that all seven were Negroes, but many papers cut that fact from their stories. Some newsmen, such as Executive Editor Milburn P. Akers of the Chicago Sun-Times, argued last week that the omission was justified. But Denver Post Managing Editor Mort Stern said: "I felt we owed it to our readers to include that paragraph."

The Times Explains

The New York Times edited out the reference to Negroes, but Managing Editor Turner Catledge admitted that "it was a real problem. We were wrong if the crime was brought about by racial tension. But we were never able to satisfy ourselves on that point." Catledge noted that the Times' handling may have created an unfair impression of U.S. occupation troops as a whole. He added: "A real consideration is the fact that the Germans have developed a special dislike for Negro troops because of their acts over there. We might have made the authorities here more aware of that if we had printed the race. But we decided our main duty is to please our readers, not to satisfy officials."

Press Must Tell Real Dixie Story

Defender P.3
Sat. 6-16-56
Chicago, Ill.

DR. JAMES NABRIT

ATLANTA, Ga. — A noted lawyer declared last week that southern pressure groups are using the nation's mass communications media to distort the facts on segregation, and called upon the leaders of his race to use the same facilities to refute their claims.

The speaker was Dr. James H. Nabrit, jr., secretary of Howard university and a veteran civil rights attorney. His remarks were made at Atlanta university where he delivered the commencement address.

If the southern attack on desegregation goes unanswered, Dr. Nabrit said, the Negro stands to lose the support of northern whites in his fight for equal treatment.

Recent articles in national magazines by southern spokesmen and their appearance on network radio and television were seen by Dr. Nabrit as part of the concerted plan to defend segregation.

The plan has two adjectives, he asserted. "One is to convince the North that the South is adamant in its opposition to integration and will never accept it," he said.

"The second is to so bewilder the North with stories of the Negroes and their diseases, ignorance, slothness, political crookedness and immorality as to cause the North to wipe its hands of the question and relegate it to the South for solution."

The arena of battle had shifted from the courts to the field of social action, the attorney declared.

Housing, School Plan Cited

Defender
Sat. 6-16-56
Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK —After a personal survey of Negro segregation in the North, a white Southern-born editor has reported that the Northern Negro "often lives a life that is, in fact, more segregated than that of the Negro in the South."

P.5

Look Magazine editor, George Leonard, a native of Atlanta, disclosed in an article published in the new issue of Look, that "there's a big gap between the law of the North, which grants the Negro equality; and reality, which confines him to a "Negro ghetto."

Citing Philadelphia, as a case in point, Leonard found that Negroes there attend all Negro schools, are taught by Negro teachers, play and associate exclusively with Nero neihbors and are refused housing in non-Negro sections of town.

All this occurs, Leonard found, in spite of a local "Commission on Human Relations," which fights discrimination, and a Fair Employment Practices Act, which makes discrimination in employment illegal."

ALL TALK

Leonard quotes an unidentified Southerner in his Look article as saying, "too many Northerners talk integration and act segregation. What's needed up there is a mirror that shows bigots. A lot of Yankees couldn't look into that mirror without seeing themselves."

"In Philadelphia, as in any Northern city," Leonard said in Look, "life for a Negro is like walking through a mine field. He may get through unscathed, but when he least expects it, his world may explode,"

"Whereas, in the South, a Negro's limitations are clearly defined by law and custom, in the North he lives with only a hazy idea of where his limitations lie."

HOUSING SEGREGATION

'Segregation in the North does not stop in private housing," Leonard continued. "Public housing projects often go all Negro simply because there are so many Negroes requiring shelter."

"The Negro citizen outside of the South," Leonard said, "looks into the unmasked face of Jim Crow when he tries to find a place to live. Most suburbs are closed to him. When he succeeds in buying a house in a white urban neighborhood, the white residents generally move away in panic.

"He is left the colored district of the village, the great center of the city."

Leonard indicates that Negroes in the North are thankful for the laws and commissions working against segregation and discrimination. "But they know in their hearts that they are not yet really free, and will never be free until they can put their money on the line and buy or rent a house in the neighborhood of their choice."

"We can buy a Cadillac or a Brooks Brothers suit," Negroes say with regret, "but we can't buy a home. Our money's just no good."

THOMAS L. STOKES—

Post-Herald P.14
Thurs. 6-7-56
Birmingham, Ala.

Integration Issue Gets More Confused

WASHINGTON — The situation is getting confused in both parties on the integration issue and who stands for what in which section of the country.

This poses a problem that voters, white and Negro, must wrestle with.

For example, when "Jiggs" Donohue, campaign manager for Sen. Estes Kefauver, blurted out in the finale of the California primary battle that a vote for Adlai Stevenson would be a vote for Senators Eastland (D., Miss.) and Ellender (D., La.) and Herman Talmadge of Georgia he adopted a line previously announced for the Republican Party to use against the Democratic Party as a whole.

The intent is plain in that the three Southerners are segregationists, though it came surprisingly from Mr. Donohue as it served to dramatize the well-known schism in his own party, the Democratic.

Hitherto it has been left to Republicans to point that out.

* * *

HOW REPUBLICAN'S PLAN to dramatize the Democratic schism by keeping the spotlight constantly on the Southern segregationists was explained clearly a few days prior to the Donohue blast by Richard L. Tobin, public relations director of the Citizens for Eisenhower, in a speech here at a conference of that organization.

He urged his fellow Republicans to impress upon Negroes that if Democrats win Congress in the coming election and thus organize and control it again, important committees would be run by "bigoted Southern political hacks." Then he added:

"Drum into Negro voters over and over again this true fact: a vote for a Democrat is a vote for Eastland."

Senator Eastland is singled out as the target and symbol, as you know, because he is chairman of the important Judiciary Committee which has jurisdiction over all civil rights bills, and would be chairman again if Democrats win the Senate in the November election.

The strategy outlined by Mr. Tobin is designed to win over sufficient Negro voters from the Democrats in populous states and urban areas in the North to unseat enough Democrats in House and Senate to give Republicans control of the next Congress.

* * *

CONFIDENT as are Republicans that President Eisenhower will be re-elected, they are not at all sure of regaining Congress. They won Congress, only by a hair-line margin in 1952 because of the Eisenhower pulling power; but then lost it in the 1954 Congressional elections when the President was not a candidate and did not have his name at the head of the ballot.

They believe that the Negro vote, coupled with the President's presence on the ticket might be the combination that would recapture Congress for them in November.

Obviously the Eastland-segregationist campaign line will be beamed only at the North and not at the South, where Republicans are counting upon the continued personal popularity of President Eisenhower to maintain at least some of the gains they made there in 1952.

The President has kept himself out of the integration controversy, which has helped him in the South.

He has said far less than most any Democrat in public life that you could name, and especially Adlai Stevenson and Senator Kefauver.

What little the President said at a news conference some weeks ago would locate him with the "moderates" who uphold the Supreme Court public school decision and urge gradual implementation, and without use of force.

That brackets him and Adlai Stevenson, who is trying desperately to hold the Democratic Party together and thus retain Southern support for his nomination, by what the 1952 Democratic candidate contends is responsible national leadership.

Is it possible for Adlai Stevenson to preserve that necessarily precarious blance within his party, or will other leaders demanding a more rapid integration process prevail in the convention and alienate the South?

As for President Eisenhower, will he be able to keep his support in the South, even though he continues to remain aloof from the controversy, if the issue is actively agitated outside the South by the Republican Party and citizens for Eisenhower along the lines urged by Mr. Tobin?

These questions must await an answer. They epitomize the dilemma of the Negro, voters generally, and of many leaders in both parties.

'Integrate or perish,' says Talladega College speaker

Birmingham, Ala.
Average 10-56
P. 17-A

TALLADEGA, Ala., June 3— "The South must integrate or perish."

President Arthur D. Gray, of Talladega College, made this statement in an address to graduates of Talladega College.

He also called the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People" the most significant social organ in American life for liberty of minds and hearts of all Americans. "But," he added, "how many do not contribute to it?"

"Segregation — the 'Southern way of life'—protects the happiness and insists on the comfort of some Southerners only," he declared. "But there can be no closed shop freedom for all men, and their burdens are interrelated."

Jefferson Ish Jr., of Chicago, the commencement speaker, pointed out that "Talladega College was open to all from its beginning."

"CAN ANYONE tell how far this country would have advanced as a world power if other institutions, similarly circumstanced, had found expression such as it Talladega's?" he asked.

The market of Negroes, now represented by 14 million Negroes in the U. S., with an income of approximately $12 billion annually, is now integrated in a competitive world, Ish declared.

The following Alabamians received awards: Rufus Cook, Birmingham, Avery speech award; Alethea Williams, Selma, modern language award; Julian Mason Davis, Birmingham, Rose Conley Craig award; Malbour Watson, Birmingham, second Little Theater award, and Terrelia Young, Tuskegee, Buell Gordon Gallagher awards.

Custom, Habit Affect Integration

Were it not for the force of habits and customs, integration would move much faster. The ancient Cyprian speaks of custom as the antiquity of error. Custom flows from the native urge of "consciousness of kind," another version of "birds of a feather flock together." Such native trends are often emphasized to the nth degree.

Many good and honest people stress race to the point of doing grave injustice to individuals and causes for apparently no reason other than custom and color. Since a person is not responsible for his color, he should not have to suffer or be embarrassed for being white or black, brown or red. There are those who seem unable to see beyond one's color. Prejudice makes one color conscious. Love should make one color blind. It so happens that color is but skin deep, and that only through the epidermis or outer skin, which may be erased through bleaching.

It is but natural for race and kind to seek its place and level. Those who have never known anything but segregation and have had little or no social contacts with other peoples instinctively move towards and mingle with their own. It's somewhat like water seeking its level. And this perfectly natural habit is continued even after signs are removed and integration legalized and practiced. This with the carry-over of slavery, now a century passed, account for the many serious tensions accompanying integration.

The concept of "separate but equal" is but a subterfuge under the heavy strain of social mores or customs. The theory is only an idea and seldom a reality. Being separate is tantamount to inequality. Long time separate but woefully unequal facilities are fast stepping up towards equality under integration's impact. Public schools for Negroes were never so adequate. Teachers' salaries were never so nearly equal.

Segregation is often modified according to the section of country, often more pronounced in the South. Not more real but more apparent. Segregation is more legalized in the South. Redress is therefore easier in the North. The one and only place where I have ever been denied restaurant service was in New York. I have never entered a restaurant in the South to be denied.

The Supreme Court's decision of May 17, 1954, was inevitable. Experience and history gave it birth. And this decision is just as certain to be obeyed and executed as was its creation. The length of time for fulfillment is comparatively minor and will vary according to local conditions and customs.

The weight and power of custom may hardly be gauged. An old Arabian proverb places custom along side of the then known four natural elements. To "earth, air, fire and water" was added custom. It sometimes appears that the habits of people and their ways are as powerful and inherent as the very elements which compose our universe.

Except for the principle and truth behind integration, stemming from the "fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man," Negroes would doubtless be less concerned about integration. No people are more satisfied with being themselves than Negroes. "God has made of one blood all nations that dwell on the earth." This principle and fact will eventually make for the practiced equality of all mankind. The slogan of the Cosmopolitan Club of Corda Fratnes, "Above all nations is humanity," is slowly being realized and practiced. Integration though slow must come.

CHAS. W. KELLY,
Tuskegee Institute, Ala.

Editorials

The Great Segregation Offensive

Alert readers must have noted the large number of recent stories, articles and speeches of white Southern Negro-phobes, "friends of the Negro," which in effect are apologies for racial segregation.

The direct approach from people like Byrnes of South Carolina, and Gen. Mark Clark is the favored one of the more ardent segregationists; but even more effective are the pieces by assorted "men of goodwill" which attempt to show (a) that the Supreme Court was wrong in handing down its "drastic" desegregation decree, (b) that this has worsened race relations which is implied a great pity, and (c) that the attitude of white people in the North, East and West is no different from that of whites in the South, and therefore presumably non-Southern whites should not be too hard on their Dixie brethren.

The ominous thing about this campaign is that these propagandists have found mass media almost eager to print all such anti-civil rights arguments, whereas no capable Negro writers have been asked to answer these attacks on the same media.

A generation or two ago, when such controversies arose, men like Walter White, James Weldon Johnson, Kelly Miller, Alain Locke, etc., were called upon to present the Negro's side in magazines and newspapers of large circulation, but today, there is no real forum on these questions and frequently white writers are asked to present the anti-segregationist viewpoint, even though there are far more capable Negroes prepared to present their viewpoint than ever before in history.

It even seems that some of the larger mass media are deliberately playing up to the reactionary South in a bid for circulation.

This is sad commentary on the state of American journalism.

PLEASE, LET HIM SPEAK FOR HIMSELF

"DO VIOLENCE TO NO MAN; NEITHER ACCUSE ANY FALSELY" — LUKE 3:14

HERE IS MILDRED

Northerners Can Be So Smug

Pro-Magazine

By Alice Childress

Baltimore Md.

Girl, I tried to hold my peace, I tried to let things go by the board, I did my best to remember all the things you told me, but before the night was over, I just had to speak my mind.

Sat 8-18-56

... Yes, it was a nice meetin' as meetin's go. Of course you know I don't consider a meetin' to be the last word as far as a good time is concerned.

I go to them 'cause sometimes folks got to meet in order to straighten out things, and I feel that it's my beholden duty to be right there meetin' along with everybody else.

Marge, the church was crowded, and it would have done your heart good if you could of been there to see that fine turnout! ...

It's a good thing that you have a toothache 'cause I wouldn't of taken nothin' else for an excuse! ... No, I don't mean that I'm glad your tooth is achin', and you know it!

... Why do you always twist and turn every word I say ... I don't mean EVERY word, I only mean SOME words! ... Are you feelin' better now? ... Well, that's good.

* * *

DO YOU want me to tell you 'bout the meetin'? ... All right, I'll begin at the beginnin'.

Honey, they raised some money this evenin'. This civil rights business has got folks so tore up 'til they're really ready to dig down in their pocketbooks and put some money where their mouth is!

The whole idea of givin' the money is simply this: they're gonna send it down south to help out people who are catchin' a hard time 'cause they want to vote and ride the buses and things like that ... Yes, they had several speakers there and they spoke right well.

The minister introduced one white man who got up and

"The South is in a state — but what about the North, East and West" started his speech by sayin', "The South today is in a state ..." and then he went on to tell us all about the state of things.

After he finished a colored man got up and started his speech by sayin', "The South has ALWAYS been in a state ..." Then he went on to further tell us 'bout the state of things.

* * *

TWO OR three more people spoke a little bit, and I'm here to tell you that they gave the South a HARD way to go!

When the question and answer time came, everybody started in on the South all over again and took it from slavery and traveled each day and year right back up to 1956.

I learned a lot, but it seemed to me that we was forgettin' that this land also has a North, East and West to it. Since I don't think we should be so forgetful I got up to say my say.

WHEN IT CAME my turn, I said, "We have heard a great deal about the South tonight and rightly so, but I'm wonderin' if we got room to just low-rate the South in such a sweepin' manner ..."

Marge, before I could go on with what I had to say, there was a little disturbance in the back of the auditorium, and one squeaky-voiced little man jumped up and said, "Yes, that's right, before we get on the South, let's take care of the North!"

Pro-Magazine

... Now, he wasn't doin' a thing but tryin' to mislead the people, so I kept standin' and got him out of my way!

"Never mind that BEFORE business," I says, "but let's take care of the North WHILE we're gettin' on the South! To hear us talk, anybody would think the North was some kind of promised land come true. All is not sweetness and light 'cause we're on the North side of the Mason and Dixon line!

* * *

"BUT THE main thing I want us to remember is that there's lots of good people down South!"

Sat 8-18-56

Marge they started to mumble then, and I could see that I wasn't gettin' too much agreement on the last thing that I had said. "Yes," I says, "good people.

"Are we gonna forget the man in Kentucky who sold a colored family a home and got put in jail for it?

"Are we goin' to forget those youngsters in Alabama, who signed a paper sayin' that they didn't want to have nothin' to do with mobs and that they were for the right of a colored student to go to their college?"

* * *

ONE OF the speakers interrupted me and said, "They ought to be doin' a whole lot more. After all, it's their laws that's makin' all the trouble!"

"You are so right," I says, "and we oughta encourage 'em! We got to start showin' that we know how some of the folks are scared and peptalk 'em a little bit!

"When we hear that there's a mob made up of hundreds of folks, we got to realize that the other thousands upon thousands was not out there with 'em and got to ask 'em how come they can't show some gumption and start doin' and speakin' against the mobs instead of sittin' home and washin' their hands of it like Pontius Pilate.

"For too long they have been allowed to think that we don't expect any good to come from them, that we just fold our hands and say, 'Oh, well, they're Southerners, so what can you expect?'

"We got to start sayin' to 'em, 'Speak up so's we can hear you, if everybody ain't for oppressin', then let those that's against it stand up and be counted!'

* * *

"WE GOT TO include 'em in the stand. We got to write some of their churches and clubs and things and ask 'em, 'Where are you and what are you goin' to do?'

"When we get their answers, we'll have it down in black and white for the whole world to see! And I bet we'll rack up a few more friends down there that way!"

The lady behind me says to me, "Honey, they should speak if they feel right! Looks like we'd be goin' out of our way to be askin' 'em about it."

"Yes," I says, "we would, but it's goin' to take some out-of-the-way things to change them Southern laws!

"After all, we sure hear plenty from the folks who don't want the law to change and from the Northerners who're willin' to go part-way with the civil rights but hang back some when it comes to livin' the thing right down the line!"

* * *

MARGE, I got solid agreement on that 'cause folks know that even though our laws are much better than down home, we still got to put up such a to-do to get what the law promises.

"Didn't they try to keep the man out of the housin' project out in Chicago, didn't they have mobs gatherin'? How 'bout folks tarrin' the colored woman's home out in Long Island?"

Sure, I told them all those things and they had to listen to me, too, 'cause while we're settlin' the trouble down South, we got to remember that we want all our rights, everywhere and this is no time for the Northerners to get so smug ...

You're right, girl! All the colored folks that's standin' up and talkin' out in Mississippi, Alabama, Kentucky, Carolina and all over the South, ain't they Southerners, too!

Yes, indeed, we got to send the message East, West, North and South ... It's high time that the land should be free, from one corner to the other!

Racial Improvements Theory Segregation Rule Out Unchanged

Pro-Former

Houston Tex.

Sat 7-21-56

NASHVILLE TENNESSEE—The doctrine that the racial folkways and mores cannot and do not change has been made invalid by "the observed facts of common experience," Dr C Vann Woodward, specialist on southern history and Professor of History at John Hopkins University Baltimore, Maryland, told the Race Relations Institute at Fisk University last week.

Pointing out that racial segregation is a relatively recent institution in the South, Dr Woodward said that many people, unable to remember when the system did not prevail, are easily persuaded that "it has always been so." Yet, he observed, the wave of state laws and city ordinances establishing "Jim Crow" did not complete itself until after the 1900's.

"Those who cherish the new order of segregation, Jim Crowism and disfranchisement, therefore, often attribute it to the Redeemers, the founding fathers of the New South. But after Redemption was achieved, following the end of Reconstruction, the new governments showed little immediate disposition to expand the segregation code into new fields,—or to make it universal, such as it was to become in the twentieth century," Dr Woodward said.

Conservative southern white leaders maintained an attitude of "noblesse oblige" toward the Negro and sought to prevent extreme reactions which would deprive the Negro of basic rights and opportunities, but the rise of fanatical movements in the South, imperialistic expansion, and "the retreat of Northern liberals" led to their defeat, the speaker observed.

Since the Negro was the symbol of sectional strife, the liberals joined in deprecating further agitation of his cause and in defending the southern view of race in its less extreme forms," Dr. Woodward explained.

The new reaction in the South againht liberal racial reforms as in the case of the White Citizens Council movement, will wane in the face of the "open window" of international scrutiny of our national practices, the economic developments of the South, and the new strength found by the Negro in organized effort to advance his cause legitimately, Dr Woodward predicted, in response to questions raised in the discussion.

National Crisis and Statesmanship

Speaking at the opening session of the Institute, which has 110 members from 30 states and the Union of South Africa, Dr Charles S Johnson, sociologist and President of Fisk University, described the present racial crisis as "a malignancy that endangers the entire national fabric."

It cannot be ignored, cured by temporizing compromises, dismissed as a problem of "indefinite time and magical solution; or even solved by shrewd political

South's Integration Fight Perils Future'

Afro-American Sat. 5-5-56

Baltimore, Md.

CLEVELAND — "Southern states which have been frantically attempting to attract industries to support their flagging agricultural economy are literally jeopardizing their future by regional conflict over desegregation asserted here today.

Gloster B. Current, NAACP branch director, last week made the charges in a address to students and faculty at the Case Institute of Technology.

He cited the example of "many northern industries" which "have temporarily shelved plans to move southward until the conflict over integration is eased as proof to his statement.

DISCUSSING results of the southern White Citizens Councils' "economic equeeze campaign" against advocates of desegregation, Mr. Current related that "merchants who joined the White Citizens Councils found that the boycott is a two-edged sword.

"Caught in the middle between irate and stubborn white citizens and colored people both refusing to trade with anyone suspected of aiding the other group, business leaders adopted a hands-off, neutral policy," he said.

Southern attacks upon the NAACP "have been bitter," Mr. Current noted. "In the press, it is accused of forcing the issue, going too fast and destroying the good race relations which existed prior to the decisions.

"It is equated," he charged "with the Citizens Councils as an extremist group."

* * *

ANSWERING these accusations, the NAACP spokesman pointed out that the NAACP "uses legal action, appeals to public opinion and attempts to influence the passage of remedial legislation in order to further its program. This is proceeding within due bounds and within reason.

"Legal action in itself is a gradualist approach considering the length of time required to process cases through the United States Supreme Court for final determination."

He said that the South, recognizing that "it has no sound legal, moral or ethical ground on which to stand, "has gone to "extremes" to "destroy the NAACP."

maneuvers and death defying manifestos." Direct and definitive reorientation of domestic policy is the only way it can be resolved. he said, "and there can be no compromise with the basic premise in the new urgent struggle against time and circumstances."

Despite the urgency of the situation, "there has been no bold and forthright statesmanship" that would dare to stand up and challenge "the misguided little men in politically strategic places" who believe their "personal prejudices can reverse the tide of world destiny," Dr Johnson observed.

Pointing out that the issue today is one of human equality and national civil rights, the speaker told the Institute that racial seregation is the touchstone which prevents human equality. We are a total nation in the eyes of the rest of the world, and "no allowances are made for regional defections from American philosophy and practice," Dr Johnson said.

He described the White Citizens Council and similar groups as "agencies of malevolence and defiance" which are sufficiently strong, because the South's best leadership has defaulted "to intimidate any reasonable judgment or appeal to sanity, not to speak of righteousness."

A serious result of the hysteria created by activities, he said, is an intrusion upon constitutionally guranteed liberites of the freedom of speech and association; in states like Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina and Mississippi. Also, the situation is so turbulent that new industries are doubting the feasability of locating in the South.

Describing law as the "weapon of democracy in defending itself," the speaker said that the course of events has left no alternative to Negroes but court action.

"All that we have is our faith in the power of the human spirit to achieve the ends of a free society, a faith that has given hope to millions of mankind over the world. We cannot default on this promise. This is our moral challenge in a national crisis,," Dr Johnson declared.

Advances Made in Desegregation

"While the hot verbal battle has been going on by the southern politicians, the state and local courts of the South have been supporting the Supreme Court decision on school desegregation and steadily closing the door on segregation," Thurgood Marshall, Chief Legal Counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told the Institute in an evening lecture at the Fisk University Chapel.

Constructive action toward school desegregation has taken place in a majority of the southern states— nine out of seventeen, despite fierce opposition from White Citizens Councils and certain politicians, Marshall pointed out.

"The political powers of eight southe n states are determined to block desegration as long as they can do it: It is not a matter of gradualism but of any change at all to eliminate segregated schools. They are determined to use force, if neccessary, to prevent local school boards from even considering the possibility of desegregation. This is nothing but open rebellion," the noted attorney observed.

NAACP Following Middle Ground

In the two years since the Supreme Court decision, Mr Marshall described the role of the NAACP as that of following a "middle ground." "We neither went fishing after the victory was won nor tried to ram through immediate reforms across the board," he said.

However, he observed, the NAACP has learned that things do not happen automatically; school boards and public authorities need prodding in order for changes to begin. Therefore, in the next period ahead, the NAACP will combine community action with legal action, aimed at preserving the gains made in some places in the South and opening up the blockade in others.

This will mean, according to Mr Marshall, concentrating legal action in those states which have raised legislative, administrative and other barriers against the Supreme Court decision, "filing cases as rapidly as we are physically able to do so." In those states which already have begun desegregation, and those which still look favorable, he said that the NAACP would concentrate its efforts upon community action, combining educational, persuasive and other approaches. Legal suits, in these cases, would be used by the NAACP only as a last resort, Mr Marshall explained.

He said that a propaganda attack upon the rest of the nation had been launched by the resisting Southern states and the Citizens Councils, picturing these states as suffering and needing sympathy of the North. Yet, Marshall said that there is nothing in the record of the five most resistant states—Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Louisiana—to justify the belief that their present political leadership will accept the Supreme Court decision in any way.

Open Occupancy in Housing

Findings of a national study on race and housing were made public for the first time by the Commission on Race and Housing, headed by Earl B Schwulst, President of the Bowery Savings Bank of New York City, at one of the Institute sessions.

Open occupancy interracial housing was described by the research staff for the Commission as "now accelerating" across the country. Based on 300 interviews with real estate developers and planners in major cities across the country, the study indicated that most of the open occupancy projects develop spontaneously in the cities involved, and the majority are "commercial rather than cooperative" in sponsorship.

"There is no evidence that these projects are economically or socially unsound, and in many situations interracial housing presents no greater difficulty than any other kind of housing," the esearch staff, headed by Dr Davis McEntire of the University of California, reported.

There are few "move-outs" from these projects, and there is high enthusiasm among the occupants who represent a wide variety of social and economic classes in the general public. Where failures have occurred, according to Dr George S Grier who conducted this phase of the study for the Commission, along with his wife, they were traceable to either faulty promotion at planning stages or poor management after the project was completed. Cases of failure were rare.

Though some reticence interracial association was found in the early contacts of Negroes and whites in these projects, no instances of tension or conflict took place. On the whole, according to the study findings, friendly and easy associations developed with longer periods of residence in the projects. "Many of the projects are sponsored by the larger builders and given active support by bankers, the federal Government and labor unions, and they are very similar to the normal housing market in most respects," the research staff observed.

Another racial legend concerning the widespread belief that Negro occupancy automatically depreciates property values was punctured by the preliminary findings of the study. On the basis of intensive analysis of price trends in 64 neighborhoods in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Philadelphia, covering a period of years, Dr Davis McEntire said that "no evidence that racial occupancy itself depreciated property values has yet been found." The study compared 20 neighborhoods where nonwhites had moved in with 44 neighborhoods where they were absent.

Segregation, According To A Gallop Poll

Dr. George Gallop serves his fellowmen in his occasional reach — with a poll. He comes through this week with one on the controversal segregation question with facts and figures indicating just how strongly does the average white Southerner feel about it. The footnote at the bottom of the poll announces the next will deal with "How the Southern Negro feels about segregation."

The poll is divided into two sections, with three divisions of opinions. The first section is a poll taken from Southern whites only. The second section deals with opinions of those outside the South.

These figures furnish an interesting study of contrast in opinions — of those white people living outside the South and who have generations of experience in non-segregated schools, residences, churches, public recreation and common carriers and those living in the South with no experience whatever in non-segregated practices and principles.

The ICC has ruled that racial segregation of interstate passengers on trains, buses and in public waiting rooms must end. The poll among Southern whites would stand: Approve 19%; disapprove 76%; undecided 5%.

Noting the keen contrast in those white people outside the South who have known nothing but non-segregated customs: Approve: 71%; Disapprove 24%; undecided 5%.

ICC's ruling outside the South: Approve 67%; disapprove 24%; undecided 9%.

It is noted that these figures in their striking resemblance are too conspicious to dismiss as so much information.

Any open-minded person would arrive at the conclusion that logic enters into this situation where two sections afford such a proximity in the approvals and disapprovals.

Again the poll shows that in border states of Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Texas where the whites outnumber the Negro 8 to one, one white in every four approve. Moving in what might be termed mid-South states, Florida, Virginia, Arkansas and North Carolina where Negroes constitute approximately, the opposition rises. This would disclose where the population is higher, the opposition likewise rises.

Those who are really interested in arriving at an unbiased solution of what has been allowed to run into a problem, would do well to emphasize that the leading fear the average Southerner expresses, intermarriage, has not been in peril all these years where there is almost an equal count of approval of the court's decision.

Too, the verdict of the experienced, over against the reduction in economic overhead and the cutting out of duplicity in maintenance and operation of facility, deserves serious consideration.

We believe that much of the opposition to the decision in this section is due to the fact that the politicians have made political use of the racial issue.

Though the Supreme Court has ruled on the question it remains for the district federal courts to act unless the issue is resolved in accordance with the high court ruling by action of the administrative authorities such as the state and local school boards.

This clearly indicates that the Negro citizens should busy themselves in getting more persons eligible to vote.

13 States Covered In Special Study

The Gallup Poll has conducted an intensive study of the South in an effort to determine the reasons behind the people's widely divergent views on segregation.

Ninety specially selected reporters from the organization's field staff made the study. They interviewed both whites and Negroes in 13 Southern states — Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Texas.

The accompanying article is the second of three on the results of the study. It deals with the sentiment of Southern Negroes. The final report in the series will appear Thursday.

THE GALLUP POLL

Desegregation Orders Split North and South

Over 76% of Southern Whites Oppose Rulings Backed by More Than 67% of Folk In North

By JOHN M. FENTON
Gallup Poll Staff Writer

Princeton, N. J., Feb. 27.—Just how strongly does the average white Southerner feel about desegregation?

What does the Southern Negro want?

The Gallup Poll has conducted an intensive study of the region to get some answers.

All in all, we found eight out of 10 Southern whites opposed to the Supreme Court's outlawing of segregation in the public schools.

Opinion is slightly less opposed to the recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling that outlawed segregated travel between the states on buses and trains and in public waiting rooms.

The questions and results:

"The United States Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY

Approve	16%
Disapprove	80
Undecided	4

"The Interstate Commerce Commission has ruled that racial segregation on trains, buses and in public waiting rooms must end. Do you approve or disapprove of this ruling?"

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY

Approve	19%
Disapprove	76
Undecided	5

The wide split in opinion that the segregation issue has brought to the American domestic scene is illustrated by the vote of people in the 35 states outside

Desegregation Orders Split North, South

Continued from First Page

the South on the two issues—as recorded in the latest Gallup Poll survey:

SUPREME COURT'S DECISION
Outside the South

Approve	71%
Disapprove	24
Undecided	5

I.C.C.'S RULING
Outside the South

Approve	67
Disapprove	24
Undecided	9

The degree of opposition to both rulings in the South is directly related to the size of the Negro population in each of the 13 states.

In the border states of Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma, and Texas, for example, where the white-Negro ratio averages eight whites to one Negro, we found nearly one white in four approving of the Supreme Court's decision. Better than one in four favors the I.C.C.'s ruling.

Still A Large Majority

Even in these states, however, there is still a large majority of whites who oppose integration on both counts.

Moving into what might be termed the mid-South states of Florida, Virginia, Arkansas, and North Carolina—where Negroes constitute, on the average, about 24 per cent of the total population — we discovered slightly greater opposition with about one white person in five favoring mixed schools and a little more than this approving on the I.C.C. question.

It is in the five states of the Deep South—Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Mississippi—where the greatest opposition and bitterest resentment are found.

In these areas—where more than a third of the population is Negro—nearly nine out of 10 whites are opposed on both questions.

One In Nine Undecided

Only about one white person in 17 in these states registers approval of the Supreme Court's decision. Integration on trains and buses and in waiting rooms is approved by one person in 12.

But the Negro, by a 3-to-2 ratio, wants to have an integrated education system. About one Negro in nine at this time is undecided.

Negro sentiment is more strongly in favor of ending segregation in waiting rooms, buses, and trains.

The recent ruling that outlawed segregated travel between states is approved of today—among Negroes—by a vote of 6 to 1. Only about one Negro in 25 is undecided on this point.

The questions that we asked and their results:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this ruling?"

SOUTHERN NEGROES ONLY

Approve	82%
Disapprove	14
Undecided	4

"The Interstate Commerce Commission has ruled that racial segregation on trains, buses and in public waiting rooms must end. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

SOUTHERN NEGROES ONLY

Approve	53%
Disapprove	36
Undecided	11

In determining the Negro viewpoint, we had conversations with hundreds of Negroes in all parts of the South. Negroes living on farms and in the cities were given a chance to express their views.

Poll Shows 71% Voting For Gradual Integration

Herald Tribune P. 9
Wed. 5-9-56

Gallup Reports Only 18% Favor School Compliance Within a Year

New York, N.Y.

By GEORGE GALLUP

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., May 8.—The American public overwhelmingly adopts the viewpoint of "gradualism" when it comes to setting a timetable for putting the Supreme Court's desegregation ruling into effect.

Seven out of ten persons questioned in a nation-wide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion believe that the government should try gradually to bring about integration of white and Negro children in the public schools—that is, over a long period of years.

Some Never Want It

Some people in this group—particularly in the South—volunteered the information that they didn't want integration in the public schools ever to come about.

About one person in every six takes the view, however, that the government should do everything it can to bring about integration immediately—within the coming year.

To sound out public opinion the institute assigned its staff of interviewers to talk to an accurate cross-section of Americans in all walks of life, including the proper proportion of whites and Negroes, living in every section of the country.

2 Points of View

Each person was asked:

"The Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. Which of these points of view comes nearest to your way of thinking about the problem of segregation?"

1. The government should try to bring about the integration of white and Negro children in public schools gradually—that is, over a long period of years 71%
2. The government should do everything it can to see that white and Negro children in all parts of the country go to the same public schools within the coming year.....18

No opinion.....11

100%

Of those who want gradual integration, roughly one person in four vouchsafed the answer that if the choice were theirs they would never permit white and Negro children to be integrated in the public schools.

Opinion in South

That's the picture for the nation as a whole. In the South only one adult in twenty today is in favor of immediate integration. Almost half of those in the thirteen Southern states who want gradual desegregation also volunteered that they are against integration at any time.

Considering those who are against integration at any time as a separate group, here is the vote today in the South:

Gradually	45%
Immediately	5
Never want integration	38
No opinion	12

The survey also finds that the greatest majority for the moderate point of view, calling for gradual integration over a long period of years, comes from persons who have attended college. Proportionately the largest number who volunteered that they would never want integration come from those who have grade-school educations.

Vote by Education Levels

The vote by education levels, again considering those who volunteered a "never" answer as a third category:

	College	High Sch'l	Grade Sch'l
Gradually	73%	59%	41%
Immediately	18	18	20
Never	4	14	25
No opinion	5	9	14

It has now been almost two years since the Supreme Court, on May 17, 1954, ruled that separation of the races in public schools deprived Negroes of equal protection of the law and declared that integration should be brought about with "all reasonable speed."

The latest survey on the question, reported by the institute in February of this year, showed seven out of ten adults outside the South to be in favor of integration in principle.

In the South, however, the vote was overwhelmingly against the Supreme Court's decision.

Banish All Intolerance, Justice Warren Warns

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Tues. 11-13-56 P. 6

(Copyright 1956 by The New York Times Co.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 12—Chief Justice Earl Warren issued a warning here today that unless intolerance and bigotry were banished in this country, "Freedom can be endangered in America even in our own day."

He spoke before 500 delegates and guests at a luncheon in a hotel here winding up the annual meeting of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. Earlier he participated in the dedication of a hall at the conference headquarters, 43 West 57th St., in memory of Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes.

Justice Warren developed his theme from a premise of inequalities manifest in American history. They must not be forgotten, he explained, because of present danger.

"The world is in a sorry condition today," he said. "Enslaved peoples with the courage to assert their freedom are being subjected for that reason alone to cruelty almost beyond the imagination of Americans.

"Our hearts go out to them and we pray for their delivery. We can do more. We can promote the cause of world brotherhood in every place. First and most important, we can promote it here at home. The broader our base is in the United States, the sounder our foundation is, the more forceful our appeals can be in other parts of the world."

Justice Warren asserted there was not a city in this country "but could be bettered by a new or strengthened unit of the National Conference of Christians and Jews." The late Justice Hughes was a founder of the organization and Justice Warren himself an early worker on its behalf.

He recalled the first steps taken in Oakland, Calif., 25 years ago and continued: "Many other American communities, 300 of them, I am told, have enjoyed the same experience but for every one that has there are 10 that have not. It would be a wonderful thing if cities all over the world were to form such organizations."

There is an imperative need at this time for men and women of good will in all faiths to join together for peace based upon brotherhood, Justice Warren concluded. He would have the crusade pursued "until justice, understanding and cooperation shall prevail as a way of life for the entire family of man."

Hon. Sherman Minton Says Desegregation Was Inevitable

Globe P. 6
Fri. 11-9-56
Nashville, Tenn.

CHICAGO—

Former Associate Justice Sherman Minton, who retired recently from the Supreme Court, says in the December EBONY that the Court's desegregation ruling was inevitable because the high tribunal had been chipped away at the "separate but equal" doctrine for a long time. In Minton's view, the ruling destroyed the legal foundation of an ancient, and to him, obnoxious system of dual citizenship in America and decreed a new day of equality for Negroes.

"We are conscious of the great progress the Negro people have made and now, with the school desegregation ruling, the possibilities for them are infinite", Minton says.

Minton hated the riots that flared up when authorities attempted to desegregate schools in Texas, Kentucky, and Tennessee. "It's possible that we could even have much more violence than we've had so far," he stated gravely, "but the problem of violent resistance will have to be met as it appears."

As to whether Federal forces should be used to quell such riots, Minton is quite specific: "You can't reject the use of Federal forces in suppressing violence", he says.

As to how long racial segregation will last in America, Minton says it is anybody's guess. He adds that resistance to it will ultimately fail. Determination to preserve segregation at any price is so fanatical among a large segment of whites in the South, that they may even resort to more destructive measures in their futile efforts to delay the custom's death.

Whether the Supreme Court's ruling will ultimately lead to the end of segregation in all areas of national life, Minton refuses to predict. As to future actions of the high court, however, he is firm in his belief that the great 1954 ruling has set a definite pattern, from which coming decisions on segregation shall not deviate.

12 million citizens have not one representative

Afro-American Sat. 11-10-56
Baltimore, Md. P. 6

ATLANTA — "Think of it," writes E. M. Martin, successful business executive, "12 million colored citizens in the South and not a single colored representative in any state, county or city government, with possibly a few noble exceptions here and there.

"Where legal robbery leaves off, the KKK and White Citizens Councils take over. Thousands of state, county and city laws and ordinances enacted by white Democrats, say the colored man is not equal to the white.

"They also say he must be kept out of government except in inferior places. If this isn't hell and slavery for colored people, pray, what is it?"

94 Years After Emancipation Negroes Still Seek Freedom

Eagle Thurs. 6-21-56 Tulsa, Okla.

P1-A

Today, 94 years after Congress took initial steps toward freeing slaves in the territories of the United States—it was June 19, 1862—Negroes still are seeking fruits of that action, of the Emancipation Proclamation, and of the 13th amendment.

Just as Negroes were protesting the ungodly act of slavery back in 1862, they are protesting the ungodly act of racial discrimination in 1956. Evidence of this can be seen throughout the nation. There are bus boycotts in two major cities and hints of other possible strikes to come. Negroes are engaged in court battles for equal opportunities in education, employment, living conditions, etc.

A century ago, many people felt that it was morally wrong to enslave another group or race, but few believers did anything about it. Today, many people say they believe jimcrow and discrimination is against christian principles, and they, too, fail to do anything about it..

Conditions are similar every was recognized as evil, later abolished in 1862, run quite parallel to conditions existing today.

The conditions under which slavery was recognized as evil, and later abolished in 1862, run quite parallel to conditions existing today.

The action by Congress on June 19, 1862 was the stepping stone for Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, issued on September 22, 1862. The proclamation stated that all slaves in states rebelling against the United States during the Civil War as of January 1, 1863 were free.

Slaves in Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia were free. A total of 3,120,000 were released. 830,000 were not freed.

13th Amendment

The next constitutional act, the 13th amendment was issued on February 22, 1865. This was the final document on slavery and it made the institution in any form illegal in the United States.

A number of states, beginning with Vermount in 1777 through New Jersey in 1804 outlawed slavery. In 1787, slavery was forever banned in the Northwest Territory by the Northwest Ordinance.

The first organized group to stand against slavery was the quakers. Then came such dynamic anti-slavery leaders as William Lloyd Garrison, Elijah P. Lovejoy and John Brown.

Lincoln Was Pressured

Lincoln, himself often called "The Great Emancipator," was against slavery, but he wanted to end it harmoniously by paying the owners for the freedmen. It may be noted, however, that Lincoln was being pressured by northerners, to abolish slavery. Once the President replied:

"My paramount object is to save the union and not either to save or destroy slavery."

Negro Is Called Anti-Red Force

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. P.26

The deadline is approaching when the United States and the West must offer Negroes real racial equality or lose them to Communism, an Australian religious leader declared here yesterday.

Wash. 7-23-56

"The West hasn't a chance of winning to its way of life the mass of colored people unless it convinces them it has gained a greater conception of racial justice," the Rev. Alan Walker said in a sermon at Foundry Methodist Church.

"We whose skin is pink haven't got too long to get out of our bloodstream the feeling of racial superiority," he said. "The colored man is standing to his feet, deciding whom and what he will follow."

Americans must show speed in proving their belief in racial equality through specific acts, he asserted.

"You Americans haven't got long to move beyond segregation in attitude, custom and law," he said.

Nor has South Africa much time to switch from apartheid, he added.

"Unless Australia," he said, "modifies its white-Australia policy, and Britain and France expunge lingering colonalism, they will lose the good will of the colored man."

According to Mr. Walker, racialism has become, "in the long run," a more serious issue than the Communist-West conflicts. He attributed to "perpetuated racialism" some of the defeats the West has sustained.

In this country on a "preaching itinerary," the minister has spoken at Methodist colleges and seminaries and held eight-day missions in several cities. He is on a leave of absence as director of the "Mission to the Nation" for the Methodist Church of Australia.

Mr. Walker called race and peace the two principal issues "God must be asking us to express our convictions on." In them lies an "ethical challenge," he said, which Christians will meet if the present "quickening of interest" in religion is truly sprung from Christ.

The new "wistful groping" after God shows, he said, that many persons have come to realize there is a world of the spirit. "I feel I can't live without it," is a common sentiment, he said.

But unless it is Christ-centered, this is not enough, he declared.

DAVID LAWRENCE

Our 'Illegal' 14th Amendment

Evening Star Washington, D.C. Thurs. 7-26-56

Forced on South in 1868, It Is Basis of Bill On Civil Rights, Termed 'Rights Invader'

P.23-A

Americans would be outraged today if they read that a country calling itself a republic had forced the adoption of a constitution upon its local legislatures at the point of a bayonet.

Few Americans know, however, that this was precisely what happened in supposedly free America in 1868—nearly three years after the War Between the States and after the Southern States had been accepted fully into the Union.

Indeed, few people today know the historical background of the "civil rights" bill which the House of Representatives has just passed. Instead, many people, in referring to the segregation issue, talk glibly about the need for "obeying the Constitution," without the slightest awareness that the famous Fourteenth Amendment from which the whole "civil rights" controversy has emerged never really was ratified in the constitutional manner by two-thirds of both houses of Congress and by three-fourths of the then existing States.

Without exception, all the historians who have written about that period in American history are agreed as to the facts of what happened. There were 37 States in the Union and, then as now, it was necessary before the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution that two steps be taken—first, approval of a proposed amendment by a two-thirds vote in both houses of Congress, and, second, ratification by three-fourths of the State legislatures.

In 1866, when the Fourteenth Amendment was considered by Congress, the members of the House and Senate who came from the South were deliberately disqualified from voting by a Northern majority in both houses. Nevertheless, the amendment was submitted to the States for ratification.

The action taken by Congress was in contrast to what had happened in 1865—after the war—when the Thirteenth Amendment, abolishing slavery, was before these same members of Congress. Southern members were not disqualified then. Nor was any question raised as to the legitimacy of the State legislatures when the entire South, through these same legislatures, voted to ratify the Thirteenth Amendment. President Andrew Johnson had formally proclaimed amnesty and had recognized the State governments in 1865. To all intents and purposes, they were the legal governments of those States.

When, two years after the amnesty, the 10 Southern States rejected the Fourteenth Amendment, this was enough to defeat ratification, inasmuch as 10 States were more than one-fourth of the 37 in the Union at the time. Congress then stepped in and, again without letting the Southern Congressmen or Senators vote, passed the Reconstruction Act of 1867 over the veto of President Andrew Johnson, who in a message formally challenged the constitutionality of the law. Under the terms of that law, Congress attempted to coerce the Southern States. The law declared the existing State governments were to be wiped out, all Confederate soldiers were to be disfranchised and military rule was to be imposed.

The law specifically said military rule would be lifted and the States would be given back their powers and their representation in Congress only after each one had ratified the Fourteenth Amendment.

"Rump" legislatures thereupon were set up under military rule, which in turn accepted the conditions imposed on the South by Congress. With ironical disregard of the very words of the Fourteenth Amendment which guaranteed "due process of law," this amendment was proclaimed formally in 1868 as an integral part of the Constitution.

There is, of course, no power contained in the Constitution, itself, which can order the States to vote for or reject a constitutional amendment. The Supreme Court of the United States, however, has since sidestepped every case brought before it which attempted to question the validity of the procedure used in 1867 and 1868. To this day, the highest court in the land has never ruled on the legitimacy of the Fourteenth Amendment itself.

Since the Supreme Court in 1954 overturned a precedent established 58 years before with respect to "equal but separate" schools, there are many lawyers today who say the Supreme Court now should re-examine the method by which the Fourteenth Amendment was illegally interjected into the Constitution. In fact, a case has just been brought in a Federal court in Tennessee that raises this very issue.

As recently as 1951, the Supreme Court expressed its disapproval of what it termed the "conquered province" theory that prevailed in Congress after the war and warned that the Fourteenth Amendment "was not to be used to centralize power so as to upset the Federal system."

Yet the "civil rights" measure which the House has just passed does mean Federal interference in the operations of State institutions and agencies and the harassment of citizens generally by a Federal commission—even though such citizens are not connected with State governments in any way.

This is perhaps the most far-reaching invasion of the rights of the States that has been proposed since the ill-fated time when Congress coerced the Southern States by means of puppet legislatures into "ratifying" an amendment that the people didn't want—the antithesis of government by the "consent of the governed."

Few voices, unfortunately, are being raised in the North against this defiance of basic principles of constitutionalism. Whether or not one believes in the principle of integration in the public schools wherever the States desire it—as this writer does—the fact remains that the orders to obey "integration" and the support in Congress for various "civil rights" measures are based on an alleged amendment to the Constitution that never was legally ratified.

NEGRO REMINDED OF TIE TO NATION

Times 7-15-56

New York

Preacher Puts It First in Any 'Color War'—Scorns Fatalism, Hails Destiny

Mon. 8-13-56

The first duty of the American Negro is to his own land, even if the Suez Canal controversy should come to be regarded by Asians and Africans as a "color war," a Negro minister said yesterday.

The Rev. Gardner Taylor made the statement in a sermon at the Concord Baptist Church of Christ, Marcy and Putnam Avenues, Brooklyn. He added, however, that "we look with hope and joy at the rising surge of dark people toward full freedom."

His remarks about the tensions in the Middle East and the role of the races were made in a sermon in which he condemned a "fatalistic" outlook on life.

"Fatalism has become instilled in many who consider themselves sophisticated and modern," he went on. "Some are too lazy to battle against the tides and to strive for what they believe ought to happen to them and for them."

But, observing that there were instances where a person had no control of certain situations, he added:

"It is a tragic sight to see a man or woman fighting circumstances that cannot be changed and are not meant to be changed.

"We are born members of a certain race and, while there ought not to be undue pride of tribe or color, still a person ought to accept with honor and a sense of destiny."

HUMPHREY URGES PATIENCE ON BIAS

Times 7-15-56

New York

Calls for Understanding of South's Problem—Kefauver and Kennedy Claim Gains

Mon. 8-13-56

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12—Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota pushed his campaign for the Democratic Vice-Presidential nomination today with a call for understanding of Southern problems on the race issue.

Senator Humphrey, who led a successful floor fight for a strong civil rights plank at the 1948 convention, told a nationwide television audience that patience was essential in the fight to wipe out racial prejudice.

"We know you're not going to kill it over night no matter how many platforms you write," Senator Humphrey said.

Meanwhile, F. Joseph Donohue, campaign manager for Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee, claimed the support of two Southern Governors for Senator Kefauver as the Vice-Presidential nominee. He did not name them, but he hinted they were Govs. James E. Folsom of Alabama and Leroy Collins of Florida.

Cites Support from Long

Mr. Donohue, speaking at a televised news conference, said that Senator Kefauver already had a pledge of support from Gov. Earl Long of Louisiana. Some kind of Southern backing would be an important plum for the Senator because he is generally considered notably unpopular with most Southern politicians.

An inactive candidate for the second spot on the ticket, Senator John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts, remained very much in the picture. He spent the day visiting receptions, meeting politicians and generally acting just like a candidate except in name.

Senator Kennedy's assistants said they had been approached by many delegates who wanted to work for him. States represented, they said, included New Jersey, Maryland, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Georgia, Flordia, Louisiana, Arizona, California and Oregon.

Govs. Abraham A. Ribicoff of Connecticut and Dennis J. Roberts of Rhode Island, who are supporting Senator Kennedy, reported to him that he was gaining strength. After the meeting, the Senator said that he was "very pleased," but he still insisted he was not an active candidate.

'Observance' Is Cited

Senator Humphrey appeared on the Columbia Broadcasting System program "Face the Nation." He said he preferred to think of "observance" of the Supreme Court decision against public school segregation rather than "enforcement."

"We're going to have a strong plank on civil rights," Senator Humphrey said. However, he was optimistic that it would be one acceptable to the South. He accused the Republicans of playing politics with the racial issue because they had no substantial Southern support that they must placate.

Political appeal to farmers—an area in which Mr. Stevenson is assertedly weak—figured in the infighting among the Vice Presidential hopefuls. Senator Humphrey's backers are pressing the argument that he would give a Stevenson ticket the strength it needs in the Midwest.

The identical theme is being sounded, however, by Kefauver supporters. And Mr. Donohue sounded a warning today that Mr. Stevenson might not get the votes of farm-area Kefauver delegates in the Presidential nomination balloting unless he indicated he would accept the Tennessean as a running mate.

Speaking on the American Broadcasting Company program "College Press Conference," Mr. Donohue said Kefauver votes in Wisconsin and Minnesota would "never go to Harriman so long as they feel Kefauver will be on the Stevenson ticket."

Polling Northern Whites

Atlanta Const. 7-8-56

Catholic Digest is further evidence of segregation sentiment in the North, where it's not supposed to exist.

Montgomery Ala

The poll compared the feelings of white Southerners with those of white Northerners. Two-thirds of the white Southerners questioned said they liked Negroes. The percentage was somewhat higher among Northern whites.

Mon. 8-13-56

But 17% of Northern whites admitted they would not like to work next to Negroes and 37% said they didn't want to live in the same neighborhood with Negroes. Southern disapproval was considerably higher on both questions (46% and 65%, respectively) but it may be supposed that if the poll were limited to Northerners who lived in areas comparable to the South in the number of Negro residents, the percentages would come close to balancing out. Illustrating again that the race problem depends not so much on geography as on the concentration of Negroes.

Use of Federal Troops

Courier Sat. 8-18-56

The Federal Government, in no significant instance, has ever used Federal troops to enforce law except AFTER AN AGGRESSION against the Government itself.

Life P 9

Yet the issue is constantly flaunted about the use of Federal troops to enforce the Supreme Court's decision against segregation. It is a completely phony issue. It is an issue injected to becloud the real issue—desegregation. It presupposes that it is going to be necessary to place Federal troops at Southern schools to protect Negro children.

Questions as to the use of Federal troops are incendiary and irresponsible and are meant to be so.

Negro parents have no thought of their children walking to school with soldiers by their sides. The NAACP does not advocate the use of Federal troops to solve the problem of segregation. No responsible Negro organization or leader does.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

If Federal troops ever had to be used (which God forbid!), the decision so to do would not be one pressed for by Negroes. Four million Negro slaves did not ask the Federal Government to go to war to free them. The Federal Government only went into action AFTER THE AGGRESSION at Fort Sumter.

ELIZABETH B. ALDEN

DIVIDED SOUTH SEARCHES ITS SOUL

Sirs:

Robert Penn Warren has given us a masterful report ("Divided South Searches Its Soul," LIFE, July 9). His summation calling for "a process of mutual education for whites and blacks" should be taken literally by educators the country over.

Newark, N.J.

Sirs:

The time has come for an organized movement to cancel subscriptions to magazines that continue to publish such articles against the South.

JOE D. JONES

Walterboro, S.C.

Sirs:

Warren's searching report was brilliantly intensified by Walter Richards' illustrations. If Warren's data on preachers' reactions are valid, the failure of most southern churches to be Christian is the most heartbreaking aspect of this conflict.

BEN W. FUSON

Park College
Parkville, Mo.

Sirs:

Warren's article was a clumsy attempt to slam the South. However, the author did succeed in revealing his true talent—writing fiction.

CHARLES M. REYLE

Knoxville, Tenn.

Mon. 7-30-56

Sirs:

It is this kind of frank, but two-edged coverage of the race problem that the present situation has been crying for. As a "borderline Southerner" whose family tree has roots deep in the South, I can vouch for the typicality of many of Warren's interviews and can add only a fervent "Amen" to his conclusions.

ANN JEFFRY MONTAGUE

Arlington, Va.

Sirs:

To reorient, re-educate and relocate himself is wisely in order before Mr. Robert Penn Warren should ever attempt such an article.

WILLIAM B. SCOGGINS

Norfolk, Va.

Sirs:

Mr. Warren's feeling of relief when he left this section of the country I can well understand. It is heartbreaking to live in an area where man has so little respect for man.

ELISABETH B. WIEDEMAN

New Orleans, La.

DAVID LAWRENCE

Evening Star Washington D.C.

Integration and Intermarriages

South's Fear of Mongrelization of Races Is Called the Real Issue

Times 5-20-56

Integration of races in all schools throughout the United States is a long way off — years and years, and maybe never. It is as far away or as near as the day when present advocates of integration are willing to face, possibly in their own families, the real issue — the intermarriage of white sons and daughters with Negroes.

The Supreme Court of the United States a few weeks ago sidestepped a decision on the issue of racial intermarriage. For technical reasons, it refused to decide whether a Virginia State law prohibiting intermarriage of races was constitutional. There are such laws in 28 States. Another case is certain to come before the highest court soon. If it is decided that State laws prohibiting intermarriage are unconstitutional, the issue will bring even more friction than the question of school integration.

For in the South many people feel that legalized intermarriages will lead to a mongrelization of the white race and that the propinquity of white and Negro children from the kindergarten age up through the colleges cannot but encourage intermarriages on the widest scale in future generations.

The Southerners are arguing for the right to discriminate in their social life, and they consider schools to be a social institution. They point to the recent decision of the Supreme Court on the school question as having been based primarily on sociological grounds.

Southerners also contend that in the North many of the outspoken advocates of integration believe in and themselves practice the right to discriminate against Negroes and do keep them off the membership rolls of the "exclusive" clubs in New York City and Chicago, for example, and bar them from many country clubs throughout the United States, even though such clubs enjoy certain tax exemptions bestowed upon them by the Federal Government. Is this right to discriminate in choosing members now to be taken away from them through the coercion of the taxing power?

The prediction that integration in the schools is far distant is based on the many avenues of avoidance available to the South under the head of "lawful means."

The manifesto signed by such a renowned constitutional lawyer as Senator Walter F. George, Democrat of Georgia, and more than 100 other members of Congress did not—as has been erroneously interpreted in many quarters—advocate physical resistance to the Supreme Court's decision. It is important to examine anew the wording of the two most significant paragraphs in the manifesto, which read as follows:

"We commend the motives of those States which have declared the intention to resist forced integration by any lawful means. . . .

"We pledge ourselves to use all lawful means to bring about a reversal of this decision."

What are the "lawful means"? There are many. Here are some:

(1) Case after case can be brought in a prolonged process of litigation, and every case can introduce a different principle or a different approach to the problem. Meanwhile, integration is delayed for years. This method is wholly lawful.

(2) Southern States can amend their Constitutions and pass laws permitting public funds to be given directly to individual citizens for use in educating their children in private schools chosen by their parents.

(3) Public-school buildings can be leased to private corporations, and private schools can be established which could discriminate against Negroes just as do the "exclusive" clubs in the North.

(4) Cases can be brought to the courts by white parents in support of the right of a State to exclude from classrooms all children who do not conform to sociological patterns set by the school boards in a community. Since the Supreme Court itself ruled that a Negro child can be made to feel psychologically inferior if excluded from a classroom containing white children, it will be argued that the impact of the Negro child on the white child has retarded educational progress and that, therefore, States should be permitted to operate mixed schools or segregated schools as the school authorities in their discretion may decide.

(5) Many delicate matters of jurisdiction on strictly educational questions can be raised to embarrass the Northern States until they are finally convinced that the only way out is the adoption of an amendment to the Federal Constitution specifically granting to the States the sole right to pass laws with respect to school attendance and educational standards in public schools.

The drive for a constitutional amendment to reverse the Supreme Court's decision will be based on the theory that many people who want religious schools preserved will not wish to see the Federal Government given complete control over education.

One thing is clear. The legal battle has just begun, and "interposition" means interposing many a case that will hold up for a long, long while the general integration of schools in the South, during which time the movement for an amendment to the Constitution will be pursued.

Experience with another social issue — the Eighteenth Amendment—is recalled. Public sentiment was gradually built up against it, and the Federal prohibition laws were so universally disregarded and "resisted" that adoption of the "repeal" amendment to the Constitution came with amazing rapidity—within 10 months after both houses of Congress passed it. The States now have the sole power to prohibit the sale of intoxicating beverages within their own boundaries. It has become a "local issue" —which is what education, too, really was for 165 years, until the Supreme Court decision of 1954.

(Reproduction Rights Reserved)

A NEGRO IS SATISFIED

Commercial Appeal

To The Commercial Appeal:

When Paul Clark says he is a bigoted ignorant integrationist I agree with him. He speaks of North Side Chicago Park or New York or Beverly Hills as a heaven for the oppressed colored people of Mississippi. P. 3

If he can find as many as five Mississippi Negroes who will accompany him to either of these places I'll guarantee him free passage with understanding Paul will stay and will send for the Negroes when they want to come home, which would be about 10 days.

Memphis Tenn.

Mississippi is building good schools, buying good buses, hiring qualified teachers for the good colored people and they are satisfied.

God bless the good colored people and let's build them good schools and get along with them.

SAM JOHNSON.

SEGREGATION FOES SLATE THREE RALLIES

Times P. 33C

Three anti-segregation rallies are scheduled next month in Chicago and New York, it was announced yesterday.

Times 5-17-56

The Rev. Dr. Adam Clayton Powell Jr., pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist Church, 132 West 138th Street, said the gatherings would be held on May 11 in Chicago, May 17 at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York and on May 24 at Madison Square Garden.

Dr. Powell, Democratic representative from Manhattan, hailed the National Deliverance Day of Prayer on March 28 as a "great success" in funds raised and attendance.

New York

Dr. Powell reported that the estimated $2,500 proceeds of the program March 28 would be sent to Negroes waging the bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala.

Dr. Powell emphasized that the Montgomery Negroes were "not passively resisting the segregation pattern, but are asking for Negro drivers, improved seating arrangement and courteous treatment."

A group of clergymen will meet at St. Phillip's Protestant Episcopal Church, 215 West 133d Street, at 11:30 A. M. on May 23 to plan for the Madison Square Garden rally.

Dean Rusk Says "Negro In Society" Watched By World

Globe P. 12 Grev. 4-4-56

The role the Negro will play in our society will have a crucial influence upon the choice hundreds of millions of people will make in organizing their newly-won independence, Dr. Dean Rusk, president of the Rockefeller Founlation, told a capacity audience of 1800 attending the United Negro College Convocation last night at Severance Hall.

Nashville Tenn.

We are being judged by our performance, Dr. Rusk warned, and it will have a direct effect upon the choice of ideologies and institutions that are now being made throughout the world. Pointing to the contributions that college-trained American Negroes had made "at the most sensitive points in our foreign relations," Dr. Rusk said that we cannot afford to diminish support for Negro education because the "segregation issue is still unresolved."

"To do so would create a lost generation of our Negro young people who aspire to learning and responsibile and dignified careers. The segregation issue is not settled, there are young people to be educated, and these are institutions ready for the task Quite apart from the ultimate solution itself. . .we shall in any event need the full capacity of all of our present colleges and universities and more."

The Convocation, sponsored by more than 160 distinguished Cleveland citizens under the chairmanship of Louis B. Seltzer, editor of The Cleveland Press, highlighted a 3-day meeting of the presidents of 31 colleges of the United Negro College Fund.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College in Atlanta, Georgia, and Vice-President of the Fund, speaking at the Severance Hall meeting, statel that though the deep South is employing tactics to delay desegregation, "America can never again accept segregation as Constitutional measure. These attempts to circumvent the May 17, 1954 Decision of the Supreme Court will have to be tested out in the Federal Courts by Negroes."

Dr. Mays pointed out that the Fund's 31 colleges make, adding that for almost a century "they have carried the torch of freedom and interracial good will for the entire South. When the churches were closed to interracial gatherings and other institutions were barred against them, it was on the campuses of these colleges that Negroes and white people of good will anl prophetic insights met to discuss their common problems and to lay the foundation for a desegregated society.

"Even today, with incresing racial tension in the deep South, it is only on the campuses of the colleges that make up the United Negro College Funl that desegregated, interracial meetings can be held, and free discussion on integregation permitted. For example, in Georgia, right now, the only colleges in the state that are free to have interracial gatherings without restrictions are the seven so-called Negro colleges."

A Call for the White House to Act

Courier-Journal

WHEN the Supreme Court in 1954 ruled segregated public schools unconstitutional, President EISENHOWER responded with vigorous leadership. He said he hoped that the District of Columbia schools would become a model for the change decreed by the court. Almost inevitably, thanks to the prestige of his high office, they did—achieving virtually complete integration within two years, and with relatively so little friction that many students of social revolution were astonished.

Louisville, Ky.

The model, however, has fired no emulation in the Deep South. Hot-headed opposition to compliance with the court's decree has mounted, steadily borrowing strength from extremists who would complete a social revolution overnight. Men of goodwill and moderation, of both races, are threatened with the melting heat of the extremists, and there is a steadily worsening deterioration of the situation.

Times 3-27-56

This development has paralleled a vacuum of leadership at the top. It is a vacuum that has swelled dangerously since the days of 1954. It is a vacuum that friends of the President and of the nation's best interests are now asking him to fill.

So far President EISENHOWER has responded with press-conference statements urging moderation and understanding, and with the weak and hopeless suggestion that Congress take over the burden with a bipartisan commission charged with making a continuing study of implementation of the court's order. The appeal for moderation and understanding, remarkably like ADLAI STEVENSON'S plea for "moderation, patience, time and intelligence," unfortunately commends itself only to those who already have it. It can achieve its goal only if it is matched by positive Presidential action to buttress these moderating influences, North and South, Negro and white, that alone can save the country from catastrophe.

Speech in itself is a form of action, of course. And there is no doubt that much could be accomplished, as some White House advisers are urging, by a fireside chat giving a careful and detailed exposition of the President's philosophy of moderation and how he wants it applied to what WALTER LIPPMANN has termed the most dangerous internal problem facing the nation.

But the President is also being urged (when he is not being urged to say nothing) to appoint his own commission of inquiry, a commission that would profit heavily from his own vast prestige and his great personal influence, a prestige and an influence that know no sectional lines. He is also being urged, by ADLAI STEVENSON and others, to call a White House conference or a series of them, at which responsible leaders of both races would exchange ideas on how best to proceed.

There is merit in all these ideas, it seems to us—merit as well as the possibility of increased friction if the personal leadership of the President is not both vigorous and sustained. But the crying need of the moment, whatever course is to be charted, is for Presidential initiative, for a truly national voice that rises above the uproar of the hate-mongers and the fanatics and speaks with justice and righteousness and sanity and patience and understanding.

There are many such voices in the South itself, little heard as yet over the din of the extremists. But they can be amplified a thousand-fold, in respectability and influence, by the President himself. Whatever the outcome of commissions or conferences in Washington, it is these voices that need the prestige of official endorsement and organization; it is state and not national bi-racial commissions that must do the greater job. If they are composed of men of goodwill who acknowledge that the time has come for the Negro and the white man to hammer out their problems across the conference table, if they are appointed by the President himself and are pledged to the same goals he has espoused, they could go far toward saving the day.

But it is the President who must act first.

Southern Revolt in '56

Post-Dispatch-Herald

Although there is as yet no obvious leader behind whom old guard Southern Democrats might rally (unless it is Senator Byrd), there is increasing evidence that a third party movement is in the making. It may not be consciously planned at this time, but the threat, nevertheless, is a real one. The issuance of the manifesto by Southern Senators and Representatives declaring implacable opposition to the Supreme Court school integration decision hardened the lines in the South against moderate and progressive leaders, who now seem to have become captives of the extremists. Passions are aroused as perhaps never before in this century and certainly to a greater extent than in 1948 when the Dixiecrat movement was born. White Citizens Councils and many even less extreme groups are saying that a vote for either national party as now constituted is a vote for integration. Thus the stage is being set for revolt.

Sun 4-1-56

Responsible Southerners have sought without avail to find safe means of recapturing their positions of influence and of putting out flames of hatred that are spreading in every direction. They know that the Dixiecrat movement in 1948 profited the South nothing and failed in its primary purpose, which was to cause the defeat of President Truman. In 1952, the Republican Party offered a temporary place of refuge to many a disgruntled Southern Democrat, and there was no third-party movement that year. Now the leadership of the two parties is so clearly in agreement on the race issue that extremist Southerners have nowhere to turn. In order to express their resentment and frustration they would, like Samson, pull down the temple on their own heads.

The time has come for courageous Southern leadership. If it is not exercised soon, revolt will be inevitable when the Democratic platform is written in August. Speaker Rayburn and Senator Johnson have such widespread support in the South that they could do much to calm the waters if they would speak out clearly and forcefully. They know that the South has nothing to gain by working outside the two-party system. They know that serious economic difficulties face the region if it becomes politically isolated. They know that the Supreme Court did not order a revolution in a day and that the interests of both races will best be served by evolutionary rather than revolutionary changes. They and others like them know these facts, and they should speak out. We are confident that they would find many recruits. At least, they would be acting to head off the threat implicit in a third-party movement—a threat to national unity and to success of the party they represent.

Second Thoughts on the South

Newsweek p. 23

The southward migration of U.S. industry may slow considerably if tension continues to mount over the segregation issue.

Mon. 3-26-56

One major company has already closed its Southern plant; other companies considering a southward move are having second thoughts.

Dayton, Ohio

The most recent cause for caution: Reports of a scattered boycott by white customers against companies believed to be "antisegregation."

Sales of one brand of beer in Mississippi* have declined since a publication called The White Sentinel reported the brewer was a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. (The truth: The brewer merely gave a membership to one of its Negro salesmen.) Sales are still down in several Southern states despite a flying trip by a company delegation to clear up the situation.

Voice Of The People

News p. 10

Segregation Natural, If Opportunities Equal

Why, Mr. White Councilman, are you so concerned and making such a big issue of integration. You are the only one who is worried. Ninety-nine per cent of the Negroes never even give it a thought.

We don't want to socialize with you, we don't want anything you have, but equal schools and parks for our children, and you wouldn't be giving us that because we pay just as much taxes as you do. We drive just as many cars per capita as you do. We wear just as fine clothes as you do. Our homes are just as comfortable as yours are. What do you have we haven't got?

Times 4-3-56

We don't want to go to school with you. Should you build two identical schools a block apart both unsegregated, you would find that the Negroes would segregate themselves. If our public schools were integrated, there would be so few Negroes, if any, in your white schools, your vanity would be shocked. And why do you and Gov. Marvin Griffin always preach integration leads to inter-marriage. Don't you have any confidence in your so-called white supremacy? Don't you know that marriage is an agreement between two persons, and nobody can be forced into a wedding? Don't you realize nobody can marry a white person unless he or she is willing?

B'ham, Ala.

So why don't you settle down and stop worrying yourself to death and passing laws and keep the newspapers full of trash about segregation and integration? The Negro doesn't want to be with you half as bad as some of your bill collectors and policy men seem to want to be with him. If integration comes, and it will, you have nothing to worry about. We'll still segregate ourselves because we love our race.

TED BROOKS,
Sayreton, Ala.

Va. Segregation Defender Cites

Post + Times Herald P. 18 Sat. 3-24-56

Sen. Lehman's Prohibition Stand

Washington D.C.

Associated Press

Sen. Robertson (D-Va.) yesterday recalled the North's fight against the prohibition amendment in urging recognition of "the justice" of the South's fight against integration.

New York and other Northern states, Robertson told the Senate, fought against the 18th amendment — which outlawed liquor—just as the South "now objects to a prohibition against separate but equal schools" for whites and Negroes.

He directed his remarks principally to Sen. Lehman (D—N. Y.) who criticized in the Senate recently the "manifesto" adopted by 19 Southern Senators and about 75 House members.

Lehman said the "manifesto calls for the use of all lawful means to overturn the decision of the Supreme Court."

"But these words," Lehman added, "are in support of action in some states to defy the law and to prevent its enforcement. That is not lawful action."

Robertson recalled that Lehman in 1933, while Governor of New York called the 18th amendment "and the related enforcement act 'sumptuary' legislation which, according to the dictionary, means law designed to regulate habits primarily on moral or religious grounds by the use of the state's police powers."

"He (Lehman) said repeal of the amendment showed 'the force of intelligent, well considered public opinion, aroused by the abuses and failures of a statute that never commended itself to the reasoned judgment of the people'," Robertson added.

"Will the gentleman (Lehman) not recognize," Robertson continued, "that the decree demanding that instead of providing separate but equal schools for the races the Southern states must mix them altogether is in our eyes 'sumptuary' legislation of the worst sort and that such action does not commend itself to the reasoned judgment of the people in our states."

6 Negroes Attempt College Registration

ATLANTA, March 23 (AP)—Six Negroes tried to enroll today at the State College of Business Administration.

At the end of the day the Negroes were no closer to enrollment than when they started after visits to the College, the State Board of Regents and the Fulton County Ordinary (Chancery Judge).

However, Attorney A. T. Walden for the Negroes said he would continue his fight to have them enrolled.

Alabama Legislature Broke Oath, Says Folsom

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 22 (AP)—Gov. James E. Folsom charged today that the Alabama Legislature "collectively and individually" violated its oath to the U. S. Constitution by passing a resolution declaring the U. S. Supreme Court's anti-segregation decrees null and void.

Folsom told a news conference that "the only way an elected official can be relieved of his oath to the Constitution of the United States is by a constitutional convention."

"Until the people say otherwise, I'm going to uphold my oath to the United States Constitution, come hell or high water," he said.

Baltimore County Speeds Integration

TOWSON, Md., March 22 (AP) The Baltimore County Board of Education voted unanimously yesterday to open 25 more public schools to integration when the fall term begins next September.

When added to the 28 desegregated last fall, the county will have 53 integrated schools including 43 elementary, three junior high, six senior high and one special school for mentally retarded youngsters.

San Antonio Ends City Segregation

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., March 22 (AP)—City councilmen, in less than five minutes today, ended a century of segregation of whites and Negroes in municipally owned facilities.

They unanimously passed an ordinance repealing a 1954 ordinance requiring racial segregation in city swimming pools, and then went a giant step further and threw open the doors of all public functions in municipally owned facilities to "all persons . . . on an equal basis."

City Atty. Carlos Cadena said the action is effective immediately. There were no speeches and the council completed passage quickly. The measure has been under private discussion for about a week.

The ordinance covered public tennis courts, golf courses, swimming pools, rest rooms and the Municipal Auditorium.

All school districts here are already desegregated.

Segregation Illegal; School Board Concedes

NASHVILLE, Tenn., March 22—The Nashville School Board conceded today that segregation provisions of Tennessee's Constitution and statues are "clearly unconstiutional."

The concession was made in a Federal Court brief supporting its request for dissolution of a three-judge court scheduled to be convened next week to hear the constitutional question.

At the same time the board requested a continuance of the suit seeking admission of 21 Negro children to white schools and two white children to Negro schools to permit more time for planning desegregation.

The Southern Declaration

Herald Tribune

The "Declaration of Constitutional Principles" issued by nineteen Senators and seventy-seven Congressmen from eleven Southern states is a serious development. It is easy to take issue with the "principles" enunciated in the document; morally, it is highly vulnerable. What is harder to challenge is the fact that an "explosive and dangerous condition" exists in the South of which this declaration is an ominous symbol.

Tues. 3-13-56

The situation has been building up ever since the Supreme Court ruled, on May 16, 1954, "that the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits the states from maintaining racially segregated public schools." Before that, application of the doctrine that "separate but equal public facilities" did not meet the requirements of the amendment—in transportation, in higher education—encountered relatively little co-ordinated opposition. It was when desegregation was applied to all public schooling that Southern resistance became articulate, organized and, in some cases, violent.

P. 20

New York N. Y.

The rioting on the campus of the University of Alabama over the admission of Miss Autherine Lucy on Feb. 6 provided a focus for public awareness of the gravity of the situation. Reporting from Tuscaloosa to this newspaper on Feb. 7, Mr. Robert S. Bird described the "seething undercurrent of discussion" that followed the riots. On Feb. 11 he told of a meeting of more than 12,000 Alabamans in Montgomery, who "roared and booed their defiance of 'race integration'"; the next day he outlined the "almost perfect success" of the Negro boycott of Montgomery's buses, which produced, on Feb. 21, the indictment of the boycott leaders. March 1 found a court ordering Miss Lucy readmitted to the university, although one trustee warned that "she probably will be killed." Almost immediately, Miss Lucy was expelled for "disciplinary reasons." Meanwhile, Mr. Bird saw Bessemer, Ala., shops stripped of guns and ammunition on rumors that Negroes planned to jostle whites on the streets. And guns are flowing Southward in increasing amounts, symptomatic of danger ahead.

* * *

Around the episodes in Alabama could be perceived the fabric of a growing crisis in the deep South. As Mr. Bird wrote on Feb. 27, in a series on "The South's Bias Problem," for most Southerners "the idea of segregation is not only an experienced fact in their lives but has for them the sanction of rightness which their whole heritage of cultural beliefs give it. This gives emotional power beyond a Northerner's ordinary understanding."

Without an understanding of that emotional power, the protests of the Southern Congressmen may seem mere legalisms. When they recite the precedents for the "separate but equal" thesis which the Supreme Court has renounced, and charge that the members of the Court "substituted their personal political and social ideas for the established law of the land," they can be refuted. The rule of "stare decisis"—that previous decisions govern later ones—has been regarded as "salutary" by the United States Supreme Court but not completely binding in constitutional matters. In 1894 the Court stated: "Manifestly, as this court is clothed with the power and entrusted with the duty to maintain the fundamental law of the Constitution, the discharge of that duty requires it not to extend any decision upon a constitutional question if it is convinced that error in principle might supervene."

* * *

Moreover, as Justice Brandeis pointed out in 1932, the reversals of previous decisions have been particularly numerous in such fields as the "equal protection" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. In interpreting that clause, the Court is bound to consider the climate of human society at a given time, to determine what, in the words of the amendment, the "privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States" may be considered to be at that time, and what constitutes "equal protection of the laws."

The Supreme Court held that in public education segregation does violate the Fourteenth Amendment, much as Archbishop Rummel of New Orleans held it to be "morally wrong and sinful," and warned of excommunication to those who supported it in parochial schools, as Mr. Francis Sugrue reported on Feb. 24. Outside the deep South and at points within it, the conviction of segregation's moral, social and legal wrong has been steadily growing. The need for maintaining the great tradition of American freedom in the world insures that it will continue to grow. But if it presses too hard and too fast upon the deep emotional adherence to segregation in the South, the danger of the "chaos and confusion" against which the Southern Congressmen warn will be intensified. This newspaper urges again, as it did editorially, on Feb. 19: "We are all Americans, North and South, white and Negro, and we must find, with reasonable dispatch, an American solution to our common problem."

For a Bipartisan Racial Study Group

Post + Times Herald
Tues. 4-10-56

From the (Norfolk) Virginian-Pilot

Washington, D.C.

THE EXCHANGE between Gov. LeRoy Collins of Florida and President Eisenhower leaves the clear implication that if Congress does not provide for the bipartisan commission on racial problems which the President asked for in January, he will set up some kind of commission himself. The country approaches, almost surely, a new effort to understand segregation problems in the Southern states.

But Governor Collins' suggestion of a conference of Governors and Attorneys General of the Southern States is a dubious approach. In the first place, the Southern Governors have an organization already. They have met and discussed the school segregation problems, and will do so again, and have also met in smaller groups. Southern Attorneys General have similarly conferred on what to do.

In the second place, if a congressional or presidential commission is to offer any hope, its membership should not be confined to the South. It should have a heavy Southern membership—possibly a large majority. But because the problems are national, and the contributions toward their solutions should be national, the membership should be national.

In the third place, such a commission should not be confined to officials, but should have as members some men and women, some Negroes too, all of moral strength and influence, of balance and courage, of deep wisdom and high intelligence, and of willingness to take on public duty for which they would probably encounter severe criticism.

IF IT is possible to muster such a commission, it is possible that it would initiate a new force in the South, and in the Nation too, to compete for public approval with the extremists on both sides who now dominate the scene. This is a force which Virginia has not had, the South has not had, and the Nation has not had.

It is the kind of influence which Governor Stanley envisaged on March 17, 1954, when, having just heard of the Supreme Court's decision of that day, he announced his purpose to set up a genuine study commission. He still held to that idea a few weeks later when he said it should include women and Negroes.

What happened thereafter is familiar history. The political forces of Virginia took charge. The result was the 32-member Gray Commission made up exclusively of legislators. The further result was a struggle between the deeply moved Southside of Virginia, which has supplied most of t driving power for state action, and t Negro leadership, chiefly exemplified the National Association for the Advan ment of Colored People (though if had not been that organization, it wo have been another).

In this struggle most of the cal thoughtful, moderate people of Virgin were squeezed out. Their influence ha been minor, almost negligible. They have waited and watched in anxiety, sometimes they have succumbed to pressure and taken sides.

IN SUCH respects, what has happened in Virginia is in principle much like what has happened throughout the South though in the Deep South the spirit and the extent have been different. It is the Governors and Attorneys General, it is the Legislatures, and it is now the Congressmen of the South that have taken the lead and directed the course of the South.

The college and university leadership, most other educational leadership, the church leadership, the men and women who have tried for years, not in dramatic ways, to improve racial relations, and the great multitude of moderate and responsible people who are not politicians but are not the less public-spirited and intelligent on that account—all these, who may well be the majority of the people of the South, have been a scattered and ineffective force.

What is here said about extremists and moderates in the South can, and should, be said about extremists and moderates in other parts of the Nation.

The point is that if the President, or if Congress, is to make a genuine contribution through a commission to study the perplexing and dangerous problems that grip the South, it will have to bring a new force into being.

The time may even have passed when such a movement can be started with any hope of success. For now the extremists have whipped up emotionalism to such a state that quiet thinking and action are much more difficult.

Yet the chance is there that the right kind of leadership, in the right kind of spirit, would bring into this troubled field a new concept to which men and women of good spirit would repair. It could not find more encouraging personal leadership than that of President Eisenhower.

Desegregation

Courier Sun. 4-15-56

Ohio Court Upholds Race Bar

COLUMBUS, Ohio—Ohio's Supreme Court has refused to hand down a verdict favoring the admission of a Negro woman to the Coney Island Amusement Park near Cincinnati and Mrs. Ethel Fletcher has indicated that she will carry the case on up to the U. S. Supreme Court. The court voted 5-2 against Mrs. Fletcher's mandamus action.

Pittsburgh, Pa. P.9

Jim Crow Worth $30 Billions

CHICAGO—Frank H. Cassell, industrial relations manager of the Island Steel Company, told a De Paul University forum here that racial discrimination costs U. S. industry $30 billions a year in wasted manpower and productivity.

* * *

Bishop Hits Dearborn Mayor

DETROIT—Bishop Richard S. Emrich of the Episcopal Church in Michigan has called it the "duty of every pastor and Christian to oppose" Mayor Orville Hubbard of Dearborn. Bishop Emrich said that Hubbard, by being outspoken in favor of segregation is opposing "fundamental teaching in the Christian faith."

* * *

GTEA Calls for Integration

AUGUSTA, Ga.—A call for the integration of Georgia's public schools has been issued by the Georgia Teachers and Education Association which represents 9,000 Negro members. The GTEA called for integration "with a spirit of fair play and good will."

* * *

ROUNDUP—In Arlington, Va., the NAACP is threatening court action unless the local school board allows Mrs. Lucille L. Penn to register at the University of Virginia's extension center . . . Negro plaintiffs in the desegregation case against the Memphis State College, through their counsel, Atty. Thurgood Marshall of the NAACP, have asked the U. S. Supreme Court to order three-judge hearings on the case . . . Gov. James (Kissin' Jim) Folsom, in Montgomery, Ala., has signed into law a bill which gives parents "freedom of choice" to say whether their children should attend segregated or integrated schools . . . A new school, costing nearly $250,000 and about 85 per cent completed, is no longer under construction in Dublin, Ga., in the wake of protests from white residents. School officials ordered a halt to the building of the school when it was claimed that the building was being erected close to a white home. Most of the 600 students who would have entered the school are presently being taught in shacks at Buckeye, Royal Chapel, and Minter . . . In Hillsboro, Ohio, eighteen Negro children have enrolled in formerly all-white schools thus ending over two years of litigation on the segregation issue . . . In Birmingham, Ala., Georgia's Attorney General Eugene Cook told a Citizens Council rally that his state will close the U. of Georgia law school rather than admit a Negro . . . Dartmouth College's Chapter of Phi Sigma Kappa has severed its ties with the national organization over the latter's banning of Negroes . . . Ex-Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas will be the "master of ceremonies" when the White Citizens Council of Arkansas and the White America, Inc., stage a rally in Little Rock on April 30.

NORTH PAPERS COVERING DIXIE 'LIKE WAR ZONE'

Journal & Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Sun. 2-19-56

COLUMBIA, S.C., Feb. 18 (AP)—The South is being covered like a war zone by Northern newspapers, Thomas R. Waring, editor of the Charleston News & Courier, said Saturday.

Addressing the final session of the South Carolina Press Assn's. mid-winter institute, Waring said Northern newspapers and magazines have a "corps of correspondents deployed all over the place" because of the race segregation problem.

"If we maintain decency and some semblance of order," Waring said, "we may be able to convince some of the people of the North that we are not a complete bunch of barbarians in the South."

'Tell It Not In Gath, Publish It Not In The Streets Of Askelon'—X

—Samuel 11, 1:30

Advertiser P.4-A Apr. 4-7-56

ONE day last week, a crudely printed note arrived at the home of a college president in Garden City, N.Y.—a pleasant Long Island village some 1,100 miles northeast of Shorter, Ala.

Starkly brief and simple, the note read: "Warning—a bomb will blow up your school Wednesday. We hate niggers."

JOHNSON

Dr. Paul Dawson Eddy, the Montgomery-born president of Adelphi College, moved fast. A day ahead of schedule, he dismissed classes for the traditional spring holidays; classes scheduled for that night and the following morning were cancelled. Some 200 women students living on-campus, who had made transportation arrangements for the following day, hastily revised their plans and left immediately.

Montgomery, Ala.

Soon the campsu and classrooms were deserted, as Garden City police, aided by Nassau County detectives, began a search of the little liberal arts school of some 3,500 enrollment, including a half-dozen Negroes.

Nothing happened. The bomb threat, fortunately, did not materialize. This week, students were preparing to return to classes Monday.

Dr. Eddy told The Advertiser by telephone that the bomb-note is the first of its kind ever received at Adelphi, though Negroes have been enrolled there in small numbers since World War I. Heretofore, he said, relations always have been amicable between the Negroes and other students, who include a large foreign element (representatives of 32 countries).

Dr. Eddy was at a loss to explain the threatening note. The police have found "no tangible evidence" during their investigation of what was, at the least, an alarming incident.

To The New York Times, however, the Garden City incident—though heavy with the race-violence element that appeals to New York editors when the wind is from the South—rated no more than a rather obscure spot on Pg. 29, Section C.

It's Happened Before

LENDING the incident added significance, if it needed more, is the fact that Adelphi College is not the first educational faculty in Nassau County to receive a bomb scare. For the past two years, according to The Times itself, "public schools in the county have been plagued" with threats.

As recently as Feb. 29, a juvenile court judge in Nassau County "made an example" of three high school students who admitted taking part in a bomb scare incident at Mineola High School earlier in the year. The Youths were sent to Nassau County Children's Center for three weeks.

Dr. Eddy, Adelphi's president for 20 years, is one of that growing army of graduates who believe the South must be given time to adjust to a court decision that jarringly reversed what had previously been a legal method of separating the races.

Among his friends, the "great body of opinion" shares his views, although a small group of the social-reformer type condemns anything short of immediate integration.

Moderate though he may be, Dr. Eddy does not see that the U.S. Supreme Court had any alternative but to render its far-reaching decision which struck down legal segregation.

"I don't think in this day and age, with world conditions what they are, that the court could have given any other decision," he said. But he believes it acted with "great wisdom" in not ordering immediate compliance.

Eddy, who was born in 1895 while his parents were residing briefly in Montgomery, believes, too, that the South was heading on its own initiative toward much improved race relations long before the court acted.

"If they give the South time," said Dr. Eddy, "they will work out their problems. If you push the South, there'll be trouble."

Discrimination Universal

A MAN who has traveled about the world as a missionary, Dr. Eddy does not claim that the North is pure in racial matters. Discrimination is universal, wherever groups with different customs and social mores are forced to live close, says Eeddy. It has been thus for centuries.

"The only place I know in the world

By Tom Johnson
Of The Advertiser Staff

where all races live together in as complete harmony as could be hoped for is Hawaii," Eddy observed.

Discrimination in the North, he believes, is founded on the familiar economic fear that the Negroes will disturb the equilibrium somehow by working cheap and thus cornering all the jobs. Another kind of resistance to the Negro arises from the fear that his presence will tumble property values. Because this is commonly believed, it is so.

Dr. Eddy is in no fear that the harmony that exists on his campus is about to be disturbed. When proposed dormitories are constructed, he expects that Negro students will occupy them with whites. At the present, the only resident students are women.

The Adelphi faculty includes a Negro biology teacher and there have been others in the past, he added.

Someday, Maybe

DOES he believe, as a man who has lived North and South, that school integration will, or could, be accomplished in the South?

Perhaps, he replies, but it must be done gradually, beginning possibly in the graduate schools, then in professional schools. Finally and ultimately, he said, the problem must be tackled on the community level. That is where the lasting and satisfactory solution will be found, if one is to be found.

CHARGE POLICE PERSECUTION OF BUSINESSMAN

A METROPOLITAN NEWSPAPER FOR THE ENTIRE FAMILY

LOS ANGELES Herald-Dispatch

"WITHOUT STRUGGLE THERE IS NO PROGRESS." Frederick Douglass

DEDICATED TO JUSTICE AND EQUAL RIGHTS UNDER THE LAW

Vol. 4—No. 44 | 15c NATIONAL | Los Angeles, Thursday, March 29, 1956 | 1431 W. Jefferson Blvd. RE. 1-5159 | 10c Per Copy

EDITORIAL

TO KEEP IT UP

THE HIGH STANDARDS OF OUR CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Repeal The Smith Act

Segregation, poverty, ignorance, repression, superstition, coercion and fear will become a matter of history only when man realizes that his rights to freedom are his rights and takes steps toward securing that freedom. The important and proper methods of maintaining freedom have not been taught us by those who governed us and to whom we paid homage.

Hence, our next step toward securing and keeping our God given rights to freedom depends upon ourselves. We must think for ourselves; and while our conclusions may not be infallible they will be nearer to right than the conclusions forced upon us by those who have personal interest in keeping us in ignorance. This then, brings us to the importance of supporting the magnificent Montgomery, Alabama, Bus Boycott, which is now the militant leadership of America.

"We'll Go to Jail Together" Say Bus Boycott Leaders

Electoral College Reform Vote Viewed As Anti-Civil Rights

NEW YORK, March 28—Support of the proposed amendment to change the present method of electing the President and Vice-President "will be interpreted by Negro voters as anti-civil rights," Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said today in a telegram to a group of sponsors of the resolution which is now being debated on the floor.

The present proposal, Wilkins said, is essentially the same as the Lodge-Gossett resolution of 1950. The arguments advanced by Representative Ed Gossett of Texas at that time were "scarcely racial in character," the NAACP leader said the same is true.

At that time the Texas Democrat said the purpose of the resolution was to curb the power of the Negro bloc, which he said foreign born voters in the large Northern cities. He charged that time power "rests in the hands of the Negroes."

The proposal, Wilkins said, "is not a civil rights measure. It is a political measure. It is a measure for Negroes to lose political influence in 16 upper Southern states, and for the Negro to gain no compensation in any other state."

E. J. Franklyn, CIO Fights Housing Discrimination

Job opportunities and decent housing are the two issues mentioned by Congress of Industrial Organizations Director Bill Anderson according to a survey conducted in the Long Beach Press-Telegram and published earlier this week.

The survey found that despite improvement in job opportunities during the past three years, an minimum for Negroes still is "job classifications to

ATTORNEY HERBERT THOMPSON, JR., Los Angeles' foremost Civil Rights Attorney, received an award for the splendid work he accomplished during the two years he chaired the Legal Redress Committee of local NAACP, and especially his work in the Fire Department. The award was given by the Wilmington

Negroes Were Abused for 20 Years By Bus Drivers

Perhaps you have heard the statement that Negroes will not stick together. Well, if you hear it again, remember Montgomery, Alabama. The Rev. Abernathy, 25-year-old leader of the 137 day old Montgomery, Alabama Bus Boycott, in a meaningful speech, told 4,000 Negro and white listeners at Olympic Auditorium last Thursday evening, that solidarity among the Negroes in Montgomery "isn't just lived yet" and will walk until complete victory is won. He said the Negroes are not walking for fame or publicity, not for money, but for freedom.

Rev. Abernathy said the boycott is a culmination of over 20 years of insults, humiliations, name calling by drivers and beatings of Negro men, women and children. He said, "We have stood by to see our wives, mothers, and daughters insulted by men who the years by "big go" against us."

The marked headine in this Negro publication reveals the story is the same in California.

MANIFESTO'S FUTURE IS CITED BY CARLEY

Commercial Appeal P.4 Feb. 3-28-56

Fame Awaits Motion, Says Editorial Writer

Special to The Commercial Appeal

OXFORD, Miss., March 27.—Jack Carley, editorial writer for The Commercial Appeal, predicted Tuesday night that the recent Dixie Manifesto "will, in time, take a rightful place with the nation's greatest pronouncements."

Memphis, Tenn.

The prediction came as Mr. Carley cautioned all media of spoken or written communications against being "overwhelmed by provocation."

The manifesto's "appeal to our people not to be provoked by the agitators and troublemakers . . . and to scrupulously refrain from disorder and lawless acts' underlines the vital element of responsibility," Mr. Carley declared. "We must bear a little more of our share."

Addressing a banquet sponsored by the staff of the Mississippian, University of Mississippi publication, Mr. Carley cautioned his listeners to "ever seek truth, print the truth, guide, counsel and, if need be, admonish."

"There is only one place for us to stand—on the side of good order," he said.

"The times are somewhat hard," he continued. "The future seems a little foreboding, but if we face it with courage, if we keep faith with the past and with our convictions, we shall survive, come all the world against us."

Those attending the banquet at Mistilis Restaurant included Ole Miss faculty members, members of the University's Editorial Board, and staff members of the Mississippian and Oxford Eagle.

Today in National Affairs

Herald Tribune P.17

'Legal Means' Seen Delaying School Integration for Years

Sun. 3-20-56

New York, N.Y.

By DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON, Mar. 19.—Integration of races in all schools throughout the United States is a long way off—years and years, and maybe never. It is as far away or as near as the day when present advocates of integration are willing to face, possibly in their own families, the real issue—the intermarriage of white sons and daughters with Negroes.

Lawrence

The Supreme Court of the United States a few weeks ago side-stepped a decision on the issue of racial intermarriage. For technical reasons, it refused to decide whether a Virginia state law prohibiting intermarriage of races was constitutional. There are such laws in twenty-eight states. Another case is certain to come before the highest court soon. If it is decided that state laws prohibiting intermarriage are unconstitutional, the issue will bring even more friction than the question of school integration.

South Against Intermarriage

For in the South many people feel that legalized intermarriages will lead to a mongrelization of the white race and that the propinquity of white and Negro children from the kindergarten age up through the colleges cannot but encourage intermarriages on the widest scale in future generations.

The Southerners are arguing for the right to discriminate in their social life, and they consider schools to be a social institution. They point to the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the school question as having been based primarily on sociological grounds.

Southerners also contend that in the North many of the outspoken advocates of integration believe in and themselves practice the right to discriminate against Negroes and do keep them off the membership rolls of the "exclusive" clubs in New York City and Chicago, for example, and bar them from many country clubs throughout the United States, even though such clubs enjoy certain tax exemptions bestowed upon them by the Federal government. Is this right to discriminate in choosing members now to be taken away from them through the coercion of the taxing power?

"Lawful Means" Available

The prediction that integration in the schools is far distant is based on the many avenues of avoidance available to the South under the head of "lawful means."

The manifesto signed by such a renowned constitutional lawyer as Sen. Walter F. George, of Georgia, Democrat, and more than 100 other members of Congress did not—as has been erroneously interpreted in many quarters—advocate physical resistance to the Supreme Court's decision. It is important to examine anew the wording of the two most significant paragraphs in the manifesto, which read as follows:

"We commend the motives of those states which have declared the intention to resist forced integration by any lawful means. . . .

"We pledge ourselves to use all lawful means to bring about a reversal of this decision."

What are the "lawful means"? There are many. Here are some:

1. Case after case can be brought in a prolonged process of litigation, and every case can introduce a different principle or a different approach to the problem. Meanwhile, integration is delayed for years. This method is wholly lawful.

2. Southern states can amend their constitutions and pass laws permitting public funds to be given directly to individual citizens for use in educating their children in private schools chosen by their parents.

3. Public-school buildings can be leased to private corporations, and private schools can be established which could discriminate against Negroes just as do the "exclusive" clubs in the North.

4. Cases can be brought to the courts by white parents in support of the right of a state to exclude from classrooms all children who do not conform to sociological patterns set by the school boards in a community. Since the Supreme Court itself ruled that a Negro child can be made to feel psychologically inferior if excluded from a classroom containing white children, it will be argued that the impact of the Negro child on the white child has retarded educational progress and that, therefore, states should be permitted to operate mixed schools or segregated schools as the school authorities in their discretion may decide.

5. Many delicate matters of jurisdiction on strictly educational questions can be raised to embarrass the Northern states until they are finally convinced that the only way out is the adoption of an amendment to the Federal constitution specifically granting to the states the sole right to pass laws with respect to school attendance and educational standards in public schools.

Drive for Amendment

The drive for a constitutional amendment to reverse the Supreme Court's decision will be based on the theory that many people who want religious schools preserved will not wish to see the Federal government given complete control over education.

One thing is clear. The legal battle has just begun and "interposition" means interposing many a case that will hold up for a long, long while the general integration of schools in the South, during which time the movement for an amendment to the Constitution will be pursued.

Experience with another social issue—the eighteenth amendment—is recalled. Public sentiment was gradually built up against it, and the Federal prohibition laws were so universally disregarded and "resisted" that adoption of the "repeal" amendment to the Constitution came with amazing rapidity—within ten months after both Houses of Congress passed it. The states now have the sole power to prohibit the sale of intoxicating beverages within their own boundaries. It has become a "local issue"—which is what education, too, really was for 165 years, until the Supreme Court decision of 1954.

© 1956, N. Y. Herald Tribune Inc.

Ministers Ask Ike To Help End Race Strife

Defender Chicago Ill. P.3

Sat. 4-7-56

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. — The executive board of the General Missionary Baptist state convention of Indiana has asked President Eisenhower and Atty. Gen. Brownell to "use the influence of their great offices" to bring an end to racial tensions in the south.

The appeal was made in a resolution adopted by the group in a meeting at the St. Paul Baptist church here. Copies of the resolution were sent also to each member of Congress from Indiana.

Charging that "there has been a reign of terror, violence and murder against the Negro, aimed at preventing him from aspiring to enjoy the democracy for which he fought, bled and died," the group said conditions in the south represent "brazen defiance" of the Supreme Court.

The resolution said in part:

"We are firm believers in democracy and the democratic process, and we feel that the Constitution of the U. S., spells out the rights and privileges of all American citizens. . .

"We commend the ministers and other leaders of Montgomery, Ala., for the gallant stand they are taking against tyranny, discrimination and unfairness . . ."

The group, led by Dr. L. K. Jackson, secretary, urged all churches send funds to help the Montgomery leaders of a bus boycott.

"We appeal to the President of the United States and the attorney general to use the influence of their great offices to bring an immediate end to this reign of terror, violence and inhumanity," the ministers said.

Limits on Negro Rights Hurt U. S., Bishop Says

Sunday Star Washington D.C.

The Rt. Rev. D. Ward Nichols, Bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, said yesterday the Communists have been able to score gains because of the refusal of some Americans to allow Negroes their full rights.

Commenting on his recent visit to Russia, Bishop Nichols said he intends to make a full report to the President through the Secretary of State on the damage our race relations are doing to our foreign policy.

"Throughout our entire Russian trip," Bishop Nichols said, "a good deal of attention was paid to me for reasons that are in fact quite distressing. Russian journalists and others to whom I talked were carefully indoctrinated with th eidea that Negroes in America were officially deprived of any semblance of human treatment.

"If the questions directed to me are an index of their thoughts on this subject, I must state that race relations in the United States are being used as a primary weapon against the ideals of democracy.

"It must be perfectly clear to everyone that as a race Negroes enjoy something less than universal first-class citizenship in this country. This is not official policy, however, and I am satisfied that our great President has asked for progress in this direction. Of course progress and moderation represent two distinct sets of attitudes."

Bishop Nichols officiated yesterday afternoon at the laying of the corner stone for the new building of the Ward Memorial A. M. E. Church, Forty-second street and Washington place N.E.

Says Race Problem Worse In Church Going Nations

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

Sat. 4-4-56

LONDON — (ANP) — With a finger pointed at the United States and the Union of South Africa, a Church of England minister charged last week that race prejudice is the biggest problem in countries where church-going is strongest.

Rev. Ieuan Powell, writing in the Easter issue of his parish magazine, said racial prejudice is much less a problem in countries where there is least church-going.

Britain and France, he said, have poor church attendance but less racial friction.

Rev. Powell pointed to the U. S. and the Union of South Africa as church-going countries with the worst records.

SEGREGATION END IN 5 YEARS SEEN

Times of N.Y.
New York

Unitarian Group Told That 'Tough-Minded' Appraisal Warrants Forecast

Aug. 5-20-56

By JOHN H. FENTON

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 19—Effective desegregation in Southern states within five years was predicted tonight by a leading Negro social scientist.

Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, consultant for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, made his prediction in his speech at the annual dinner of the Unitarian Service Committee, Inc. The committee is a voluntary, nonsectarian, social welfare agency.

The psychologist, whose report on the effects of prejudice and discrimination on personality development was quoted by the Supreme Court in its public school desegregation decision two years ago, said a "tough-minded' 'appraisal of the relevant social forces led him to his conclusion.

If desegregation does not occur within five years, Dr. Clark went on, then the South and the nation will have retrogressed.

"I do not believe that Americans will permit this to happen," he asserted.

Legal Action Stressed

The next legal step toward civil rights, Dr. Clark went on, "should be the bringing of taxpayers' suits to enjoin the southern states and public officials from using funds, which include taxes paid by Negroes, for the purpose of withholding from the Negro his adjudicated civil rights."

Dr. Clark declared that "if certain whites desire to keep the Negro in an inferior status they should be willing to pay for this luxury with their personal funds." He added that public funds "should not be used in order to aid one group of citizens in their attempts to impose or maintain shackles upon another group of citizens."

He listed these liabilities for those seeking rapid segregation: The tenacity of segregation patterns; the apathy and inertia of individuals not immediately involved in the struggle, and the "vacillation, indecision and temporizing of the national political parties, political leaders and the legislative and executive branche of our Federal Government."

In addition, he added the "one party structure that dominates the South, and the increasing success of the propaganda war directed at the North."

If an increase in racial tension and violence should develop in the South, Dr. Clark said, President Eisenhower and top officials of the Department of Justice must accept a "major share" of the blame. He continued, with some bitterness:

"It may well be that golf clubs are no more effective in times of social crises than are violin bows."

The reference to violin bows was interpreted to mean Nero's fiddling while Rome burned.

Dr. Clark is Associate Professon of Psychology at the City College of New York and research director of the Northside Center for Child Development. He was one of several Negroes participating in the American Unitarian Association's annual meetings. The meetings opened Thursday and will continue through Tuesday. Last night, the Rev. Dr. Howard Thurman, dean of the Marsh Chapel of Boston University, termed the "overwhelming criminality of segregation" to be one of the results of a "mood of violence that has possesed the spirit of man like the great sickness."

Problems of Indians Cited

In an earlier speech on minorities, Mrs. Robert L. Rosenthal of Lexington, Mass., said that every day the Federal Government failed to deal with the problems of the American Indians the problems grow "in a kind of geometric progression."

Mrs. Rosenthal is chairman of public information for the National Indian Welfare Organization. She addressed the meeting of the General Alliance of Unitarian and Other Liberal Christian Women.

Dr. Gardner Murphy of the Menninger Foundation, a psychological clinic, asserted at a colloquium on the nature of man that "the unknowns have piled up even faster than the knowns" with the spread of knowledge, thereby making it increasingly difficult to understand man.

Members of the Cosmo-Theist Society were told by Dr. Harlow Shapley of Harvard University that "there is no reason in the world to believe that our mental stature hasn't been excelled by sen ent beings elsewhere in the uni se."

WHAT'S HAPPENING ON THE Desegregation Front

Post

CLEAN UP OWN YARD, LEHMAN URGES NORTH

NEW YORK — Northearners were urged to clean up "our own back yard" while also seeking justice for Negroes in the South by Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D-NY) in a speech prepared for the annual meeting of the Urban League of Greater New York, here Sunday.

July 6 1956

Harlem, the Democratic senator declared, is "both illustration and proof that the acute manifestations" of the civil rights problems are not confined to the South.

Sen. Lehman said: "Harlem is a community rich in tradition and culture . . . but Harlem is also a rebuke to us of the North, and a challenge to clean up our own back yard, even as we press forward with our efforts to bring justice and equality to the Negroes and other oppressed minorities in the South."

Journal P.3

GUILFORD COUNTY MAKES NO PUPIL CHANGES

HIGH POINT—The local school board announced on Friday that it had adopted a resolution making it possible for the board to assign students purely as individuals, considering the factors of health, welfare and safety.

At Greensboro, the Guilford County board of education approved the assignment of 18,000 rural school children to schools for the coming year, but no Negro children were asigned to white schools or vice versa. All assignments were to schools which the pupils would have attended nor-

* * *

HODGES PLAN HIT BY NC METHODISTS

RALEIGH—Opposition to Gov. mally under the segregated system.

Hodges' program of voluntary segregation as "repugnant to freedom-loving people" was voiced here Saturday by members of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church.

The Negro Methodists called upon Gov. Hodges "as a Methodist layman to follow the Methodist Church suggestion that Methodists lead the way in bringing about an integrated sociey."

In its report to the conference, the Board of Social and Economic Relations said: "No state has the right to do wrong. All states, customs, traditions and laws are regional or national. The Supreme Court is not a threat to the rights of individual states, but . . . requires these individual states to deal fairly and justly with all their citizens."

* * *

S. C. WOULD OUTLAW NAACP LIKE OTHERS

COLUMBIA, S. C.—Noting that Alabama and Louisiana have already banned NAACP activity, State Senator Blease Ellington of Lexington County, said in a campaign speech that he hopes that South Carolina will do likewise.

* * *

MICHIGAN DEMOCRATS URGE END TO JIM CROW

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — Unanimous adoption of a pledge urging Michigan Democrats to work toward the end of racial segregation in the United States was announced here on Saturday as the state's Democrats wound up their two-day state convention.

* * *

CITES DANGER OF RACE IN POLITICS

DURHAM—W. Millard Barbee, president of the State Federation of Labor, said in a radio forum here Saturday that "using racial differences in political campaigns could lead to race riots."

"It grieves me no small degree," Barbee said, "when the racial issue is injected into any political campaign—county, state or national."

Barbee referred particularly to some of the eastern and far western counties of the state as places where the race question could become dangerous. He saw no danger in Durham county, however.

* * *

NOVELIST FAULKNER MAKES ABOUT FACE

NEW YORK—Novelist William Faulkner, writing in Harpers' magazine, says this month that the nation's failure to achieve Negro and white equality could "destroy the one potent force against communism in the world today—the simple belief of man that he can be free.

Faulkner, the Mississippi writer, who stirred up a hornet's nest with a pro-segregation article in Life magazine not long ago, said:

"The people who only 300 years ago were eating the carrion in the tropical jungles have produced the Phi Beta Kappas and the Dr. Bunches and the Carvers and the Booker T. Washingtons and the poets and musicians. They have yet to produce a Fuchs or a Rosenberg or Gold or Burgess or Maclean or Hiss, and for every Negro Communist or fellow traveler there are a thousand white ones," Faulkner wrote.

Their present lack of equality, he said, "is our Southern white man's shame."

Hit Back at Segregationists, Atlanta U. Seniors Are Urged

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. June 6-5-56 P.16

A Washington, D.C., Negro lawyer, in a speech delivered here Monday, called on Negroes to launch a counterattack on racial segregationists who are "poisoning the minds of Northern whites."

Dr. James M. Nabrit Jr., civil rights attorney and secretary of Howard University in Washington, told graduating seniors at Atlanta University that the Negroes must use the same facilities of mass communication in starting the counter move.

He said Southern segregationists, in national magazines and by appearances on network radio and TV constitute a "dangerous course of action."

They are, he added, polluting the minds of Northern whites.

Nabrit said the segregationists have two objectives:

"One is to convince the North that the South is adamant in its opposition to integration and will never accept it. The second is to so bewilder the North with stories of the Negroes and their diseases, ignorance, political crookedness and immorality as to cause the North to wipe its hands of the question."

He then blasted former Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina, former Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia, newspaper editor T. R. Waring of Charleston, S.C.; Gen. Mark Clark, novelist William Faulkner, Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas and Associated Press writer Bem Price as being leaders in the Southern camp.

He added that the Negroes need selected persons to appear on radio and television, before college and forum groups, to prepare newspaper and magazine articles and to separate fact from fiction."

In conclusion, Nabrit urged the graduates to stay inside the law and fight diligently for their rights.

NEGRO SAYS SOUTH WOULD DIVIDE NORTH

Commercial Appeal P.20

Campaign On Racial Issue 'Well-Organized'

Memphis Tenn.

ATLANTA, June 4.—(AP)—A Negro lawyer said Monday backers of racial segregation "have embarked upon a well-organized and co-ordinated campaign to divide and poison the minds of Northern whites" through the media of mass communications.

Dr. James M. Nabrit Jr., a civil rights attorney and secretary of Howard University in Washington, called on Negroes to use the same facilities to counter such efforts.

In an address at commencement exercises at Atlanta University, Nabrit said articles by Southerners in national magazines and their appearance on network radio and television programs constitute a "dangerous course of action."

He said segregationists aim to "confuse and dissipate all activities which lend moral, political and economic or financial support to the Negro's effort to achieve equal justice under the law."

Times 6-5-56

They have two objectives, he said, adding:

"One is to convince the North that the South is adamant in its opposition to integration and will never accept it. The second is to so bewilder the North with stories of the Negroes and their diseases, ignorance, political crookedness and immorality as to cause the North to wipe its hands of the question and relegate it to the South for solution."

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Federalist Papers On States' Rights

I would like to quote a few passages from "The Federalist," that great commentary on our national Constitution.

These quotes are strikingly apposite to to the present heated discussion as to the power of the federal government over the rights of the several states. The quotes follow:

1. "It has not a little contributed to the existing infirmities of the federal system, that it never had a ratification by the people. Resting on no better foundation than the consent of several legislatures, it has been exposed to frequent and intricate questions concerning the validity of its powers, and has given birth to the enormous doctrine of a right of legislative repeal.

"Owing to its ratification to the law of a state, it has been contended that the same authority might repeal the law by which it was ratified. However gross a heresy it may be to maintain that a party to a compact has the right to revoke that compact, the doctrine itself has had respectable advocates."—The Federalist No. 22: Hamilton, Dec. 14, 1787.)

2. "Were it admitted that the federal government may feel a . . . disposition to extend its power beyond the due limits, the (states) would still have the advantage in the means of defeating such encroachments.

"If an act of a particular state, though unfriendly to the national government, be generally popular in that state, and should not too grossly violate the oaths of the state officers, it is executed immediately and, of course, by means on the spot and depending on the state alone.

"The opposition of the federal government or the interposition of federal officers would but inflame the zeal of all parties on the side of the state, and the evil could not be prevented or repaired, if at all, without the employment of means which must always be resorted to with reluctance and difficulty.

". . . should an unwarrantable measure of the federal government be unpopular in particular states . . . the means of opposition to its are powerful and at hand. The disquietude of the people . . . (their) refusal to cooperate with the officers of the Union; the frowns of the executive magistracy of the state; the embarrassments created by legislative devices . . . would oppose, in any state, difficulties not to be despised.

". . . and where the sentiments of several adjoining states happened to be in unison, (there would be presented) obstructions which the federal government would hardly be willing to encounter.

"But ambitious encroachments of the federal government on the authority of the state governments would not excite the opposition of a single state, or of a few states only. They would be signals of general alarm.

"Every state government would espouse the common cause. A correspondence would be opened. Plans of resistance would be concerted. One spirit would animate and conduct the whole.

"But what degree of madness could ever drive the federal government to such an extremity?"—(The Federalist: James Madison, Jan. 29, 1788.)

3. ". . . as the Constitutions of the states differ much from each other, it might happen that a . . . national law, of great and equal importance to the states, would interfere with some and not with other constitutions, and would consequently be valid in some of the states at the same time that it would have no effect in others.

"Thus the world would have seen, for the first time, a system of government founded on an inversion of the fundamental principles of all government; it would have seen the authority of the whole society everywhere subordinate to the authority of the parts; it would have seen a monster, in which the head was under the direction of the members."—(The Federalist, No. 44, James Madison, Jan. 25, 1788.)

Thus our founding father struggled with the same problems which face us today. May we, in our time, have the same intellectual and spiritual integrity.

STANLEIGH MALOTTE.

Integration Issue Now Confused

By Thomas L. Stokes.

WASHINGTON — The situation is getting confused in both parties on the integration issue and who stands for what in which section of the country. This poses a problem that the long-suffering voters, white and Negro, must wrestle with between now and November.

For example, when "Jiggs" Donohue, campaign manager for Senator Estes Kefauver, blurted out in the final of the California primary battle that a vote for Adlai Stevenson would be a vote for Senators James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) and Allen J. Ellender (D., La.) and Herman Talmadge of Georgia, he adopted a line previously announced for the Republican Party to use against the Democratic Party as a whole.

The intent is plain in that the three southerners are segregationists, though it came surprisingly from Donohue, serving to dramatize the well-known schism in his own party, the Democratic. Hitherto, it has been left to the Republicans to point that out.

How Republicans plan to dramatize the Democratic schism by keeping the spotlight constantly on the southern segregationists was explained clearly, a few days prior to the Donohue blast, by Richard L. Tobin, public relations director of the Citizens for Eisenhower, in a speech here at a conference of that revivified organization.

He urged his fellow Republicans to impress upon Negroes that if Democrats win Congress in the coming election, important committees would be run by "bigoted southern political hacks." Then he added:

"Drum into Negro voters over and over again this true fact: A vote for a Democrat is a vote for Eastland."

Senator Eastland is singled out as the target and symbol, as you know, because he is chairman of the important Judiciary Committee which has jurisdiction over all civil rights bills. He would be chairman again if Democrats win the Senate in November.

The strategy outlined by Tobin is designed to win over sufficient Negro voters from the Democrats in populous states and urban areas in the north to unseat enough Democrats in House and Senate to give Republicans control of the next Congress.

Confident as are Republicans that Eisenhower will be reelected, they are not at all sure of regaining Congress. They won Congress, as you remember, only by a hair-line margin in 1952 because of the Eisenhower pulling power, but then lost it in the 1954 congressional elections when the President was not a candidate and did not have his name at the head of the ballot.

They believe that the Negro vote, coupled with the President's presence on the ticket, might be the combination that would recapture Congress for them in November.

Obviously the Eastland-segregationist campaign line will be beamed only at the North and not at the South, where Republicans are counting upon the continued personal popularity of President Eisenhower to maintain at least some of the gains they made there in 1952.

The President has kept himself out of the integration controversy, which has helped him in the South. He has, in fact, said far less than most any Democrat in public life that you could name.

Stevenson and Senator Kefauver have been quizzed about the issue and have talked about it continually during the three-month primary campaign. What little the President said at a news conference some weeks ago would locate him with the "moderates" who uphold the Supreme Court public school decision and urge gradual implementation, without use of force.

That brackets him with Stevenson, who is trying desperately to hold the Democratic party together and thus retain southern support for his nomination.

It it possible for Stevenson to preserve that necessarily precarious balance within his party, or will other leaders demanding a more rapid integration process and a more vigorour policy generally prevail in the convention and alienate the South?

As for President Eisenhower, will he be able to keep his support in the South, even though he continues to remain aloof from the controversy, if the issue is actively agitated outside the South by the Republican Party and Citizens for Eisenhower along the lines urged by Tobin?

These questions must await an answer. They epitomize the dilemma of the Negro, voters generally, and of many leaders in both parties.

Polite Racial Ostracism In Buffalo, N.Y.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have just read in the Buffalo Evening News a letter written by Vesta L. Robertson of Montgomery, and, as her observations are a rather sweeping indictment of the North as a whole, I am anxious to have it known that there are a sizable number of fair-minded people right here in the North who agree with her.

Having lived in the North 44 and in North Carolina 6 of my 50 years, born and raised here in New York, from my own personal experience I can say unequivocally the South is morally and spiritually head and shoulders above the North where we are born into a mongreloid miasma of "integrated" mediocrity and a debased sense of spiritual values.

But apart from this, the typical yankee is an obdurate numbskull, narrow-minded, self-righteous to the point of nausea. I do not consider New York a fit place to rear a family, for I cannot see to have any children of mine grow up in the spiritual vacuum which is so characteristic of Northern life.

As for the Negro, he is treated better in the South under segregation than he is in the North under our wholly hypocritical and cut-throat system of polite racial ostracism. Do white and colored live together here in a blishful state of "racial equality?" No, they do not! Buffalo has two large Negro colonies where they have their own churches and undoubtedly would prefer to have their own schools if the laws permitted. The social status of the Negro in Buffalo and in the whole North practically defies description. It must be purely by instinct that he is able to sense where he is "taboo" and where his presence might be tolerated. Consequently, for a little "paper freedom" in New York, the Negro has traded his personal identity and self-respect.

As an advocate of states' rights, I not only wholly disapprove of the Supreme Court decision meddling in the private affairs of the states, but also believe the state of Alabama or any other state is fully justified in taking any measures necessary to thwart any future encroachments of federal influence by means of legalistic contortions and private misinterpretations of the Constitution to help the spread of organized labor and serve the ends of seditious bands like the NAACP.

In closing, I hope it will be refreshing to some of your readers to know there are plenty of "yankees," myself included, who would be proud to live in Alabama or at least contribute something to friendship among the states.

GEORGE A. LAWSON.
Gainesville, N.Y.

Nixon Calls For End To Segregation

WASHINGTON -(ANP)- Vice-President Richard Nixon, addressing a nationwide television audience before and after a motion picture on job discrimination last week, called for an end to all racial and religious bias in private enterprises as "good business, good citizenship and plain good sense."

The movie, entitled "Commencement," was prepared by President Eisenhower's committee on government contracts. It is designed to teach a practical lesson in tolerance.

As chairman of the President's committee, Nixon asked for nationwide acceptance of the principle of equal opportunity for all persons, regardless of race or creed

Helpless, Say GOP Senators On Rights

Afro-American Sat. 6-23-56

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON — Four Republican members of the Senate Judiciary Committee took a "we'd - like - to- -do - something-but-" attitude of the civil rights measures that are being strangled in their committee by Sen. James O. Eastland (Dem., Miss.)

The opinions were expressed to Dr. Carl Murphy, president of the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers, by Sens. William Langer, John M. Butler, Everett Dirksen, and Alexander Wiley.

* * *

MR. LANGER said:

"Senators Hennings, O'Mahoney and myself, who constitute the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, unanimously voted out civil rights legislation nearly two months ago.

"When I was chairman of the committee I was able to help you, but when Wayne Morse turned Democratic I automatically lost my chairmanship as the Democrats had a majority of one and Mr. Eastland now occupies that position.

"I.. doubt whether anyone can get the full committee to overrule the procedure outlined by the chairman."

* * *

MR. DIRKSEN of Illinois stated:

"As late as Monday ... I raised the question of action in the Judiciary Committee on pending civil rights proposals in the hope that we could speed these to action by the full committee without delay.

"The chairman (Senator Eastland) advised that quite a number of witnesses were still to be heard, including certain members of the Senate.

"It would no doubt be possible to limit the testimony of some witnesses but it would be flying in the face of custom to seek to preclude interested members of the Senate from presenting their testimony to us."

* * *

MR. WILEY of Wisconsin asserted:

"I certainly don't want there to be needless delay on this, or for that matter, any other vital legislation which our people expect the full Senate to have the opportunity to vote upon.

"I think that our Judiciary Committee should make a substantial record on the civil rights front, so that the pros and cons are fully understood.

"At the same time, I am completely opposed to time-wasting devices which are merely designed to clutter up the redord and consume precious weeks.

"Obviously, time is running out in this session of the Congress, and unless the committee gives the Senate the chance to take this legislation up, it will tend to die on the vine."

* * *

MR. BUTLER stated:

"I must admit a feeling of frustration. The conduct of these hearings is definitely controlled by the majority party.

"I am doing everything within my limited power as a minority member of the committee to get these bills through the committee and out on the floor.

"While I am not confident that we will be successful in this regard, I have not by any means as yet given up hope."

Prejudice Hits As Foe of U. S.

Call & Post Kansas City, Mo.

WICHITA, Kas. — The United States will never be able to hold a place of leadership and the good will of the peoples of the world "until its professions of democracy are matched by its practices," Dr. Archiblad James Carey, Chicago, Ill., said Friday night to an overflow audience at the new St. Paul AME church, 17th and Piatt.

The Rev. Dr. Carey, who was appointed by President Dwight D. Eisenhower as first alternate delegate of the United States to the eighth General Assembly of the United Nations in 1953, was the principal speaker at a dedication banquet which formally opened the new church.

Tri. 6-15-56

Sees Double Standard

"We claim to be the leaders of the free world." Dr. Carey, an attorney, said. "But not all Americans are truly free."

Dr. Carey, former pastor of several Chicago AME churches, pointed out that for the past 350 years "we have been living under a double standard of morality in human relations. Slowly but steadily the days of racial segregation are nearing an end.

"The forthcoming termination of the life of racial segregation will be borne out because members of all minority groups—not only Negroes—have given an excellent account of themselves when given the opportunity.

"This also is true," he continued, "because of our shrinking world of which 60 per cent are colored people."

Must Face Them

"Because we have to face them abroad in our foreign relations," Dr. Carey explained, "we have had to revise our conduct at home."

The attorney, who is a recipient of the Abraham Schwartz Award for Human Relations, gave his views on the actions of the Supreme court in its rulings on racial segregation.

Tri. 6-15-56

"The Supreme court has cut out a cancer and the agony of the present is the post - operation shock," Dr. Carey said.

In closing, Dr. Carey, who was selected to serve as vice-chairman of the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy in 1955, paid tribute to the President for "his stalwart leadership in the field of human relations."

Does high cost of segregation prevent balancing of United States' budget?

Afro-American Sat. 6-23-56

Baltimore, Md.

By BAKER E. HORTEN

CHICAGO (ANP) — Every now and then a loud yell can be heard from the boys on Capitol Hill as to why and when, if ever, some administration can manage to balance the budget.

P. 13

Supplementing their hysterics, once in a while a faint and often overlooked scream can be heard from us tax-paying peons after looking in our empty wallets when the 15th of April rolls around.

General

All this may add up to just a lot of hog-wash, depending upon who's hog is getting washed, but it will be a shocking surprise to this reporter if the budget ever gets balanced.

Many people, and to an extent rightly so, are blaming our foreign aid program for the high taxes we're faced with today. But this corner somehow feels that even the $4,900,000 that the President wants for foreign aid wouldn't hurt, if no more was asked.

* * *

I AM A FIRM believer that the existing system of segregation in our country is costing us double the foreign aid figure in finances, grief, relief, welfare and countless other degrading circumstances breeded by a racial system.

In the South, for example, tax payers are forced to pay for the operation of two schools — one for colored and one for white.

They must by law of segregation maintain two separate parks, swimming pools, beaches, golf courses, and a hoard of other unnecessary facilities which cost you and I good, hard earned blood money.

Divide the cost of these things in half by eliminating them and perhaps we would have a good start toward balancing the national budget, or at least we would warrant a tax cut.

* * *

ONE OF THESE days I intend to make a vein-bursting attempt, if possible, to estimate the savings per year our country would realize if we weren't paying for two of everything.

Apparently, many of our Congressional representatives serve us well when it comes to measures outside of the duo-separate caste system, but will stop at no expense to retain a system that is costing the nation twice the necessary finances.

Before the boys start squaking about taxes again, they should take inventory of themselves to see whether they want a tax cut where it will do the most good—namely, the cutting out of segregation.

Gains in Fighting Discrimination

Herald Tribune
Wed. 5-23-56

New York, N.Y.

By Elinore Morehouse Herrick

THE key to the considerable gains made by President Eisenhower in the fight against racial discrimination is his use of every existing means to press for racial equality of opportunity. It was he who had the insight to extend President Truman's 1948 order for desegregation in the armed services to the government schools and other facilities at military posts. He has made the nation's capital a pilot project in the fight. In his State of the Union message in February, 1952, he had pledged himself to end discrimination there.

Working through the Board of Commissioners who govern Washington under Congressional direction, integration was started in the District services, police, fire, etc. School authorities were called together and the first steps toward educational integration were taken before the Supreme Court decision. The President felt strongly that the Capitol city should show the way. With this determined effort it was not long before barriers were lifted in restaurants, motion picture houses and other private businesses.

The inclusion of an anti-discrimination clause in government purchase contracts started with President Roosevelt. So did the Fair Employment Practices Committee. The war-time F. E. P. C. did some good but not nearly as much as its supporters claimed for it.

* * *

I had a first-hand opportunity to appraise its work when the shipyard I represented was one of its targets in Texas. The issue was our failure to upgrade Negroes and Mexicans which had been blocked by the fierce opposition of the A.F.L. Metal Trades Department unions and threat to strike. It was only with great difficulty that I persuaded the F E. P. C. representatives even to meet with these unions. The F. E. P. C. talked "tough" to employers but did not even threaten to rap the knuckles of such union leaders.

It was hard not to be cynical during the years when President Truman was barnstorming for a permanent F. E. P. C. Neither he nor President Roosevelt ever seized a plant which was pursuing discriminatory policies although they had war-time powers to do so. Nor was there ever a crackdown on the unions which in many cases were the real offenders. Racial barriers were deeply rooted in some of the old A. F. L. craft unions. The first attack on such union policies was made by the New York State Anti-Discrimination Commission established through the efforts of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

President Eisenhower wrote a new and stronger order for government contracts and set up a committee including employer and labor members to improve effectiveness of the application of the clause and to supervise enforcement. The work of this committee has been one of the most far-reaching efforts of this Administration.

Instead of an F. E. P. C. with powerless roving investigators, the President put the responsibility for compliance where it belonged—on the contracting agencies. Each was required to appoint compliance officers, whose duty was to investigate government suppliers to make sure they were following a non-discriminatory policy in recruitment, hiring, training and upgrading of employees. Even the kind of ads they placed for "help wanted" were scrutinized. Contracting and sub-contracting employers were required to post notices advising employees of their rights. Complaints began to flow to the Government Contract Committee.

* * *

The committee has placed great emphasis on an educational campaign. Wherever complaints filed against several contractors in the same industry indicate that there might be an industry-wide pattern of discrimination, a sub-committee has been appointed to take the matter up with the whole industry. Conferences have been held with eleven leading organizations representing entire industries. There have been similar conferences with labor union leaders. Employer groups have undertaken to mail detailed explanations of the program to all their members.

Last year a conference was held with representatives of the twenty-one states and various municipalities which have anti-discrimination statutes to pool their experience. The committee has gone into the field to meet government contractors to find out their problems in complying.

A two-day training session for compliance officers has been held by the committee—the first such training program. It was attended by 125 representatives of Federal agencies.

In still another area the Eisenhower influence has had important impact. For a two-year period the Federal Bureau of Investigation experimented in the conduct of civil rights schools in co-operation with state and local police throughout the country. Already 200,000 enforcement officers in 175 cities have received such training and by the end of 1956 it is expected that 750 such training programs to give affirmative protection to civil rights will have been inaugurated.

Each year President Eisenhower has asked Congress—unsuccessfully to date—to create a bipartisan commission with subpoena power to investigate infringement of civil rights. This past March he presented to Congress legislation to create a civil rights committee with subpoena power to look into all complaints; to establish a special division in the Justice Department under an Assistant Attorney General to supervise all civil rights cases; and legislation to permit any citizen to institute in Federal courts a civil action against any person or organization that denied or sought to deny suffrage in any state.

* * *

These proposals have now been approved by the House Judiciary Subcommittee.

To extremists this may seem a modest program. But President Truman campaigned fruitlessly for an "all-out" attack on the discrimination problem, rejected compromises proposed even by such a liberal member of his own party as Senator Humphrey of Minnesota, insisted on criminal rather than civil penalties, put the creation of an F. E. P. C. ahead of anti-lynching and anti-poll tax bills which had a good chance of passage. The result was no legislation of any kind.

But the Eisenhower legislative program is realistic. It takes civil rights cases out of the local courts, which have involved endless red tape and frustration, and puts them into the Federal courts.

It is up to Congress to act. The President has utilized to maximum advantage all existing opportunities to end discrimination without recourse to the kind of legislation that has fomented so much bitterness in the South and that has hopelessly split the Democratic party. The time has come for Congress to enact the reasonable program the President has proposed.

Mrs. Herrick was formerly regional director of the National Labor Relations Board.

Racial, Farm Issues Hurt Ike, Newsmen Say in N. Y.

Constitution p. 11
Atlanta Ga.

By WAYNE PHILLIPS

(Copyright 1956 by The New York Times Co.)

NEW YORK, April 22—Dissatisfaction over segregation and farm policies has hurt President Eisenhower's popularity, newspaper executives reported today as they arrived in New York for Press Week.

However, most of those questioned reported that economic conditions in their areas were good, and that there was general satisfaction with the administration.

Wed. 4-23-56

Here and there small declines in retailing were reported, and there were some evidences of manufacturing cutbacks.

The chief business problem reported by the executives was the shortage of newsprint. Cutbacks in contract deliveries of newsprint have forced many papers to buy in the open market, and in some cases operations have been curtailed.

Those questioned at random were among 1,200 editors, publishers and business executives of daily newspapers in this country, Canada, Hawaii and Puerto Rico who are here for meetings this week.

The major organizations convening in Press Week include the American Newspaper Publisers Association and its bureau of advertising; the Associated Press, the United Press and the International News Service-International News Photos.

Secretary of State Dulles will deliver an address at the fifty-sixth annual luncheon of the Associated Press tomorrow.

The sharpest reports of dissatisfaction with the president's policies came from the South, where the issue of racial segregation has been at white heat, and from the West, where ranchers have been caught between declining livestock prices and rising costs of living.

One publisher—Marshall Field Jr. of the Chicago Sun-Times—held that because of Supreme Court decisions against racial segregation "the Negro vote is tending toward the Republican party this time."

The farm issue has hurt the president in Georgia, according to George C. Biggers, president of Atlanta Newspapers Inc., publishers of The Atlanta Journal and The Constitution. And segregation hurt him in Alabama, according to Clarence B. Hanson Jr., publisher of the Birmingham Post-Herald and News.

But both pointed out that in traditionally democratic states this was of little political significance, and that despite the disatisfaction the president was still "extremely popular" personally.

"The segregatin issue is separate and apart and we would have that under any administration," Biggers said.

McDonald Urges Industrialists To Back Court Segregation Ban

Pittsburgh—A plea to industrial leaders to lend their support to upholding the U. S. Supreme Court's ban on segregated schools was made at the convention of the Pennsylvania Industrial Union Council by Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers.

He called on the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers "to speak out truly as believers in democracy to help provide ways and means to avoid this threat to our American life."

Hits White Councils

McDonald hit hard at the rise of White Citizens Councils in the southern states and termed them "the most serious challenge to American democracy in the past 100 years."

"I do not think," he continued, "there are those so foolish as to carry us to the stage of 1861 but some people may try to take us down that road. In the South, plant managers and superintendents have tremendous influence in small towns. The political leader bows to his word and shudders at his anger.

"Labor is solidly backing the Supreme Court decision and I suggest that top-side management in such industries as steel, lumber and chemicals institute a system of education among management representatives whereby these leaders of thought can raise their voices to spread democracy."

Classrooms of Democracy

McDonald declared that "the factories of America, where men work side by side, regardless of race, can be made the classrooms of democracy in America. It is the responsibility of industrial management to speak out affirmatively on this and to do something about it, as labor has done."

The convention's only roll call vote to fill an office saw a contest for a vice presidency between two members of the Transport Workers. Charles Robinson, the incumbent, defeated Andrew Kaelin, head of the TWU railroad division, by a vote of 2,004 to 689.

The Council's committee to work out details of merger with the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor will meet after the Federation's convention in Philadelphia next month.

The segregation issue III—

Many believe integration to come—hope long way off

BY JOHN M. FENTON, Gallup Poll staff representative

Although an overwhelming majority of Southern whites—especially in the Deep South—are opposed to integration, a good many expect the day to come when segregation will end.

But they hope that day is a long time off.

With much bitterness at having something "shoved down our throats," 55 per cent of the white Southerners admit today that the time will eventually come when whites and Negroes will be going to the same schools, eating in the same restaurants, and generally sharing the same accommodations.

On the other hand, an important and articulate minority holds that integration will never come to Dixie. This group tends to feel it is something that "the South just won't permit."

Negroes — a majority of whom want to have mixed schools—are more optimistic about the chances of full-scale integration. They too, however, think it will involve many years before it comes.

This reporter has just returned from the South where he directed the field operations of local reporters from the Institute's staff in interviewing a true cross-section of the white and Negro population.

In seeking to determine the future chances for integration, we asked the following question:

"Do you think the day will ever come in the South when whites and Negroes will be going to the same schools, eating in the same restaurants, and generally sharing the same public accommodations?"

The results for whites and Negroes:

WILL DAY EVER COME?

Southern whites only
Yes	55%
No	33
Don't know	12
Southern Negroes only
Yes	70%
No	15
Don't know	15

No immediate acceptance

This is how the Southerner feels about the eventual outcome of integration. When it comes to the question of any immediate acceptance of the Supreme Court's decision, his views are quite different.

Only about one white person in eight in the South thinks that the people in his community will accept the decision quietly without any trouble or attempts at delay.

This view is most prevalent in the "border states" of Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Texas where integration is already in effect in some communities and where the percentage of Negroes in the population is relatively low.

Othr white people we talked with believe that integration will be introduced into the schools, but only after a great deal of delay and trouble. Behind their thinking is the idea that "we'll have to do it, but we'll show them we don't like it before we do."

The views of a 72-year-old architect from Spartanburg, S. C., are typical on this point. "I believe people will stall for awhile," he said, "but they eventually will have to give in. I don't feel any violence will result except possibly some small incidents."

Negroes are hopeful

A MAJORITY of the Negroes are hopeful of cooperation of some kind in setting up mixed schools — even though many think it will be delayed for some time.

"I think all people will cooperate and have school together," said a Negro farm housewife in Arkansas, but she added, "I do believe though there will be some trouble.

To a great many white persons, the prospect of integrating with the Negro is so remote as to be unworthy of serious thought. These people are convinced that segregation will "just be kept like it always was."

A 37-year-old farmer who lives just outside of Clarksdale, Miss., commented: "Well, maybe I'm prejudiced—I'm a Mississippi Southerner. But I think the people will continue to have separate schools indefinitely—if they have schols at all."

The possibility that the South —if forced into integration— might not "have schools at all" is one discussed frequently. One hears much talk about the introduction of a private school system or—if that is not possible—"just keeping the kids out of school altogether."

"People will just not let the children go to the public schools if it comes," said a 21-year-old secretary from Wythesville, Va., "My children will never go to school with the Negroes."

"The people around here will fight this thing," stated a 32-year-old candy salesman from Chattanooga, "I'll send my children to private schools before I'll let them mix with Negroes."

Adding up the score on the question of what people will do, one finds that the "bitter-enders"—those who are thinking only in terms of preventing integration—outnumber the "go along reluctantly" group—by about 2-to-1.

'Hard Core' of South

A FIXED determination to "just not go along" with the Supreme Court's decision is most noticeable in the Deep South—in Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina and Mississippi.

In these states, all of which have a Negro population larger than 30 per cent (and in some instances, counties where more than seven out of 10 persons are Negroes), only about one white person in five thinks there will be any kind of acceptance—willing or unwilling —of the integration decision at present. The resk talk about ways to continue segregation.

These are the states where a "hard core" of resistance is likely to be met with for many years to come.

Whereas talk of violence and bloodshed is practically negligible in other parts of the South, there are some white people in the Deep South states who think there will be riots, killings and such if the Negroes are "mixed in" with the whites.

Attitudes extreme

EXTREME ATTITUDES on the question of integration are by no means confined to the general public. The same views are held by many law enforcement officials. Here, for example, is how the sheriff of a heavily Negro county in Mississippi delta feels about integration:

"I don't like it.

First, for the simple reason that it is not right to force children into desegration because of their color.

Second, the white children in the South are farther advanced in their literary work than the colored children.

Third, we are building good schools for colored children in this area; therefore, it is not necessary to mix the races.

"I believe segregation was intended" he went on, "otherwise, the laws of nature would not have made white and colored. The laws of nature cry out against mixing the races. Segregation is necessary in the South to prevent bloodshed and horror."

The sheriff admitted, however, that segregation would probably end some day, adding bitterly, "It will destroy the South in so doing."

'Bitter pill' to swallow

FOR MANY SOUTHERN whites—like this sheriff—eventual integration is a bitter pill that they feel they will be forced to swallow because of "outside interests" and a North that doesn't really understand their problems. Although it goes against a tradition and a "way of life" that they have always known, most admit they they will finally obey the Supreme Court's injunction because it is the law.

As a New Orleans housewife sid: "We have to accept the laws of our land, but we don't have to like them."

"Yeh, it will come someday, I guess," commented a 42-year-old construction worker from West Point, Miss., "there's just so many Negroes in the South and such power in the North. They just don't understand the situation."

For many people, it's just a case of accepting the inevitable or as a Norfolk, Va., housewife put it: "It's either accept it or fight another civil war. I hate to think about it, but I suppose it will come."

In the opinion of the average Southerner, therefore, integration does lie somewhere in the future. Although he sees much time and a good deal of trouble before it comes, he feels, in the long run, that there is not much he could do to stop it—much as he might like to do so.—(c).

Racial Progress Made Under Ike Administration Despite Bias

World Birmingham Ala.
Jan 1-13-56

NEW YORK—(NNPA)—Tremendous progress on many fronts in the three years of the Eisenhower Administration has been marred by some incidents in certain sections of the country, William P. Rogers, Deputy Attorney General of the United States, declared Wednesday night.

Mr Rogers spoke at the labor-management award dinner of the Urban League of Greater New York in the Starlight Room of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

One incident which detracted from the record of achievement was the kidnaping and brutal murder of Emmett Louis Till, 14-year-old Chicago boy, whose body was found in the Tallahatchie River in Mississippi.

Mr. Rogers called the Till case "a serious black mark" and said it "does much harm to our country."

Declaring that more progress has been made in the past three years in the field of civil rights than at any time since 1865, Mr. Rogers listed the following achievements:

1. The elimination of segregation and discrimination in the Nation's Capital, including parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, tennis courts, golf courses, theaters and the public schools, in which colored students comprise 64 per cent of the total enrollment and 147 schools now have racially mixed classes.

2. The elimination of segregation in the Armed Forces, the operation of all schools for children of service personnel on military posts on an integrated basis, abolition of racial segregation in Veterans' Administration hospitals, and the elimination of segregated facilities for civilian employees at Navy yards in the South.

World

3. The order of the Interstate Commerce Commission that racial segregation be ended in interstate trave, railroad coaches, buses and waiting stations—a principle which the Justice Department "vigorously supported" in a brief filed with the Commission.

P.8

4. The decree of the Supreme Court ordering "a prompt and reasonable start" toward "good faith" compliance with its decision against segregated public schools.

5. "Great progress" made by President Eisenhower's Committee on Government Contracts in seeing that contractors comply with the anti-discrimination clause in all standard Government contracts.

Mr. Rogers disclosed in his speech that as a result of a report made by the Greater New York Urban League, the President's Committee has decided to review the employment practices of the entire transportattion industry.

He said the committee will consider the employment practices of airlines, railroads, buslines and steamship companies which do business with the Federal Government.

A special subcommittee, headed by Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, Mr. Rogers revealed, has already met with the presidents and other leading management representatives of eleven airlines.

These management representatives, after a frank and complete discussion with the subcommittee, placed the matter before the Air Transport Association, the trade association of the industry.

Mr. Rogers said the Air Transport Association discussed the matter at its annual meeting and decided that the specific methods of working out a program, at least with reference to nonflight personnel, should be carried out by the professional staffs of the President's Committee and the Association.

Citations were presented at the dinner to Max Kralstein, vice-president of the Bakery and Confectionary Workers International Union AFL-CIO), and George Faunce, vice-president and general counsel of the Continental Baking Company, for their contributions to improved race relations in the Greater New York area by working to eliminate discriminatory employment in industry."

The presentations were made by Mrs. Sophia Y. Jacobbs, president and Edward S. Lewis, executive director of the Greater New York Urban League.

Understanding the South

Forbearance Is Asked in Judging Attitude on Racial Problems

Times P.12-E

The writer of the following letter, formerly Professor of International Law at Princeton, has held numerous diplomatic posts.

Sun. 1-22-56

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

As a Northerner who has been privileged for several years to enjoy the courtesy and hospitality of Southerners, I regret the inability of many Northerners to understand the point of view of intelligent and highminded Southerners concerning the racial problem. This point of view has been ably and temperately presented in the January issue of Harper's Magazine by the able and conscientious editor of The Charleston News and Courier, Thomas R. Waring.

New York

The heart of the racial problem, as I have studied it at close hand, lies in the honest conviction that local governments, under the Constitution of the United States, have the right to solve their social and economic problems in their own way. This point of view, known historically as States Rights, is still of deep significance for all Americans.

The intense opposition felt in this politically Democratic section of the country to the policy of aggrandizement of power in the National Government by the New and Fair Deals was very genuine. It was shared by millions of Northerners.

The racial issue was not created by the present generation. It is a thorny bequest of several centuries. It cannot easily be solved, not even by a fiat of the Supreme Court. It requires wisdom, patience and forbearance by all concerned, including Northerners and colored folks in general.

The North has the greater need of forbearance when it sadly acknowledges its grave responsibilities for the lamentable condition of the colored people who migrated to New York and Chicago.

What I am pleading for is simple courtesy by outsiders in judging the attitude of generous-minded Southerners in their agonizing task of working out a just solution of the racial issue. They have the most concern for the welfare of the colored people, who, in last analysis, must share the responsibility for the creation of a prosperous and happier Southland.

PHILIP M. BROWN.

Charleston, S. C., Jan. 12, 1956.

There Are 'Good' Yankees

A Advertiser P.4-A

SOMETHING new has been added Up Na'wth — new and encouraging — voices raised urging appreciation of our problems, moderation and understanding.

Mon. 3-5-56

They cite the inconsistency of Yankees denouncing one form of defiance of law in the South, while condoning other and more violent disregard in their own bailiwicks.

Montgomery Ala.

An evil or error is not to be corrected by pointing out that someone is in as bad or worse case. But the practice of people with greater sins reproving the lesser faults of others was deemed odious enough to be censured in the Sermon on the Mount:

"Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; 'and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." (Matther 7:5).

★

ANY Southerner who has associated much with yankees knows that many of them readily qualify to come under the general heading of "good people" — kindly, fair-minded men of good will.

But since Uncle Tom's Cabin and the Civil War, the Yankee has had a crusader complex. He sees himself as St. George slaying the dragon of Secessionist sin. Or, perhaps unconsciously he poses as another Don Quixote laying lance in rest for some Negro Dulcinea—often with as little consideration for realities as the knight of La Mancha showed when he tilted with windmills.

Criticism of the South thus stems from two sources.

First and most blatant, Yankee politicians appealing to the Negro vote, hand and glove with organizations having a vested interest in inflaming Negro sensibilities.

Second, honest and well-meaning people who reflect their century-old heritage and preconceived notions, stimulated by today's propaganda. The South's best hope for a fair deal lies with these last.

★

QUITE recently, for example, two great Northern newspapers have called attention to the sordid technique of some of their own politicians—vulgar demogogues who hit the South at any manifestation of racial violence, but condone by silence or inaction much worse mob violence in their own states.

Editorialized The Cincinnati Enquirer:

The attempts to coerce Miss Authurine Lucy into staying away from the University of Alabama were deplored and deplorable. An angry assortment of whites formed themselves into a mob. They hurled stones and vegetables at the student, broke a window in the car transporting her.

In recent weeks the country has witnessed acts of aggravated and organized violence in strikes conducted against Westinghouse and Republic Aviation. Crowds of pickets have barred access to plants by violence, hurled rocks, overturned motor cars and assaulted workers. These incidents have been the result of systematic violence.

★

The Chicago Tribune, sometimes labeled South-hating, held forth in similar vein, and even more emphatically.

The Tribune called attention to rioutous mobs interrupting defense production in New York State, domain of the sanctimonious punk Harriman. It noted that town police of Babylon, N.Y. and the Suffol county sheriff were unable to maintain order, and—

The Babylon chief wired the governor [Harriman] that his men were exhausted by their efforts to restrain the violence of the picket mob, and that the violence was increasing constantly. He pleaded for state police, the national guard, or any other force at the governor's disposal that could restore order. His plea was ignored.

Yet Gov. Harriman has been bawling for the use of federal force to impose desegregation on the Southern States. Mobs in Alabama are anathema to him, but he shuts his eyes to a civil insurrection against law and order in his own state.

★

A THIRD editorial, timely and thoughtful, of a more general scope, has come to hand from the St. Josep [Missouri] News Press. Headed "NAAC Go Slow, Please." It stated in part:

We of this border state would like to give some friendly advice to this nationwide group that seeks more equality for the Negro. That advice is this: Go slow.

The Negro has come a long and grand journey since in midst of a terrible civil conflict Abraham Lincoln enunciatied his Emancipation Proclamation. Study the story of mankind. From twilight of antiquity to this very day, name us one race that has come as far in less than 100 years!

The South has its problems and we question whether the haste demanded by NAACP will help solve those problems.

38a 1956

GENERAL

Forget being a Negro to remain sane, says professor

Tribune Fri. 5-4-56

Los Angeles, Calif. P. 8

SAN FRANCISCO — "If whites are to . . . get over their prevailing obsession with skin color, they must learn how from Negroes who themselves are unobsessed — with their own skin color or anyone else's. In this insane situation of race relations, Negroes must act as the white man's psychotherapist," Prof. S. I. Hayakawa, talking on "How to be Sane Though Negro", on the San Francisco State college forum series, said here last week.

A former wartime Chicago Defender columnist, the Japanese semanticist, professor of English at State college, said, "The secret of how to be sane though Negro, is to forget as far as possible that one is a Negro. . . . If you are a biochemist or a parent but expect to be treated as a Negro, people are going to treat you as a Negro — whatever that means to them.

"What is necessary . . . is to remember only when one has to remember, and to forget the rest of the time. And what is important is that occasions on which one has to remember are constantly being reduced — for that is exactly what non-segregation means.

"More Negroes should,, instead of defensively asserting the equality of Negroes, take equality so much for granted that you can relax, and help everybody else relax. I do not mean that there should be any relaxation in legal and legislative efforts to reduce discriminatory practices; but these require clear-headedness and, therefore, personal relaxation, too.

"Your own beliefs about the outcome of any social situation of which you are a part are a factor in the outcome," Dr. Hayakawa said.

"You have heard whites say, 'If Negroes move into our community, there is bound to be trouble'. . . . Although such people sometimes believe they are stating an impersonal fact, there is an enormous personal element in such statements. In other words, you sense that they themselves are going to help make that trouble. . . . If a Negro goes into mixed company with the prediction . . . 'People are going to be unpleasant to me because of my race,' they may very well be unpleasant to him. . . .

"The expectations we have of life . . . the conscious or unconscious prophecies we make about people . . . are the combined product of our experience, our education, our miseducation."

FORMAL FIGHT WON

Dr. Hayakawa said he emphasizes personal attitudes because "in one sense it can be said the fight for desegregation and, therefore, for equality, has already been won. . . . It has been won, first of all, at the level of the Supreme Court and federal law. It has also been won at the level of mass communications. . . . No national magazine, no radio, nor television, no press syndicate, no newspaper outside the South, neither major political party, questions any longer the right of Negroes to full participation. . . . Equality as a moral principle, is almost universally established."

Describing as "bootleg segregation" the gerrymandering of school districts and control of real estate against the interests of Negroes, Dr. Hayakawa said this is evidence of the "ambivalence in the hearts of most white people; they simultaneously want Negroes to get ahead because they genuinely believe that equality is desirable, and they don't want Negroes to get ahead because they might find Negroes as their next door neighbors".

The educator expressed the opinion that "many white people, either because of unfamiliarity or ambivalence . . . are uncertain how to behave in an interracial situation; they unconsciously look to the Negro for guidance. . . . The Negro . . . can set the tone of social or business intercourse by the clues he gives in his speech and behaviour as to how he expects to be treated.

Tribune

"If he acts obsequiously, as if he expects to be stepped upon, people will gladly step on him. If he acts nervously and self-consciously, so will the white people. . . . If he is over-assertive and arrogant, they will respond with equal rudeness or with silence. If he acts naturally, they will, in 9 cases out of 10, act naturally too, and be happy and relieved that meeting a Negro was not the ordeal they thought it was going to be.

38a General

"Lillian Smith says that on the subject of Negroes, most white people are ignorant, blind, and sick. . . . Why get angry with these poor, ignorant, sick people who are trying to be friendly? How much enlightenment do you expect from white people with the kind of education on the subject of Negroes that most of them have had — education in terms of the cliches of minstrel shows, bum vaudeville jokes, movie and radio and newspaper comic stereotypes, and superstitious folklore? If you expect too much of them — if you expect all white people to be intelligent and sensible on the subject of Negroes — you will be running into daily disappointments.

"Every instance of natural communication between Negro and white can be, for the white person who needs it, a kind of psychotherapy," the speaker asserted.

HITS NEGRO'S JIM CROW OF THE MIND

"I want to suggest — indeed, to urge — the lifting of what I shall call the "jim crow of the mind," Dr. Hayakawa continued.

"Let us look at the community of educated, upper-middle-class Negroes. Are they seriously interested in music, or do they go to concerts only when Marian Anderson is singing? Are they genuinely interested in art, or do they only go to art shows when Jacob Lawrence or Eldizir Cortor are exhibiting? Are they really interested in sociology, or only in the sociology of the Negro?

"If you look at the titles of dissertations in the graduate division of Negro universities, you will note the widespread existence of this jim crow of the mind — dissertations on Negro housing, Negro population movements, Negro journalism, Negro poetry, Negro painting, and so on indefinitely. Granted that some of these dissertations are justified by the needs and exigencies of research in particular localities, the almost total absence of topics not limited to the Negro is a depressing commentary on the one-sidedness of academic life in many Negro colleges.

"I do not blame anyone for this intellectual segregation, which is the inevitable product of the history of Negroes in the United States. But what is past is past. Hence the question I am raising is whether the removal of jim crow of the mind is keeping pace with the removal of physical jim crow. It is not impossible that we are carrying into the present attitudes and habits now partly antiquated?

"I believe every Negro should interest himself, not superficially but deeply, in the problems of some minority other than his own. There are minority groups other than ethnic to be studied: the stutterers, the physically handicapped, the blind, and the members of all sorts of other social minorities who develop their own minority group complexes. The more intensively one studies any such group, the more impressive become the similarities among all human beings. . . . Gradually, as one pursues such studies, we begin to lose the sense of a special Negro problem,' just as I have long ago lost the sense of a special 'Japanese problem', and we acquire instead a sense of the profound similarity of all human problems."

Tell It To Old Grandma

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request, name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserve the right to shorten letters ★ No poetry, please ★ Repeat: No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it.

Advertiser 2-23

Montgomery, Al

Ignorant And Bigoted

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I am a transplanted Georgian, having lived in California since 1922. I still consider myself a Southerner. I make frequent visits back there to visit my many friends and relatives throughout the South.

Tri. 5-4-56

In my opinion there is more actual discrimination against the Negro here than there is in the South. True, there is segregation by state and municipal laws in the South, but there is segregation here by choice.

In my 34 years here I have seen movements to keep Negroes from moving into certain districts. The movements would always fail. The Negroes would gradually move in and soon all of the white people would move out. I know of schools which were formerly all white and are now all Negro.

I know of large firms employing several hundred people and they do not have a Negro on their payroll.

Most of the people are not concerned with the Negro problem, because it does not affect them. It really gets under my skin when I hear people criticize the South, when they know absolutely nothing about the situation in the South and all the while they themselves are practicing segregation.

407 S. Maple,
Brea, Calif. THOMAS G. SLAPPEY.

◆

The True Situation

Editor, The Advertiser:

I read, with great interest, the article "Southern Editor Declares Negro Problem is National" which appeared in our local paper recently. This is the first time I've read an article that deals with the situation in its true state. This has been my personal contention, and I was deeply gratified that others share this same feeling and are in a position to so aptly present it to the attention of the public.

Trust that your every effort in this field will be greatly rewarded.

MRS. OTIS J. THOMPSON.
1313 N. Grace St.,
Lake Charles, La.

Weekly P. 3-B
New Orleans, La.
Sat. 5-5-56

38a
General

District Affairs

Post Times Herald

Integration Enters New Active Phase

Sun. 5-6-56 P. 2-E
Washington, D.C.

By Grace Bassett

WASHINGTONIANS can expect further action in the next few months to remove remaining aspects of official segregation. For one thing, the city has gone so far on this front that further advances are expected. For another thing, the presidential campaign will keep the issue alive.

Miss Bassett

Although the basis for considerable progress on the racial front was laid during the Truman Administration, the largest strides were made in the months after the inauguration of President Eisenhower, who made a campaign promise to use his authority to eliminate segregation in the District.

Under Board President Samuel Spencer, who just ended a 3-year term, orders went out to protect District jobholders from discrimination because of race, creed or color.

The White House urged school administrators to implement the Supreme Court integration ruling as a model for the Nation. Integrated classes began in the fall of 1954. Negro and white firemen started living and working together in the city's populated firehouses a year later.

THEN THE Commissioners moved cautiously for two years. They were heeding critics who warned against moving too fast.

Robert E. McLaughlin, new president of a new board, may be expected to take the lead where the old board left off.

Evidence of the renewed policy was provided last week. The city fathers voted to ban discrimination in amusement places throughout the city.

The regulation may render "moot" a court case testing an 1869 law barring the same kind of discrimination in the "old city," bounded by Rock Creek, Florida ave., and the Anacostia River. The Commissioners merely "extended" this law to the present city.

THE PREVIOUS board had rejected the regulation in favor of the court test for two reasons: One was to get the people used to the idea of opening up amusement places to all. Another was to avoid a row with Southern Congressmen.

There were those who felt that a court decision would provide a firm basis for the broad regulation of the type the Commissioners just adopted. Others felt just as strongly that all the Commissioners needed was the courage to use authority they clearly possessed.

STILL BEFORE them are these unsettled problems:

The city's fire department still keeps only eight Negroes in otherwise white companies around the clock. The NAACP says that these men have been given the "silent treatment" by their white colleagues.

Fire Chief Millard Sutton insists that rules can't change men's minds. But habits can, he says, and his department will solve its problem if left alone. McLaughlin plans to insist on progress on this front.

As Police Commissioner, McLaughlin also may have to decide city policy on maintenance of separate facilities for 14,000 Negro and 8000 white members of the Police Boys Club. Club managers fear that fund campaigns will suffer if they merge the clubs. Activities fighting juvenile delinquency are financed by public contributions. Policemen help solicit funds. Public buildings have been used as clubhouses.

McLaughlin and Thomas G. Carney, club president, have their heads together, but so far they have not come up with a satisfactory solution.

SEGREGATION TALK CITES JESUS' WORDS

Times P. 25-C
Sun. 5-6-56
New York, N. Y.

Northerners who feel they must tell Southerners what to do about segregation were referred yesterday to the Sermon on the Mount by the Rev. Hugh McCandless. He is rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Epiphany, Seventy-fourth Street and York Avenue.

Continuing his series of sermons on segregation, Mr. McCandless noted that Jesus had advised: "First cast the beam out of thine own eye."

The South, he said, has attempted to reconcile segregation with Christianity. Therefore "pious recriminations" from the North fall on deaf ears.

The "least educated" in the South, he said, draw on the primitive ideas of racial purity expressed in the Old Testament. The "more educated," according to Mr. McCandless, say what many Northerners say:

"'It's a bad situation, but there it is. You can't change it, so just accept it. Maybe if we all just ignore it, it will go away.'"

However, he added, there are prophets in the South. He noted as an example Southern novels and plays that depict the degeneration of aristocratic families.

Ike Tells South To Move Ahead On Integration

FROM PRESS REPORTS

WASHINGTON, March 21—President Eisenhower declared today that "all the South" should show some progress toward racial desegregation.

"I am for moderation, but I am for progress," he told his news conference.

He raised this plea:

"Let's don't try to think of this as a tremendous fight that is going to separate Americans and get ourselves in a nasty mess.

"Let's try to think of how we can make progress."

Appealing to the clergy for help, the president said that the South is duty-bound to make "some progress" toward racial integration of public schools.

Mr. Eisenhower renewed his plea for "sympathetic" understanding of the South's deep emotional problem, but told his news conference that "we should not stagnate." He said religious leaders have a "very great responsibility" to help toward "progress" with "moderation."

"This is a very tough one," he said, "and people have to search their own hearts if we are going to get a decent answer and keep going ahead."

Asked how he felt about Negroes being brought to trial in Montgomery, Ala., for "refusing to ride the buses," Mr. Eisenhower said he understood the state had a law against boycotts.

But he said "it is incumbent on all the South to show some progress" in complying with the Supreme Court's order against segregated schools. However, he said, the problem is "far larger, both in its emotional and even in its physical aspects, than most of us realize."

The President extended his appeal for racial "tolerance" to cover such international problems as the Arab-Israel crisis and the struggle of North African peoples for independence. In all such disputes, he said, the answer is "mediation rather than conflict."

Mr. Eisenhower said the United States is doing its best, both in and out of the United Nations, to convince both the Arabs and Israelis that their best interests lie in mediation.

Underlining his concern over the Mid-East and other world problems, Mr. Eisenhower announced that Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, who returned today from a Far Eastern trip, will brief both Democratic and Republican congressional leaders at the White House tomorrow.

The President shied away from direct comment on Sen. Estes Kefauver's victory over Adali E. Stevenson in the Minnesota Democratic primary. But he said Minnesota is a "very important state" and the results should be "studied."

Mr. Eisenhower refused to be drawn into discussion of Kefauver's claim that the big Democratic vote indicated a Midwest "revolt" against the administration's flexible farm price support program.

But he said he believes farmers understand that the Administration is trying to give them "100 per cent of parity in the market place." To try to do it by law, he said, would merely pile up more farm surpluses and "trouble" for the farmer.

Mr. Eisenhower said the Senate's new farm bill is neither "workable" nor a "good bill." He urged Senate-House conferees to "write a good bill, and one which can really be helpful to the farmer."

Turning to the international scene, the president said he does not believe the "basic Communist objective" of world domination has been changed by recent Soviet criticism of Josef Stalin.

He said Russia's present leaders apparently wanted to repudiate certain Stalinist doctrines and possibly decided to "go the whole way and repudiate the man as well."

In his discussion of the Southern school and Middle East disputes, Md. Eisenhower highly praised the activities of the Rev. Billy Graham, who had a conference with the President yesterday.

The President said Graham "carries his religion to the far corners of the earth, trying to promote pace, trying to promote mediation instead of conflict, tolerance instead of prejudice."

He warned against thinking of the school segregation dispute as "a tremendous fight that is going to separate Americans and get ourselves into a nasty mess."

"Let's try to think of it as how can we make progress and keep it going and not stop it," he said. "Now that, I believe, the pulpits can help on."

TALKS ABOUT SEGREGATION—President Eisenhower at yesterday's press conference. (United Press Telephoto.)

Strength in Racial Integration

The substance of "The Negro Potential," a study just produced at Columbia University under the auspices of the Conservation of Human Resources Project, which President Eisenhower inaugurated during his stay on Morningside Heights, is that this country's 15 million or more Negroes are our "single most underdeveloped human resource" and that one of the greatest national challenges is to open more opportunities to make better use of this strength.

Offhand, this may sound like an elaborate statement of the obvious. Certainly, it is wasteful not to make full use of man power, even though the Negro tenth of our population has made tremendous gains in recent years. But the point emphasized by Dr. Eli Ginzberg and his associates is that these advances have come primarily through American prosperity. In short, where opportunity is provided the benefits are quickly apparent. And here it is a plain fact that the opportunities come from removing educational handicaps, making more and better jobs available and breaking the barriers of racial discrimination.

No one can say with any certainty how long it will take to achieve a complete integration of Negroes to the point of equal opportunity for all citizens. The report says that the "best hope" rests in a continued "strong and virile economy." It is admitted, however, that a large part of the South is in no mood for desegregation. Yet the authors believe that outside pressures "will induce the South to steer away from a self-destructive recalcitrance." Only time will tell about that. It would be better meanwhile to exercise forbearance and understanding.

But change is not necessarily slow. General Ridgway proved in Korea that desegregation was feasible, and now racial integration is an established fact in the armed forces. While military and civil life are by no means comparable, the Korea experience did demonstrate, in the report's words, "remarkable ability of both whites and Negroes to adjust to new relations with each other in such a manner that the potential of each can be more fully realized." It was a case of lifting tradition's handicap and affording equal rights and opportunity. The result has been greater strength for all.

The example is worth meditating upon —both for building the United States at home and for exerting leadership in the free world.

Newswoman Tells Role Of Negro Women

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Through the efforts of Negro women, the fight for equality is being won, recently declared Mrs. Alice A. Dunnigan, Washington correspondent for the Associated Negro Press.

Speaking to more than 300 persons attending the annual ladies' night banquet of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, Monday night, Mrs. Dunnigan urged the group to "keep fighting until we've won complete victory of equality in this land of ours."

The newspaper woman spoke of the American Negro woman from the time of enslavement to her present rise of equality. She noted the slow progress, citing the odds of color, sex and condition of servitude, which had to be overcome.

But, she added, women are still in hte forefront in this fight for equality and justice.

She recalled the fight spearheaded by the late Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, which resulted in the abolition of segregation in eating places and amusement places in the District of Columbia.

Speaking of school integration, she reminded her audience of the long, hard fight waged by Miss Ada Sipuel for admittance into the law school at the University of Oklahoma. It was this victory which led to abolition of segregation in institutions of higher learning, and paved the way for the later Supreme Court decision on school integration.

She mentioned the fight with Miss Autherine Lucy staged for admission to the University of Alabama.

Finding Middle Way Between Extremes Is Pressing Task In Our Racial Situation

News Sun. 5-6-56 P. 22-A

Perilous dissension — mainly between extremist elements—now menaces racial relations in Alabama.

Birmingham, Ala.

If the situation is to be kept from getting even worse, positive, constructive steps must be developed to deal with the grave problems in this field.

Conflicts and disturbances and attempted coercions — expressed either through disorders or by legal maneuvering—are dangerous in present tensions.

If the conflict is permitted to grow, increasing trouble will be inevitable.

No satisfactory outcome is conceivable in terms of any all-out victory for any extremist attitude.

On the one hand, utter defiance of the Supreme Court school decision can bring no solution.

Nor, on the other hand, can efforts to give immediate general effect to the court's decision.

Two realities must be faced:

The Supreme Court decision represents the law of the land.

Running counter thereto is the unquestionably strong sentiment against the court's decision.

If no all-out extremist victory is even conceivable, then what helpful things are possible in the middle ground?

What steps can be taken that might be workable in view of the powerful sentiment against desegregation?

What measures might be compatible with the newly created legal status—and at the same time gain the support of the large number of persons of both races who desire peaceful, orderly, cooperative progress in the field of racial rights and relations?

The Birmingham News is confident that a great majority of our people oppose extremist methods of dealing with the difficult situation.

It believes they ardently desire constructive procedure.

Yet this more tolerant thinking and desire of the majority has not been heard from in anything like the scope and force with which the extremists on both sides have managed to assert their contentions.

One major reason for absence of firm and effective expression of the moderate viewpoint is that formation of a constructive program of that kind is a very complex and difficult task.

That task urgently challenges the immediate and best efforts of all citizens—white and colored—who believe in such a cooperative approach.

The quest of such a program, we believe, should be a major undertaking of the biracial commission Gov. Folsom has proposed.

The Birmingham News has the faith that there are things that can be done along the way of moderation and cooperation.

First of all, strong and explicit support can be given to law and order in meeting our difficult problem.

Furthermore, long ago The Birmingham News suggested for consideration a plan for provision in Alabama of a free choice as between white, colored and mixed schools.

The Alabama Legislature, by legal enactment, has approved that approach.

We realize that such a method would be a difficult undertaking.

None the less, we also believe that there is real hope for constructive steps in such a plan.

There is, we believe, no better approach than one seeking to develop opportunities for truly voluntary action in accordance with individual conviction.

Surely efforts at compulsion—legal or otherwise—which go against sincere, profound feelings on either side of the issue are bound to produce acute situations.

Persisting attempts along such lines obviously will lead to one disturbing crisis after another.

That is not what the people of Alabama want.

So, let those who do want order and understanding intensify their efforts to find better ways.

The proposed biracial commission—in concert with all white and Negro citizens of good will — should press forward in that endeavor in every community in Alabama.

'Support migration'—

Timmerman hurls challenge at North

News Fri. 5-11-56 P. 11

Birmingham, Ala.

RIVERS' BRIDGE, S. C., May 11—(AP)—Northern advocates of racial integration were challenged today by South Carolina Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. "to cast off their hypocorisy and accept the Negro into their communities, their institutions and their families."

Timmerman called on "the integrationist to prove his sincerity" by supporting a program of voluntary migration of Negroes from the South to communities "where racial mixing is acceptable."

He said "a federal program of financial aid to enable those who want to mix to move" to other areas "would cost only a fraction" of the billions advocated for foreign aid.

TIMMERMAN SPOKE at the 80th annual Rivers' Bridge Confederate Memorial Assn. ceremonies that commemorate a War Between the States battle near here.

Calling that war the "war of Northern aggression," Timmerman charged that its cause was not Negro slavery in the South, but "the determination of Northern plutocrats to establish national control under which the policies of the North would determine the policies of the nation."

"Much has changed in the last 90-odd years," Timmerman continued, "but some things remain the same. The North continues to be prone to stick its nose into somebody's business, especially the business of the South, while ignoring and even promoting deplorable conditions in its own areas.

"Northern propagandists are as loud, obnoxious and untruthful today as the abolitionists a century ago . . ."

TIMMERMAN SAID "the integrationist, like the abolitionist, is a hypocrite" because "he proclaims in the name of brotherly love that Southern segregation is discrimination, while ignoring and cultivating deplorable conditions in his own area."

"The ghetto of Harlem, the lawless slums of Washington, the frequent—but frequently ignored—race riots in schools, parks and playgrounds, the muggings and switchblade cuttings and 32 months of racial disorder in Chicago's Trumbull Park, all are models of those deplorable conditions," he continued.

"By comparison, the Southern Negro has achieved the best record of lawful conduct of any member of his race in the nation."

TIMMERMAN SAID that under a voluntary migration program "the state of Oregon could become a real model for the nation."

"I mention Oregon," he explained, "because its two U. S. senators (Morse and Neuberger, both Democrats) have been loudest in proclaiming the virtues of integration, and I assume they represent the views of their people.

"I also mention Oregon because I have advocated such a program for Oregon before, and I have received little complaint from the people of that state."

GETTYSBURG, Pa., where President Eisenhower has a farm, "could become an Eastern mecca of integration," Timmerman continued. "High officials in Washington could establish their homes there and enjoy the blessings that they advocate for other people."

"I CHALLENGE the Northern leaders of both major parties to incorporate such a program in the platforms of the parties," he asserted.

"I challenge the senior senator from Oregon (Morse) to advocate and support this voluntary program as a major plank in his platform for re-election."

He said he does not expect his challenges to be accepted because "the integrationist is a hypocrite."

HE MAINTAINED that "the time has come for the South to assert its political strength" since "the current trend in national affairs clearly indicates that the South can expect little consideration unless the states of the South are willing to organize."

"The South needs to stand firm and insist that the Democratic Party write a platform and provide a candidate that is acceptable to the South," he declared. "The real issue is one of principle. It is our right to determine for ourselves the course of our future and our lives. It is more personal than the underlying issue of the war of Northern aggression."

Friends In The North

Advertiser P. 4-A

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have read the U. S. News & World Report article in which you were interviewed. I am a yankee who is ashamed of the hypocrisy of the North. The tragedy is too few people realize the problems of the other sections of the country. In this (Detroit) area the Negro problem is something that has been with us about, say, 15 years only. The combination N.A.A.C.P.-C.I.O. is ruthless and intolerant of all opposite views of the race problem. This group is working together to elect Southern congressmen of the "liberal" stripe, so that all barriers to a socialized state will be removed.

Montgomery, Ala.

Here we have a different form of segregation. Older neighborhoods taken over by Negroes soon run down. The remaining whites find their properties run over, new neighbors running all into parties, vice palaces set up. Soon white women are accosted on the streets. Crime rises. In short, the Negro is not ready to mingle freely with the white. People in Detroit wonder about the bus boycott in your city—why you folks drive the Negroes to work.

These are some things you can do. First, the C.I.O. is spending a penny a month per member to promote civil rights. Why not have each C.I.O. member have his union stop sending a cent to the international union till it stopped (1) all agitation for civil rights; (2) spending one cent for civil rights.

In the key states of Michigan, Ohio and Illinois, there are as many Southern born whites as Negroes. Your people, through the intimacy of a letter, must write to your friends and relatives up here and request them to vote against all civil rights advocates and Negroes.

I say this not out of hatred for the Negro, but to prevent the South from being subjected to another carpetbagger occupation through the manipulation of the N.A.A.C.P. We whites are disorganized, the opposition is not. You have many friends up here.

For reasons of personal safety, I prefer to remain anonymous.

Highland Park, Mich. J. A. S.

North And South Differ On Racial Problem, Its Solution

Informer Houston, Tex. Sat. 6-30-

NEW YORK—The race problem, a recently-completed national survey discloses, is considered more important by the American public than the atom bomb, international hostility, juvenile delinquency, or any other problem. It is the most frequently mentioned problem in the U S today.

In the second of a series of articles based on the first national race problem survey, the July Catholic Digest reveals that North and South, Negroes and whites combined, the Negro-White problem is viewed as most important by 45% of those interviewed. Juvenile delinquency trails far behind with only 36% considering it most important, while 32% regard the atom bomb as the big problem.

While more than half of the northern whites and Negroes of both sections think of the problem in terms of white prejudice, fear, and hatred, (and the resulting discrimination and inequality), only about one-fourth of southern whites would accept a definition along these lines.

Nearly half the southern whites think that the real problem is desegregation. In response to the query "What would you say seems to be standing most in the way of solving the Negro-White problem today?", prejudice is the obstacle named by most people, even among southern whites. But, in the opinion of Negroes and nothern whites, the southern whites themselves are the second most serious obstacle.

Among southern whites although 24% see "prejudice as the major difficulty, 14% think desegregation blocks a solution, and 10% say it is "agitation and publicity".

Most people also, the Catholic Digest survey shows, think the race problem a difficult one to solve. The definition "hard problem" was given by 86% of northern whites; 88% of southern whites; 81% of the northern Negroes, and 72% of southern Negroes.

Negroes, however, are much more inclined than whites to think that progress is being made towards a solution. About one-third of the whites interviewed think the problem will never be solved. But only one-tenth of the Negroes take so sombre a view.

Informer 6-18

Asked how long they thought it would take to solve the problem, northern whites estimated 27 years as compared with the southern white estimate of 16 years. Northern Negroes estimate a solution may be arrived at in 23 years, while southern Negroes believe solution will come in 10.

Sat. 6-30-56

Additional material gathered in this first nation-wide survey of attitudes towards the Negro-White problem will appear in subsequent issues of the Catholic Digest. The survey was made for the Digest by an independent opinion- research firm.

Anti-Southern News Bias Charged by Williams

Evening Star Wash. D.C. 5-18-56

Washington, D.C. 5-23-56

SELMA, Ala., May 18 (AP).—Representative John Bell Williams, Democrat of Mississippi, said last night a form of press and radio censorship has been imposed on news which might show segregation advocates in a favorable light.

Mr. Williams came here for an address to the Dallas County Citizens' Council on the second anniversary of the Supreme Court's May 17, 1954, decision which held segregation in schools to be unlawful.

The Representative referred to of "liberals" who support integration" and said:

"So strong have they become in recent years, though, that they control a great segment of the press and radio of this country, to the extent that a form of censorship has been imposed against the dissemination of news and information which might, directly or indirectly, reflect favorably on the attitudes of Southern white people.

Distortion Seen.

"News stories that justify Southern attitudes are deliberately withheld from print; statements favoring segregation by Southern leaders are deliberately distorted to make the author appear as a bigoted fool; words are lifted from the context to make it appear that we in the South hold our Negro friends in utter contempt which is, of course, contrary to all the teachings and tenets of the Southern people.

"They seize upon interracial crimes in the South, amplify them out of proportion to their importance, and by use of half truths, innuendo, and in some cases outright lies, try to make it look as if lynching Negroes is a favorite Southern pastime among the White people."

Mr. Williams, a member of the House District of Columbia Committee, said one member of the District School Board told him repeated incidents of trouble had made it necessary to assign full-time officers at some Washington public schools since integration was ordered.

He said the District of Columbia School Board by a vote of 4 to 3 had refused to make a report to him on the number of incidents of violence occurring in the schools during the last two years.

"We're going to get that information because the committee has subpoena powers," he added.

The Mississippi Congressman also told the crowd, estimated by Citizens' Council leaders at 3,000, that educational standards have "deteriorated" in Washington since integration.

He also told the crowd that white clubwomen in Washington recently asked police for extra protection at night because of repeated attacks by Negro juveniles. Of 350 crimes such as attacks and purse snatchings reported in Washington during the last four months of 1955, Mr. Williams said, 320 were committed by Negroes.

Mr. Williams also said District of Columbia Commissioners have had to ask Congress for $10 million in additional tax revenue in the past two years because of "an exodus" of white taxpayers and a drop in property values because of racial integration.

Low Crime Rate in South

Answering charges that a "reign of terror" exists in Southern States, Mr. Williams said the lowest Negro crime rate in the United States is in Mississippi and South Carolina.

By contrast, he added, New York State has 7,000 Negroes in prison while Mississippi has only 1,500, although he said the Negro populations of the two States are approximately the same.

He mentioned Dearborn, Mich., as one community where, he said, no Negroes are permitted to live and quoted an Illinois member of Congress, whose name he didn't mention, as saying there are "hundreds" of cities and towns in that State "where a Negro can't spend the night."

Macon Telegraph

Constitution 5-4

Right or Wrong, Bus Decision Of High Court Was Ill-Timed

Atlanta Ga.

Mar. 4-30-56

Last Monday's decision by the Supreme Court outlawing segregation on public buses in intrastate travel could hardly have been otherwise in view of previous rulings on public schools, parks and recreation areas. But that does not make last week's action wise or proper, nor in line with the best interests of individual citizens in the various communities involved.

In one sense, actual desegregation of public transportation in the South will have to be determined largely by the residents of the states and cities where these vehicles operate.

Developments in Montgomery, Ala., clearly illustrate this. Officials of the bus line, which is owned in Chicago, ordered these buses integrated a few hours after the court's announcement. Yet, local officials objected and declared they would see that Alabama's laws on the subject be enforced.

Technically, laws requiring segregation of passengers in intrastate vehicles in Alabama, Georgia and 10 other Southern states have not yet been voided by the court's action. The case ruled upon involved only South Carolina.

But a case against Alabama will be heard in federal court on May 11 and Southern communities may expect that ultimately all state laws contradicting the federal decision will fall.

The paramount point for all citizens—whatever their race—to keep uppermost in mind is that habits and practices of an established social order cannot be sharply altered by edict.

History in the field of race relations shows that changes tempered with consideration and understanding are more effective in achieving real human progress.

As for the propriety of this latest Supreme Court decision and whether the court continues to exceed its jurisdictional authority, that is entirely another question.

The only way to answer it with finality is via a proposed amendment to the federal Constitution. There have been several basic suggestions for such an amendment discussed in Congress, but none of them has received any action so far.

Sixth District Congressman Carl Vinson offered one such resolution which would reaffirm the principles of constitutional government and thus, in effect, serve as a referendum by the American people as to whether they consider the court is exceeding its authority.

As Mr. Vinson emphasized yesterday, the chain of court decisions now has set a pattern of federal jurisdiction over heretofore state matters, and the chain will continue to lengthen until there is no longer any such doctrine as states' rights.

The issue of segregation or integration on public buses is only one of many ramifications of this pattern.

As with schools, desegregation of public transport will be delayed by numerous legal methods as long as possible. It will not sweep the South with any rapidity; it will have to be decided on a local basis.

But in the meantime, the fundamental question of federal authority vs. state authority must be settled. It is up to the people themselves to do that, and they must be given an opportunity to do so.

EDITORS DEBATE RACIAL PROBLEM

Times-Picayune p. 2

Appeals Heard for Moderation on Schools

Sat. 4-21-56

By STERLING F. GREEN

WASHINGTON, April 20 (AP) — The American Society of Newspaper Editors has heard appeals for moderation, patience and objectivity in covering the problems of school integration in the south.

New Orleans

Lively and occasionally tense clashes between Northern and Southern editors marked the panel discussion and floor debate on what one speaker called "the biggest story of our time."

La.

Herbert Brucker of the Hartford (Conn) Courant declared the first obligation of the press, both North and South is to "recognize that this thing has happened and integration is coming."

Texan Begs for 'Easing Up'

"Our job is to help it happen and make the adjustment as easy as possible," Brucker said. Describing measures taken in his own city against various types of racial discrimination, he told the 400 delegates:

"The surprising thing is that when you make the adjustment the heavens don't fall. It isn't really as hard as it seems."

But editor John Q. Mahaffey of the Texarkana (Tex) Gazette and Daily News, told the session "what it is that frightens people down in the South." He declared:

"In my little town of 50,000 the Negroes already hold the balance of power.

"On the day they decide to stop selling their votes like a cotton crop every year, they are going to find out they can put in a mayor and a whole city council."

Mahaffey begged his Northern colleagues to "ease up on the pressure — be a little more moderate."

"You're all anxious for us to integrate down there, but I don't think we're ready for it."

Presidential Commission?

A proposal that President Eisenhower appoint a commission of distinguished citizens to make a serious study of the integration problem was offered by Lenoir Chambers of the Norfolk (Va) Virginian-Pilot.

Such a commission, Chambers suggested, might be able to contribute toward solutions of "these problems which at this minute seem insoluble."

He called on the newspapers to attempt to foster forces of moderation which could exert as much influence as "the extremists of either side."

"We are in a state of collision between two forces of extremists," he reported. "The consequence is that the moderate mind of the South has been squeezed out."

Harry Ayers, veteran editor of the Anniston (Ala) Star, told the editors that Alabama is fighting integration "because we are having a hard enough time trying to lift our schools up to the average of the United States." Integration has lowered educational standards wherever it has been tried, Ayers said.

Discussing Wrong Subject

"Integration cannot be accomplished overnight," he said. "The Supreme Court segregation decision was one of the most tragic things that has happened in interracial relations in my lifetime."

One speaker, Sylvan H. Meyer of the Gainesville (Ga) Times, told the meeting he was "extremely disappointed" in the debate because it centered on the integration issues rather than the role of the press in handling the story.

Meyer said he had hoped the discussion would produce some line of guidance for editors who are faced with the responsibility of averting "chaos, the disruption of law and order," in their communities.

"If you were exposed to the demagoguery of as many politicians as we are in the South, you would realize we have a highly inflammable situation to deal with," Meyer said.

Editors Not 'Integrated'

"We need a course of policy, a kind of strategy, to which we can refer when the problems arise. I am sure that the principle will be one of moderation."

James A. Wechsler, editor of the New York Post, deplored the fact that the editors' society was "sitting here talking about integration while there are no Negroes represented in our ranks." He said he hoped to sponsor the admission of some representatives of the Negro press before the next annual meeting.

ASNE president Kenneth MacDonald told the group there was no policy of discriminatior in ASNE but the society had never received a membership application from a Negro editor.

This probably is because membership is limited to daily newspaper editors and most Negro journals are weekly, he explained. If an application is received, he added, the ASNE directors would give it careful consideration and probably would accept the applicant.

Publish It Not In The Streets Of Askelon—XXIV.

Advertiser p. 2-b

It is a sorrowful but evident fact that wherever the Negro migrates in significant numbers, he encounters rejection. —Theme of the Series.

Sun. 6-24-56

LAS VEGAS, Nevada, is also located in the unexplored, uncharted Republic of Askelon.

Montgomery, Ala.

But you do not associate the somber, grievous problem of the Negro's rejection with Las Vegas, as we have come to associate it with Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, Mississippi and New York. You associate Las Vegas with the West, which possesses no tradition of Negro settlement, and with the neon glitter with more candlelight power than the Aurora Borealis, with the wholesome assassination of Bugsy Siegel, the $10,000 a week paid to gambling joint entertainers, and above all—with the black lace and garter about the incomparable limbs of Marlene Dietrich and a million roscoe machines competing with the noise of the nearby atom bomb explosions on Frenchman's Flat.

But for one interested in establishing the true boundaries of Askelon, there are other attractions and these emphatically include the phenomenon of segregation, entirely non-Southern in origin and characteristics.

★

A SPECIAL Las Vegas census in April, 1955 (we learn through special Associated Press facilities) showed that there were 38,772 whites and 6,023 Negroes.

The Negroes were drawn to Las Vegas, a seemingly improbable place for their resettlement, by the magnesium works and Union Pacific Railroad employment.

As in other non-Southern cities where segregation is practiced in defiance of state and city law, there is no segregation in transportation or schools. But otherwise, the Negro is ghettoed.

It is often reported that in Las Vegas the gambling joints will pay a Negro $10,000 to sing or dance, but refuse to house him in the hotel or permit him in the dining room. This we were not able to confirm specifically.

It was denied, for example, that the Mills Brothers were forced to eat in the kitchen of the Thunderbird, or that El Rancho Vegas admitted the light-skinned Negro entertainer Billy Daniels to its bar but rejected his dark-skinned accompanist Benny Payne.

★

THE CITY EDITOR of the Las Vegas Review-Journal, Joe McClain, who acted as The Advertiser's correspondent on this exploration, wired back that the proprietors of the establishments denied the incidents (published in Whisper magazine).

However, Editor McClain did confirm that Negroes lived almost entirely on the West Side and that they are "not encouraged to move elsewhere as there is plenty of area for their expansion on the West Side."

The city fathers are doing a good deal to improve the living conditions in the West Side Negro settlement. Translated, this means that the Negro citizens of Las Vegas are segregated by the usual Northern means and that, in response to Las Vegas public sentiment, the government is trying to make them content to remain apart.

McCLAIN established the nightspot discrimination against the Negro in the Far West:

> Luxury hotels, bars, casinos do turn Negroes away. They have their own casinos, bars on the West Side. Moulin Rouge, a luxury hotel opened on the West Side primarily for Negroes, folded for lack of business. . . . The Hotel Desert Inn does not book Negro entertainers to avoid any possible incident.

What is important to recognize here is that there is no Southern influence at work. Relatively few are the Southern patrons of Las Vegas, whereas 20,000 Californians boil in over the weekend, most of them in Cadillacs. Natives of Las Vegas may be presumed to be mostly Westerners. Yet the Negroes encounter rejection.

★

THE ADVERTISER wondered if, while the world talked of and The New York Times was publishing an eight-page section on the South, Student Lucy and the Rev. King, if perhaps the Las Vegas Review-Journal had localized the story of America's race problem with a news article or editorial on what happened when there got to be 6,000 Negroes in Las Vegas.

That question The Advertiser asked. It got a novel answer. First, the Las Vegas Review-Journal had never in its life described the status of the Negro in Las Vegas. That, of course, is not the novel aspect, for that is the typical aspect of Northern obliviousness to that with which its own backyard reeks. No magnolia blossom, no race relations story.

What is novel is that the Review-Journal, while derelict in its obligations as reporter, has not writhed in self-righteousness over Miss Lucy and ignored its own conditions. The Review-Journal is a stout partisan of States Rights and has kept its mouth shut, leaving the academic aspirations of Miss Lucy to the law of the State of Alabama.

Bus Protests By Negro Students Is Suggested

Daily World Sat. 6-30-56 P.1

Atlanta Ga.

BY KENNETH G. FIELD

SAN FRANCISCO — A principal leader of the Montgomery bus protest this week suggested the possibility of Negro pupils boycotting segregated schools as a method of speeding integration.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who heads the Montgomery Improvement Association, told newsmen such a step would be an extreme measure which is a "thought rather than an actual proposal."

"The boycott is a fundamental weapon, but I don't advise its indiscriminate use," he asserted.

The self-described follower of the policy of passive resistance as extolled by Mahatma Ghandi will be the principal speaker at today's session of the NAACP convention

Dr. King said that "In his individual life, the Negro must refuse to pay to be segregated" and suffer major inconveniences, if necessary, as a symbol of Negro determination to oppose injustice."

Turning to the bus boycott itself, the 27-year-old pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, said Montgomery City Lines is losing an average of $3500 to $400 daily, directly as the result of a Negro "walkout" that began last Dec 5. He estimated that 75 per cent of the bus line's passenger revenue came from Negroes.

He touched briefly on the Tallahassee bus boycott, comparing their demands with those made in the Alabama capital. They are: more courtesy; a seating arrangement on a first-come-first served basis with whites sitting from front to rear and Negroes from the rear forward, and Negro drives on predominately Negro-served routes.

Dr. King, who received a doctorate in philosophical theology from Boston University, said that boycotts in other areas of the South would be effective if not used "indiscriminately," and only after careful examination of the target community's economic structure.

"We will win this battle," he continued. "Segregation is becoming a dead reality in Alabama."

'Minimum Position' Set Out

Post + Times Herald

3 Governors Back Integration Plank As Timmerman Tries to Line Up South

Mon. 6-25-56 Washington, D.C.

P.1

By Robert C. Albright
Staff Reporter

ATLANTIC CITY, June 24—Three Northern Democratic Governors today called for a Democratic platform upholding the Supreme Court integration decision as the "minimum" position their party can take on civil rights.

But Gov George Bell Timmerman Jr., of South Carolina called this "a lot of malarkey." Timmerman, who recently sounded out Southern leaders on a plan to "unify" Southern Democrats, said an exploratory meeting will be held in Atlanta in the next few days. He denied "third party" intentions, however.

Gov. Averell Harriman, still seeking the Democratic nomination on the theory that "a lot of ball games are being won in the ninth inning this year," told reporters the Party's civil rights plank must be as strong as its 1952 declaration and must at least make a reference to the Supreme Court decision.

Asked if Timmerman's "southern unifying" move is aimed at his candidacy, Harriman said:" I'm not the candidate of the South. I think that's been made clear . . . But I think I have a lot of friends in the South."

The two other Northern Democratic governors who came out for affirmation of the Supreme Court integration ruling as the "least" the party can do on civil rights were Gov. G. Mennen (Soapy) Williams of Michigan and Gov. Robert B. Meyner Jr. of New Jersey, host Governor of this annual Governors' Conference.

Post + Times

The three Democrats had their say on the whole gamut of 1956 Presidential politics at a series of press conferences leading up to Monday's formal opening of the Conference.

P.1

Gov. Goodwin J. Knight of California, lone Republican state executive to face a formal press conference, shared the Northern Democratic view on the civil rights issue.

Knight, long reported at political odds with Vice President Richard M. Nixon, ducked one question after another about what he thought of Nixon for President Eisenhower's running mate.

He said he had "no opinion" on whether there is a chance of Nixon's being dropped. He was asked if he would "urge" Mr. Eisenhower to nominate Nixon. He replied: "I won't have any opportunity."

Knight predicted President Eisenhower would run and be elected, however, and said he would support Nixon on the ticket if the Vice President were renominated.

The California Governor told reporters that Murray Chotiner, 1952 manager of Nixon's campaign, currently being investigated by the Senate Permanent Investigating Committee for alleged influence peddling, was one of two "deputies" designated by Nixon to act for him in dividing up 69 California Republican Convention delegates. The delegates were divided three ways, between Nixon, Knight and Sen. William F. Knowland, with each receiving 23, Knight said. He said Nixon designated Chotiner and Kyle Palmer, political editor of the Los Angeles Times, to represent him in the matter.

Asked if he had ever worked with Chotiner, Knight said:

"I never had him in any of my campaigns. I didn't want him. He never seemed to fit it."

Democratic presidential politicking started early at this annual get-together of the Gov- frankly out to woo any delegates who might stray into the meeting.

Nor was Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic front runner who many expect to be nominated on the second or third ballot at Chicago, without friends and representatives here.

Stevenson's campaign manager, James Finnegan, and Stevenson's law partner, William M. Blair, were quite candidly on the scene to protect the former Illinois Governor's interests.

"We are discussing the Stevenson candidacy with a lot of the people here," Finnegan told reporters. "Many of them were attending Governors' Conferences when Mr. Stevenson was a Governor. Naturally we are seeing them."

Some seven or eight of the 27 Democratic Governors already have publicly declared for Stevenson and four or five others have hinted their interest in his candidacy. One Governor, Raymond Gary of Oklahoma, has announced for Harriman.

include nearly one million Mississippi Negroes as people, and speaking only of her 1,188,632 whites, "would not support integrated schools." And he signs into the impermanence of Mississippi law two more bills that, flouting the Constitution of the United States and the rulings of the Supreme Court, much less the teachings of Christianity to which most Mississippians subscribe, would keep the Negro in the inequality to which custom long has consigned him.

Keeping the Negro in his forcibly accustomed place is also the aim of the remarkable proceedings in Montgomery, Alabama. There a group of Negro ministers took the lead 11 weeks ago in protesting the segregated seating on buses required by Alabama statute. Thousands of Negroes since have boycotted the city bus lines, organizing car pools or walking to work rather than abandon their demand for the "first come, first served" seating policy already in quiet effect in many other Southern cities.

The Need's for Principle, Not Prejudice

Courier-Journal Sat. 2-24-56 P.12

Louisville, Ky.

WHEN any ruling society finds itself in conflict with the law and with the teachings of its own religious faith, the result is moral chaos. That is what the whites of Mississippi and Alabama face today. Whether moral chaos will lead to the anarchy of physical violence, as some men gravely warn, remains to be seen.

But that it could lead to the disintegration of the best that the ruling society has evolved is demonstrated in Mississippi, where Governor COLEMAN threatens to close the state's institutions of higher learning rather than bow to the courts and admit Negro students. The people, he says, refusing to

The boycott has been as painfully effective the economic measures taken by some of the C zens' Councils in the Deep South against Negro who dare to vote or to petition for their righ There's been no news yet of any legal acti against the councils. But in Montgomery a gra jury has now indicted 115 of the boycott leade with a bow to the state law prohibiting boycotti without "a just cause or legal excuse," and with ominous warning that "if we continue on o present course of race relations, violence is evitable."

The grand jurors, who included one Neg urged leaders of both races "to take a long a thoughtful look into the future." They can scar ly doubt that Negroes of character will contin to fight for that equality under the law which t Constitution guarantees them—and which many white Alabaman and Mississippian, for legal well as for moral reasons, is ready to accord the

Violence may indeed be on the way if the rig

of a minority continue to be repressed, for history shows that the continued repression of right and justice is impossible without violence. But it need not come if the best people of Mississippi and Alabama turn once more to their lawbooks and their Bibles and their consciences and order their society accordingly.

It need not come if the jurors in Montgomery and the Governor in Mississippi and men of good-will everywhere act on principle and not on prejudice. It need not come if they will remind themselves, as LESTER B. GRANGER reminded the Louisville Urban League Tuesday night, that the central issue "is not the righting of certain wrongs of certain individuals or groups, but setting up the kind of social atmosphere in which these wrongs will be the exception rather than the everyday rule."

Deep South Sick, Political Scientist Tells Audience

Morning Birmingham, Ala.

Sun. 2-21-56

BALTIMORE, Md. — "Most white and colored people are to be congratulated for the manner in which they are conducting themselves in the midst of the disruption and soreheadedness concerning desegregating the public schools."

This opinion was expressed by Dr. Carl Brent Swisher, chairman of the political science department at the Johns Hopkins University, as he spoke last Friday at Morgan State College during the installation of the college's new chapter of Pi Gamma Mu, national social science honor society.

21 INDUCTED

Twenty-one students and teachers who became charter members of the seventh national scholastic society to be established on the Morgan campus heard Dr. Swisher say:

"The deep South is psychotic and sick and will not get over this condition soon."

The authority on American Constitutional law said that he expects segregation to disappear from the border states, "from Maryland to Missouri in the nert 20 years" but he had no such high hopes for the deep South. He admitted, however, that segregation as a public policy is on the way out, "and has been on the way out since the 1930's in the face of consistent opinions from the Supreme Court."

CULTURAL HERITAGE

As colored Americans move upward, he warned against their "turning against your rootage, forgetting those who have not had your opportunities."

Dr. Swisher said that he, himself, had suffered because he had not kept enough rootage with his people in the mountains of West Virginia.

Negro Unity to Oust Uncle Tom

Black Dispatch

Oklahoma City, Okla.

One of the interesting facts brought out last week at the race relations conference at Norman, was the very definite conclusion that if the white man is honestly and sincerely interested in knowing the exact mind of the Negro community, he must cross a different bridge than the one to which he is accustomed when trying to guage and interpret the truth.

Dr. Paul B. Foreman, of the University of Alabama, during an earnest discussion in group 2, regarding group attitudes, under the chairmanship of Preston Valien, of Fisk university, said, "Incidents such as Tuscaloosa, Montgomery and Tallahassee should teach us that when we seek understanding between the two races, we cannot depend upon or call in Negroes when we know in advance what they are going to say. We are right now paying a terrible price for misinformation."

Tim. 6-22-56

Dr. Foreman told his group that when the riot-torn city where he lived called an informal meeting which he attended, and where, in the excitement no censorship existed, he learned in a few minutes what he had never learned before about conditions right in Tuscaloosa.

P. 6

"I did not know I was living in a town where (with all the white-owned drug stores) there was no place for a black man or woman to sit down while getting a prescription filled. There was in that informal gathering a score or more indignities blurted out, about which I previously had no information.

"The Negro who works for you is not going to tell you the truth. If we are going to settle amicably our differences in the South, and find peace that tranquility and happiness there must be positive correction of evils which we every day pass over and do not recognize."

Dr. Lawrence F. Kenney, Memphis, who spoke at the morning session Friday, touched upon this subject from a slightly different angle, and he was just as positive that those who control the South must recognize that minority groups must be taken into partnership during community planning. "It should not be settled through the folk on top issuing orders and fiats to those upon whom they look down." Dr. Lawrence told a story having to do with life's truest human values, when he said a certain man married a woman under the assumption that his wife must submit to complete and utter dictation from him, and when he discovered he had lost her love, he "right-about-faced' 'and tried to persuade her to dictate to him. He had lost completely the concept that marriage is a partnership where both parties to the marriage work together upon life's daily tasks from the same level.

Dr. Fredrick B. Routh, who made an excellent address immediately following dinner Friday, approached this same subject from another entirely different angle, when he pointed out there is a basic determination among Negro masses to seek full equality in the United States as never before. "One can find this existing upon almost every level of black society," Routh said.

We have an idea that the awakening came first in Mississippi when the governor called a conference of Negro leaders and was almost shocked out of his senses when he discovered not one of the Negroes he had called were going to go along with his idea that Negroes voluntarily accept segregation. Governor White had been fooled by the usual committee of Uncle Toms, who had told him Negroes were opposed to integration.

Another indication that Negroes are stubbornly dedicated to obtain their rights and are grimly and soberly moving in that direction stems from the announcement coming last week from Tallahassee, Florida, where the bus company admits 70 per cent of its business is in the Negro community, and that to avoid bankruptcy they will cease operation July 1 unless the bus boycott ends. The interesting thing about this boycott is vested in the fact that the students at the college did not ask that segregation end, but that a new rule be adopted which provided that whites start seating from one end and Negroes from the other. City government and state laws forbid this. It is inconceivable that the bus company at Tallahassee will close shop and the company at Montgomery will lose more than a half million dollars before the white community begins to evaluate the strength of peaceful resistance and nonconformity. Like Calvin Coolidge back in the 20's, who said, "I do not choose to run," the Negroes in the South can take the position, "I do not choose to ride." If they are free men, as the constitution provides, even Citizens Councils cannot break that resolve.

This spirit of peaceful resistance is not going to lessen; it is going to increase. Victory at Tallahassee will instantly create a score more such incidents. It looks as though jim crow in the South is going to succumb to peaceful resistance. At Tallahassee, thirty per cent of the population was forcing 70 per cent to submit to its will. To say the least, the Tallahassee episode does not do credit to our American system, which permits the majority to rule.

Since this fight for equality began, as initiated by the NAACP, the South has completely cut itself off from communication with the NAACP. No Negro connected with this group is invited for conference, and especially Negro teachers, who have previously held membership in the NAACP, have been banned. If the panelists at Norman, Friday, are to be believed, Southerners have deliberately overlooked and ignored the Negro with whom they must finally treat, if law and order returns again to the Southland. It appears that "the stone that was cast aside has now become the head of the corner."

National News in Review

Courier P. 7 5-5-6 Sat x 5

Headlines Prove U. S. Still A Nation of Contradictions

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Courier 5-9

38a General

INDICATIONS of the "state of the nation" are contained in the following headlines from the nation's daily press:

NEGRO VOTING IN MISSISSIPPI PRESSURED INTO SHARP DECLINE.
INTEGRATION WORKS WELL IN JERSEY TOWN.
NEGRO LEADER SEES GRADUAL INTEGRATION.
NEGROES STRIDE AHEAD IN JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOB OPPORTUNITIES EXPANDING FOR NEGROES IN NORTH.
RACIAL ORGANIZATIONS STIR TENSION IN SOUTH.
MONTGOMERY NEGROES PRAY; CARRY ON BUS BOYCOTT.
NEGRO PASTOR A SUCCESS AT WHITE CHURCH.

IT'S THE TRUTH: — Where White Citizens' Councils appear in the South, NAACP memberships SOAR! Conversely, where there are no WCC's, tensions RARELY become eruptive.

■

IN MILWAUKEE . . . political campaign of city's "hate-mongers" boomeranged when a 32-year-old Negro woman lawyer was elected to Council with the support of the mayor, liberal whites and unified Negroes.

■

CONCLUSION—Surely this remains a nation of contradictions.

■

CRISP—"If you want racial hatred, don't vote for Leroy Collins . . ." (Gov. Collins, Fla., won out in primaries over rabid pro-segregationists.)

In the Nation:

TROUBLE SPOTS—Baton Rouge, La. Aiken, S. C. Atlanta, Ga.

DANGER AREAS—Mississippi (entire state); Orangeburg, S. C.; rural Georgia; rural Alabama.

THERE'S HOPE in Jacksonville, Fla., Dallas, Tex., and southern Florida.

PREDICTIONS

BILL DAWSON will approve civil rights plank before it is presented at Democratic National Convention. . . . BILLY ROWE will be Joe Louis' partner in new theatrical agency. . . . NEGRO CHURCHES will not only SAY they favor complete integration, but will PROVE it.

■

WHILE NOT AS EFFECTIVE as Montgomery, partial boycotts have been waged by Negroes in a number of other Southern cities. That's one reason many lines rushed desegregation plans in 13 Dixie cities!

■

• HEARD . . . But Not Confirmed: A big Eastern weekly (which switched its political allegiance four years ago, is about ready to return to its first love!

Neither the GOP nor the DEMS are certain (as of this moment) how the strategic Negro vote will go . . . that Mahalia Jackson does have a heart-interest . . . that Detroit is challenging New York and Columbus as having prettiest subdebs in U. S. A. . . . that Supreme Court action on bus travel did not mean what papers first headlined.

Max Lerner says that if Thurgood Marshall were not such a tremendous constitutional lawyer, he would have made a superb actor and story-teller . . . Orchids to two Brooklyn chapters of AKA's who cancelled plans for spring formals. They diverted $1,000 in dance tax money to civil rights work in the South.

'CRACKING DOWN'

—Seibel in The Richmond Times-Dispatch

"CRACKING DOWN"

West Indies

GEORGETOWN — Following last year's success of the Trade and Industries Fair, a second one will be held—Aug. 28-Sept. 1—at Bourda. Proceeds earmarked for charity.

■

PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad — Assets of friendly societies here and in Tobago now total more than $2,000,000 as compared with $400,000 in 1941. Membership has increased from 61,000 (1941) to 150,000 (1955).

■

BELIZE . . . British Honduras will be advertising her resources this month when the Industrial Fair opens. Overseas countries are participating.

■

NASSAU, Bahamas — Sale of sponges here are expected to reach the $100,000 mark before the season closes this month.

■

HERE AND THERE—Nassauans raised $20 for the Montgomery, Ala., boycott fight . . . Bahaman police force raised $3,500 for Sports and Welfare Fund at annual ball . . . William F. Cartwright, real estate agent, went to prison for four years when he pleaded guilty to two charges . . . Estate Bordeaux, 500 acres in Western St. Thomas, recently purchased by the Government for $40,000 . . . to provide homesteads, building lots.

■

ST. THOMAS, Virgin Islands—A corporation headed by Glenn Graham of Michigan (financier-industrialist) will buy the Flamboyant Hotel here for development as a year-'round tourist hotel. A heavy advertising schedule is projected.

THE NATION

Times P. 2-E

Segregation Fronts

"We are committed to segregation by custom and law; we intend to maintain it."

*"We have known humiliation * * * we have been plunged into the abyss of oppression. We are tired of the conditions we experienced for so many years. And we decided to rise up * * ."

Sun. 5-26-56 New York, N.Y.

These two statements last week—the first by a white grand jury, the second by an Alabama Negro leader—sum up the extreme position in the conflict over desegregation in the South. Last week that conflict centered in two cities: Montgomery, Ala., and New Orleans, La.

In Montgomery, history and tradition threatened trouble between the races. The "cradle of the Confederacy," where Jefferson Davis was inaugurated President and the Confederate flag was unfurled, Montgomery was the first Southern capital to raise the rebel cry against the Supreme Court's desegregation decision. Its population ratio—65,000 Negroes to 70,000 whites—heightened the prospect of trouble, for in areas where the Negro population is large, white resistance to desegregation is especially bitter.

Montgomery's trouble began last Dec. 1 when Mrs. Rosa Parks, a 42-year-old Negro seamstress employed by a Montgomery, Ala., department store, boarded a Montgomery bus. Montgomery bus drivers are required to segregate passengers, with Negroes in the rear and whites in the front. But the drivers are permitted to move the segregation line forward, beyond the small section normally reserved for Negroes, provided white seats are vacant. The drivers may also order Negroes to yield seats to whites when they board the bus.

SLAVE PRODUCTS BOYCOTT SOUGHT

Times-Picayune

Aimed Chiefly at Forced Labor by Reds

Fri. 5-11-56

WASHINGTON, May 10 (AP)—Secretary of Labor Mitchell has announced the United States will seek a worldwide boycott against goods produced by slave labor. P. 7

Mitchell said the plan will be pushed in the form of a proposed "convention," or a treaty - like agreement, at the meeting of the Internationl Labor Organization at Geneva in June.

It would be aimed chiefly at forced labor in Russia and Soviet satellites.

38a

The State Department said 10 days ago it favored an ILO recommendation, or policy statement, against forced labor whereas the Labor Department has favored a convention, a binding agreement requiring Senate ratification. The AFL-CIO has strongly urged the stronger convention-type of ILO action.

State Department officials said they had opposed a convention or treaty if it would be meaningless, but favored such an action with teeth in it. The planned ban on trading in goods produced by forced labor is considered the type of tough policy warranting a treaty.

Mitchell's brief announcement of this country's position said:

"The United States government has decided that at the forthcoming conference of the International Labor Organization it will favor an appropriate convention which would outlaw forced labor and which would include a provision specifically prohibiting the products of forced labor in international grade."

State Responsibilities Great In Upholding Constitutional Rights

News P. 12 Mon. 5-27-56

To be sure, the federal government has basic responsibilities in upholding the rights of citizens under the federal Constitution and in striving to bring about equality under the law in these respects. But state and local governments and citizens also have great obligations and duties in these respects.

If, in a vast and varied country like ours, the central government were to assume the duties of upholding all individual constitutional rights, what a drastic and dangerous change that would be from the system under which we have operated.

Our system has not operated perfectly. State and local governments have not always done all they could in behalf of equality under the law. But much has been accomplished toward that end and progress has been made. If our traditional system of strong reliance on local and state responsibility and sentiment were set aside in favor of far greater reliance on the federal government, problems in this field would, in our conviction, be greatly intensified.

In the controversy over the national administration's civil rights bill now before Congress, the basic question is not whether equality under the law should be steadfastly and vigorously sought, but how progress in that direction can best be furthered. While we recognize, of course, the concern and obligations of the federal government in his field, excessive federal interventions in this respect could retard rather than advance such progress.

The individual does not like to be unduly put under outside pressure with respect to his responsibilities. The same may be true of the local community; of the individual state; of the region. The South strongly feels that certain provisions of the administration's bill would constitute unwarranted and very unwise federal intervention.

The measure would set up a special civil rights commission to investigate charges that citizens are being deprived of their right to vote or put under economic pressure because of color, race, religion or natural origin. It would create a new civil rights division in the Justice Department. It would empower the attorney general to take civil rights cases to court in civil, or "preventive," action, regardless of whether state remedies had first been exhausted.

Such a broad federal program would, in our view, greatly intensify complications and feelings which impede progress in this field. A majority of the 32-member House judiciary committee has endorsed the administration bill as an effort to serve "the great American ideal of equality under the law."

But whether it would actually to that is the question. A minority of seven Southern members—six Democrats and one Republican—strongly dissents.

To seek to enforce all recent Supreme Court decisions in this field through such a program would, the minority maintains, create "a frankenstein and a constant threat to any state or local government."

We agree that in important, fundamental respects the bill would extend federal intervention too far and thus tend to defeat its own purposes by contributing to new antipathies and tensions.

Segregation Fight Aids Reds, Negro Leader Tells South

Commercial Appeal P. 21 Tues. 5-29-56 Memphis, Tenn.

By The United Press

JACKSON, Miss., May 28.—A national Negro leader said Monday if the South had obeyed the Supreme Court decision against school segregation there would have been virtually no integration in the cities.

Dr. Joseph H. Jackson, president of the Negro National Baptist Convention and a graduate of Jackson College here, said predominantly Negro-white schools would have remained, because of different residential districts," and the law still would have been kept intact."

As it was, he said, white resistance to the decision has brought about friction and misunderstanding that has greatly harmed this nation's prestige abroad.

"Russia has taken this one thing and made capital of it," Dr. Jackson said.

Visited In Russia

Dr. Jackson, who was born in Coahoma County, Miss., has traveled extensively abroad. Last summer he visited Russia, preaching to white Baptist congregations at their invitations. He delivered the commencement address at Jackson College Monday night.

The Supreme Court decision, however, "has given the lie to Russian propaganda," Mr. Jackson told a press conference, "because at least the highest court in the land has spoken differently."

He said the decision was "almost 100 years late."

Negroes, he said, "do not want to take anything from the white child, but they want the right to participate freely in cultural things."

'But Not By Statute'

Dr. Jackson said every man had a right to his prejudices, "but don't take those prejudices and write them into the statute books."

He said since 1829 this nation has had only one president from a southern state because southern politicians since the Civil War have done nothing but "defend the southern tradition."

"We will welcome the election of a southern president," Mr. Jackson said, "and a southerner can be elected when they stop defending the southern tradition and defend the nation as a whole."

There's Nothing In Bible To Justify Segregation, Scripture Professor Says

Catholic Week Mon. 5-28-56 B'ham Ala.

NEW ORLEANS (NC)—There is nothing in the Bible which justifies racial segregation, a Biblical scholar declared here.

P. 4

In a meeting at Xavier University here sponsored by the Catholic Committee of the South, Father John McKenzie, S.J., discussed "God, Segregation and the Bible." He is professor of Sacred Scripture at the Jesuits' theological college at West Baden, Ind.

In a final summary, Father McKenzie said:

"IF YOU ASK ME what the Bible says about segregation, I must answer: 'Nothing.' But since it does mention human relations, personal and social, very often—we have to look at this scheme before we can be sure that the Bible has nothing to say on the question.

"If segregation can be maintained within the unity of Christian love—if the white loves the Negro as he loves himself, and treats the Negro as he expects the Negro to treat him—if he grants the Negro the same opportunities for personal fulfillment which he expects for himself—if segregation does not deny the Negro his ambitions to make himself better than he is by improving himself and his station in life—if segregation does not exalt one man while it humbles another—if segregation does not deny that the Negro is as good as the white—if under segregation the Negro and the white are one as members of one body, as children of God the one Father—then there is no conflict between segregation and the Bible."

HARRIMAN URGES BETTER RIGHTS ACT

Times P. 76

He and Mayor Salute Labor Council Gains in Messages at Lincoln's Day Dinner

Sun. 2-12-56

Governor Harriman called last night for a strengthening of the state's anti-discrimination law.

In a message to the Central Trades and Labor Council at its annual Lincoln's Day dinner in the Commodore Hotel, Mr. Harriman declared:

"Our anti-discrimination law must be made more effective and thus more meaninful to all of our citizens."

New York,

He praised the labor council for its Americanism in having provided its members with "equal opportunity regardless of their race, creed or national origin."

Wagner Addresses Group

The gathering heard a comparable civil rights note sounded by Mayor Wagner. He criticized those who paid lip service to Abraham Lincoln and then repudiated him "with repressive laws and ideas designed to undercut our union."

Mr. Harriman's message was read by Industrial Commissioner Isador Lubin. Mayor Wagner addressed the gathering in person.

Both officials praised the labor body for having achieved union unity through the recent merger of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations. They also praised the council for supporting progressive legislation.

Governor Harriman said the group was to be commended for "taking the lead" in the fight for slum clearance and better housing, for better schools and higher pay for teachers.

He asserted, however, that "much still remains to be done."

"We must lift unemployment insurance benefits to a more realistic level," the Governor declared. "We must wage a determined war against poverty, so that every family may be able to live under conditions worthy of our American standard."

Mr. Harriman commended the council for having opposed all forms of totalitarian government before it became "fashionable" to do so.

Mayor Wagner, in remarks obviously directed at the Republican party, charged that "those who impeded labor in its efforts to obtain its rightful status in our society are not his [Lincoln's] heirs at all."

"They defame him and all he stood for in support of the dignity of the working man," he stated.

Discussing the steps that the City Administration had taken to recognize civil service unions, the Mayor asserted that the municipal labor policy, when completed, would serve as an "example and a model for everywhere."

38a 1956

Threats Of Violence Made Against Anti-Bias Group

Birmingham, Ala.

BY LLOYD L. GENERAL

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Southern racists, who only a few months ago were reeling backward under the force of anti-segregation rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court, have rallied with surprising strength and, from all indications, are on the offensive.

First reaction to Supreme Court edicts against race bias was a maddening howl of anger and surprise, threats of secession and physical violence.

But cooler heads prevailed, and the South is now engaged in a "legal" war against the Supreme Court.

The most significant victory came in Virginia on Jan. 9, when a 2 tot 1 vote approved a plan to change the state's constitution to allow private schools.

The Virginia Assembly pressed the attack. Last week it unanimously passed a bill setting March 5 as the date for a constitutional convention which will do the actual work of amending the constitution.

It will take some time to undo this deed. Of course, the legality of the move will be challenged, but it may take years before all recourses to law are exhausted.

The only hope of avoiding a lengthy legal battle lies in the possibility that Virginia will be challenged on grounds that the state is not making a reasonable attempt to comply with the segregation ruling.

If such could be proved, the Supreme Court might order immediate integration in Virginia schools.

The many strategems employed by state officials who have vowed not to integrate their schools are obviously only delaying tactics. There is little possibility that any of them will stand in court.

Alabama's "legal" weapon, passed last week by the State Senate—again unanimously—is a constitutional amendment which would allow the state to set up three types of schools—all-white, all-Negro and integrated.

The Alabama House also passed a resolution declaring the Supreme Court's decision "null, void, and of no effect." This act might be called a show of bravery.

Georgia also followed the private school line of attack. It approved a set of bills which would create private schools and would maintain strict segregation.

The Georgia Legislature also passed bills giving the governor authority to sell or lease public recreational facilities to private concerns, thus hoping to avoid the latest rulng against segregation in such facilities.

No Georgia lawmaker raised a question about any of the bills. They all passed unanimously.

In North Carolina, segregationists have put all their eggs in a "pupil-assignment"-basket.

Army Judge for Segregation?

Herald

ATLANTA —(UP)— Maj. Gen. Eugene Caffey, judge advocate general of the Army, appeared to put himself on the record Monday on the side of Southern racial segregation forces.

The Army's top legal officer delivered a short address to the Georgia House of Representatives. He said he had dinner in Washington recently with Rep. John J. Flynt, Georgia Democrat, at which Flynt let him read a copy of a speech he made to the Georgia Legislature last week.

Jues. 1-31-56

"If I were going to make a speech I would hope to make one like that," Caffey said. The House applauded.

P.3-A

Flynt's speech to the Legislature was a bitter attack on the federal government and the U.S. Supreme Court for recent racial integration orders. Flynt also denounced FEPC policies.

A reporter asked Caffey if he were going along with Flynt's attack on the Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation.

Miami, Fla.

"Listen, I'm not in politics," Caffey replied.

Sound Advice To Negroes

Commercial Appeal

Above the babel created by extremists on both sides of the segregation issue there has sounded the voice of one who speaks a basic but ignored truth. He is E. FREDERICK MORROW, a Negro, and administrative officer for the special projects group in the President's Executive Office. In addressing a St. Louis press club this week, the truth he expounded is that Negroes must accept the responsibilities as well as the privileges of "first-class citizenship."

Memphis, Tenn.

He had youth particularly in mind, but what he said would apply with equal force to adults and especially those agitators of the NAACP and similar groups who talk only of "rights" and never of acceptance of responsibility which the exercise of citizenship imposes.

2-6-56

"Unless we can get every Negro boy and girl," he said, "to get his eyes off the ground, to throw off the shackles of crude conduct and coarse language, to throw away bizarre clothing and tribal headdress, to recognize the privileges of school as the path to knowledge and achievement, to develop a sense of values based on the real and not on the appearance or the material, then all the Supreme Court decisions announcing Federal policies of equality and opportunity are only mirages in a desert of despair and frustration."

A proper sense of values can be developed only within the individuals. It cannot be acquired by edict, and it must be inspired by a desire for true growth and, in its essence, it is that element on which consciousness of responsibility rests. If there was a little less noisy adult emphasis on civil rights and more on civic responsibility, some of the major vexations of the times might be quickly eliminated.

GENERAL

Integration

Dr. Gray Blasts Separate, Equal

BUCK HILLS AFLLS, Pa.—Ame ican Negroes wanti ntegration in education because "We are morally obligated to opposet he misguided efforts of the South to brin American leadership into disrepute by its insistence upon segregation," a prominent educator said.

Dr. Arthur D. Gray, president of Talladega college, speaking befo e the Midwinter Meeting of the Congregational Churches meeting last week said.

Defender

"Negro America is unanimous in support of integration ine ducation for reasons over and above self interest. We aree qually concerned about the welfare of the nation. We are morally obligated to prevent the South from committing intellectual suicide."

P. 5

WHITE VIEWS ONLY

Dr. Gray stated, "Since the historic May 17, 1954, decision of the Supreme Court many Boards of Education and other public agencies have called conferences to consider what is best for the Negroes, but have invited no Negroes to state their views.

"This is a sad commentary upon educators who pride themselves upon getting the facts.

Because of the failure to include Negroes in consideration of school problems, Dr. Gray said, ". . .a plethora of views purporting to represent Negro opinion are circulated by citizens councils and other irrational groups.

"Some groups are trying to reacht heir educational destination by hitching the dead horse of inter-marriage to the ante-bellum buggy of segregation."

WANT DIGNITY

"Negroes," Dr. Gray stated, "do not want integration in educationt o mix with white people. They do not wanti ntegrationi n trans to ride with white people. They do not want integration in dining cars to eat with white people. Nor do they want integration in hotels to sleep with white people.

"In all these things Negroes wantt o live in dignity as citizens with no badge of inferiority pinned on their backs because of color."

The educator commended the role of church related schools in the South. "Beyond any question of doubt the majority of better Negro colleges in the South are church related schools. The public institutions of higher learning for Negroes are still int heir intellectual swaddling clothes. The colleges now beste quippedt o function in an integrated system are amongt he schools of the United Negro College Fund."

SPECIAL TRIBUTE

Dr. Gray paid special tribute tc the six colleges of the American Missionary Association, a division of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches.

While crediting the denomination with progress in integrated educational institutions, he added,

"We must hasten to get our house in order. We can no longer afford to give moral or financial support to segregated institutions. The church related college must stop conforming to what is euphemistically called 'our southern customs' and get aboutt heir central business-achieving a democratic Christian community."

Condemning the idea of 'separate but equal' facilities Dr. Gray pointed out that, ". . .there isn't enough money in the South ort he nation, to maintain a first class dual set of community institutions and public services."

Integrated educationi s not just a southern problem,t he educator emphasized. "What happens there (in the South) affects the nation andt he world," he said and add,

"At a time when the profound issue of human survival demands the most creative ande nlightened response of every social agency, education in the South is mired down in the slough of segregation.'

College President Says

Weekly P. 7

Negro Morally Obligated To Oppose Southern Bias

Sat. 2-11-56

Buck Hill Falls, Pa. (ANP).—American Negroes want integration in education because "We are morally obligated to oppose the misguided efforts of the South to bring American leadership into disrepute by its insistence upon segregation," a prominent Negro educator said here.

New Orleans La.

Dr. Arthur D. Gray, president of Talladega College, Talladega, Alabama speaking before the Midwinter Meeting of the Congregational Churches meeting here this week said, Negro America is unanimous in support of integration in education for reasons over and above self interest. We are equally concerned about the welfare of the nation. We are morally obligated to prevent the South from committing intellectual suicide."

Dr. Gray stated that "since the historic May 17, 1954, decision of the Supreme Court many Boards of Education and other public agencies have called conferences to consider what is best for the Negroes, but have invited no Negroes to state their views. This is a sad commentary upon educators who pride themselves upon getting the facts."

Because of the failure to include Negroes in consideration of school problems, Dr. Gray said, ". . . a plethora of views purporting to represent Negro opinion are circulated by citizens councils and other irrational groups. Some of these groups are trying to reach their educational destination by hitching the dead horse of inter-marriage to the ante-bellum buggy of segregation."

"Negroes," Dr. Gray stated, "do not want integration in education to mix with white people. They do not want integration in trains to ride with white people. They do not want integration in dining cars to eat with white people. Nor do they want integration in hotels to sleep with white people. In all these things Negroes want to live in dignity as citizens with no badge of inferiority pinned on their backs because of color."

The educator commended the role of church related schools in the south. "Beyond any question of doubt the majority of better Negro colleges in the South are church related schools. The public institutions of higher learning for Negroes are still in their intellectual swaddling clothes. The colleges now best equipped to function in an integrated system are among the schools of the United Negro College Fund."

Solving the Race Problem

Times P. 10-E

Theory of Local Governments' Rights to Settle Issues Disputed

Sun. 2-5-56

The writer of the following letter, a New York lawyer, is a frequent contributor to legal publications.

New York

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

In The Times of Jan. 22 there was published a letter from Philip M. Brown, a former Professor of International Law at Princeton, who, in presenting the view of "high-minded Southerners" concerning the racial problem, said that the heart of this problem "lies in the honest conviction that local governments under the Constitution of the United States have the right to solve their social and economic problems in their own way." This he termed "states' rights."

Resort to the Constitution to justify conduct which violates it is indeed a strange argument. The Constitution is not a document to be accepted or rejected by each locality as it sees fit.

To argue that a community may solve its "local" problems by violating the civil rights of a large segment of its population is to argue for the destruction of government by law and to permit individuals to act as they see fit, in willful disregard of the rights of others. This is an untenable plea.

The deliberate flouting of the Constitution in a single community transcends the bounds of local interest and becomes a matter of national concern. And when it becomes the pattern of many communities, resulting in depriving a large segment of American citizens of their constitutional rights; when, in addition, it becomes the basis of effective Communist propaganda and seriously affects American interests throughout a substantial portion of the world, the absurdity of the plea that this is merely a local matter for each community to consider becomes crystal clear.

Moreover, when we review the lengthy history of the struggle of the Southern Negro for his constitutional rights in the field of education and the present efforts of many leaders of the South to sabotage the decision of the United States Supreme Court, it seems to me that the plea of one schooled in the field of law should be not for forbearance but for the expressed indignation of those who believe in constitutional government.

MORTIMER HAYS.

New York, Jan. 26 1956.

Dixie Editor Says Transfer Only Solution

Advertiser Sun. 4-1-56

Sun. 4-1-56

CLEVELAND, March 31 (AP)—A Southern newspaper editor said here today that civil disorder and tax refusals in the South are a danger, but there is no possibility of a new Civil War over the segregation issue.

Zoutzman

Thomas R. Waring, editor of the Charleston, S.C., News and Courier, recommended in addressing the City Club forum that the people of the north "stop pressuring the people of the South to mix the races in public schools."

"If you really want to help," he said, "I suggest you use the only method that will alleviate the problem—migration."

He said Negroes who are dissatisfied with life in the South should be admitted to new homes in the desegregated north.

"We want to live in peace," Waring said. "We think the NAACP and other racial groups are disturbing the peace.

"The U.S. Supreme Court represents one of the three branches of our government. We will seek to change the law peaceably, as the prohibition law was changed."

The Supreme Court has ruled that segregation of races in public schools is illegal.

The Editor said many people in the South do not believe separation of the races immoral or that it should be unconstitutional.

"School integration in 11 Southern states is not likely in the foreseeable future," Waring said. "In many places we would close the schools first and we might refuse to pay taxes to support some other kind of school structure."

Court's ruling saved world from Reds—Dr. Johnson

Afro-American Sat. 2-11-56

Baltimore, Md.

COLUMBUS, Ohio —"If the Supreme Court had been different, we would have tied the world up in a red ribbon and given it to the Communists."

That was the observation made by Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, in an address before the 37th annual Ohio Pastors' Convention.

He said the court's ruling affected the attitudes of 800 million people in Asia and Africa and saved the world from Communism.

P. 13

DR. JOHNSON, who recently returned from a tour of the Near East and Africa, urged compliance with the edict and urged the Christian church to throw its full weight behind the fight to bring about conformity with the decision.

The Tennessee -born educator and son of a minister virtually preached a sermon to the church leaders, as he urged the church leaders to adhere to the Christian principle: "Take Up Thy Cross and Follow Me."

"The Communists have not said much. They do not think we have the moral and spiritual power to carry the decision through into action," he declared.

38a 1956

GENERAL

Seeks Middle Way In Controversy

Herald Sun. 4-3-56

President Is Worried By Racial Tensions

Miami, Fla.

By DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON—President Eisenhower is deeply concerned—in fact, very much worried—about the emotional disturbance in America today over the problem of racial segregation in the public schools.

LAWRENCE

He talks a good deal about it to some of his visitors. He tries in an unspectacular and earnest way to encourage a public understanding of the issues involved, in the hope that there will be no outbursts of passion or violence.

P. 6-A

He believes the churches can do a great deal toward this end. He is well aware of the complexities of the issue and doesn't believe the solution is simple or easy to achieve.

There's something innately conciliatory about Mr. Eisenhower's whole personality. It is his nature to search for ways to unite human beings who hold conflicting views or who nurture deep-seated prejudices against one another.

All his life that's been dominant in his makeup because he maintains an abiding faith in the power of human love in the world to reconcile differences between groups within a single nation as well as between nations.

Mr. Eisenhower has always been convinced that, where there are extremes in a controversy, there is a middle way. Sometimes this is called "moderation," but even that word sounds like "compromise" to those who are sincerely convinced of the absolute correctness of their own legal or moral position.

★ ★ ★

WHAT CAN THE President do? He has conferred with Chief Justice Warren about the question of gradual application of the court decree on desegregation in order to explore what is the best way for the executive branch of the government, which must present the matter constantly to the courts, to find a way to chart its course of action.

There are lots and lots of legal questions which have yet to be settled, and the important factor is time—to avoid precipitating emotional clashes while the American method of rational and non-violent solution of difficult questions is in process.

Thus, it may be that the South, by majority vote of the people of each state, will choose to separate the sexes in the schools so as to meet to some extent the fears about social mixing and intermarriage.

It may be that the Southern states will consider leasing some of their public-school buildings to private organizations and let the people decide whether to send their children to mixed public schools or to segregated private schools.

★ ★ ★

FOR MANY DECADES the Supreme Court of the United States has held that, as long as equal facilities for education were provided by the states, they could be separate.

But now nine men in the Supreme Court say the other judges in the past were wrong, and that segregation by race in public schools violates the Fourteenth Amendment which guarantees "equal protection of the laws" to everybody.

Has "equal protection" been achieved by separate but equal educational facilities or does it mean only compulsory integration? Merely to state the problem is to show how far from simple it is.

It is easy enough to say that the Supreme Court now has decided it and that all must obey. But obey what? How shall "integration" be carried out? What are its limitations? That's why the Supreme Court left all questions to be worked out in individual cases in the lower courts. This will take time.

Meanwhile, Mr. Eisenhower's role will not be to use or to threaten force but to try to bring about in an orderly way an adaptation of the school question to the circumstances which are faced in the South.

His whole concern now is how to lessen the tension between the races that has risen as never before to plague the people who for generations have lived amicably together.

'Avoid Violence,'

Herald P. 23-A

Southerner Warns

Miami, Fla.

Illegal Action on Desegregation

Sun. 3-18-56

Held Invitation to Carpetbaggers

WASHINGTON — (AP) — A Southern senator cautioned his people Saturday night to avoid any show of violence in resisting school integration lest they invite a return of "Reconstruction" government and rule by "carpetbaggers."

Sen. Allen J. Ellender, Louisiana Democrat, told a Louisiana radio audience that he and other congressional signers of last Sunday's "manifesto" against integration are committed to resistance by "any lawful means." He added:

"What the South must avoid at all costs is violence, lawlessness, hatred and bloodshed. The outside agitators who seek the subjugation of both the white and Negro races in the South are hovering like greedy vultures for the time when racial antagonisms lead to chaos, the breakdown of governmental authority, and general lawlessness.

"If this condition should occur, then I fear they will not hesitate to press for the use of force. If this should occur, then all our people could look forward to would be a repetition of the Reconstruction regimes which brought the South only oppression and self-seeking exploitation."

In "our fight to maintain the basic principles of our federal, constitutional system," Ellender said, "we must not open our gates to an invasion of our states by a new and even hungrier breed of carpetbaggers."

Carpetbaggers were Northern politicians who invaded the South after the Civil War.

By the Supreme Court decision calling for desegregation of the public schools, Ellender said, "nine men have made it possible for 165 million Americans to be made subject to a new and powerful kind of despotism."

The "Declaration of Constiutional Principles" signed by the Southern congressmen, he said, "is a sober warning" to the American people that the Supreme Court "has laid the foundation for what may yet prove to be a complete destruction of our constitutional system of checks and balances."

Dixie's Negro: A Wasted Resource

Informer P. 12 Sat. 3-24-56

THE CHARLOTTE NEWS

Broach the Negro problem" to any group of southerners today and tempers are likely to sizzle like fatback dropped in a hot skillet. But out of the emotional atmosphere surrounding this aged-in-anguish dilemma, a sobering fact emerges: The Negro is a part, both creator and creature, of southern culture, for whom the region is responsible as for all other groups.

Houston Leg.

Even those who despise the Negro will admit, if reluctantly, that he is an important factor in Dixie's economy. What is not always admitted is the fact that he will contribute more to the economic well-being of the region as he receives better education, better political, economic and social opportunities.

The South, for better or for worse, is inhabited by roughly 10 1-2 million Negroes. This figure represents a gigantic manpower potential. But it is fairly obvious throughout the southern states that Negroes are not contributing what they should to Dixie. They are not contributing because full use is simply not being made of all this human wealth.

The most regrettable aspect of the situation is the difficulty many intelligent Negroes have in securing a higher education.

At the very time a great deal of public attention has been given to the pros and cons of racial segregation in Dixie's public schools, a private philanthropic organization has centered its attention on ways to help talented young Negroes to get a college education. The National Scholarship Service and the Fund for Negro Students, sponsored by the Fund for the Advancement of Education, has undertaken the task in an effort to make fuller use of this important manpower potential. It's principal aims: To discover more college qualified Negro students in the South; to encourage these students to develop their abilities; to provide them with information and assistance in obtaining college scholarships, and to furnish finacial aid when needed. It is known as the Southern Project.

According to Benjamin Fine, one of the nation's leading education writers, the organization's talent search in Dixie has uncovered a surprising number of Negro students of college ability. In two years some 500 students have been aided.

During this relatively short period, the project has greatly increased the number of southern Negroes enrolled in colleges, increased the number of information and testing facilities for future Negro college students and, more inportant slice of the nation's hidden manpower reserve.

Trained manpower is needed in the South and in the nation as a whole. With sufficient education, Negroes can help meet this need. Not only can they serve their own race better but they can benefit the nation's entire economic community. The aims of the Southern Project rise above prejudice. They are, in fact, more akin to national and regional self-interest.

Differing Views On Integration

Journal + Guide

MEMBERS OF THE American Society of Newspaper Editors (white) meeting in Washington last week discussed, among other things, the dismal school desegregation question. In one of his reports for International News Service ROBERT G. NIXON observed:

Sat. 4-28-56

Northern and eastern editors asserted that integration will take place under the United States Supreme Court decision, while southern editors insisted emphatically that the South is not ready for such a step.

Norfolk Va.

Some southern editors, it turned out however, looked calmly at the situation, and while pessimistic, were not inclined to the position that the South would eternally resist, even to the extremity of civil war.

P. 10

One Georgia editor, MR. SYLVAN MEYER, of the Gainesville Times, put forward a thought which we hope the editors will put into practice. He thought there was need for an "Editorial Guide" which would provide a "middle course between extremists on the racial issue."

He explained it to northern and eastern editors by saying:

If you are exposed to the demagoguery of as many politicians as are in the South you would realize we have a highly inflammatory problem. What we need is an underlying Editorial Guide to refer to from day to day. It should be a moderate course.

MR. MEYER'S proposal is a good one. From what we have read from day to day in the daily newspapers, the editorial temperature on the race issue continues to rise. On some of the papers it has reached the point of delirium. On others it is proceeding like the old fashion galloping consumption. One who moves about the South hardly recognizes the progressive, liberal newspapers of a few years ago. There are some exceptions, of course. But the unaccountable hysteria has seized about seventy-five per cent of the daily press.

We call it "unaccountable hysteria" because integration will not proceed any faster than the District Courts order it to proceed.

It stands to reason that the District Courts are going to take advantage of all of the time and the latitude allowed by the Supreme Court in its May 31, 1955 decree. It has been apparent to all who would understand, that while the Supreme Court banned segregation in public schools, the order contained all of the elements of gradualism.

The High Court did not order immediate desegregation. It ruled against segregated public schools, but allowed time for adaptation to change where that is necessary.

• • •

FROM THE incoherency of the newspapers and the politicians, it appears that they have not taken into consideration that under a given set of conditions integration is possible.

They have only taken the position that integration is undesirable to them under any circumstances at any time.

That position has been dramatized and emphasized by the southwide organization of groups whose business it has been to create fear where there was none; intensify fear where there was some; becloud the issue where it was clear, and so confuse the minds of the people on the Supreme Court's relation to the constitution and the law as to give all that has been done in a quarter century of litigation the appearance of unreality.

Indeed, the fantastic impression has been created that the people of the South have the choice of accepting or rejecting a decision of the Supreme Court, depending upon whether they like it or not, and at the same time remain in the Union of States.

To move out of this state of unreality and frustration, and to ease the present tensions and tendencies toward violence and disaster the South needs to invoke the methods of moderation, patience and intelligence. These elements are needed everywhere, in the press, in the pulpit, in business circles, in the schools, among people in general, and above all among the politicians, who furnish most of the demagoguery referred to by EDITOR MEYER.

Plessy Nears Its End

(From The New York Times)

Just sixty years ago the United States Supreme Court affirmed in the famous case of Plessy v. Ferguson that separation of the races in intrastate railroad cars did "not necessarily imply the inferiority of either race to the other" and was generally recognized "as within the competency of the State Legislatures in the exercise of their police power." The court went on to point out that "the most common instance of this is connected with the establishment of separate schools for the white and colored children *

Daily World P. 6

In the six decades that have passed there has been a revolution in the thinking and the customs of a large part—though by no means all—of the population of the United States, and a corresponding revolution in the thinking and the decisions of the Supreme Court. A succession of cases dealing with both transportation and education in recent years has brought the judicial doctrine of Plessy v. Ferguson to its grave. Burial took place on May 17, 1954, when the decisions rejecting the constitutionality of "separate but equal" school facilities were handed down. The tombstone was set when the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond last July ruled against enforced segregation even on city buses, asserting that—in the light of the school decision—"we do not think the separate but equal doctrine * * * can be any longer regarded as a correct statement of law." An appeal from this decision was rejected this week by the Supreme Court, though on technical grounds only. Nevertheless, it now appears that if every form of public transport as well as every form of publicity supported education is not yet legally freed from segregation, it soon will be.

This conclusion will come hard to some states and cities where segregation of public transport has been practiced for generations. "I hereby defy the ruling handed down by the U. S. Supreme Court," grandiloquently declared the president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, in whose state capital, Montgomery, a Negro boycott of segregated bus lines has been going on since December. Some officials in Alabama and doubtless in other states may try to take temporary refuge in the fact that the most recent case refers specifically to a South Carolina bus line only, although it is obvious that if it means that segregation on buses will end there, it will apply to every state and city where segregated public transportation is in effect.

This is not to say that compliance will be easy. Too much must not be demanded too soon. Friends of the Negro in the North will do him no service in the South by exaggerating what is already an extremely difficult situation. In a social upheaval of this magnitude it is neither wise nor just to issue hot-headed statements quivering with self-righteousness, as so many of us in this part of the world are wont to do when it comes to segregation. But the law must and will be enforced, though the process can be expected to take time.

38a 1956

GENERAL

Who Are The Extremists?

President Eisenhower's plea for moderation for the second consecutive week sharply focuses attention on the growing number of confused public figures parroting this puzzling appeal.

The leading Democratic presidential hopeful, Adlai Stevenson, began the trend during his appearance on the West Coast last month.

It was quickly echoed by such notables as Governor Herter of Massachusetts, Governor Lausche of Ohio, New Jersey's Senator Case, New York's Representative Keating and Tennessee's Senator Kefauver.

ONLY THE WEEK before President Eisenhower carried this strange reasoning a step further by denouncing what he termed "extremists" on both sides. Afro-American P.J.

In other words, we are given the shameful picture of a President of the United States unable to distinguish between forces dedicated to defiance of the law and those whose only sin is seeking full compliance with it.

President Eisenhower thus appears to place himself in the tortured company of those "moderate" Southerners who profess to see no difference between the activities of the White Citizens Councils and the NAACP.

To pursue the matter further, we would ask who are the "extremists" the President would caution the nation against?

ON ONE SIDE would he include the 101 Congressmen who signed the rebellious "Southern Manifesto"? Sat. 3-31-56

The chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who by his threats and slurs against members of the Supreme Court, openly preaches anarchy?

Members of the White Citizens Councils, sworn to the ugly conspiracy of depriving American citizens of their constitutional rights?

The egg-and-rock-throwing mob which deprived Miss Lucy of her legally-won right to attend the University of Alabama?

An Alabama grand jury which would pervert law to make it a criminal offense to walk? Baltimore, Md.

ON THE OTHER, would he list as "extremists" the thousands of Southern parents, who seek through legal means to obtain for their children the best possible education?

The NAACP which merely gives expert legal advice to these parents in their fight for what is lawfully theirs?

The disfranchised millions in Virginia, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia, who would exercise their American right to vote?

Montgomery's 50,000 citizens, who prefer walking to sacrificing their human dignity aboard a jim crow bus?

Or the Supreme Court, itself, which has held that no additonal time may be granted school districts until "a prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance" with its desegregation decree has begun?

OF COURSE, we are reasonably certain that this is not what President Eisenhower or any of the other national figures had in mind in their appeals for "moderation."

He said very plainly: "I am sworn to defend and uphold the Constitution of the United States . . . I can never abandon or refuse to carry out my own duty."

But isn't he encouraging those who defy the Supreme Court to believe that he and they mean the same thing?

The Least They Can Do

Objectors to the Powell Amendment all sing the same song.

"Put erection of schools through Federal appropriation above every other consideration," they say.

Every lawful consideration, yes, but not every consideration.

Compliance with the U.S. Constitution as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court is of first importance.

Under the Powell Amendment no state would fail to get Federal aid if it complies with the Constitution which now requires integrated schools.

The 43 states which have taken steps to comply with the law cannot afford to support the five small states which wilfully defy the Constitution.

We suggest that the Powell Amendment is the least Congressmen could enact to be in accord with their oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States.

No Troops Needed–Yet

"You wouldn't call out the National Guard to enforce integrated schools, would you?"

That's the newest question which Alabama segregationists are asking, hoping timid Republican and Democrat politicians will say no.

We call out troops in cases of rioting during labor disputes, where the public safety is endangered by floods or fires and when any community cannot preserve law and order.

Why not when citizens are terrorized by mobs defying the law of the land?

Where law and order are in danger because local police are inadequate, what is one good reason why troops should not be used?

We don't think troops are necessary to preserve order in Alabama and Mississippi—yet.

Where mobs threaten peaceful citizens admitted by the courts to the polls, to jury service or to tax-supported institutions of higher learning, the first step is to require local police and local courts to arrest mob members and put them in jail.

Secondly, under U.S. Civil Rights Statutes 241-242, the Federal judges are compelled to imprison police officers and local magistrates who conspire among themselves or with others to prevent citizens from exercising their civil rights.

Third, put in jail school officials and segregationists who disobey Federal court injunctions forbidding interference with pupils, students, teachers or schools, or voters.

The first time these three steps are taken in any locality where courts show they really mean business, violence will end immediately.

It is remarkable what influence a jail sentence has upon bullies and gangsters.

It's high time to quit coddling those who break the law.

Our Job Is Here

Bishop D. Ward Nichols, member of a group of American ministers, just back from a 10-day tour of Russia, has been the target of considerable criticism for his remarks in Moscow concerning race relations here.

The Associated Press quoted Bishop Nichols as telling the Russians that "Negro life in America is like the life of any other people.

"We have our problems like any other people," he reportedly added, "but we are working them out in the spirit of Christian fellowship."

Of course, we would have been happier if Bishop Nichols had found it possible to give a more accurate picture of what is going on here, but we are not too perturbed.

What we tell Russia isn't really so important.

Our battle is over here. Our big job is to convince our government that it ought to go ahead more rapidly than it is.

There is no necessity on the part of any of us to explain our position in the United States to Russia.

There is nothing the Soviets can do for us that we can't do better ourselves within our own borders.

The South's Real Fear

Many outsiders, puzzled by the South's emotional hysteria over the racial question, have suspected that behind it lay genuine fear that colored people were not the inferiors noisy white supremacists would lead the outside world to believe.

Their every action points to this overriding phobia.

The white majority framed Jim Crow laws, upheld tradition and established custom to shackle the colored minority into an inferior status quo.

Justice was held beyond their reach. Education was denied or severely restricted. The right to vote was withheld. Job opportunities were limited to the back-breaking, low-paying, menial occupations.

They were rigidly segregated in all phases of public, civic and social activites.

Any possibility of the colored minority's competing on an equal basis with the white majority was zealously guarded against.

All this was done, not because white Southerners believed colored people were inferior, but because of a real fear that they were actually superior.

Confirmation of this fact came last week from William Faulkner, the bewildered and ofttimes contradictory Noble prize winning novelist of Oxford, Miss.

He frankly admits to the London Times that the colored Southerner is "calmer, wiser, more stable than the white man. To have put up with this situation so long with so little violence shows a sort of greatness."

"The poor white man," confesses Faulkner, "knows that although the Negro can only buy the worst land, has bad tools and inferior livestock, he can make a living better than white men could.

"With a little more social, economic and educational equality the Negro will often be the landlord and the white man will be working for him.

"And the Negro won't come out on top because of anything to do with the race but because he has always gotten by without scope; when they are given scope they use it fully.

"The Negro is trained to do more than a white man can with the same limitations."

There it is from a man who has been hailed the world over as an expert in race relations in the South.

Contrary to what the loud manifesto-signing Congressmen and other Dixie politicians say, the fear is not over "intermarriage," "invasion of states rights," or any of the other absurd reasons assigned to the South's resistance to the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

The real fear stems from the Southerner's secret knowledge of his colored neighbor's innate ability to achieve if given the opportunity and the South's blind determination that he shall not be granted that opportunity.

Missouri's New Judge

Missouri's liberal Gov. Phil M. Donnelly last week wrote one more chapter in the continuing story of democratic progress.

His appointment of 37-year-old Theodore McMillan as a St. Louis circuit judge was not only unprecedented in Missouri because of Mr. McMillan's race.

It also set a refreshing new pattern of according opportunity to Missourians, not on the outmoded basis of race, but on the healthy new level of ability.

Mr. McMillan, born in a St. Louis tenement, the eldest of 10 children, demonstrated superior ability from elementary schools through high school where he maintained an average of 93 per cent.

He ranked first in the class of 1949 at the St. Louis University School of Law, although compelled to work at night as a janitor to pay his way through.

Appointed in 1953 as assistant circuit attorney, he has tried more cases than any other prosecutor in that office and has made the enviable record of obtaining convictions in about 90 per cent of the felony prosecutions before juries.

Senator Lehman And His Attacks On South

Advertiser P. 3-B
Montgomery Ala.
Sun. 4-8-56

By C. M. Stanley
Editor-in-Chief, The Alabama Journal

THE question has been asked: "Is Senator Lehman, of New York, a native of Montgomery?"

The answer is "no."

STANLEY

Senator Lehman is one of the most severe critics of the South and most ardent defenders of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision.

Though he was not born in Alabama it is somewhat surprising that the New York Democratic senator should take this position in view of his southern background. Observers of the Washington scene have felt that politics and political connections with New York City's Democratic machine may have influenced him in being so intense in his anti-Southern position on desegregation in the Senate.

HIS speech a few days ago in criticism of the "Declaration of Constitutional Principles," signed by more than a hundred United States senators and representatives in Congress, was the most intemperate attack yet made by a responsible official upon that epochal document. The Lehman speech, however, has been fully and completely answered by defenders of the declaration, including Senator Robertson of Virginia.

FOR years after the Civil War the Lehman family occupied a prominent place in the business and financial life of Montgomery.

A group of old time Montgomery photographs presented to me some years ago by the late Algernon Blair recalls the Lehman place in business life. One of the photographs is taken from Court Square looking northward out Court Street where the tower of the Old First Baptist Church on Bibb Street looms up.

Buildings facing Court Square itself and occupying the site now occupied by the First National Bank building are shown in this 1874 photograph. On the ground floor of the three-story building is a huge sign "J. J. Cox & Company." Across the second floor is another large sign "Lehman, Durr & Company." The third floor sign reads: "Odd Fellows Hall."

ANOTHER of the photographs in the Blair collection is what is labeled "The home of Joseph Goetter on South Court Street, as of 1894." This is the home later known as the M. P. LeGrande place and was located where the Walter Bragg Smith Apartment building now stands. It was occupied by the Lehman family at the time of their residence in Montgomery and later became the home of Joseph Goetter a prominent Montgomery merchant on Dexter Avenue in the early days.

AN Alabama State Gazeteer and business directory of 1887-88 in my library contains the following listing:

"Lehman, Durr & Company (Emanuel Lehman, Meyer Lehman, John W. Durr, Joseph Golker) bankers, cotton factors and commission merchants, 17 Court Square." No Lehman is listed as resident of Montgomery in that volume. Mr. Durr is also listed as president of the Tallassee Falls Manufacturing Company.

In Powell' rectory of Montgomery in my library dated 1888, under th. ow g "Bankers," Lehman, Durr & Company are listed as being located at 17 Court Square. Mr. Durr's residence is given as 237 Molton Street.

THE Montgomery banks listed in the old 1888 Powell directory are three: First National, Merchants and Planters and The State National.

In the same volume is a list of "bankers" in Montgomery in 1888. The list includes:

Adams & Company, 16 Commerce Street.
Commercial Fire Insurance Company, 12 Commerce Street.
Farley, Spear & Company, 12 Commerce Street.
Lehman, Durr & Company, 17 Court Square.
Moses Brothers, 10 North Court Street.
Josiah Morris & Company, 10 Commerce Street.
W. S. Reese and Company, 17½ Commerce Street.

WHAT has all this to do with Senator Herbert H. Lehman, the man who entertains such intense bitterness toward the South? The New York senator is a son of Mayer and Babette Newgass Lehman and Mayer Lehman was one of the partners in the Montgomery firm of Lehman, Durr & Company. Senator Lehman was born in New York City, March 28, 1878. He was married April 28, 1910 to Edith Altschul. Their children are: Peter G. Lehman (deceased,) John R. Lehman, Hilda Lehman and Paul Lehman.

He began his business life with J. Spencer Turner Company, textile manufacturers, and advanced to vice president and treasurer. In 1908 he became a partner in Lehman Brothers, bankers in New York, and retired in 1929 after being elected lieutenant governor of New York in 1928, the year that Gov. Alfred E. Smith ran for the presidency on the Democratic ticket and was defeated by Herbert Hoover. In that contest, incidentally, Alabama went for Hoover for president, voting Republican for the first time after reconstruction days.

MR. Lehman served as lieutenant governor of New York from 1928 to 1932 and in the memorable Franklin D. Roosevelt year of 1932 he was elected governor and served in that office until 1942. After serving as director of foreign relief and rehabilitation operations in the Department of State, and director general of the United Nations Rehabilitation Administration until 1946, he was elected United States senator from New York in 1949 and has been there ever since.

THE senator has an imposing list of honorary degrees from various institutions of learning, one of them from Oglethorpe University, a southern institution. He is also an official and director in many welfare and promotional organizations, being a director of the Welfare Council of New York City and of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People. He was awarded the war department's Distinguished service medal for his work during the war where he became a colonel on the general staff and was assistant director of purchase, storage and traffic.

The senator is a member of many clubs in New York, Albany and Washington. His residence is 820 Park Avenue, New York, and his office, 41 East 57th Street, New York, in addition to his offices in the senate office building in Washington.

THE WHITE MAN'S PARTY

Globe P.4 Fri. 4-13-56

It is very gratifying to note that the NAACP is becoming more realistic on one issue than most of its leaders in the past 25 years have been. That is they are beginning to see that there is no salvation for the Negro in his fight for civil rights by becoming "unanimous" for ONE political party, especially in national elections.

Eric F. Goldman's "Rendezvous with Destiny has in it a paragraph from which we quote a passage, dealing with the policies of the Populiat Party which was very much of a "going concern" more than 50 years ago. The party quickly repented for making the attempt to unite the Negro masses with the masses of whites Down South. The paragraph says:

Nashville, Tenn.

"The attempt of the Southern Populists to form a poor-white, poor-Negro coalition proved politically disastrous. As a group, low income Southern whites were harsh enemies of the Negro, and the Southern conservatives seriously injured Populism by calling it the "nigger's party."

"That everlasting and overshadowing 'Negro Question,' Tom Watson believed, was the explanation of his own failure to achieve greater political power, and the day was not distant when he would shift to a frantic anti-Negro position in an attempt to out-racist his enemies. In most Southern states the race issue thoroughly stifled Populism. Impoverished but anti-Negro farmers clung to the white man's party, the Democratic, and turned to the leadership of demagogues like South Carolina's Ben Tillman and Mississippi's James Vardaman, who combined reform and racist attitudes in a formula similar to the one Adolf Hitler was to perfect."

Northern Negroes committed a major blunder when they adopted their policy of fighting to get Negroes Down South registered as Democrats EXCLUSIVELY, with the promise they would be empowered thereby to move in and take over the Southern "Democracy" and with the aid of the Democrat "liberals" create a new party. Their strategy only made the Eisenhower victory in 1952 much greater and the future for the Democrats very dark, indeed. Negro Democrats, from Up North by their advice to Negroes Down South and the pitiful contribution they made in asserting their boasted "balance of power" strength, rendered Negro Democrats nonentities in the party of Roosevelt and Rankin.

The Democrat Party is "the white man's party" and Northern Negroes who pretend it is not so, are only kidding themselves when they pretend that the "liberal" Northern Democrats can and will deliver anything tangible in the shape of civil rights for Negroes when the Democrat Party controls the government.

LET RIGHTEOUSNESS PREVAIL

Gradually, but truly, nevertheless, colored and white citizens of the South, are beginning to take a sane view of the problem of compulsory racial segregation in public schools.

It is the voice of wisdom and of experience being heard in the South-land. And it is an array of citizens capable of getting things done rather than to waste money unnecessarily fighting to change what is "the law of the land" under a new dispensation. The (new) law of the land prescribes, the Supreme Court decision delivered in 1954 that compulsory racial segregation in schools is now null and void. It specifically set aside, not only the "separate but equal" edict of the "Old Court" which spoke in 1896, but said that compulsory segregation violates the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

That was a revolutionary decision. The Court in 1954 recognized this to be true and that is why it appealed to all concerned to study the implications of the May 17, 1954 decision and to return to the Court at a later date with suggestions for carrying out the law of the land under the new dispensation.

Very naturally, colored citizens almost unanimously hailed the 1954 decision as one that would be as promptly carried out as was the decision in the Plessy v Ferguson case of 1896. But the Court, itself, had no such opinion. It virtually said that carrying out the decision would be a gradual process and that it could not be carried out as speedily in some areas as in others. It indicated that the "mark of high calling" for patriotism would be given to those states which admitted the Court had the power to set aside the Plessy v Ferguson decision but had done so.

But even so, the Court made it plain it would be lenient with those states which showed a righteous willingness to respect and obey the Court. It at the same time let it be known that nobody would be permitted to disregard the Supreme Court's edict.

In 1955, the Court spoke again, after learning the views of lawyers, politicians and others. The Court set forth in plain language that it expected only "good faith" from all states and school districts. It refused to name a target date for putting desegregation into effect. Messrs. Turgood Marshall and associates pleaded for such a date, but failed to convince the Court that this would be advisable.

Now we hold that colored Americans are challenged to obey the edict of the Supreme Court in 1955, which prescribes "gradualism" for getting desegregation completely carried out and white Americans are challenged to respect the fact that the "old order" which permitted bigots to ignore the 14th Amendment is dead and gone.

Therefore, faced by the fact the Supreme Court now commands all states that have assumed that state laws can over-ride supreme law, fairminded Southerners can be depended upon to take their new responsibility seriously. We believe the fairminded colored citizens, knowing it cannot possibly be "as long as it has been," will show patriotism to work for a peaceful settlement of the desegregation, devoid of costly lawsuits, seeking to get the 14th Amendment enforced, something we know is going to be enforced as surely as was the 13th Amendment, which abolished human slavery.

Great progress has been made in most all of the states to get the desegregation issue settled peaceably. President Eisenhower has made a notable contribution to that end in carrying the issue directly to the people of good will of both races. He thus has ignored politicians who have thus far been the hindering cause to a just and fair settlement of the problem. It is now up to the people to do likewise —that is ignore the politicians and in their place put patriotic Americans in charge of working out a desegregation plans that will be generally acceptable to lawabiding citizens everywhere in the South.

It is the "righteousness, that exalteth a nation," which must be called in to preside over future deliberations dealing with desegregation.

And what could be a more inspiring admonition to all concerned than what Holy Writ teaches us:

"Except the Lord build a house, they labor in vain that build it."

SCHOOLS

Sunday Star Washington, D.C. Aug. 5-1956

Louisiana, Virginia Hear 'Bad News' on Segregation Laws

Two doubly damaging blows were directed last week at the system of segregated schools in the South when three Federal judges and the Attorney General of Virginia took swipes at legal maneuvering designed to stave off integration.

L 26-A

The effect was doubly damaging because all four officials are native Southerners.

In Louisiana, a Federal judge ordered New Orleans to integrate its schools "with all deliberate speed" and the same judge and two colleagues, sitting en banc, ruled that all of the State's segregation laws which were re-enacted and strengthened in 1954 are unconstitutional. In Virginia, an advisory opinion by Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., held that the Legislature's interposition resolution does not suspend enforcement of the Supreme Court's desegregation directive in Virginia.

Mr. Almond noted that he himself is opposed to the principle of integration. But he added that interposition cannot be used by the State in carrying on the fight in the Prince Edward County school case, which was one of five decided by the Supreme Court in May, 1954. Mr. Almond's opinion was clear-cut: "The District Court is bound by the mandate which was issued (by the Supreme Court) on May 31, 1955. The decision of the Supreme Court and its mandate is the law of the case...."

Louisiana Rulings

The Louisiana judges' ruling against the State's 1954 omnibus segregation statute upset the State Legislature's act which had made the problem of racial segregation a "police" matter for public safety.

In his opinion, which took note also of "the problem of changing a people's mores," Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright concluded: "But the magnitude of the problem may not nullify the principle. And that principle is that we are, all of us, free-born Americans with a right to make our way unfettered by sanctions imposed by man because of the work of God." (Skin color, in Judge Wright's view, is God's work; segregation laws are man's invention.)

Meanwhile, a critical fight was brewing in Louisiana between the Roman Catholic Church and segregation leaders in the Legislature. Four members of the Legislature from New Orleans, where more than half the students attend Catholic parochial schools, asked for an amendment to the 1954 segregation laws which would cover private schools as well as public schools. Catholic Church officials had announced recently a plan for integrating church schools next September.

The controversy was certain to revolve around the issue of separation of church and state. It also would directly affect the consciences of many Louisianans who are both Catholic and segregationist.

In Alabama, officials of the University of Alabama announced that the order opening the institution to Negroes would be appealed to the United States Supreme Court. The university last month admitted its first Negro student, a Birmingham co-ed, but then excluded her from the campus after three days of violent demonstrations.

And in Washington, the Sidwell Friends School, a private institution, announced that it will begin integrating its classes next year. Included in the student body at Sidwell are the three children of Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, Congress' most vociferous and outspoken enemy of racial integration at any level.

ALL CHICAGO Hour of Prayer and report meeting at the Coliseum Wednesday night featured speeches and reports on the fight for racial equality in the South. Among the 100 clergymen and speakers who participated were, left to right, the Rev. Archibald J. Carey, pastor, Quinn Chapel AME church; Willoughby Abner, president of the Chicago branch, NAACP; Roy Wilkins, executive secretary, NAACP; the Rev. Augustus Bennett, pastor, Grace Presbyterian church; Rabbi Eric Freedland, president, Chicago Rabbinical association, and the Rev. Morris H. Tynes, pastor, Monumental Baptist church.

Patterns Of Resistance To Race-Mixing In The South

Advertiser
Mon. 2-13-56

. . . While Jim Crowism on city transit systems in the border states and in some cities of the "upper" South has been disappearing gradually, cities of the "deep" South appear ready to fight to the last ditch to retain the long practiced seating arrangement.

Montgomery, Ala.

Thus concludes The Baltimore Evening Sun in a survey of city transit and segregation in the South, a survey which included Montgomery's stalemate over the "first come, first served" demand of Negro boycotters as well as a number of other conflicts. P.4-A

With the glaring exception of Mississippi, and parts of Louisiana, The Sun reports, the South has by and large accepted "with good grace" the Interstate Commerce Commission's order affecting segregation practices in interstate commerce — waiting rooms and rest rooms. What The Sun does not bring out, however, is that this compliance is in more instances than not a token gesture to appease the all-powerful ICC. While signs have been changed in so-called "interstate" waiting rooms, the conventional patterns of segregation continue in most instances.

Broadly [The Sun continues] the degree of difference between interstate travel and intracity travel seems to be analogous to the difference between a municipal golf course and a municipal swimming pool. Quite a few cities in the South where the Negro ratio of population isn't particularly large have recently been dropping the color ban on the golf links, voluntarily or by court order. But this is not true in respect to swimming pools or wading pools and other facilities in the public parks.

Now before the U.S. Supreme Court is a suit involving city bus segregation in Columbia, S.C. The Circuit Court of Appeals, overruling the district court, decided in favor of the Negro complainants. Presumably, the Supreme Court will uphold the appellate court, if it follows the logic and precedent of the school segregation cases. Other significant developments:

¶ By direct Supreme Court order, Atlanta has just recently opened its golf courses to Negroes, but other recreation facilities are still strictly segregated. And, The Sun suggests, the issue of racial commingling at municipal swimming pools and the like, soon to be faced, will generate considerably more heat.

¶ A federal district judge has ruled in St. Petersburg, Fla. that the municipal swimming must admit Negroes, but the order has not been put into effect, and The Sun says, most cities in the Deep South are prepared to dispose of such facilities if race mixing is forced In Greensboro, S.C., for instance, not "deep" but "upper" South, the city has ordered the sale of the city golf course and moved to close a nine-hole course built a few years ago expressly for Negroes.

It appears to us that The Sun has correctly assessed Southern resistance as directly proportional to the degree of intimacy involved in any given issue. Thus resistance is palpably greater to integration in classrooms, swimming pools and buses than to token removal of signs in interstate waiting rooms. The line is vague, but as the contact ceases to be commercial expediency (as, for instance, the integration in Montgomery elevators) and becomes something approaching a social relationship, resistance is immediate and resolute.

South threatens American survival

Afro-American P.11 Sat. 4-21-56

NEW YORK—Denial of complete equality to colored Americans threatens the integrity and the existence of our democracy, Mrs. Agnes Meyer, author and educator of Washington, and Dr. Arthur D. Gray, president of Talladega College, Ala., told 800 delegates, here, Wednesday.

The two were speakers at the national convention of the American Jewish Congress' Women's Division, held in the Biltmore Hotel here.

Mrs. Meyer received the Women's Division's first Convention Citation of Honor for her "leadership in preserving the unique American experiment of separation of church and state and the freedom and integrity of our system of public education."

In her address, Mrs. Meyer warned that the survival of American democracy is threatened by two factors — internal corrosion caused by fear, insecurity and moral confusion; and the growing Communist success in exploiting both the ferment among the colored races of the world and our own recalcitrance in granting equal rights to our fellow colored citizens at home. She deplored American complacency "while our domestic and foreign problems go from bad to worse."

Baltimore, Md.

"THE MOST serious threat to this nation today," she said, "is not the existence of a powerful totalitarian enemy but rather the appearance of many of the same symptons which made the rise of totalitarianism possible in other lands." Among them, she said, is a "childish faith in the indispensable man and the magic power of a great personality.

"Americans must awaken to the fact that we are confronted not by one but two major revolutions — communism and the ferment throughout the world among the yellow, black and brown races," Mrs. Meyer declared. "We are united in our opposition to Communism," she noted, but sharply divided in our attitude toward the races with skins of a different hue.

"It is not surprising that the Communists, ever since our peaceful assurances at Geneva gave them a free hand, are successfully exploiting to the peoples of Asia and Africa the white man's false sense of superiority, and capitalizing on our own recalcitrance in granting equal rights to our colored fellow citizens here at home."

* * *

THE MOUNTING hostility in the South in implementing the Supreme Court's ruling on segregation is not an isolated phenomenon, Mrs. Meyer asserted. "It is a more acute form of the irrationalism, insecurity, distrust, suspicion and disregard of law and justice with which we have been contending in every area of American life for several years.

"It is precisely this disrespect for law, justice and equal rights—this illegal use of governmental powers to control the freedom of the individual and even to control thought, this same totalitarian principle which he characterized in the government's security program—that we now see reflected in the conduct of many political leaders in Southern States.

"The administration forces that backed our unprincipled security program can scarcely criticize the rebellion against the Supreme Court by the politicians of the South," Mrs. Meyer commented. "For they themselves set the example of lawlessness which is now being imitated by various Southern individuals and groups, and by many of our people throughout the land."

The new organization, the Federation for Constitutional Government, now in formation in the South, Mrs. Meyer warned, "may create havoc in both major political parties in the next election. The leaders of this movement are looking beyond the South.

"They expect to appeal to the extreme right-wing elements in both major political parties, dissident people who are fanatical isolationists, who see Communist subversives everywhere and who oppose all social progress as a menace to free enterprise."

* * *

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER, Mrs. Meyer continued, "must be made to realize that his reputation as the leader of the nation is at stake in this grave southern upheaval. He has belatedly made a few statements to curb the rising passions of the extremists and given encouragement to the silenced forces of moderation. But this paternal admonition is not enough.

"The art of government is foresight. Never was it more needed, if the President is to make the contribution which only he can make to quench the fires of wrath that threaten to sweep through the whole nation. A White House Conference should be called at once of the most reputable white and colored leaders who could be counted upon to seek pragmatic and rational approaches to justice."

* * *

DISCUSSING THE NAACP, Mrs. Meyer said: "It takes great statesmanship on the part of the NAACP to practice patience, especially in the light of the vicious activities of the White Citizens Councils. But the price of impatience is to create a condition which would repeat the pre-Civil War tragedy.

"Justice to the colored American," Mrs. Meyer concluded, "will inevitably bring about greater justice to all our economically marginal citizens.

"Therefore, if we now proceed to carry out the mandate of the Supreme Court, we shall gradually release in all of our people the essential force behind the concept of equality. This irresistible spiritual force cannot fail to overcome all the material ideologies that are now hostile to human freedom. We stand before a moral choice of the first magnitude. We have to choose now. We have to choose between freedom and slavery, not just for the colored American but for mankind."

* * *

IN HIS ADDRESS to the AJC Women's Division, Dr. Arthur Gray, who heads one of the South's integrated colleges at Talladega, Ala., declared: "We talk a great deal about the American way and the free world, but are strangely blind to a sterner truth: the impossibility of achieving a free world through a segregated society.

Dr. Gray noted that "many sincere people counsel moderation to the NAACP and to colored Americans. But they have exercised moderation for 300 years in America. It's about time others also practiced moderation.

"Colored America is virtually unanimous in support of integration in education for reasons over and above self interest," Dr. Gray stated. "We are equally concerned about the welfare of the nation. We are morally obligated to oppose the misguided efforts of the South to bring American leadership into disrepute by its insistence upon segregation.

"We are morally obligated to support and defend the Constitution of the United States; to prevent the South from committing intellectual suicide; to confront ourselves and our southern brothers with the requirements of our Judaeo-Christian faith. We cannot and will not be equivocal with the democratic and moral principles involved."

* * *

DR. GRAY scored the "separate but equal gospel" being proclaimed in parts of the South. "In spite of the money being put into equalizing programs we know that there is no such thing as separate but equal. There isn't enough money in the South, or the nation, to maintain a first class dual set of community institutions and public services."

Referring to William Faulkner's recent statements on the problems of segregation, Dr. Gray asserted, "His dilemma is the dilemma of the nation. He sees clearly 'the simple incontrovertible immorality of discrimination by race'—but becomes hesitant and fuzzy about the implementation of this premise. He appears blind to the fact that the South is also inhabitated by 12 million colored Americans. The South does not belong to white people alone. What happens in the South as well as in the North is the concern of all. Democracy will reign over all or it will reign over none.

"No section of this country can decide which decisions of the Supreme Court it will accept and which decisions it will flout," he said. "This is not a permissive matter. The continued existence of the nation—not the customs of the South—is the basic issue at stake."

Herter Urges Moderate Moves to Desegregation

Post + Times Herald P.28 Washington, D.C.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 20 (UP) Gov. Christian A. Herter of Massachusetts today said he believes moderate but steady progress is the best path toward desegregation.

Sun. 2-21-56

Herter, addressing a Brotherhood Week lunch of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Inc., said the Supreme Court decision posed questions that cannot be easily or quickly resolved.

The Supreme Court itself recognized this fact, he said.

"At this moment, however, the Nation is faced with a problem of utmost seriousness," he said. "Hotheads, and some who are deliberately trying to make political capital out of the issue have jumped into the arena and have made progress more and more difficult."

He said there is room for "a great difference of opinion, and very honest ones, with respect to how and at what pace the high court decision could be implemented."

"I am a strong believer in moving steadily, though slowly," Herter said. "Certainly the use of force as an immediate instrument of implementation is, I believe, abhorrent to all of us.

"If there ever was a time when calmness and moderation should prevail, it is on this issue at the present time."

Herter said the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People set, in 1953, a 10-year period in which it hoped to achieve its goal of complete equality of opportunity and desegregation.

We'll make them obey court, Waring

Afro-American P. 6 Sat. 4-14-56 Baltimore, Md.

NEWARK

"Tension in a good cause is not only necessary, but it is the best thing that can happen.

"Jesus produced the greatest tension in history.

"Don't be afraid of tension, don't be afraid of controversy; don't be afraid of doing right.

"The force of taking a position and sticking to it (as they are doing in Montgomery, Ala.), is the greatest thing we can do."

* * *

AN INTERRACIAL audience of 1,200 persons which taxed the Elizabethan Room of Hotel Essex House in Newark, greeted these admonitions with spirited cheers last week.

They came from the lips of former U. S. Judge J. Watries Waring whose decision in his court in Charleston, S. C., outlawing the old White Primary and whose dissent against a three-man court's ruling upholding school segregation, was upheld by the Supreme Court.

The occasion was a rally based on the theme, "Tension in Alabama," sponsored by 20 organizations as a climax to the city-wide observance of "National Deliverance Prayer Day."

THE RETIRED judge hailed the Supreme Court's decision on school desegregation as a "monumental milestone" in our history.

"That decision does not mean just schools," he emphasized—"it means that legal segregation is dead.

"Those who struggle against desegregation are on the minority side.

"We are knocking down old, outmoded, unjust laws."

* * *

TAKING NOTE of those who are fighting the Supreme Court's decision, Judge Waring said:

"Many of us are worried about the Communists and the subversives.

"But what about the subversives led by Eastland, Talmadge and others who come out and openly flout the Constitution and say they'll not obey the mandate of the court?

* * *

"WELL, WE'LL make them obey."

The audience gave him a resounding ovation.

Dr. E. Fanklin Frazier, head of the department of sociology at Howard University, gave a scholarly review of the historical backgrounds out of which came colonialism, imperialism and centuries, emphasizing that racial discrimination and the evils of economic and political power. He traced the fight for freedom slavery. by all races down through the ages and had their roots essen-

Dividing the Southern People

Courier Sat. 3-31-56

A recurrent theme in discussion of the difficulties in the Southern states about desegregation is the division which has been widened between colored and white because of the issue.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

From President Eisenhower down, spokesmen have deplored the extremism which they say so alienates leaders of both sides that any solution has been made much more difficult, if not impossible.

P. 12

There is in these statements a general tone of abhorrence to any instigation of violence and accordingly a sincere desire to soften feelings to make possible a moderate approach.

The inference to be drawn from these statements is that prior to the efforts of the NAACP and the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, the two racial groups were very close together and that the gap remaining between them was slight and about to close.

The fact of the matter is that the two racial groups were divided as much before the Supreme Court decision as they became afterward, if not more so.

The difference is that previously the white people had everything their own way, and, because they heard no great objections from the bulk of Negroes, they assumed that they were very close to them, and completely understood them.

It was thus a shocking and hurtful surprise when they found themselves confronted with Negroes who challenged their deepest convictions and institutions, and openly demanded that such be ended, not gradually but at once.

Many of the Southern whites who sought within their limitations to be friendly and helpful were amazed to encounter this opposition to hallowed institutions and sorrowfully declared that the two races had been divided by propaganda from outside their communities and states.

Actually, whatever division exists between white and colored in Dixie is due not to any alien-inspired efforts but to the very attitudes and institutions which a certain element of whites in the South is determined to defend.

The Montgomery bus boycott did not originate in the fertile minds of Negroes outside the South but in the insult and humiliation of Negro bus riders in Montgomery, against which they finally rebelled.

The boycott of other white businesses in the South (which is now causing growing concern) was not a sudden idea of a few malcontents in New York and Chicago but arose from the campaign of White Councils and their ilk to intimidate Negro business and professional persons favoring desegregation by withholding credit and deliveries.

The Negrophobic South is, in sum, suffering from cultural lag, incapable of understanding that as the times and environment have changed, so has the Negro changed; that while it was dreaming of the way it thought the Negro had been in the past, its traditional victim had also undergone a great revolution.

How long the two groups in the South will be divided, depends in largest measure on how soon the Negrophobes decide that the division must end, and make the necessary concessions.

It is as simple as that.

Writer Says Racial Crisis May Hurt Growth of South

News & Observer P. 1 Sun. 3-25-56

Raleigh, N. C.

By SYLVIA PORTER.

One of America's largest manufacturers of electrical equipment was set a few months ago to open a new plant in Georgia. When the engineers and technical employes concerned were informed of the planned transfer, a large percentage strongly objected. "They all have families," said my informant, "and while they liked the area, they didn't want to move into a mess about schools, social segregation, etc."

The company — which would close down if it couldn't count on the engineers and technicians it must recruit in the North—has decided not to open any more plants below the Mason-Dixon line . . .

A world-famous corporation in the business machine field found, after months of scouting, a top spot for a new plant in Kentucky. Then it ran headlong into segregation of social facilities.

The company abandoned its plans to move South, is now expanding in New York State . . .

A prosperous pencil company was deeply intrigued by a location in North Carolina. "But the tax situation in the area was getting out of hand because the community was spending so much money to provide separate but equal schools," my informant continued.

This company—well aware that an industry in a community is a major taxpayer — is staying North . . .

An electronics company actually built its new plant in its chosen Southern city. Then, the racial tensions began to mount.

It has sold its building. It isn't moving South.

When I was in the booming, industrializing city of Charlotte, N. C., last week, I glimpsed the first signs that the Southern businessman is awakening to the increasing danger that the violent conflict over integration could slow down the surge of industry to the South and thus be a major threat to his pocketbook.

As soon as I returned to New York City, I called on L. Clinton Hoch, a partner in Fantus Factory Locating Service, the largest plant locating consulting organization in the world, to check the facts.

"It's happening," he said flatly. The examples you have just read are real and are just illustrative of others. And Hoch revealed:

"At least 20 corporation moving projects" on which Fantus is currently working are "being seriously reconsidered in light of the situation in the South." That figure is not to be minimized: tens of millions of dollars and tens of thousands of jobs are involved.

Of course, the racial problem in the South always has been a consideration in corporation moves to the region.

Advantages.

But the problem has been more than offset by the South's great advantages — climate, ample labor, lower wage levels, special tax exemptions, other incentives, cheap power, etc. — and since World War II, the South has gone through a profound industrial revolution.

"Now it's a question whether the problem is serious enough to slow down the South's industrial growth," said Hoch. "Maybe it's only temporary, but if they don't find a solution, it'll be more than temporary."

All over the South, plans are being made on the premise that Northern industrial firms will continue to move and expand in the area. In every Southern city, projections are being made on the basis that this movement will vastly broaden markets, boost employment, raise incomes.

I am not venturing into the emotional, social, moral, political, legal aspects of the situation in the South today.

Here, I am submitting only a hard-headed, cold-blooded report in my field of economics. And this report that racial tensions already are affecting the expansion plans of corporations deeply wanted by the South should be read by hard-headed businessmen in a cold-blooded way.

Often through our history, a few stark dollars-and-cents figures have had more impact than millions of emotion-arousing words. This is one time when the pocketbook's power could be a power for good beyond measure.

(Editor's note: This is a second article by Sylvia Porter dealing with theme that the South's industrial growth may be hampered by the trouble growing from the desegregation of schools)

CHARLOTTE — A new fear is beginning to emerge among the intelligent, aggressively industry-minded citizens of this, the key and largest city of the Carolinas—a fear that as it spreads coud, in itself, be vital in helping to avert unmerciful tragedy in the South.

Put in simple, yet superlatively significant dollars-and-cents terms, it is:

That the increasingly violent conflict over integration of the Negro will, if it continues, seriously set back the plans of industries all over America to expand in and move to the Southeast.

If this happens—AND IT IS ALREADY STARTING TO HAPPEN —then:

The strong industrial upsurge upon which the development plans of Charlotte and every other leading city in the South are based—

Mrs. Hobby's Speech Read at TSU

Prejudice Called 'Stumbling Block

Courier P. 1 Sec. 2 Sat. 4-14-56

HOUSTON—"Prejudice against anything untried has been mankind's stumbling block since history began," said Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, president of the Houston Post and former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare in a speech read for her by Marguerite Johnson, Houston Post columnist, at the Women's Day program at Texas Southern University.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mrs. Hobby, who was the main speaker, was called to Washington for a conference at the last minute.

She told the students to "do your part to fight prejudice by greeting each new idea or project, person or opportunity with an open mind . . . Functional illiterate persons (those unfortunates who can neither read nor write) . . . are not equipped to check fiction against fact or to check propaganda against truth. They are . . . vulnerable to the forces which would undermine our system of Government. They offer a weakness within . . . our democracy."

Miss Johnson was introduced by Barbara Jordan, editor of the TSU yearbook, "The Tiger."

Ray D. Oliphant is president of the Women's League which each year brings an outstanding woman speaker for the program.

38a 1956

Cites Sins in 'Our Own Community'

Herald Tribune P.4

Donegan Asks Prayers for Integration

Mon. 3-19-56

By Charles Quinn P.4

Prayers during Holy Week for the end of segregation were urged yesterday by the Right Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York, in an unprecedented appeal to the clergy of his Diocese. New York,

In a pastoral letter he read at St. Bartholomew's Church, Park Ave. and 51st St., Bishop Donegan asked that during the week before Easter "we acknowledge before God our own sins of segregation in our own community and pray daily that God will reveal to us more clearly 'the Biblical truth that all men are made in the image of God, and are of eternal worth in His eyes, and that in Christ all men are one.'" N.Y.

Although Bishop Donegan was not available for comment late yesterday William J. Moll, director of public relations for the Bishop, said "our own sins of segregation in our own community" meant "any social injustices" that might occur. He said it was not the Bishop's policy to cite specific instances of segregation in a letter of this sort.

Mr. Moll, who described the letter as the "strongest formalized" statement the Bishop has made on racial problems, said it would be read in the 210 parihes and missions of the diocese next Sunday and prayers would be continued through the week.

The Bishop reaffirmed the church's opposition to racial discrimination but added the problem was one "in which all of us are involved, and, particularly, those who claim to be members of the Body of Christ ministering to thi world."

The Christian Church, by its preaching and teaching, has inspired all efforts in the area of race relationships, Bishop Donegan continued, although non-Christian groups often appear to lead "in pleading on behalf of causes which are really the concern of Christians."

Bishop Donegan denied racial problems were regional and indicated the sincerity of this country's "statement on the Rights of Man must of necessity by subject to suspicion when our actions belie our words. Our influence for good and our leadership in world affairs suffers to the exact degree to which we fail to practice what we preach."

He noted progress had been made "in this section of our country" toward improving social, economic and educational conditions "for many of our brethren" but asked whether this had been achieved by legal action more than by application and practice of faith.

"Do our parishes maintain a degree of mutual acceptance of human beings as persons, people for whom Christ died, absolutely irrespective of race, class or ethnic background?" the Bishop asked. ". . . there is only one answer acceptable to God and that is a general and humble acknowledge of our failure in our bearing personal witness to the love of Christ—that same Christ who charged us that we should love one another as He loved us."

SOUTH WILL LOSE RACE WAR, OHIO EDUCATOR SAYS

Butler County American Jul. 3-10-56

Hamilton, Ohio

Central State President Speaks To Cleveland City Forum

P.4

38a

GENERAL

Cleveland—"The southern states which refuse to drop the color bar in education cannot win their rebellion against the Constitution of the United States," Dr. Charles H. Wesley, president of Central State College, Wilberforce, O., told the Cleveland City Forum in an address here.

"If they defy the United States Supreme Court and win, our whole idea of a federal government is destroyed," he told his distinguished audience top city leaders.

"Equality under the law will win eventually, if not immediately. Someone may go to jail in Montgomery, Ala., someone may be killed, but equal rights for all Americans are guaranteed by the Constitution and will prevail.

"The battle lines are forming again at Tuscaloosa and Montgomery, Ala. just as surely as they did at Ft. Sumter in 1861, and the issues are just as clear cut. Then it was slavery; now it is segregation. Then it was nullification; now it is interposition.

The historian and educator who holds a number of honorary degrees as well as a Ph. D. degree from Harvard University counselled his audience, "We need men with educated hearts as well as educated heads. In this respect I believe our schools have failed to do their full job.

"If the segregationalists get away with this rebellion the way will be open to challenge the Government's authority by people who don't like to pay taxes or be drafted into the Army.

He observed, "There are many sincere people in the South who do not go along with the blatant segregationalists, but they are mostly silent just as the anti-slavery voices in the South were silent just before the Civil War.

"Events must determine whether Washington should interfere," he added, "the Federal Government must keep a close watch to see whether the situation can be adjusted through action by the states themselves.

"Those who believe in the Constitution should take a stand calmly, quietly without the beating of drums.

"The North," he opined, "cannot point the finger of derision at the South. Prejudice is not sectional. It is more subtle in the North—in admission to professional schools, housing, jobs. We have a lot to clean up here first."

Disintegration

Post-Herald P. 14

Dangerous steps toward disintegration of the Federal Union are being taken these days with a recklessness that ought to arouse deep concern in the heart of every American devoted to the preservation of the United States as a nation. The direction and the accelerating pace of these steps ought to sound, in the ears of the President of the United States above all, a call to action. For these steps, once taken, will be extremely difficult to retrace. Washington D. C.

The latest of these steps has been taken in North Carolina—commonly counted among the more advanced and enlightened of the Southern states. The North Carolina Advisory Committee on Education, following the lead of the Gray Commission in Virginia, has filed a report recommending that state constitutional changes be made authorizing financial grants "to be paid toward the education of any child assigned against the wishes of his parents to a school in which the races are mixed." Here is another transparent effort to evade a decision of the United States Supreme Court.

"I do not think the United States would come to an end," Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, "if we (the Supreme Court) lost our power to declare an Act of Congress void. I do think the Union would be imperiled if we could not make that declaration as to the laws of the several states." The truth of this seems almost self-evident. If every state Legislature could construe the Constitution in accordance with its own lights and without deference to any final constitutional authority, disintegration would be the inescapable consequence. Fallible as it may be, the Supreme Court is the final authority established by the Constitution to determine the constitutionality of legislative acts. Wash. 4-16-56

It cannot be doubted that there are men in the South as well as in the North who, for the sake of maintaining a Nation to which they are devoted, are prepared to submit to duly constituted Federal authority even when they disagree with it. A nation can endure only so long as it is guided by such men. But they are submerged in the South today by those who shout defiance of Federal authority while pretending that they are patriots. The South is not monolithic. It does not speak with one voice, however much its zealots may assert that it does. And the task of national leadership is to give the more sober voices a chance to be heard.

It is with this in view that we urge again that the President call to a conference in the White House distinguished Southerners, white and colored, who, whatever their differences of opinion about race relations, share a common devotion to the Nation and a common willingness to compound their differences for the national welfare. The beginning of statesmanship in this situation is to give status to those who recognize Federal authority and seek a solution within its terms, and to isolate those who would destroy the Union rather than submit to it. The President's own immense prestige and the respect in which he is held in every part of the country can be a wonderfully healing and unifying influence. But to be influential, he must assert leadership.

South May Suffer

Herald P. 21-A
Miami Fla.
Mar 3-26-56

Racial Tensions Scare Industry

By SYLVIA PORTER
Financial Analyst

One of America's largest manufacturers of electrical equipment was set a few months ago to open a new plant in Georgia. When the engineers and technical employes concerned were informed of the planned transfer, a large percentage strongly objected. "They all have families," said my informant, "and while they liked the area, they didn't want to move into a mess about schools, social segregation, etc."

MISS PORTER

The company—which would close down if it couldn't count on the engineers and technicians it must recruit in the North—has decided not to open any more plants below the Mason-Dixon line . . .

A world-famous corporation in the business machine field found, after months of scouting, a top spot for a new plant in Kentucky. Then it ran headlong into segregation of social facilities.

The company abandoned its plans to move South, is now expanding in New York State.

A prosperous pencil company was deeply intrigued by a location in North Carolina. "But the tax situation in the area was getting out of hand because the community was spending so much money to provide separate but equal schools," my informant continued.

This company — well aware that an industry in a community is a major taxpayer—is staying North.

An electronics company actually built its new plant in its chosen Southern city. Then, the racial tensions began to mount.

It has sold its building. It isn't moving South.

★ ★ ★

WHEN I WAS in the booming, industrializing city of Charlotte, N.C., last week, I glimpsed the first signs that the Southern businessman is awakening to the increasing danger that the violent conflict over integration could slow down the surge of industry to the South and thus be a major threat to his pocketbook.

As soon as I returned to New York City, I called on L. Clinton Hoch, a partner in Fantus Factory Locating Service, the largest plant locating consulting organization in the world, to check the facts.

"It's happening," he said flatly. The examples you have just read are real and are just illustrative of others. And Hoch revealed:

"At least 20 corporation moving projects" on which Fantus is currently working are "being seriously reconsidered in light of the situation in the South." That figure is not to be minimized: tens of millions of dollars and tens of thousands of jobs are involved.

Of course, the racial problem in the South always has been a consideration in corporation moves to the region.

But the problem has been more than offset by the South's great advantages—climate, ample labor, lower wage levels, special tax exemptions, other incentives, cheap power, etc.—and since World War II, the South has gone through a profound industrial revolution.

"Now it's a question whether the problem is serious enough to slow down the South's industrial growth," said Hoch. "Maybe it's only temporary, but if they don't find a solution, it'll be more than temporary."

All over the South, plans are being made on the premise that Northern industrial firms will continue to move and expand in the area. In every Southern city, projections are being made on the basis that this movement will vastly broaden markets, boost employment, raise incomes.

I am not venturing into the emotional, social, moral, political, legal aspects of the situation in the South today.

Here, I am submitting only a hard-headed, cold-blooded report in my field of economics. And this report that racial tensions already are affecting the expansion plans of corporations deeply wanted by the South should be read by hard-headed businessmen in a cold-blooded way.

Often through our history, a few stark dollars-and-cents figures have had more impact than millions of emotion-arousing words. This is one time when the pocketbook's power could be a power for good beyond measure.

State Rights Need An American Objective—

State Press Fri. 3-16-56

S. S. Taylor, Associate Editor

A hundred congressmen issued a statement denouncing Supreme Court desegregation, a daily paper reports. The group was said to have been composed of southerners, with the notable absence of Tennesseans. Inspiration for the procedure is said to have come from a meeting held by Senator Walter George of Georgia, the state of Marvin Griffin and Eugene Cook.

Little Rock, Ark.

There are 435 representatives in Washington and 96 senators. This makes a total of 531 law makers. To pass any measure, it will be seen that a majority of 218 representatives or 49 senators is needed. It will be seen therefore that the number of objectors shows the weakness in the nation.

It also shows the reason for the recent howl about state rights. It is not state rights which really disturb these gentlemen but the possibility of Negro rights. A small group of 5 to 8 states is against the extension of legal equality to the Negro. A larger group of 40 or more states is in favor of granting legal equality to the Negro. To defeat the will of the national majority and to oppose the announced and unanimous decision of the Supreme Court, the only resource left is to say, "No, no, the nation can't do this; the STATE is boss."

P. 4

Of course, the southern senators and representatives are a unit. They have always been noted for their solidarity. We could imitate this. All that had been done in the past to get a movement opposed is to call it favorable to Negroes. A number of white papers and a number of politicians have taken to labelling everything that advocates application of the democratic principles to Negroes as Communistic.

But this unified group is dwindling in size. Less than 6 years ago, there were 20 or more states practicing segregation. Now there are less than half that many. The states which have embraced integration show no tendency to turn back to segregation. The Supreme Court has gone on from one decision to another, constantly enlarging the explication and implication of its meaning. The judges of the lower courts have adhered to the precedent set by the judges of the Supreme Court.

Only by advocating the overthrow of the decree of the Supreme Court can those who stand for the legal oppression of an entire race have their way. And if you really want a manifestation of Communism, where can you find a better example? This is a constitutional government. The Supreme Court is the authorized supreme law-declaring agency of that government. To oppose its decree, except by constitutional means, is subversive.

The group of segregation senators and representatives are said not to have championed "interposition" by name. This, however, is the form opposition is taking in extreme segregation states. A short time ago, five Arkansas men were sent to Virginia to study the Virginia plan. They came back and stated they liked it. The essence of the plan is that the state say the Court ruling is unconstitutional, and disobey it till three-fourth of the states say, "Obey". Of course, three-fourths of the states would say it finally because that is the way three-fourth are going. But filibustering would take time in the senate, and there is no doubt that the segregationists would gain some time - - although they would make themselves look small to the rest of the world.

The Christian Science Monitor quotes the Charlotte, N. C. News as saying "Interposition has a fetching label and a history full of bluff and bluster, but it represents a futile inappropriate gesture . . . It is an error which has led to trouble in the past and promises nothing better in the future."

The attitude of these segregation legislators is at striking variance with the attitude of the party leadership. At the recent "Civil Rights Rally" in Washington, D. C., Paul M. Butler, Democratic national chairman, and Representative Hugh Scott, Pennsylvania Republican, vied with each other to claim party credit for Negro integration gains. The NAACP, credited with staging the rally, certainly was in distinguished company. State Rights need an American Objective.

Racial Bias Costly Item, Three Leaders Disclose

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. P. 4

Wed. 11-28-56

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Three national figures said Saturday night that religious and racial discrimination is forcing the United States to pay a heavy price in internal economic and social strength and in its relations with other countries.

Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell blamed such prejudices for adding to critical shortages in skilled labor for defense industry and in the armed forces.

Sharing the platform with Senator Herbert Lehman of New York and Mayor Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati, Mr. Mitchell said a Labor Department survey of 200 major firms doing scientific research showed that one out of three have major shortages of research scientists and engineers.

The Strategic Air Command, he asserted, competing with "the frantic demand" of private industry cannot retain a sufficient number of electronic technicians and aircraft mechanics.

FOUR DAY MEET

The three spoke at the Freedom Forum of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, who opened the League's four-day annual meeting here at the Hotel Mayflower. The Forum discussed "The Social and Economic Consequences of Discrimination." The League is a leading human relations and civil rights organization.

Speaking on international aspects of the problem, Senator Lehman declared that "the so-called backward peoples who were formerly considered inert elements in world affair, have now become active forced in the power structure of the world," and that the denial of equal rights in America "has become a topic of household debate in Tibet and Kenya" that damages the nation's prestige abroad.

Mayor Taft said prejudice is heightened when "fear is added to dislike" of "outside" groups by the "beneficiaries of the status quo."

"OUTSIDE" THREATS

"The ignorant and those uneducated in the Jewish-Christian inhertance always fight for a code of hatred," he said, and their efforts grow to the degree that "the success, numbers or competition" of the "outside" threatens them.

Predicting that shortages of skilled labor "will be intensified" with the further developments of the guided missiles and atomic energy progress, Mr. Mitchell blamed such shortages not only on discrimnatory hiring practices and job upgrading, but also on the failure to provde minorties with equal opportunites for education and training.

He declared that "covert quotas still exist in some colleges and schools. Some businesses drasticaly restrict the level to which persons of certain minority groups may rise .... Some private employment services still accept job orders that say 'gentiles only' 'white only' or 'no non-Caucasians.'"

"Scientists, capable of doing independent research," he added, "are not available in sufficient numbers. There are also particicular shortages of physicists and mathematicians, and well qualified chemists, biologists and geologists. In addition, we need more teachers, doctors, nurses, social workers, librarians and other kinds of professional workers."

THE SKILLS

Declaring that the nation cannot afford the "dreadful waste of racial and religious discrimination" the Labor Secretary said the United States needs "the skills, talents and abilities of every single American man and woman no matter what he looks like, where he lives, where he goes to church or where he comes from."

Citing a recent estimate by a public opinion analyst, Secretary Mitchell said discrimination in nemployment wastes $10 out of every $75 pay check and its annual cost to American business and industry is $30 billion a year.

He emphasized that in a world that "is one-third yellow, one-third brown, and one-third white," America cannot maintain its position of leadership "if any sizable portion of of people consider inferior the non-white two-thirds of the world's peoples....It is clear that as a nation, both domestically and internationally, we are injured by prejudice and intolerance."

Henry Edward Schultz, the League's national chairman, open-Forum, Philip M. Klutznick, president of B'nai B'rith, was chairman.

Secretaary Mitchell, Senator Lehman and Mayor Taft were presented the 1956-57 America's Democratic Legacy medallions Sunday for their "contributions to the enrichment of America's democratic legacy". The award ceremonies were nationally televised on the NBC network.

Robert Sarnoff, president of the National Broadcasting Company accepted on behalf of NBC, the League's 1956 TV award for "the most dramatic and forthright television program of the year bringing the message of democracy to the American people." The award went to "Tragedy in a Temporary Town," by Reginald Rose, which was rebroadcast as part of the award ceremonies.

MAINE EDITOR EYES SEGREGATION ISSUE

Commercial Appeal Memphis Tenn.

Says South Should Recognize Superior Negroes

Wed. 11-20-56

BOSTON, Nov. 19.—(UP)—A New England newspaperman told the New England Council that the South's greatest mistake in the segregation fight is that whites are failing to recognize even superior Negroes and are denying them the right to vote.

Albert A. Rowbotham, general manager of the Rumford and Wilton, Maine, Times, said the solution to the segregation problem must "come from the inside and not by compulsion from the outside."

Mr. Rowbotham, one of 19 New England newspapermen to tour Mississippi last month as guests of the state, spoke to the annual convention of the council here during the week end.

He said he found most people in the South to be moderates but declared unless well-educated Negroes are given full citizenship "the large numbers of Negroes who are being educated in the excellent schools now being built some day are going to get voting privileges.

"And when they do they are going to vote in a block which is going to end white supremacy or lead to more bloodshed than all the White Citizens Councils and the NAACP organizations realize."

$30 Billion Bias Cost U.S. Yearly, Sen. Mitchell Says

Defender Chicago Ill. Sat. 12-8-56

WASHINGTON — (INS) —Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell said Saturday night that racial and religious discrimination costs U. S. business 30 billion dollars a year.

Mitchell told the 43rd annual convention of B'nai B'rith Anti-Defamation league that "covert quotas" in colleges and prep schools are still denying many Americans the education that would develop their full technical and scientific skills.

He said this discrimination against race and religion is hurting national defense as well as U. S. industry, adding:

"It is public kowledge that the strategic air command is having difficulty in retaining a sufficient number of electronic technicians and aircraft mechanics.

REFLECTS DEMAND

"This shortage reflects the frantic demand on the part of private industry for skilled workers."

Mitchell, a Catholic, was one of three persons of different religious faiths awarded the league's "America's Democratic Legacy" medallions.

The other two were Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D) N. Y., a Jew, and Cincinnati Mayor Charles P. Taft, a Protestant.

President Eisenhower told the convention delegates in a message that "faith is the beginning of good works."

The Presidet said: "America has grown strong through the contributions of believing men and women who serve the public as they would serve their God and neighbors. Best wishes for the success of your work."

Formal presentation of the medallions took place at a nationally-televised ceremony on Sunday.

Mitchell said, "The dreadful waste of racial and religious discrimination" is a drawback to America's efforts to combat the spread of Communism.

He said: "With only six percent of the world's population, we are substantially outnumbered by the Communist nations. We must give every single individual the fullest possible opportunity for self development in order that we can grow in strength."

Lehman, who is retiring from the Senate, also addressed the convention on "The Social and Economic Consequences of Discrimination."

He said that ay denial of equal rights in the U. S. damages its prestige abroad.

Taft warned of religious or racial "hatred" declaring. "The ignorant and those uneducated in the Jewish-Christian inheritance always fight for a code of hatred."

'We can not stand still,' says Sidney Hollander Sr.

Afro-American P. 18

By J. D. WILLIAMS

"America stands for equality for everyone, and until we have equal opportunity for everyone we can not stand still."

If another man said these words a cynic might believe that they were pompous and devoid of real meaning.

But when they come from Sidney Hollander Sr., the words have the compelling ring of sincerity that leaves no doubt that here is a man who believes in what he says.

Now nearing his 76th birthday Mr. Hollander has devoted most of his adult life to an unceasing fight for equal rights for minority groups, particularly colored citizens.

His uncompromising stand has made his name synonymous with liberal causes in Baltimore, and has earned for him the reputation of a man who has never been afraid to speak his mind when others around him were silent.

* * *

FOR THE past half century, every good movement has had his support, and even now at the age where some men would look forward to a graceful retirement, Mr. Hollander believes that his job is still not complete, and there is more to be done.

In the Greenmount Ave. office of his drug manufacturing firm, which produces the cold remedy "Rem," Mr. Hollander is the picture of a successful senior business executive, handsome and polished.

But when he speaks of equal rights for all people his eyes take on the fire of a crusader and the years seem to slip away from his shoulders and he is a young man again, trading blows with the forces of intolerance and discrimination.

"I don't want any privilege for myself or my family that other people do not have," he says in explaining why he has fought so hard and so long.

"It makes me uneasy in my conscience to have opportunities that are denied to other people.

"I've done what I have, not because of any special interest in colored people as such, but because I have never felt comfortable knowing that other people were second class citizens."

* * *

THERE HAVE been many pleasant moments in Mr. Hollander's life, moments in which he has tasted victory.

Another of these moments will come on Wednesday, Nov. 28, when the ninth annual Sidney Hollander Foundation Award is presented to the Housing Authority of Baltimore for removing racial barriers in public housing projects.

The award will be made at noon in the community hall of Lafayette Courts, 201 N. Aisquith St. It carries with it an honorarium of $250.

The award is close to Mr. Hollander's heart because it was originated by his four children (Sidney Jr., Edward D., Mrs. Edith Furstenberg and Mrs. Emily Kunreuther) as a birthday present.

"They knew of my interest in equal rights and instead of giving me diamonds they gave me this award because they thought it would please me," he recalled.

Then he smiled and added almost shyly:

"And it was pleasing to me."

MR. HOLLANDER was born here in Baltimore, Dec. 29, 1881. He attended City College and the University of Maryland.

He was married in 1908 to Miss Clara Lauer. They celebrated their 48th wedding anniversary last June 3.

He knows Baltimore as only a native can know his own hometown and he has seen his city change.

"When you look back 10 or 15 years you can see the changes and they have been tremendous. When people come back they hardly recognize Baltimore. The theatres, the downtown stores and the FEPC have all made Baltimore a better city," he says.

Even with these things, the job is not finished by Mr. Hollander's standards.

"The big stumbling block now is the hotel situation but I think that this, too will change.

"In fact," he added, "I think we are going to live to see every overt form of segregation wiped out."

* * *

AND IF HIS dream comes true, then some of the credit must belong to him and the work he has done.

He has been president of the local Urban League and the Americans for Democratic action. He has been a member of the National Urban League board since 1944.

His memberships number such organizations as the American Council on Race Relations, the American Jewish Congress, the President's Committee on Contract Compliance and the National Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds.

Mr. Hollander is also president of the National Social Welfare Assembly.

He is one of the persons who worked for the passage of the Baltimore Fair Employment Ordinance, and in his business and personal associations he has often spoken out against segregation and discrimination.

A MEMBER of the Jewish faith, Mr. Hollander knows personally of the problems of minority groups and this, too, has inspired him to do what he has done.

Mr. Hollander doesn't like to dwell at length on his own achievements. He would rather look back over the years and see how bit by bit the walls of prejudice have crumbled and then look to the future with hope that they will disappear altogether.

A few days ago his work was recognized by the Philadelphia Fellowship when it cited him as a Southern pioneer in the field of human rights and described his life with these words:

"Faith and work in the service of his fellow men of every race, religion and nation."

* * *

AS HIS office grew dim with the arrival of night, Mr. Hollander restated his simple philosophy that has guided his life:

"I can't be satisfied when other people do not have the same opportunities that I have."

Then he added, almost wistfully:

"I hope I don't sound sappy, but that's the way I feel."

Rising from his desk, tall and erect, he looked out of the window with the smile of a happy man.

"Baltimore is a better town," he said, and his sincerity left little room for doubt.

SIDNEY HOLLANDER SR.

"I don't want any privilege for myself that other people do not have . . ."

38a 1956

This Ole House

BUS CONTROVERSY SPREADS

House Unit Suggests Return To D.C. School Segregation

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Restoration of racial segregation in Washington, D.C., schools was recommended by a House subcommittee Friday while in the South the controversy over segregation on city buses was spreading to additional cities.

The report of the subcommittee, dominated by Southerners, which conducted a controversial investigation of Washington school integration last September, said the public school system in the District of Columbia has been "seriously damaged."

Signed by Chairman James C. Davis (D-Ga), and Reps. John Bell Williams (D-Miss), Woodrow W. Jones (D-NC) and Noel T. Broyhill (R-Va), the report said the evidence at the investigation "taken as a whole, points to a definite impairment of educational opportunities for members of both Negro and white races, as a result of integration, with little prospect of remedy in the future."

When integration of Washington schools was started in September 1954 President Eisenhower expressed hope it would become a model for the nation. But it is not a model, the majority report said, and "cannot be copied by those who seek an orderly and successful school operation."

The report contended that white and Negro students were mixed too abruptly and said integration has brought higher costs and "an appalling increase in disciplinary, sex and educational problems."

Two Northern Republican members of the subcommittee, Reps. Miller of Nebraska and Hyde of Maryland, rejected the recommendation to return to segregated schools as unconstitutional.

But in a joint statement they said "the facts brought to light by this invesigation seem to indicate that Negro leaders, and those actively interested in the advancement of the Negro people, have much work to do among the Negro people, and that all the difficulties atended with integration are not caused by the seemingly uncompromising attitude of the white people."

Violence over the race issue was reported in Camden, S. C. Police protection was promised a high school band director, Guy Hutchins, who said he was beaten by hooded men.

Hutchins, 52, said the attackers accused him of making a pro-integration speech. He denied it.

The Camden Hospital said a 65-year-old man was treated about a week ago for gunshot wounds he said hooded men inflicted after criticizing his personal conduct. Police would not disclose his name.

In Tallahassee, Fla., the Rev. W. W. Woods, a Negro minister, said a white woman and her teenage son were taken off a city bus by the driver after they occupied a seat behind the minister and his wife.

Woods said he and his wife took a front seat on a bus serving the all-White Florida State University and "a white woman and her boy got on the bus and took a seat behind us."

The driver got off and talked with a policeman and another man and then "said to us, 'I can't leave until you get in your rightful place.' We didn't say anything and he got off and talked to the policeman again," the minister said

Finally the driver got back on and told the "white woman, 'You get off the bus. We've got a man who'll take you,'" Woods said. The woman and her son got off and went across the street.

Bus company officials were not available for comment on the report and Police Capt. Wayne Todd said he had not heard of the incident.

An integrated bus riding demonstration by Negroes was canceled in Tallahassee Thursday. Lawsuits over validity of state and city bus segregation laws were filed but no action is expected before Monday

Meanwhile, Baton Rouge, La. and Tampa, Fla., appeared to be the next targets of efforts by Negroes to end racial separation on city transit systems.

In Baton Rouge, the Rev. T. J. Jemison, Negro Baptist minister, said the Baton Rouge Christian Movement soon will make an effort to test the city law requiring segregated seating on buses.

The announcement came after Negro leaders met with officials of the Baton Rouge Bus Co. and were told they must comply with city and state laws. City Atty. Gordo Kean has said the city plans to continue enforcing the city bus segregation ordinance.

Tampa Mayor Nick Nuccio said he is instructing the city's legal staff to "be prepared" for attempts to desegregate buses there.

The arrest of 22 Negroes headed Birmingham, Ala., bus segregation laws for a court test and Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh promised a court battle every step of the way. "We are determined to stay with it (the segregation fight) until it ends," he said. "And we hope it will end peacefully. We cannot retreat."

GENERAL

Fisk Dean Cautions Races to Cooperate Or Face Destruction

The dean of Fisk University's chapel warned a Harlem congregation yesterday that the light and dark-skinned peoples of the world must advance together. Otherwise, he said, "they will both go down into pitiful destruction."

The Rev. Dr. William Lloyd Imes said that he was sorry to see the revival of the world's dark peoples occasionally taking "violent forms." But he went on to say that "sometimes I think the West has deserved it, because it has knocked down and dragged out the people of darker skins for so long." The clergyman is Visiting Dean of the Nashville school for the current academic year.

Dr. Imes preached at the Holy Cross Pro-Cathedral of the African Orthodox Church, 122 West 129th Street.

He said the world must never forget that, although Europe has been the world's "proud mistress" for the last few centuries, the torch of learning had been passed to her originally from the dark-skinned peoples of North Africa.

"Prime Minister Nehru's recent visit to this country was more than a mere courtesy call," Dr. Imes said. "He came as a representative of the world's darker people, perhaps with the hope that he could shake some sense into Western heads."

The clergyman said he could understand the violent feelings of the Arabs in the Middle East when the West had appropriated all their oil for its own uses without regard for the well-being of the natives.

The dean said the "best" people are not determined by their color, their address, their wealth, or their ancestry. "The best people are those who labor for God," he said.

PEACEFUL RESISTANCE TO SEGREGATION SEEN AS HUGE BLOW TO BIAS

Most Americans Seen In Rally To Integration

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 12-13-56

NEW YORK — (INS) — Chester Bowles, former U. S. Ambassador to India, has predicted the majority of Americans will "ultimately" rally to end racial discrimination in the United States.

Bowles said the movement to "remove the ugly stain of racial discrimination" is gaining strength because of the Negro's use of peaceful resistance to segregation. He added:

"Evn'ally the day will come, and I do not believe it is now far distance, when American law will protect all Americans against discrimination on the basis of race, creed, or color and we may live with each other in understanding and peace."

In a speech prepared for delivery at the United Negro College Fund symposium in Nw York's Hunter college, Bowles declared that discrimination in the U. S. based on color is highly criticized in Asia and Africa.

"However, he ponted out, the "peaceful movement" by the 50,000 Negroes in Montgomry, Ala. to liminate segregation on the city bus lines "is beginning to ease this resentment and offer us a new opportunity."

The former envoy and governor of Connecticut said the tactics of "dynamic but peaceful resistance to Communism" now followed by the people of Budapest and the nonviolent anti-discrimination movement in Montgomery both symbolize the "deep seated determination of individuals" to achieve a life of dignity.

Praising the Rev Dr. Martin Luther King, who is leading the Montgomery Negro boycott against segregation on buses, and likening him to Mohandas K. Gandi, Bowles said:

"No group in America has struck a more vigorous or more effective blow against the Communist ideology during these past few years than Martin Luther King and his Montgomery associates." May their accomplishments in behalf of the dignity of man be increasingly understood and applauded throughout the world.'

Dr. King, who also took part in the symposium, "the Negro southerner speaks," declared that the Negro in the South has taken a new look at himself and is "no longer cowed by threats and intimidations.'

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, a member of the Atlanta Board of Education who was the first Negro elected to public office in the city since reconstruction, stressed that the Negro has made all his gains in the U. S. within the framework of the law.

South Feels Only Dixie Grasps Its Way of Life

Post + Times Herald
Sun. 12-16-56
Washington, D.C.

Subordination Of Negro Held Only Method for Bi-Racial Peace

By Bem Price

CHARLESTON, S. C., Dec. 15 (AP)—The South, from Virginia to Texas, focuses much of its thinking on what has come to be called "the Southern way of life."

38a

This sometimes puzzles the rest of the Nation. Boiled down, it appears to amount to this:

The white man in the South who governs the area, owns its biggest farms, runs its biggest banks and businesses, is torn between his often very genuine affection for the Negro as an individual and his belief that Negroes, as a race, should "keep their place."

In effect, this often amounts to political, economic and social subordination for the Negro. The white man explains he believes this is the only way the two races can live together harmoniously.

The Southern white man is convinced that no one outside the South really understands—or can understand—his position.

State Senator's Views

Ask State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County (86 per cent Negro) in southern Alabama to explain his conception of the Southern way of life and he says a person would have to live in the South and learn the Negro for at least a year to understand.

Is the Negro innately inferior to the white man?

"Yes," says Engelhardt.

If you educate the Negro, what are you educating him for?

"Let him have his own society," he replied. "We ought to raise him morally and economically."

Can the South maintain separate white and Negro cultures of persons of equal education without conflict?

"The vast majority of Southerners think so. There might be some conflict, but the white folks would be working hard and trying to head off that conflict."

Businessman Speaks

Ask Harold A. Petit, vice president and regional manager for the South Carolina Electric & Gas Co., at Charleston, why he stands for the Southern way of life.

"The Negro is irresponsible in every degree," he will say. "I think it is a basic trait, although other conditions—environment, economics and education—contribute to his so-called lethargy."

Asked whether the Southern way of life is not in some measure based on fear, Petit answered:

"Yes. The basic fear in mongrelization of the races. I just can't visualize a South which is predominantly mulatto."

In defending their way of life, Southerners have re-developed the doctrine of states' rights to protect white supremacy. It holds that the internal affairs of a state, including segregation and voting, should be left to the state and not be subject to Federal interference of any sort.

In no other region since the Civil War have state governments taken such steps to circumvent a high court ruling as did the Southern states in the aftermath of the May 17, 1954, Supreme Court decision holding segregation in public schools unconstitutional.

Editor's Stand

With this attitude on states' rights goes another attitude, one which permits a newspaper editor to say for publication:

"Democracy cannot and will not work indefinitely. Sooner or later in a democracy special interest groups gain control and you have oligarchy. When this occurs there is economic chaos. A strong man—a dictator—emerges, and you start all over again."

This firm belief, that not all persons are necessarily qualified to govern themselves, permits Thomas Waring, editor of the Charleston News and Courier, to say of himself and his newspaper:

"We have always taken a dim view of small 'd' democracy. We stand by an older form of government, small 'r' republicanism" (under which the vote is restricted to those deemed fit to use it).

Generally speaking, these views, not uncommon in the South underlie the widespread reluctance in the Deep South to give the Negro the vote unfettered by literacy tests, poll taxes and other restrictions.

RIGID RACE VIEWS OF SOUTH SCORED

New York Times 12-1-56

Georgian Says Diminishing of Middle Ground Can Lead to Disaster'

Sat. 12-1-56

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30—The rapid disappearance of the middle ground as an approach to the race question was cited today as the South's most crucial problem by Morris B. Abram, of Atlanta.

"Much of the fire of the racial extremists is directed at the annihilation of the temperate point of view," Mr. Abram told the tenth annual conference of the National Association of Intergroup Officials.

"There is a consistent and insistent attempt to force all white Southerners into a rigid pattern of defiance of the courts and to a position of rigidity on every aspect of the race question," he declared.

Such an "inflexible approach can lead only to disaster," Mr. Abram warned. Nevertheless, he said, reasonable middle-ground leadership is becoming more and more silent under the "enormous pressures and the field is being pre-empted by the extremists."

As a result, he continued, the issue is becoming not integration versus segregation, but "force and defiance versus law and order and reason."

Mr. Abram, who served on the United States prosecution staff at the trials of Nazi war criminals in Germany, spoke in Congress Hall at the closing session of the three-day conference.

The problems of American minority citizens, civil rights and intergroup relations were considered during the meeting by some 350 delegates from all sections of the country. "Equality America's Moral Imperative' was the theme of the conference

Mr. Abram said he doubted that the courts, the legislatures, the school boards and the municipal councils could of themselves restore the middle-group approach to the racial problem in the South.

When informal institutions, such as civic vlubs, and church organizations "are silent and fail to givel eadership," he said, the formal institutions of power "are crippled and their decisions become distorted."

In urging that the informal institutions of the South be encouraged to seize and exercise their responsibility and capacity to lead, Mr. Abram said President Eisenhower could provide moral guidance along democratic lines.

"In these times the President of the United States, who is held in deep affection by the most responsible leaders of Southern society, could exert a powerful influence against the drift and chaos," he said.

Civil Rights Meeting Set For Federal Hall Stirs Fire From South

Advertiser 3/1
Montgomery, Ala.
Sun. 3-4-56

Congressmen Send Protest To President

WASHINGTON, March 3 (AP) — The General Services Administration, rejecting protests of 30 Southern congressmen, ruled today a government auditorium here could be used for a civil rights meeting beginning tomorrow.

However, the 30 Southerners, all Democrats, appealed to President Eisenhower to forbid use of the interdepartmental auditorium for a three-day national assembly on civil rights. They called the meeting "political in nature."

ANSWER LATER

The White House took no immediate position on the controversy but promised the Southerners an answer "shortly." Murray Snyder, White House press secretary said the answer would not be today.

The GSA is the government housekeeping agency with supervision over some buildings.

Rep. John Williams (D-Miss), one of the protesting congressmen, released a letter from Charles K. Ford, acting GSA regional director, which said officials were advised the meeting was not political but rather "one to discuss nonpartisan social problems."

GROUNDS QUESTIONED

It added that the Labor Department, in whose building the auditorium is located, decided use of the auditorium for the meeting was proper, "not in violation of our regulations" and that there were no grounds for canceling the meeting.

The assembly is sponsored by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the chairman of which is Roy Wilkins, head of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. The protesting Congress members said rules forbid use of a federal auditorium for a sponsored meeting.

They described the planned meeting as "a mass lobby meeting which is avowedly political in nature."

After receiving Ford's letter, Williams fired back a telegram saying that "it is quite evident that your agency is surrendering itself to the political pressures of the NAACP and its fellow traveling affiliates."

21 INDUCTED

Twenty-one students and teachers who became charter members of the seventh national scholastic society to be established on the Morgan campus heard Dr. Swisher say:

"The deep South is psychotic and sick and will not get over this condition soon."

The authority on American Constitutional law said he expects segregation to disappear from the border states, "from Maryland to Missouri in the next 20 years," but he had no such high hopes for the deep South.

He admitted, however, that segregation as a public policy is on the way out, "and has been on the way out since the 1930's in the face of consistent opinions from the Supreme Court."

Deep South Sick, Scientist Tells Students

Baltimore Sun 3/5/56

BALTIMORE — "Most white and colored people are to be congratulated for the manner in which they are conducting themselves in the midst of the disruptions and soreheadness concerning desegregating the public schools."

This opinion was expressed by Dr. Carl B. Swisher, chairman of the political science department at the Johns Hopkins university, as he spoke last Friday at Morgan State college during installation of the college's chapter of Pi Gamma Mu, national social science honor society.

NEGROES FLEE SOUTH WHILE ADLAI PREACHES "MODERATION"

Black Dispatch

While Adlai Stevenson sits in his ivory tower and talks about "moderation," around ten thousand displaced black folk are fleeing monthly from the terror-stricken sections of Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia, for which Adai mourns.

Oklahoma City, Okla.

Negroes are fleeing from their homes, firesides, and the tender recollections of their childhood, because the marble-hearted people who live in that section are determined when integration comes there will not be more black folk in Dixie than white. This is the manner in which white people have arbitrarily decided the question of democracy will be equated.

Thurs 3-1-56

"We'll terrorize and drive them out" is the final decision reached by those who consider themselves socially superior. "If the rule of the majority is to prevail, we'll take our guns, clubs and hemp rope and scare enough blacks away from the graves of their parents so that we will be numerically in the majority when we go to the polls."

Understand now, this is not the low country in Western Europe following Hitler's putsch. This is what is going on Dixie fashion, while Stevenson sheds crocodile tears about Southern traditions and the preservation of the un-American social patterns of segregation and jim crow.

A subscriber to the Tulsa Tribune has just written a letter in which he says:

> "I get sick and tired of such silly ideas as 'Let's move the Negro from places where they outnumber the whites, to places where conditions are the reverse.'"

The fellow, irrespective of his color, who argues "move 'em," unquestionably has no concept of the meaning and significance of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. He is still impressed with the idea that white people have rights not possessed by Negroes, and that majority rule must be preserved by white people, not by the ballot but by force and violence. This is one opportunity when white people may now look at themsedves, naked and bare, and realize that not only Communists believe in force and violence, but the natives of that section of the United States who voluntarily chose slavery as a domestic institution, also seek to retain their traditional mores, with terrorism, murder and slaughter, in defiance of the federal charter.

Not only Stevenson believes in "moderation," but apparently President Eisenhower believes in the same thing so far as Negroes' rights are concerned. Despite the fact Mississippians and Georgians are boldly shooting innocent Negroes down in the street and cold bloodedly denying them the right to vote, President Eisenhower has not even mentioned moving federal troops into that area. Our honest opinion is, right at this moment, if Harry Truman were in the White House, he'd stop playing golf long enough to make every living soul in Alabama and Mississippi respect the Constitution of the United States. Federal troops were moved into the South during the Whiskey Rebellion. Is it more important to protect federal taxes than to protect human life? Here is a wide open opportunity to have the South to understand and know a black man's life is just as precious as that of a white citizen, which the President seems to be entirely overlooking.

Terrorism and murder are displacing thousands of black families from the canebrakes of Louisiana and the cottor fields of Mississippi, in order that the white man can have the type of democracy in which he believes. Equal rights do not mean the right to run for a public office if the black man is in the majority. In Mississippi, the right to vote is a prerequisite to voting, and yet no black man can vote in the county where Emmett Till was savagely murdered. At this writing candidate Harriman seems to be the only man who halfway talks like Harry Truman. A lot of folk said that Vice President Nixon was playing politics when he referred to Earl Warren as a "Republican" chief justice. We wonder what they characterize as the attitude of the president of the United States, and the other candidates for that high office, who seem a bit chary in saying anything about the seditious and disloyal conduct of mobbists and murderers who are running the state government today in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi.

If Adlai Stevenson would borrow our eyeglasses, as he gazes at the American scene, we believe he would see the importance in advising Southerners to be more "moderate" in their treatment of the black citizen's fundamental rights. The fellow who shouts "Move 'em," today has probably not read the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, or he would understand and know that Negroes have just as much right as white people to remain on their property, vote, hold office and go to school as any white person in that section. This "Move 'em" idea is the law of the Medes and the Persians.

Coming in Sunday News—

The Negro in the North

Heavily criticized for racial segregation in the South, Southerners often assert the Negro, by and large, doesn't escape discrimination just because he crosses the Mason-Dixon Line.

The life of the Negro today in such metropolitan centers as New York, Chicago, Detroit and Los Angeles still is restricted by many racial barriers, Southerners point out, even though schools and public housing projects are integrated.

And, the argument goes, some of the most notable incidents of mass racial violence have occurred not in the South, but in the North.

HOW MUCH TRUTH is there in these assertions? What do Northerners say about the problem? How does the Negro actually fare in the big Northern cities to which he is going in ever-increasing numbers? What restrictions does he experience?

Bem Price, an AP newfeatures writer who has specialized in the coverage of the segregation story since the Supreme Court's history-making dcision in 1954, has just completed a personal tour of Northern centers where the issue is said to be most acute.

He tells what he found in a special report coming up in this Sunday's Birmingham News.

HAVING STUDIED the effects of the Supreme Court ruling first-hand in the South, including moves by Citizens Councils to thwart it and steps taken by other groups to implement it, Price is well equipped to assess the position of the Negro in the North and to put into perspective the accusations and counter accusations involving his status.

Watch for this informative account in . . .

The Birmingham News

Councils continue to mushroom—

Alabama not alone in tradition fight

BY BEM PRICE, Associated Press writer

Here in the self-styled "Heart of Dixie," the time of racial crisis is now.

In the past three months sub-surface racial tensions repeatedly have broken through the thin crust of apparent peace.

Alabama, of course, is not alone in battle against any shift in the South's racial patterns.

There have been riots at the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa over the admission of a Negro woman.

In Montgomery, a Negro boycott of the public transportation system is now in its 14th week, through 99 of the movement's leaders were indicted under an old labor law.

Councils grow

THE NUMBER of strongly pro-segregation Citizens Councils has grown from about 40 to more than 60 in Alabama in the last eight weeks.

The Alabama Legislature now has pending before it a resolution to seek federal funds to transplant Negroes from the state to places outside the region where they are "needed or wanted."

This resolution is indicative of the developing pressures in the Legislature for action against those who would disturb the traditional segregation laws and customs.

The Legislature already has approved a resolution declaring ing the U. S. Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, to be "null, void and of no effect."

In that now historic decision the Supreme Court held that segregation in public schools on the rasis of race was unconstitutional.

Voices of moderation few

THE VOICES of moderation in Alabama have been few. Gov. James E. Folsom called the nullification resolution "hogwash." He also has appealed for an interracial committee to seek means of lessening racial tensions.

Another Alabama House resolution asked for an investigation to determine whether the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, is Communist controlled.

The NAACP has been the guiding hand behind the fight against segregation throughout the South.

The running fight to maintain racial barriers was not confined to Alabama during the past week.

Mississippi protests

FOR EXAMPLE, in neighboring Mississippi last week the state Legislature adopted an "interposition" resolution protesting the school ruling.

The Mississippi legislators also called on Congress to submit a constitutional amendment to the 48 states, declaring that the states alone had the right to regulate public schools.

In addition, the Mississippi House set up a $5000 library fund to acquire books on the races of mankind. The floor debate specified they should be books indicating the white man's superiority over the Negro.

Before this measure was sent to the Senate, however, Rep. Walter Phillips from Hancock County, warned that such a measure would border on "thought control." He said Hitler had advocated a master race "and paid the consequences."

Virginia is another state which has protested the court decision in a legislative resolution. Georgia has declared it to be "null, void and of no effect."

Asks NAACP ban

IN LOUISIANA the state brought action to dissolve the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People under an old anti-Ku Klux Klan law.

The suit, filed by Atty. General Fed S. LeBlanc, asked the state court's also to ban NAACP meetings.

The law under which the suit was filed requires every type of organization to file annual membership lists with the secretary of state. This, the state charged, the NAACP has failed to do for the past three years.

LeBlanc's action came after the NAACP twice had shaken Louisiana in a matter of days. Actions brought by the NAACP ended with a Federal Court ruling knocking out the state's 1954 laws designed to get around the U. S. Supreme Court ban on school segregation.

The NAACP followed this decision with a suit last Wednesday asking for integration in New Orleans public schools.

Two Alabama cases

THE TWO ALABAMA CASES which have attracted world-wide attention, of course, are those of Autherine J. Lucy, a 26-year-old Negro secretary and ex-school teacher, and the Montgomery bus boycott.

For 29 months Miss Lucy sought the right to enroll at the University of Alabama through the federal courts. She won and became the first Negro ever admitted to the 125-year-old school.

It was a short-lived victory. Riots broke out on the school's campus. The board of trustees suspended the Negro woman. She sought a contempt of court motion against 13 trustees and University officials. Federal Dist. Judge H. Hobart Grooms rejected the contempt motion, but ordered Miss Lucy returned to school by Monday.

Lucy expelled

WITHIN HOURS after that court action, the trustees met again in secret session and ordered Miss Lucy "permanently expelled" on disciplinary grounds.

The tensions developed over the Lucy case were indicated by the fact that three University officials and an Alabama Circuit Court judge testified in federal court she might be killed if she tried to return to the campus.

Further complicating the Lucy case was a damage suit by three construction workers and a truck driver for $4 million.

The four civil damage suits, filed in a State Circuit Court Friday, stemmed directly from charges made by Miss Lucy and her attorneys in the federal court action which were dropped on the day of the hearing, last Wednesday.

Montgomery boycott

THE MONTGOMERY BOYCOTT began almost immediately after the arrest Dec. 1 of a Negro woman for refusing to take a seat in the section of a bus reserved for Negroes upon orders of a bus driver.

Car pools were organized with donations from church funds. Negro taxi drivers set up regular routes. Many Negroes walked to work.

The transportation company's busines sfell off an estimated 60 per cent. Bus fares were hiked from 10 cents to 15 cents to meet the increasing deficit.

FINALLY, a Grand Jury in Montgomery, a town of 125,000 with a Negro population of 46,000, indicted 99 boycot leaders for violation of a 1921 law making it illegal for two or more people to conspire to hinder a business operation. Originally, the law was adopted as the result of a labor union dispute. Hearings on these boycott cases will be held March 19.

38a 1956

GENERAL

Don't Push Us Too Hard, Southerner Tells NAACP

Defender Sat. 3-10-56 Chicago, Ill. P. 10

NEW YORK — (INS) — Nobel Prize winning novelist William Faulkner warned "forces outside the South" Thursday to "go slow" in their efforts to force compulsory integration upon southerners.

In a "letter to the North," published in the current issue of Life magazine, the Mississippi-born novelist made it emphatic that he is against segregation.

But he advised the NAACP and "all the organizations who would compel immediate and unconditional integration":

"Go slow now. Stop now for a time, a moment. You have the power now; you can afford to withhold for a moment the use of it as a force."

Faulkner pointed out that he took a stand from the beginning that he was against the forces in his native South which would keep the Negro segregated and still maintains this view.

But he added that he is firmly against compulsory integration because of "principle. . . and because I don't think compulsion will work."

The 58-year-old author said the northerner and the liberal "does not know the South." Faulkner continued:

"He can't know it from his distance. He assumes that he is dealing with a simple legal theory and a simple moral idea. He is not. He is dealing with a fact; the fact of an emotional condition of such fierce unanimity as to scorn the fact that it is a minority and which will go to any length and against any odds at this moment to justify and, if necessary, defend that condition and its right to it."

Senators Map Dixie's Stand On Race Issue

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Tues. 3-8-56

WASHINGTON, March 8 (AP)—A bloc of Southern senators completed action today on a policy statement dealing with the South's fight against integration.

An announcement concerning this policy is expected to be made Monday. N.Y. 3-9-56

Sen. George (D-Ga), chairman of the group, said the language of a committee report was "considerably changed" during the several hours the group worked on a final draft today.

The word "interposition," he told a reporter, does not appear in the manifesto, or policy declaration.

POWER TO REJECT

Those who support this theory contend the states have the power to reject the Supreme Court's decision calling for de-segregation in the public schools.

Referring to the language changes, George said some states have acted and others have not since the Supreme Court handed down its decision.

"We didn't want to tell the states what to do," he explained.

George said the manifesto will be signed by between 18 and 20 senators and probably by many house members.

Sen. Russell (D-Ga), chairman of a committee named to formulate a report, said "considerable revising" was done because of different views concerning the language in the report.

Russell served with Sen. Ervin (D-NC) and Stennis (D-Miss) on a committee to survey the legislative field and report back on attempts being made to avoid integration.

Norman Thomas Says U. S. Handles Race Issue Poorly

Call-Leader Kansas City, Mo. Fri. 3-9-56

ST. LOUIS.— (INS)— Norman Thomas, a six-time Socialist candidate for president, lashed out in St. Louis last week at the way the United States is handling its racial relations.

He charged that such incidents like the University of Alabama—Autherine Lucy case are defeats for America as bad as the loss of a battle.

Thomas, who addressed a dinner meeting of the Ambassadors club, observed:

"The fact that one woman is not safe going to college, despite our constitutional safe-guards, is enormously hurtful to us. White supremacy is a dangerous doctrine in a world where white people are in the minority."

He termed "regrettable" the fact that President Eisenhower has not followed up his own suggestion for a bi-partisan commission to inquire into voting in the South.

And Thomas said Adlai Stevenson, Democratic presidential aspirant, also made a good suggestion when he proposed that the chief executive call the southern governors to a White House conference. He added:

"But since this is an election year, I am afraid neither suggestion will be put into effect."

Stevenson Fears Civil War

Black Dispatch P. 6

They say it is the woman of the species who can stand on the brink of disaster and say, "I told you so." Anent that forecast, we rise to point out that Thomas L. Stokes, famed Washington commentator, last week, in his syndicated column, avers the Democratic party is disintegrating from the impact of the civil rights issue.

This was our prediction six months ago. Adlai Stevenson, the man whom the Democrats at this moment consider their outstanding candidate for the presidency, stands paralyzed before the issue, while Kefauver and Harriman stutter in trying to make an evasive statement that will be a little more subtle than Stevenson. Thurs. 3-8-56

When questioned down in California recently about the Autherine Lucy turmoil in Tuscaloosa, and whether he would call the troops to halt the incipient civil war down in Alabama, Stevenson averred:

> "I think that would be a great mistake. That is exactly what brought about the difficult Civil War, and division of the Union." Okla. City, Okla.

We are sure our good friend Adlai was completely confused in his answer to the Californians, for he imposes the idea that the North attacked the South during the civil war. Our information turns the story just the other way around. When General Beauregard started his two-day assault upon Fort Sumpter from his rendezvous in an adjoining fort, the South was attacking the central government, and not the federal government attacking the state structure. The trembling Mr. Stevenson needs to get his history straightened out before he talks any more to the American people.

Calhoun, however, and his cohorts in sedition, were talking about the same thing as Eastland when he talks about "Interposition." Lincoln thought like Daniel Webster that the Constitution is an instrument of government for a nation, and formulated by the people and not by the several states, and that the United States government is answerable to the people, and not to the states. Looks as though Adlai Stevenson wants to rely upon the John C. Calhoun theory of government, which the nation resolved in a sea of blood almost 100 years ago.

Unless Democratic candidates for the presidency can think of some other course of direct action to compel the states to observe national law, we suggest there is no need for the people to change horses in the middle of the stream. While we do not give Eisenhower credit for the anti-segregation ruling, we do know that the executive power is, and will be in his hands if he is re-elected in November. There is also the fact that he cannot succeed himself, and therefore would be beyond the wrath of Southerners, if next year he should demand the strict observance of law. It may be that in this national crisis, Eisenhower is the best bet to carry out a program of implementation, for if Stevenson were elected he would always have before him the idea of another term, and all of his acts, by reason of this coveted goal, would be colored with a political tinge.

Eisenhower has to his credit implementation of a program of desegregation in the District of Columbia, and he may, during his last term in office seek to make an enduring record in the democratic ideal. It could well be his ambition, immediately following a November triumph, to leave to posterity a reputation similar to Lincoln. Knowing this is his last term, he will not be provoked by the thoughts that would dominate Stevenson every time reaction showed up at the White House.

It is possible that, as Stokes suggests, this issue of integration may cause the Democratic party to disintegrate right before our eyes. A lot of sensible folk down in Dixie realize if integration actually comes, there are a world of current issues that will become instantly dead and that we will need a new party to carry forward the new nation, dedicated to indivisibility and equality.

The Black Dispatch suggests this is the most important idea and determination of Negro leadership should be to forget party lines just now and try, as best we can, to place the Negro vote in November behind the candidate who is most pledged to insist upon the states following the letter and the spirit of the law, with reference to integration.

Public Relations Men Told They Can Help Desegregation

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C.
F.M. 4-6-56
P. 27

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

Public relations men were told yesterday that they could help the South toward school desegregation by establishing "two-way communications" between Negroes and whites.

A. D. Albright of the University of Kentucky College of Education, said:

"The issue has no one solution. Each community must work it out for itself. There is now a serious block to working out a harmonious solution—the lack of two-way communication.

"Neither side understands the views of the other. Public relations has the job of establishing two-way communications. And if we are really concerned in getting a basic understanding ,it can be done most efefctively in small groups. That is a public relations job — getting the small groups together."

Albright participated in a panel discussion at the 12th annual National Conference of the American Public Relations Association.

He warned against holding a mass meeting on desegregation in the South "unless you want to tear things up." He advised against taking a vote at meetings, "because that aligns the ayes and the nays across the aisle."

Miss Irene Osborne of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta, another panel member, said school boards should work out desegreation plans privately, then announce them with conviction and with proper timing.

In opening the panel discussion, Robert L. Gray, of the Home Builders Association, noted: "The panel accepts the reality of the Supreme Court decision and will not discuss the merits. That would be like trying to squeeze toothpaste back into the tube."

Fourteen Silver Anvil awards for top public relations programs will be presented in a closing session tonight. Included will be the cities of Hagerstown, Md., and Wesel, Germany, for their "sister city" program; the Handwriting Foundation, Washington, D. C.; Capital Airlines, Inc., with headquarters here, and the U. S. Department of the Army.

Thirty-three certificates for outstanding programs will be awarded. Among the winners are the Hecht Co., Woodward & Lothrop, Emergency Hospital, the Equal Job Opportunity Conference, U. S. Civil Service Commission, National Association of Food Chains, National Association of Home Builders and National Lumber Manufacturers Association, all of Washington.

Other Silver Anvil awards will go to the Radio C[illegible]tion of America, General Mills, Inc., Shell Oil Co. and Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co.

South's Racial Disputes Attacked

World P. 5
Birm, Ala.
F.M. 4-6-56

ATLANTA—(U P S)—The president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce suggested Friday that the South is becoming too preoccupied with the racial question, when some of these energies might be put to other uses.

Boyd Campbell, president of a Jackson, Miss., school supply firm, said he had found no evidence that controversy over segregation has as yet affected the South's efforts to attract new industries.

But he said, disputes over the racial question "might, if not controlled," affect the South's industrial growth.

Because of a growing preoccupation with the racial question, he said, more important objectives in the South might be ignored.

Campbell criticized power politics, name-calling and weight-throwing, as factors creating dissention in the South. These tactics re being employed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, he said. He added that segregation cannot be ended, or the problem solved in this manner.

The NAACP's tactics, Campbell said are "doing the Negro a great disservice."

Clergymen Ask Ike To Tour South

World P. 5
Birm, Ala.
F.M. 4-6-56

NEW YORK—(ANP)— Some 400 white and Negro clergymen have called on President Eisenhower to tour the troubled areas of the South in an attempt to case the tensions which have been built up in some states over the issue of racial segregation.

The ministers made their plea in a statement circulated by the interdenominational Fellowship of Reconciliation, headed by the Rev. John M. Swomley, Jr.

Most of the signers, pledging their support to Negro ministers who went on trial last week for leading a boycott of buses in Montgomery and direct services in churches of ministers who might be jailed.

The number of signers of the statement is increasing by more than 100 names daily, officers of the fellowship announced from its national headquarters in New York City.

"The statement was sent to only some 1600 clergymen," reported Rev. Swomley, national secretary of the group. "Our impression is that something like 90 per cent of them will have signed it by the end of this week. and half of them will be prepared to go to Montgomery. They obviously share our conviction that the non-violent campaign represents the most hopeful and significant development that has come out of this struggle so far."

In their statement, the ministers also called on the Christian church in both North and South to "repent of its own sinful practice of segregation," and urged President Eisenhower to exercise the "special responsibility" they assert rests on him.

Calling the President the "recognized spokesman of the 'free world!" the group called on him to "speak out against segregation in every form" and to "consider personally going to Alabama and Mississippi" on a mission of peace and good will.

The ministers' statement began with the assertion that "we rejoice in the leadership our brother pastors in Montgomery, Alabama are giving to the non-violent campaign for racial brotherhood." It is fitting that such leadership should come from those whose Master was a living demonstration of unarmed love and brotherhood."

The list of clergymen who signed the statement include some of the country's outstanding religious leaders.

Negro Leader Says President 'Too Slow' On Desegregation

Advertiser Thurs. 4-5-56
Montgomery, Ala.

NEW YORK, April 4 (AP)—A Negro leader said tonight that President Eisenhower is going in the right direction on racial integration—but too slowly.

"I think Mr. Truman would have been very much more forthright and direct in this matter," declared Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

P. 5-A

On a panel interview over the city-owned radio station, WNYC, Wilkins was asked if he was satisfied with Eisenhower's efforts in behalf of integration.

"I couldn't say that I'm satisfied with it," he replied. "But I am satisfied that the President is going in the right direction. These things are tinged with politics or political expediency. Mr. Eisenhower, I believe, wants to do the right thing—he wants to enforce the Supreme Court opinion. He has said repeatedly that it is the law of the land.

"Where I find fault is that so little of the prestige and so little of the machinery available to the White House . . . has been brought to bear to influence public opinion on this matter and to secure speedier compliance."

Wilkins was asked if, in his opinion, things would be better under a Democratic administration.

EXCEPT TRUMAN

"I'm not able to say," Wilkins responded. "I feel Mr. Eisenhower is doing as well as any other occupant of the White House would have done, whether Democrat or Republican, except, perhaps, for Harry S. Truman."

As for Adlai E. Stevenson's proposal for gradualism in desegregation, Wilkins said of the Democratic candidate for the presidential nomination:

"Mr. Stevenson made an unfortunate remark in California in using the world 'gradual.' It has a bad connotation, because 'gradual,' for some Negroes means 'never,' or so slowly as to be 'never.' I feel Mr. Stevenson did not mean that, but didn't know when he said it that it would have the overtones it did."

Davis Warns South Will Stand Firm

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Mon. 5-7-56

WASHINGTON, May 6 (AP)—Rep. Davis (D-Ga) said today the South is applying political pressure in behalf of racial segregation and cited last Tuesday's Alabama primary as an example.

P. 24

Appearing with Rep. Keating (R-NY) in a debate on NBC-TV "American Forum", Davis said the Alabama outcome "demonstrates that there is a firm intention on the part of the people of the South to retain our present way of life."

The segregation question was the prime issue in Alabama's Democratic primary and was a factor in the defeat of Gov. James E. Folsom for national committeeman.

After denying accusations by critics that he is "soft" on the racial issue, Folsom was beaten handily by state Rep. Charles W. McKay, an outspoken segregationist.

Davis, who did not elaborate on the Alabama situation, said leaders of both parties "are trying to outbid each other for the colored vote."

This statement was quickly challenged by Keating, the House sponsor of the civil rights proposals of the Eisenhower administration.

WASHINGTON BACKGROUND

Parties Face Problems On Racial Integration

Inquirer p. 4
Philadelphia, Pa.
Sat. 2-11-56

By JOHN C. O'BRIEN
Inquirer Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.

BOTH major political parties will be bidding fiercely this fall for the millions of Negro votes concentrated in the big Northern States. In several of these States the Negro vote may spell the difference between victory and defeat for the rival Presidential candidates.

The Negro voters, lured by the New Deal into the Democratic Party, are no longer anybody's property. Thoroughly aroused over the racial integration issue they will be throwing their support to the party whose candidate and platform promises the most in the direction of implementation of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

For aspirants for the Presidential nominations, however, taking a stand on the racial integration issue cannot wait until the national conventions. Whether or not they win the nominations of their parties may depend, in large measure, on the position they take. In his quest for convention support the candidate or each party must weigh the risk of offending the powerful Negro minority in the North against the possibility of alienating the support of the convention delegates from the South.

* * *

NEVER since the Civil War has the South been so stirred up over the Negro question as it is right now. Many of the Southern States are sternly resisting efforts to wipe out segregation in the public schools.

A candidate for the Presidential nomination of either party who comes out for extreme measures to force implementation of the Supreme Court decision probably would find the delegates from the Southern States lined up solidly against him on the convention floor.

On the other hand, a candidate whose views on integration fall too short of the demands of the Negro voters of the North might lose the support of delegates from the Northern States who regard the support of such voters essential to the success of their tickets in the fall election.

Of course, no candidate for the Presidential nomination in either party is going to espouse the extreme Southern view that the decision of the Supreme Court may be flouted. The candidate's problem will be to find—if it can be found—a median line acceptable to all but the extremists on both sides of the issue.

* * *

UP TILL now, Adlai E. Stevenson, the front-running candidate for the Democratic nomination, and President Eisenhower, who may or may not be the Republican candidate, have taken positions on the integration problem that are in some respects not dissimilar.

Both have opposed the Powell Amendment to the Federal-Aid-for-Schools Bill, which would deny States which refused to integrate their schools Federal money for school construction.

Both have advocated a gradual approach to the implementation of the Supreme Court decision. At a recent news conference, Mr. Eisenhower pointed out that the Supreme Court, in reaching its decision, provided specifically that there be gradual implementation and entrusted enforcement of the decision to the United States District Courts.

When he was asked if he believed the Federal Government should intervene in Alabama, where a Negro student has been suspended because of campus rioting over her admission to the State university, the President said he would certainly hope to avoid any Federal interference as long as the State authorities were trying to straighten out the situation.

* * *

DURING his campaigning in California, Stevenson has been saying much the same thing. He told a group of Negro leaders in Los Angeles:

"We have to proceed gradually in these matters, not with troops or bayonets. You do not upset the tradition of generations overnight. To use force would be a great mistake. It would be a revival of the Civil War. It's the spirit of men that will change things for the better.

"I hope very much the North and the South can live together. That's the kind of America I believe in. I don't believe in a Balkanized America. I'll do everything to bring about unity."

This is the kind of a position that would not alienate Southern States delegates from Mr. Stevenson in the convention. Yet, when it was suggested that he might be trying to appease the South, Stevenson entered a firm denial. He said he wasn't trying to appease anybody.

But some Negro leaders of California, which has a Negro population of about 500,000, were reported to be leaning toward Sen. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), who apparently told them he favored speedier enforcement of the anti-segregation decision.

The final position of the two parties on the segregation issue, however, will not be written until the platform committees meet. And the job won't be easy.

Ministers Lead The Way In Desegregation Effort

Journal & Guide p. 1 Sat. 3-24-56
Norfolk, Va.

By STAFF WRITERS

NORFOLK — The nation's ministers are giving their full in spiritual support for the efforts of the nation's 15 million Negroes in their efforts to gain full citizenship.

News reports from Guide writers from all parts of the nation show Men of Cloth stepping into the forefront of the fight and making their presence felt. Some of the stories, in brief, follow:

★ Urges Negro Police For Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — A minister has urged the Birmingham City Commission to employ Negro policemen to help "cement good faith and establish better relations."

The Rev. George Rudolph, in a letter to commissioners last week, called attention to other southern cities that effectively use Negro policemen.

Birmingham is the only major city in the South where Negroes have been barred from jobs on the police force.

★ Exchange Places To Show Unified Stands

NEW YORK — White and Negro members of two Presbyterian churches in New York exchanged places Sunday for religious services in a demonstration of racial desegregation.

More than 100 white members of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church intermingled with Negro members of the Church of the Master. At the same time, the Harlem church sent an equal number of its congregation to the white church.

The Rev. David H. C. Read, former chaplain of Queen Elizabeth in Scotland, preached to the mixed congregation in his own church. At the Church of the Master, the Rev. James Robinson, preached the sermon.

★ Ministers See New Boycott In Making

NEW ORLEANS — More than 1,000 Negroes staged a fund-raising meeting in New Orleans Sunday in support of the Montgomery bus boycott and threatened a similar anti-segregation demonstration.

Speaking at the Union Bethel AME Church, the Rev. A. L. Davis Jr., president of the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance warned that the Montgomery boycott may spread to New Orleans. He declared:

* * *

"I'VE BEEN tired a long time of having to sit in the back of our buses."

The Rev. Morris Burrell, chairman of the meeting, told the group: "Those people in Montgomery are making a death struggle for us, even though we do not feel the immediate brunt of hardship those people are going through. It may well be us tomorrow."

The two ministers called for an organization of 100,000 Negroes to help fight segregation on the city's buses and in hotels.

General

★ "We'll All Go To Prison Together"

CLEVELAND, Ohio — "Perhaps you've heard that Negroes will not stick together. Well, if you hear it again remember Montgomery, Ala."

This was the admonition given here last week by one of the 24 ministers indicted in Montgomery in February for their participation in a mass Negro protest against discrimination on Montgomery city buses.

* * *

ADDRESSING a crowd of 2-100 persons at a prayer-protest rally, sponsored by the Cleveland NAACP, the Rev. L. Roy Bennett recounted that "we decided to go to jail together instead of one by one." A total of $3,301.64 was donated by the audience to aid the Montgomery group in its fight against segregation and to help in the legal defense of those arrested there.

★ Volunteer To Take Montgomery Pulpits

NEW YORK—The Fellowship of Reconciliation said Sunday that more than 200 white and Negro clergymen have expressed willingness to go to Montgomery, Ala., and take the pulpits of 25 Negro clerics facing bus boycott charges.

The Fellowship group, in a statement said more than 400 ministers throughout the nation responded to an appeal for support of the non-violent campaign against segregation on Montgomery's buses.

It said more than 200 of these volunteered to fill the pulpits of any clerics who may be jailed.

Opposing integration—

Senators huddle over segregation

WASHINGTON, March 8—(AP)—Southern senators held their second segregation seminar today, reportedly to receive a committee's views on what action they might take to help their section's fight against racial integration.

The meeting in the office of Sen. George was a follow-up to a similar session held Feb. 7. At that conference, Sens. Ervin (D., N. C.), Russell (D., Ga.) and Stennis (D., Miss.) were designated as a committee to survey the legislative field and report back on attempts being made to avoid integration.

ERVIN HAS said the committee's assignment was not limited to the question of the Supreme Court's decision against segregation in schools and might involve a statement condemning a wide span of decisions by the high tribunal.

In advance of the second meeting, Sen. Robertson (D., Va.) said it was his understanding the three-man committee would deliver its report.

One items the report might involve is approval of the theory of interposition. Supports of this contend the states have the power to reject the Supreme Court's school decision and refuse to enforce it within their boundaries.

A few Southern state legislatures have adopted or are working on various forms of such a declaration.

Vote-restricting law backfires in Louisiana

MINDEN, La., March 8—(AP)—A carefully-planned Louisiana law, designed to restrict Negro voting, is backfiring on pro-white forces in this segregation stronghold.

The statute requires that all prospective voters be able to read any clause of the U. S. Constitution and "give a reasonable interpretation thereof."

Mrs. Winnice P. Clement, Webster Parish (county) registrar of voters, said since she received a mandate to enforce the law, about two dozen prosepctive white voters have flunked their tests, while only two Negroes failed to make the grade on technicalities.

Mrs. Clement, who has held the registrar's post for 16 years, said last night she considered the law made for all—whites and Negroes alike.

"They want Negroes to interpret the Constitution," she said. "That's all right and it's the law. But if the Negroes have to do it, so do the white people. That's only being fair."

She said more Negroes have registered this year than ever before.

But, she quickly added, "So did more white people.

Speedy hearing asked on school admissions

SHREVEPORT, La., March 8—(AP)—Attorneys for 19 Negroes seeking admission to Northwestern State College asked for a "speedy hearing" on a request for a temporary federal injunction restraining the school from using race as an entrance barrier.

The new move yesterday asks the court for a three-judge tribunal, issuance of a temporary restraining injunction, a swift hearing and a permanent injunction against Northwestern.

The original suit was filed last April 25, but A. P. Tureaud Sr., of New Orleans, one of the group's attorneys, asked that the action be deferred.

The complaint now names college President John S. Kyser instead of H. Lee Prather, president at the time of the original suit.

The suit also names as defendants Registrar O. R. Crew and the State Board of Education.

Southern Manifesto

It is regrettable that at a time when our Nation is involved in so many delicate international situations demanding the concentrated thoughts and efforts of every citizen to help keep the world on even keel, it should be torn with racial strife and misunderstanding and that persons who, because of their official position, should be expected to show the way to peace are themselves becoming a problem.

Those who were consoling themselves that some ugly spots on the body politic were caused by the irresponsible, who love nothing better than confusion, were shocked when 96 Congressmen, lawmakers for the Nation, came forward with a segregation manifesto which placed them in the vanguard of the troublemakers. Their stand seriously complicates the efforts of sympathetic people in every community, and their attack upon the Supreme Court and their defiance of the decision which it declared add nothing to their stature.

Even a lay citizen should know that to claim protection under the law, he must obey the law. However unjust the law is, he complies with it wherever he can, and protests it and works for its change where he cannot comply with it. And his willingness to comply is proof of his "good intentions" to obey it. These Congressmen show no proof even of good intentions, but publicly denounce the Court and proclaim in a manifesto their intention to defy this law.

I wonder if these Congressmen would advocate their course as a law-abiding course, to American citizens and say to them "disobey the laws which you do not like and seek by every lawful means to reverse them," or would they say that our right of protest is inherent in our obedience to the law? If this latter is true, then the first step for them is to encourage the communities which are trying to obey the law.

The second step is to take themselves in hand and say to themselves "this is the law; I do not like it, but as a law-abiding citizen I must obey it; but at the same time, I will use my legal right to have it changed."

If equal opportunity is the right and privilege of every citizen of a democracy to enjoy the full fruits of that democracy and share its responsibilities, and if education is the instrument by which citizens become proficient in the right and privilege, then the best education should be offered to each citizen without any disabling factors. They do not deny this.

If the maltreatment of second-class citizens is the United States' most crippling handicap in its opportunity for world leadership, then this should be remedied. They do not deny this.

Segregated education with all of its concomitants causes a psychological injury to the segregated which only integrated education can heal. They seem to take these things for granted and do not deny that they should be remedied. But because the Supreme Court has usurped power—"substituted naked force," in declaring segregation unconstitutional in the states, they will repudiate the Supreme Court, and continue segregation, regardless.

In support of their contention that the state alone has jurisdiction in this area, they cite Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, Ohio and Pennsylvania which, "exercising their rights as states through the constitutional processes of local governments, changed their school systems."

This observation creates the opening for which they are sparring. Why do they not follow suit and move in, especially since the Supreme Court has declared the way? I earnestly pray that these men will not push their contention any further. This is no time for national leaders to give any encouragement to the enemies of progress, justice and national unity. A house divided within itself cannot stand.

COLBERT H. PEARSON,
Minister, Berean Baptist Church
Washington.

IT'S COME HOME

Passive Resistance Dates Back To Thoreau's Idea

By RAYMOND J. CROWLEY

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26 (AP) — A Yankee mystic sat in a do-it-yourself shack near a Massachusetts pond and thought about "injustice" in government.

That was 110 years ago, but today the remedy he proposed has become a rallying cry in the South's monumental struggle over race segregation.

The man was Henry Thoreau and his remedy was passive resistance, or "civil disobedience" as he called it.

In the past 110 years the idea has traveled around the globe—helping topple the British in India as it went—and now it has come home to America.

Negroes refuse to ride segregated buses in Montomery, Ala., cradle of the Confederacy. Their leaders, indicted on charges of illegal boycott, call for continued "passive resistance." In New York, a group of Negro clergymen urge a one-hour work stoppage of all the nation's Negroes March 28 as a sign of sympathy.

On the other hand, opponents of the Supreme Court's order against school segregation call for "massive resistance." They do not trace their doctrine to Thoreau, claiming instead that it stems from ideas expounded by the founding fathers. But in essence, it seems akin to "passive resistance" — refusal to go along when the government is considered wrong.

Thoreau was a rural philosopher in the little town of Concord, Mass. A master prose writer, naturalist and rebel against the demands of organized society, he wanted to be left alone to engage in mystic communion with nature.

He built a cabin with his own hands on the shores of Walden Pond near Concord. The cost, as itemized in his book Walden, was $28.12½ cents — not counting the lot, which he borrowed from Ralph Waldo Emerson. He lived there two years and two months, cultivating nature, his garden and himself.

But organized society did not leave him alone. A foe of slavery and the Mexican War, he had decided to protest those "evils" to a representative of government, the tax gatherer. He refused to pay his Massachusetts poll tax.

One day in 1846, when he went into Concord to get a mended shoe from the cobbler's, he was arrested and clapped into jail. He spent one night there, conversing with an alleged barn-burner. The next day, much to his chagrin, an aunt paid his poll tax and he was released.

He thought it over, and the result was the famous essay on "Civil disobedience." Its central theme is that if the government is wrong, the least a man can do is refuse to cooperate with it.

"It is not a man's duty, as a matter of course," he wrote, "to devote himself to the eradication of any, even the most enormous, wrong; he may still properly have other concerns to engage him; but it is his duty, at least, to wash his hands of it, and, if he gives it no thought longer, not to give it practically his support."

And again:

"Under a government which imprisons any unjustly, the true place for a just man is also a prison."

Years later Mohandas KI. Gandhi of India used Thoreau's essay as a text for his campaign of nonviolent opposition to British rule. Boycotts of government service, the law courts, government schools and foreign goods marked the movement — which sometimes led to violence. Gandhi was repeatedly jailed but eventually the independence drive, of which he was one symbol, succeeded.

What Thoreau would say about all this—and about the current struggle in the South—cannot be known with certainty. But it is pretty sure that he would join neither the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People nor the white Citizens' Councils.

He was always an individualist, never a joiner. He had appointed himself inspector of rainstorms and snowstorms in Concord, and that job kept him busy.

As Four Governors Feebly Uphold Segregation

Engineer p. 8

There is painful contrast between the actions of one Southern Governor, Frank G. Clement of Tennessee, on the issue of race segregation in the public schools, and those of the Governors of Virginia, Mississippi, Georgia and South Carolina.

Faced by a mob of segregationists, Governor Clement rejected their demands that he call a special session of the Legislature to nullify the Supreme Court's integration decree.

Philadelphia Pa.

But the other four, Governors George Bell Timmerman, Jr., Thomas B. Stanley, Marvin Griffin and J. P. Coleman, needed no extremists to prod them into defiance of the Supreme Court. They agreed on a program aimed at preserving separate schools for whites and Negroes.

Times 1-26-56

They would do this by pressing resolutions of "interposition" in the various State Legislatures, by attempting to gain Congressional aid, and by "other appropriate legal measures."

Interposition by the States on the segregation question would constitute an effort to proclaim the Supreme Court ruling invalid.

The hoped-for assistance from Congress might take the form of a resolution holding that a Constitutional amendment is required to force racial integration in the public schools.

The "other appropriate measures" referred to will doubtless include proposals such as that already advanced in Virginia to make State tuition funds available for private schools.

That the courses recommended by the four Governors come perilously close to outright nullification of the law of the land is obvious. So is their impracticality.

The States can "interpose" until their officials are exhausted, but that will not alter or abolish the declared law. Getting Congress to agree that the Supreme Court performed a lawless act in banning segregation in the public schools, and then backing an unneeded constitutional amendment, would not be easy.

So far as the private school tuition plan is concerned, that is destined to run into all sorts of difficulties, of a practical as well as a legal nature, before it gets very far.

Governor Clement not only displayed courage in his encounter with the segregationists, but he refused to turn away from facts and realities. His was the course of leadership and it is too bad the other Governors did not take it also, instead of uttering their childish defiances.

Says South Will Bow To 'Rights'

Defender Sat. 3-24-56

Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK — (ANP) — The New York Times said last week that its survey of compliance with the Supreme Court's desegregation decision shows that school integration "seems inevitable in most Southern states — perhaps in all."

P. 4

The newspaper said that it is the over-all impression" gained by 10 of its reporters who spent five weeks investigating the progress of Negro-white school integration in 17 states and the District of Columbia.

Results of the Times survey were published in a special eight-page section last Tuesday under the heading "Report on the South: The Integration Issue."

DISAVOW VIOLENCE

In general, the survey revealed that most white southerners want to deal with the problem of integration by legal means.

"They usually disavow violence and are afraid of it, although there still may be sporadic outbreaks," the Times said.

"Generally white southerners seem more troubled, confused and resentful than rebellious. They are troubled by the demand that they make a radical change in their settled and preferred social patterns. . ."

The confusion has led the southerners to resist the change by various devices to nullify, delay or moderate the impact of desegregation, the newspaper said.

Time reporters found that where the ratio of Negro population to white is low integration is proceeding; where it is high there is resistance.

SOME RESENTFUL

Southern Negroes likeswise were found to be troubled and sometimes resentful.

"In the main," Times said, "they want the rights vouchsafed to them by the highest court in the land. In some cases hesitantly, in others resolutely, they are demanding the admission of their children to mixed schools."

The survey catalogued the southern areas as follows:

Integrating — District of Columbia, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma and West Virginia.

Divided or delaying — Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Louisiana, North Carolina, Tennessee and Texas.

Resisting — Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia.

Ellender Cautions South On Reconstruction Peril

Evening Star p. 4-A

Washington, D.C.

A Southern Senator cautioned his people last night to avoid any show of violence in resisting school integration lest they invite a return of "reconstruction" government and rule by "carpetbaggers."

Sun. 3-18-56

Senator Ellender, Democrat of Louisiana, told a Louisiana radio audience in an address recorded in Washington that he and other congressional signers of last Sunday's "manifesto" against integration are committed to resistance by "any lawful means."

Defiance of South Likened to Wet Stand in '20s. Page A-27

Southern Writer Finds "You Can't Go Home Again." Page A-27

He added:

"What the South must avoid at all costs is violence, lawlessness, hatred and bloodshed. The outside agitators who seek the subjugation of both the white and Negro races in the South are hovering like greedy vultures for the time when racial antagonisms led to chaos, the breakdown of governmental authority, and general lawlessness.

Fear of Force

"If this condition should occur, then I fear they will not hesitate to press for the use of force. If this should occur, then all our people could look forward to construction regimes which would be a repetition of the rebrought the South only oppression and self-seeking exploitation."

In "our fight to maintain the basic principles of our Federal, Constitutional system," Senator Ellender said, "we must not open our gates to an invasion of our States by a new and even hungrier breed of carpetbaggers."

Carpetbaggers were Northern politicians who invaded the South after the Civil War.

Sober Warning

By the Supreme Court decision calling for desegregation of the public schools, Senator Ellender said, "nine men have made it possible for 165 million Americans to be made subject to a new and powerful kind of despotism."

The "Declaration of Constitutional Principles" signed by the Southern Congressmen, he said, "is a sober warning" to the American people that the Supreme Court "has laid the foundation for what may yet prove to be a complete destruction of our Constitutional system of checks and balances."

"We have served notice that the people of the South, both white and Negro, are not going to be used as either whipping boys or political pawns in order to fulfill the Supreme Court's new doctrine of sociological justice," Senator Ellender declared.

Voice Of The People

News P. 14

Time To Examine Racial Conditions

Birm. Ala. 3-7-56

In attempting to orient ourselves and determine conduct amid the confusion of the present crisis it may be not amiss to examine briefly and to compare the conflicting viewpoints from which the North—and perhaps the world in general—and the South consider present racial conditions in the South. To be of real service this examination must be undertaken in an impartial spirit, thinking with the mind rather than the emotions and remembering that there may be some truth and virtue in both positions.

Briefly, the position of the North—and perhaps the world in general—is that the Negro is being deprived of rights guaranteed him by the Constitution and that this injustice must be corrected pronto.

Speaking generally the Southern position is a feeling of friendship and kindly regard for the Negro. He is with us in large numbers, good-natured and carefree, happy-go-lucky and easy to get along with when not swayed by extraneous influences. Under the 1896 decision he has made phenomenal progress both in education and in the assumption of civil rights. His schools are progressively becoming better, he is voting in increasing numbers, his influence in the political arena is far from negligible. In brief it is indeed a far cry from the servile, too humble Negro of 1870 to the independent, upstanding urban Negro of today and the Southern idea is that this progress should continue gradually as in the past and that it is to the best interest of both races that segregation be maintained at least for the foreseeable future.

There is a large element of truth in both these positions. The Negro and his forebears have been discriminated against since their arrival in this country 300 years ago and is in fact even now being discriminated against all over the world except perhaps in Liberia. It may be assumed as an indisputable general fact that the Negro and all other backward races have ever been discriminated against under the domination of the white race. Leaving, therefore, the Negro republic out of consideration, the condition of the Negro is better in the U. S.—and that includes the South—than anywhere else in the world. Indeed it is a question whether his condition is not better here in the South than in some of the great industrial cities of the North. He has his own schools—which were confessedly of very poor quality at first but which are rapidly being improved—his own teachers, his own lawyers and physicians, some hospitals of his own though more are needed and, of course, the Negro forms a large part of the clientele of other hospitals. Much improvement is still needed in housing though that also is on the upgrade. And the great majority of Negroes, if left free from outside prodding, have little or no desire to mix with the whites in schools or socially. All they ask is complete equality civilly and politically and all this was in process of gradual attainment even before the Supreme Court decision of 1954. But it will require some time, these much desired ends cannot be attained overnight and human nature being what it is there is much danger of the present agitation causing calamitous deterioration in racial relations.

But however events may shape out, it behooves us all, black and white, to conduct ourselves as mature and reasonable children of the Most High God. As professed Christians let us use those qualities enjoined by the Christ. It is said that you may bolster any proposition by a quotation from the Bible, but forget the Old Testament, live by and apply the teachings of Jesus. Quoting Matthew 22-36 "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" Jesus said unto him, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Who is my neighbor?

J. MELANCON,
4235 Fifth Avenue, South.

Declaration Of Treason

Defender P. 9

Ninety-six members of the Congress of the United States have signed a manifesto calling for a reversal of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools. Sat. 3-24-56

By so doing, they have irrevocably pledged themselves to the overthrow of the highest judicial body in the land. This, as we see it, is the same as advocation of the overthrow of the government by violence, if necessary, and that is treason.

According to their spokesmen, the manifesto was re-worded several times so as not to reflect the bitterness of most of its signers. Nevertheless, hate was the guiding spirit behind the framing of the document. Chicago, Ill.

A restrained statement of a basically immoral belief and intention does not in any way alter it. It is un-American no matter what language it is couched in.

We do not recall reading in our history books about any outburst from the South when the Supreme Court ennunciated the separate but equal theory. None of the legal, judicial, or legislative minds of the South at that time called it an invasion of state's rights or sociological spoutings of the justices.

It is strange that the court, now existing in the climate of a new and brighter day in human relations, should be condemned.

These signers no longer have any usefulness as legislators. They are admittedly so blind with racial prejudice and hatred that they cannot consider any proposed piece of legislation with the balance required of a law maker.

While it is too much to expect that they would be ousted from Congress because of their un-American views, or at least stripped of their powers, it is certain that they cannot command respect in any other legislative body in the world.

The brazen announcement of their traitorous intentions is a reflection upon Congress as a whole and a blow to American prestige.

Open Season?

Defender Sat. 3-24-56 Chicago, Ill. P. 9

Eastland, McCarthy Flay Top Court Sedition Ruling

Constitution Sat. 5-12-56 Atlanta, Ga. P. 2

WASHINGTON, May 11 (AP)—The Supreme Court came under sharp attack at a Senate Internal Security Subcommittee hearing today for its ruling that the federal government has sole jurisdiction in sedition cases.

The decision, handed down April 2, had the effect of upsetting state laws against subversion.

Sens. Eastland (D-Miss) and McCarthy (R-Wis) criticized the Supreme Court as "politicians instead of lawyers." McCarthy said, "They don't understand what they are doing."

ASSAILS WARREN

McCarthy singled out Chief Justice Earl Warren for attack, saying:

"We made a mistake in confirming as chief justice a man who had no judicial experience and very little legal experience . . . His only experience is as a politician."

Eastland, who has denounced the court repeatedly for its ruling against segregation in the public schools, commented that 'there are some very bad influences in the Supreme Court," and McCarthy said:

"It's not that they are knowingly helping the Communist cause. It's just that they don't understand what they are doing. They don't understand the function of the court . . . They apparently feel the court should make laws and not interpret them."

WOULD NULLIFY RULING

Eastland presided as subcommittee chairman and McCarthy appeared as a witness for legislation which would nullify the effect of the court's April 2 decision, which was to suspend sedition laws in 42 states, Alaska and Hawaii.

In its 6-3 decision, the court set aside the conviction of Communist leader Steve Nelson, who had been prosecuted under a Pennsylvania sedition law. The court held Congress intended to give the federal government sole jurisdiction in such cases when it passed the Smith Act and other laws.

"The fact of the matter is," McCarthy said today, "that Congress had explicitly declared its intent to the contrary."

McCarthy and Sen. Bridges (R-NH), who also testified, have offered bills restoring to the states the power to prosecute under their own sedition laws.

Desegregation

Judge Hamstrings Integration Foes

GREENSBORO, N. C.—Segregation received a good legal kick in the pants here when Federal Judge J. Hayes ruled that the county education boards of this state are, in fact, state boards. The ruling nipped in the bud plans to keep de-segregation in the courts by forcing Negroes to fight each local board, individually.

Courier P.2* Sat. 4-14-56

Council's Plea Goes for Naught

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex.—With only one municipal swimming pool in town, the local White Citizens Council has asked the city's Park and Recreation Board to build a "separate-but-equal" pool for the city's Negro population. After hearing the petition the board voted unanimously to open the city's only pool to Negroes on an unsegregated basis.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

SSN Claims Segregation Gaining

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—The Southern School News, self-termed "non-partisan" monthly publication published by the Southern Education Reporting Service, claims that opposition to integration in the South's schools is spreading. Negro publisher P. B. Young of Norfolk, Va., recently quit the organization in protest against its editorial policies.

38a General

* * *

Ohio Town Keeps Jim-Crow School

HILLSBORO, Ohio—Negro children, attempting to enroll at the Webster-Washington Elementary School here, were turned down by Principal Harold Henry. The City Solicitor, James Hapner, told the mothers of fourteen children that the board had received no official word of the Supreme Court decision which upheld integration in Hillsboro's schools.

* * *

Chattanooga Wary of Integration

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—The Chattanooga School Board has announced there will be no integration in local schools for at least five years. The board asserted, "We are firmly convinced that any measure of integration within the foreseeable future would do the community irreparable damage."

* * *

Louisiana NAACP Keeps On Fighting

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright has referred the NAACP to the State Supreme Court in the latter's fight against prosecution by the State of Louisiana. Louisiana is seeking to stop the NAACP from functioning in the state.

* * *

Hot Springs Embraces 'Gradualism'

HOT SPRINGS, Ark.—A 28-member special advisory committee has recommended an immediate start on a program of gradually integrating local schools. The group includes five Negro members.

GENERAL

Dixie: The Democrats' Dilemma

Courier P.9 Sat. 3-10-56

With the lines now definitely drawn for the 1956 Presidential election and the Republicans strengthened by an almost unbeatable candidate, the embattled Democrats find themselves confronted by the dilemma of Dixie.

Shall they, in search of every possible vote, make another bid for the Negro's favor with a weasel-worded civil rights plank (and thus alienate the almost-solid Southern Democrat vote), or shall they kowtow to the Dixiecrat-White Council ferment to wean back the allegiance lost and almost-lost to Eisenhower in 1952?

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Occurrences in Mississippi, Alabama and other areas in the past year (which have shocked not only the United States but the entire civilized world) have alienated many Democrats outside the South who will certainly be dissatisfied with anything less than a forthright party position on implementation of civil rights and obedience to the dictates of the U. S. Supreme Court.

38a

Failure to write a strong civil rights plank will, additionally, lose the Democrats the decisive Negro vote which gave the Democrats control of the Congress in 1954, and upon which the powerful Democrat party city machines outside the South depend.

General

Already the Negro Democrat leaders are in panic because of the revolt of their followers against the current Southern savagery, which is wholeheartedly supported by loud-mouthed and vindictive white Southern political leaders of their party, and these boss Negro Democrats and their white superiors anticipate a break-up of the hitherto solid ranks of their followers.

Moreover, even if the Democrats do write a tongue-in-cheek civil rights plank in the party platform, how many Democrat Negro voters (and their liberal white associates) will credit its sincerity?

Having sampled the fleshpots of Congressional control with all of its benefits such as committee chairmanships, many Southern Democrats are loath to imperil their position by backing another Dixiecrat ticket as many did in 1948; but they rightly fear that agitation of the Southern lunatic fringe may force them to do so or risk defeat.

Northern Democrats realize full well that even at best the task of defeating the Republicans led by President Eisenhower will be most difficult, if not impossible, but they know even better that they simply cannot win without the support of the jim-crow South.

So, from now on, the adherents of the Donkey party are going to spend many sleepless nights and worrisome days trying to figure out what to do and say to hold both the White Council and the Negro vote without which they cannot win.

Former President Truman has said that the Democrats can win without the Dixiecrat vote, but this is simply whistling in the dark because he knows that more of the South than the four states that voted Dixiecrat in 1948 is involved and that, in addition, the Negro Democrats are about to wave the Stevensons, Sparkmans, Kefauvers and Eastlands goodbye.

It is surely a real dilemma that faces the Democrats in 1956, and from now on they're going to be singing the Till-Lucy-White Council Blues.

Good To Be Right; Better To Be Wise

Journal & Guide

Editor's Note—The following is printed as information. The Journal and Guide expresses no opinion on it. However, Mr. Muse is a close student of Virginia affairs and has made some valuable contributions to the improvement of race relations in years past. He is a native Virginian. The Journal and Guide feels that Mr. Muse is deeply sincere, and reprints his statement as a contribution to the general discussion of the issues.

Norfolk, Va.

By BENJAMIN MUSE
In The Washington Post and Times-Herald

IN MY COLUMN of Feb. 19, the writer criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Repercussions reached me over the telephone within a few hours after the column appeared and still continue.

The NAACP carries the hopes and fears, and the confident loyalty, of many thousands of Negro citizens of Virginia and of the South. It has also, of course, white members and many white admirers, among whom this writer likes to be counted.

Post 3-10-56

It is unfortunate, however, in my opinion, that the NAACP should have become immune from criticism on the one hand or the object of unmitigated execration on the other. A far healthier atmosphere would prevail if this great organization were subject to regular across-the-board criticism in the manner in which one criticizes the Democratic Party, the Republican Party, the Young Turks or the Byrd machine. This kind of integration in the family of social and political forces should itself be pleasing to leaders of the NAACP.

MY ADVICE TO THE NAACP was that it should shape its program of legal activity in a manner not to precipitate explosions in areas of tension, but to promote a gradual process of compliance with the Supreme Court decision, by beginning in some county or counties where Negroes are few and where public school integration could be effected without difficulty.

To bring about the integration of 100 Negro pupils in a county of western Virginia which is now sending them 50 miles from home to attend a segregated Negro school would be a vastly greater accomplishment than to win a court decision where nothing but confusion would result.

I am saying something here which is in the hearts of thousands of white Virginians who would like to see this state turn from fruitless pyrotechnics and begin the inevitable process of adjustment to the law of the land.

Many Virginia Negroes also share this view. A number of NAACP leaders have expressed their agreement with me and have joined in my appeal for this kind of moderation.

The attitude of Thurgood Marshall, the chief legal counsel of the NAACP, however, is deeply disturbing. Marshall has written me a long and courteous letter, marked "personal," from which I shall not quote. But I can only conclude from it that the head of the NAACP's legal staff does not recognize the overwhelming difficulties in certain localities.

VIRGINIA officials and politicians are grievously at fault in the matter of compliance with the Supreme Court decision. I have not minced words in this column about that. I agree also that the NAACP is legally and morally correct in its position. But we are dealing here with a problem in which abstract justice and rectitude of purpose are not enough. What is needed now is something that can best be called simply wisdom.

Back of this state's sensational pro-segregation gestures of the past year—Gray Plan, interposition, etc.—is a conception of desegregation as something to be forced abruptly upon all sections of the state. This is inspired in no small measure by the insistence of the NAACP upon desegregation in the extremely difficult section of Southside Virginia—especially in Prince Edward County. NAACP attorneys now are again threatening to ask the Federal court to order the prompt desegregation of Prince Edward County's public schools.

I visited Prince Edward County recently and talked earnestly with people there, both white and Negro. The Negroes of Prince Edward are not in the slightest hurry for mixed schools. As for the white people, I can say with complete assurance that they will close up the public schools rather than take the first step toward racial integration now. If a crisis is precipitated in Prince Edward County, it will be a disastrous setback for the cause of racial integration and race tolerance in Virginia.

Dixie's Negro: A Wasted Resource

Journal & Guide

From The Charlotte (N.C.) News (White)

Norfolk, Va.

BROACH the "Negro problem" to any group of southerners today and tempers are likely to sizzle like fatback dropped in a hot skillet. But out of the emotional atmosphere surrounding this aged-in-anguish dilemma, a sobering fact emerges: The Negro is a part, both creator and creature, of southern culture, for whom the region is responsible as for all other groups.

Even those who despise the Negro will admit, if reluctantly, that he is an important factor in Dixie's economy. What is not always admitted is the fact that he will contribute more to the economic well-being of the region as he receives better education, better political, economic and social opportunities.

The South, for better or for worse, is inhabited by roughly 10½ million Negroes. This figure represents a gigantic manpower potential. But it is fairly obvious throughout the southern states that Negroes are not contributing what they should to Dixie. They are not contributing because full use is simply not being made of all this human wealth.

Post 3-10-56

The most regrettable aspect of the situation is the difficulty many intelligent Negroes have in securing a higher education.

At the very time a great deal of public attention has been given to the pros and cons of racial segregation in Dixie's public schools, a private philanthropic organization has centered its attention on ways to help talented young Negroes to get a college education. The National Scholarship Service and the Fund for Negro Students, sponsored by the Fund for the Advancement of Education, has undertaken the task in an effort to make fuller use of this important manpower potential. Its principal aims: To discover more college-qualified Negro students in the South; to encourage these students to develop their abilities; to provide them with information and assistance in obtaining college scholarships, and to furnish financial aid when needed. It is known as the Southern project.

According to Benjamin Fine, one of the nation's leading education writers, the organization's talent search in Dixie has uncovered a surprising number of Negro students of college ability. In two years some 500 students have been given aid.

During this relatively short period, the project has greatly increased the number of southern Negroes enrolled in colleges, increased the number of information and testing facilities for future Negro college students and, more important perhaps, increased professional and public awareness of an important slice of the nation's hidden manpower reserve.

Trained manpower is needed in the South and in the nation as a whole. With sufficient education, Negroes can help meet this need. Not only can they serve their own race better but they can benefit the nation's entire economic community. The aims of the Southern Project rise above prejudice. They are, in fact, more akin to national and regional self-interest.

Birmingham News

Constitution

Extremists Must Recognize Racial Issue Is Dynamite

Sat. 2-18-56 P. 4

Atlanta, Ga.

This paper, in commenting Supreme Court's decision against repeatedly has stressed that the South in conflict with that ruling efforts to deal with the situation. be changed by force.

We also have asserted repeatedly that we believe in respect for law and that the reality of the decision must be faced.

Wisdom and moderation are needed on all sides in meeting complex difficulties. Extremism from any quarter is dangerous.

Such shameful disorder and perilous violence as occurred on the University of Alabama campus a few days ago can only intensify problems and dangers.

Disregard of deep Southern sentiment sincerely opposed to desegregation also is bound to increase tensions.

These realities, we think, should be evident to all.

Recent events at Tuscaloosa should emphasize anew the need for humility and moderation as well as conviction and courage in seeking solutions of our problems.

If we of the South should seek the way ahead with humility and moderation, so should people in other areas of this country and abroad seek full understanding of Southern viewpoints and problems.

Adlai Stevenson, speaking to Negro leaders in California, advised proceeding gradually on matters on problems growing out of the segregation in the public schools, reality of strong sentiment in the must be recognized in constructive

Of course such sentiment cannot such as segregation. "You do not upset the tradition of generations overnight," he said. He said it would be "a great mistake" to try to enforce segregation in schools and travel. 'We must go about these things gradually," he said. "It's the spirit of men that will change things for the better; it will not be troops or bayonets. . . . I don't believe in a Balkanized America. I'll do everything to bring about unity."

Mr. Stevenson also told a group of labor leaders that he opposed the proposed amendment to the federal school aid bill which would make desegregation essential before a school could receive federal aid. "The administration of schools is a local matter," he said. Mr. Stevenson described discrimination and segregation as obsolete heritages which "will yield quickest of all to the spread of education." Vast numbers of Southerners do not consider segregation an "obsolete heritage," but, though they differ with Mr. Stevenson on that point, will be glad that he calls for moderation and understanding in meeting problems in this perplexed and troubled field.

Eisenhower Parley On S

Advertiser

Sun. 3-31-56

Caucus Eyed If Congress Fails To Act

Montgomery Ala.

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, March 31 (AP) — President Eisenhower, calling anew for "moderate and responsible" leadership to solve racial problems, said today he may set up conferences on the subject if Congress doesn't act.

He said he was still hopeful Congress will follow his recommendation that it set up a bipartisan commission. As outlined in his State of the Union message Jan. 5 this commission would investigate charges that Negroes are being deprived of the vote in some localities and are "being subjected to unwarranted economic pressures."

Eisenhower made his remarks today in a letter to Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida, who had called on the President to convene a conference of Southern governors and attorneys general for a discussion of racial relations.

COLLINS FEARFUL

Collins, in a wire on March 22, had told the President that as a result of the Supreme Court's school integration decision and of activities of extremists on both sides "we are experiencing what well may be a deterioration of racial relations. We are fearful that progress we have made over many years may be dissipated."

Eisenhower replied that Collins' wire "has my thoughtful attention" and added:

"I am deeply cognizant of the difficult adjustments confronting some localities in complying with the school decision of the Supreme Court. It seems to me, however that the progress already made in certain regions of the South before and since this decision is a clear indication that we can look forward to even greater progress if we can look to moderation and responsible leadership supported by a spirit of patience on the part of all of our people.

WELL AWARE

"As you and your associates are well aware, the recommendation I have already made to the Congress requesting the creation of a bipartisan commission to study and make recommendations in this area has not yet been accepted. It is my belief that this commission could provide the means for helpful discussion, and the restoration of a clearer understanding on the part of all of our people of the real nature of the problems you mention.

"I am still hopeful that the Congress will act favorably upon my suggestion. However, should they decline, I will have to consider other types of conference, including the kind you suggest. I trust that the responsibilities that lie primarily with state and local governments, as indeed the responsibilities of the federal government, may continue to be accepted, understood, and discharged by every official with an understanding of the deep human values which underlie this problem."

Gov. Collins said: "The President obviously has given careful consideration to our problems. He has indicated a willingness to be cooperative and helpful. I appreciate this attitude."

The President's indication that he might consider calling such a conference as Gov. Collins suggested was hailed by some Southern Democrats in Congress "as encouraging" but the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People declared that a conference "should include representatives of both races."

Several of the governors who would be involved in a conference such as was proposed by Collins already have sponsored or joined in moves aimed at thwarting the Supreme Court's school decision.

IN NEAR FUTURE

Advertiser

Meantime presidential press secretary James C. Hagerty told reporters today, in response to questions, that the administration's proposals for civil rights legislation will go to Congress in the near future, through the attorney general.

Advertiser

Eisenhower said in his State of the Union message that these recommendations would be made soon but they have been delayed, reportedly to permit officials to reword them. It has been indicated they would include legislation to set up a bipartisan commission, and to establish a Civil Rights Division in the Justice Department.

B 2-8

For years all civil rights proposals have been killed by Southern filibusters in the Senate. Most lawmakers assume this stalemate will continue. Some professed to see the bipartisan commission proposal as an effort to put the onus on a Democratic Congress for any failure to act on civil rights.

Sen. Holland (D-Fla) endorsed Gov. Collins' suggestion for a conference as "an escellent one." He said he was encouraged that the President seemed to be "moving toward high-level discussion of these serious problems at an early date."

DIFFERENT CONDITIONS

"I think the sort of conference Gov. Collins has proposed should come before any attempt is made to set up a special commission," Holland said. "the conference could discuss law enforcement, comity with the federal government and the different conditions that prevail in different states.

"From an exchange of views there is bound to come a better understanding of the problems which I believe have got to be solved on the local level in the states."

Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D-SC) said that if Eisenhower met with the governors and attorneys general of the Southern states "it might be helpful."

"He would get their views and he could give his," Johnston said. "I've always thought that it's not a bad idea for people to sit down and discuss matters."

Asked if he thought the proposals implied any new step toward federal intervention, Johnston replied he doesn't think it would "bring about any more than we already have."

The South Carolina senator said he is opposed to the establishment of a bipartisan race relations commission.

"I don't see where any good would come of it," he said. "The federal government ought to stay out of these matters and leave them to the states. I believe in states rights."

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, said in New York his organization "hopes very much" that the President will call a conference on desegregation. But he said such a conference should include representatives of both races from the areas where the problem must be solved.

ELECTED OFFICIALS

"A conference limited to elected state officials cannot present fairly the views of substantial minorities of Negro citizens in the affected states, nor can it reflect the opinion of moderates among the Southern whites," Wilkins said. He added:

"A White House conference, at the very least, would open the presently clogged channels of communication between races in the South."

Sen. Wiley (R-Wis) said he hopes Congress will act on the president's proposal to set up a bipartisan commission. But if it doesn't, he said he would favor such a conference as Collins proposed.

"We Americans are in the habit of sitting around the table and reasoning out our problems," he said. "I am satisfied that we can keep our heads and find a way out of these difficulties."

Sen. Barrett (R-Wyo) said he hopes a concrete White House proposal for establishment of the bipartisan commission will be forthcoming soon. He said that even if Congress doesn't act favorably on it, the proposal might prompt hearings at which "all the people who have a direct interest in this matter" could testify.

HARRIMAN URGES SOUTH DROP BIAS

Times by

Sun. 7-15-56

New York

In North Carolina, He Says End of Discrimination Is Vital to U. S. Security

By DOUGLAS L. DALES

Special to The New York Times.

ASHEBORO, N. C., July 14—Governor Harriman declared tonight that the eradication of racial discrimination was vital to the country's security and leadership of the free world.

The New York Governor came here at the invitation of the Young Democrats of North Carolina. They have extended similar invitations to other candidates for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

To an audience that considers questions of civil rights and the integration of Negroes into the public schools of top interest, Governor Harriman declared:

"Tonight in North Carolina I am the same man I was yesterday in New York. The goals I believe in, I believe in not just for New York but for all our country—not just for New Yorkers, but for all our people. And I believe they are the goals of all Americans of good will, wherever they may live."

Referring to the Supreme Court's segregation decision, Mr. Harriman said that "governmental authorities — Federal, state and local—have the obligation to go forward in accordance with these decisions and, through normal procedures, see that the law is complied with."

Mr. Harriman's trip here was his first visit to the South since he avowed his active candidacy for the nomination last June 9.

He was greeted at the Greensboro Airport by Representative Harold D. Cooley, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, and Harry Hall Wilson, president of the North Carolina Young Democrats.

As the Governor motored forty miles from Greensboro to Asheboro, press conferences were being held by Governor Luther H. Hodges, in Raleigh, and by Thomas Pearsall, in Asheville, to explain a legislative program to circumvent the Supreme Court's school segregation decision.

Mr. Pearsall is chairman of the advisory committee that drafted the legislation.

The North Carolina General Assembly will meet July 23 to consider the legislative program. The two key proposals would amend the Constitution to allow tuition grants for children not wishing to attend mixed schools and to allow local school boards to close schools in "intolerable" situations.

The pending session of the Legislature has aroused interest in the desegragtion issue to a high level. The constitutional changes will be voted on in a referendum in September.

Governor Harriman took pains today to emphasize that he had no intention of using Federal troops to enforce the Supreme Court decision.

At a picnic luncheon at Asheboro Country Club, he said: "Anyone who said I would send troops down South lied."

In his speech tonight, the Governor attributed the suggestion to the use of troops to "the present emotional atmosphere."

"Nothing," he added, "could be farther from the truth."

Mr. Harriman talked informally and answered questions to to a crowd of fifty at the picnic. Among them were fifteen of the state's seventy-two delegates to the Democratic National Convention. The delegation, which will be led by Governor Hodges, is expected to cast 55½ votes on the first ballot for Adlai E. Stevenson. A half-vote is expected to go to Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee.

Despite the pro-Stevenson sentiment among his hosts, Governor Harriman was well received on friendly terms.

Considerable resentment was voiced by young Democrats because of the failure of Governor Hodges to attend today's function. They coupled this with a distaste for the sympathy that Governor Hodges appears to be showing toward the move by Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina for a Southern bloc at the national convention.

National Scope Of The Race Problem

Advertiser 4-24 Montgomery, Ala.

The Asheville, N.C., Citizen

Sat. 7-21-56

THERE is a widespread impression that the problems of race, segregation and integration are confined to the Southern states.

Such is not the case. With Negroes flocking to the North and to the West Coast, the population pattern of the United States is changing and the problems have moved from the regional to the national stage. . .

In Chicago, for instance, the Negro problem is considered one of the two greatest challenges facing the city. . . .

To clarify the situation The Chicago Tribune assigned one of its writers, Roi Ottley, Negro author of books on Negro problems, to write a series of 10 articles. What reporter Ottley found is revealing.

Referring to the movement north of the Negro, Ottley said history records no comparable mass movement within a country.

World War I quickened demand for Negro labor in the North, but until 1930 there was only one northern city with a Negro population of 100,000. Today there are 12, with New York, Philadelphia and Chicago pushing toward a million each. Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, and St. Louis have nearly half a million. In 1930, California had only 80,000 Negroes. Today half a million live there, mostly in San Francisco and Los Angeles.

One migration stream flowed up the eastern seabord to New York. A second went from Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi to Chicago and Detroit, and a third, out of Louisiana and Texas, poured into St. Louis and Chicago.

Nearly 5,000,000 Negroes have moved out of the South and the migration continues daily. About one-third of the Negro population of the United States now lives in the North.

Ottley points out that the shock effect of this migration can hardly be calculated, but the social and political implications are profound. The lure of jobs and "both the fact and myth of northern equality" played roles in the migration. . . .

Edwin C. Berry, executive director of the Chicago Urban League, says "Chicago has the biggest Negro ghetto in the United States. In that ghetto they have segregated everything. There are even 23 segregated public schools, although this is due to residential segregation, not because of school board policy."

Ottley reported that in the North 85 to 90% of Negro children go to schools where the student body is completely or predominantly Negro. The child attends the school nearest his home. Thus migration has changed the school patterns in the North.

What is the over-all significance of this great migration?

To the South, as the trend continues, it means a lessening in the intensity of the Negro problem.

To the North, it means a mushrooming of problems.

To the American people, it is now a national problem. So far, no acceptable general solution has evolved.

The South Asks Understanding

News 7/14

From The Courier-Journal, Louisville

Rarely has the real mind of the Democratic South been revealed so clearly as in the "Unity Caucus" in Atlanta. This gathering of spokesmen from 11 states that comprised the old Confederacy produced a statement which some may regard as the height of futility, saying nothing. But there are those who know better. They will see signs of a kind of agony, psychological yearning for justification and a bargain.

In effect the statement says that all the South asks of the rest of the country, and particularly of the Democratic Party, is to acknowledge that the South is loyal—but special. Admit this, it seems to say, let this admisison be reflected in simple decorum, and practically all will be forgiven.

It seems to become a matter of punctilio, of moderation not only in a sense of spirit but just as important, in actual word and gesture.

Birm., Ala.

One begins to see the point of the two declarations by Southern members of Congress in the recent session—the one against pressures for abrupt ending of segregation in schools, the other protesting the President's civil rights bills. Neither of these so-called manifestoes could have had any practical effect, and nobdy knew it better than the Southerners who signed it. But both were vehicles of self-expression as well as records for the constituents back home.

Tri 8-10-56

In spite of language which in spots was aggressive almost to match the secession-ist documents of a century ago, both manifestoes were appeals to be heard, to be understood, to be accepted. So is the one this week.

Take, for example, the central core of the Atlanta declaration: "We recognize the problems and political necessities of other states and we insist that they in turn recognize ours." It goes on to say: "With mutual understanding the national Democratic convention can write a platform acceptable to the South and to the nation."

This, of course, has its wistful side, and in a practical sense it is a very big order. But what is it really saying? It seems to us to say that the South wears its feelings on its sleeve, for one thing; that it wants to stay in the Democratic Party, for another; that it wants to be reasonable and responsible but that certain acts and words by others are bound to bring out the unreasonableness and irresponsibility of its majority.

Say the Southern spokesmen are asking the party and the country to recognize pride, frustration and even a pathological sensitiveness. Say they are asking that a kind of immaturity be induged.

As a matter of fact, this is what a lot of the previous explosive protest has amounted to. It is comparable to the displays of the Confederate flag that in many a Southern spot are everywhere to be seen. These can have no practical effect, any more than the recent manifestoes. They appear mainly as demonstrations of youth, few of whom have any knowledge of the Confederacy's import; any knowledge, for example, that the Confederacy itself clung almost yearningly to the very forms of the Union.

The Confederate Constitution confessed spiritual, political and institutional ties with the rest of the country. It even forbade the African slave trade. It was, except for its extreme insistence on states' rights as above those of the central government, a virtual replica of the Federal Constitution. But the flaunters of the Confederate flag rarely are aware of these things. They want to insist that they are different and that this difference be acknowledged.

That is what the gentlemen in Atlanta have said this week. And what we cant' help noting as most significant, the Southern declaration doesn't say a word about the Supreme Court or the President's program. It doesn't even lay down any definite terms. It says Southerners want to be happy in Chicago in a fraternity of understanding Democrats. It could be an advance toward genuine unity in the political sense.

There is an appeal to political realism not only from the "Unity Caucus" but in responses from Democratic leaders of other regions. When one recalls how platform planks on this subject have immemorially been used as vote-catchers rather than as honest dedications, one may see the point of a statement in the Atlanta conference by Sen. John Sparkman.

This Alabama running-mate of Adlai Stevenson in 1952 pointed out that the main substance of a party's appeal to the nation lies in the strength, integrity and fitness of the candidate, not in words. It is the same sort of thing that Sen. Paul Douglas seems to be saying.

The Illinois senior senator, a spokesman for liberal causes, knows as well as anybody else, perhaps better than most, the inevitability of social progress and the ethical view in man's relationships, platform plank or no platform pank. He for one, he suggests, is aware of the meaningless and destructiveness of promises that can't be kept but that still are uttered for the sake of immediate advantage. The threat of force bills, which the Southerners see as implicit in the demands of those who would read the South out of the Democratic Party, is not only a moral but a practical liability.

Editorials

The South: A Ridiculous Nuisance

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sat. 6-30-56

IN ITS fanatical zeal to hold on to its bi-racial pattern of life, a tiny minority of Southern white people is making that section a ridiculous nuisance.

This would be a matter of small moment if the nonsense emanating from Dixie were confined to this tiny minority represented by the White Citizens Councils; but unfortunately it has been demonstrated that the majority of the spokesmen, officials and opinion-formers of the regions are in agreement with the views and program of this minority—or at least do not oppose them.

The majority of the United States Senators and Representatives from the South have signed their names to a manifesto which, in effect, calls for undermining and violating the Constitution of the United States which they have sworn to uphold.

They have sought by word and action to convince the rest of the American people of the correctness of their cause and the approval of civil disobedience.

They have had introduced into the House of Representatives a bill which would prohibit the Supreme Court from reviewing a decree which had been in effect for 50 or more years without specific permission from the Congress, and this bill provides that it shall be retroactive to January, 1954, the purpose being to nullify the Supreme Court ruling against segregation in the public schools and to uphold the "separate but equal" Supreme Court ruling of 1896.

The majority of the American people has at no time indicated that it wished to return to the standards of 1896, and the unreconstructed South is making a fool of itself when it seeks to force its reactionary views upon the rest of the country.

However, this sort of thing seems to be characteristic of the South, although the view prevails that the South has changed; that it has grown up in the past half-century, not only economically but intellectually; that, in a word, it has become civilized, but now we know better.

The hoary old racist claptrap is still widely believed and the primordial prejudices based on the concept of white supremacy are apparently widely held despite nearly a century of popular schooling.

The evil of lynching has departed, and the most odious discriminatory practices have at least been mitigated, but it is quite clear, that the actual progress in Dixie has been overestimated.

It would be a shameful blotch on the escutcheon of America if this nuisance in the South should pervade other areas of the country and force the destruction or nullification of the Federal Constitution to satisfy a very small proportion of the people.

READERS' POINT OF VIEW: What Rights Are the Negroes Seeking?

Courier-Journal

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal:

Under the heading, "Advice to the Negro," Theodore A. Sullivan says that everytime he reads The Courier-Journal he reads something the N.A.A.C.P. has to say about integration. Of course he says that white folks aren't saying anything.

Not long ago about 70 Southern senators and representatives signed a paper declaring the Supreme Court decision on segregation is void and the South isn't bound by it. Well, the Supreme Court is the highest court in the U. S. or so I was told. If anytime, anywhere, men will break the law knowingly, what are we coming to anyway? Why do men talk of brotherhood, also of God? Do they really believe in either? Why do we have to have special laws to compel the white man to treat the Negro right?

The great Civil War was fought for the freedom which we are supposed to enjoy. As American citizens we are supposed to enjoy all the rights accorded any other American citizen.

He speaks of the N.A.A.C.P. as if it were something for Negroes to be ashamed of. Well, I am a Negro and I am proud to belong to so great an organization. It stands for the very things that he is against, equal justice under the law, no more.

Minority Bloc Rule Alleged

Courier-Journal

The nine men of the Supreme Court who handed down the desegregation decision are men who received their jobs because they are political friends of presidents. It is just as likely for a stupid man to be appointed as it is for a brilliant man to receive the job. These nine men cannot be held accountable for any bad decision they may make, because theirs is a lifetime job and at no time do they have to answer to the people.

Their recent desegregation decision said in effect that nine men before them were wrong when they handed down the decision of "equal facilities" in schools for Negro and white students some years ago. The question can be rightly asked which of these two courts made the correct decision in the light of the Constitution? How can the checks and balances work in our government when at any time they choose any state law can be made invalid and in fact, any part of our Constitution can be nullified by nine men who are not elected by the people, and do not have to answer to anyone, including the President who appointed them.

The N.A.A.C.P., the liberal party of New York and minority groups are putting continuous pressure on our government for their pet projects. In a democracy the majority is supposed to rule. However, this country is now ruled by letter writing, bloc voting, minority groups who want to Europeanize the U. S.

HENRY HOWARD.

Prestonsburg, Ky.

Losing servant role driving group crazy?

Afro-American p. 3

CHICAGO — Loss of their "honorable and respected places as servants in the homes of "their masters," is driving an increasing number of colored Virginians into insane asylums.

That, in effect, is what Dr. David C. Wilson, professor of neurology and psychiatry at the University of Virginia Hospital, Charlottesville, told the American Psychiatric Association in convention here last week.

He said:

"The colored man in Virginia is better off economically and legally than ever before, but he is more closely segregated. He has lost the security of his own culture and is moving rapidly toward a middle class white culture."

"FORTY YEARS ago colored and white families lived across the street from each other in Virginia, the children played with each other and adult colored people worked in white homes or on the farms.

"The relationship between white and colored was that of master and servant. The colored man had a place which was honorable and respected but definitely inferior."

NOW, HE SAID, he owns his own home is better dressed, probably owns a car and has moved from an agricultural to an urban culture ,but . . .

"In spite of all this he is more segregated than he was 40 years ago while his culture was fixed, and he has no status as he moves from a culture of his own into a white culture."

Race Relations Worse, Say Dixie Editors

Courier-Journal Thurs. 2-23-56 Louisville, Ky.

15 Split on Final Effect Of High-Court Ruling

Washington, Feb. 22 (AP)— Most of 15 newspaper editors interviewed on the segregation issue believe white-negro relations in the South have worsened since the Supreme Court ordered an end to segregated public schools.

Some of the editors — who come from the Deep South, border states, and Texas—voice a fear that bloodshed may stem from the order. Opinions differ markedly on whether the decision has slowed or hastened progress toward equality of educational opportunity.

A copyrighted interview in U. S. News & World Report, an independent weekly news magazine published in Washington, includes a statement by a Negro editor, Percy Greene of the Jackson (Miss.) Advocate, that relations between the races are "infinitely worse" now than before.

'An Eyewink From Murder'

A white publisher, Buford Boone of The Tuscaloosa News, says his community "was almost an eyewink away from murder" in the rioting that developed over admission of a Negro girl to the University of Alabama.

"The mob on the University of Alabama campus would have killed this girl if they could have got their hands on her," Boone says.

And Frederick Sullens, editor of the Jackson (Miss.) News, predicts:

"Violence will inevitably follow any hasty movement to force Negroes into the white schools of Mississippi."

5 Thinks Things Are Worse

Others who believe the situation is worse are Grover C. Hall, Jr., editor of the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser; James G. Stahlman, publisher of The Nashville (Tenn.) Banner; Thomas Waring, editor of The Charlestown (S. C.) News and Courier; Hodding Carter, editor of The Delta Democrat-Times at Greenville, Miss., and Virginius Dabney, editor of The Richmond Times-Dispatch editorial page.

Estimates vary widely as to when, if ever, Southern schools will be integrated.

C. P. Liter, executive editor of The Baton Rouge (La.) Advocate and State Times, would be surprised to see it in his lifetime.

Mark F. Ethridge, publisher of The Courier-Journal, believes it could be achieved in five to 10 years.

'Some Areas Won't Integrate'

C. A. McKnight, editor of The Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, believes integration will spread gradually in the South but "there are some sections that are simply not going to desegregate their schools even at the point of a bayonet."

E. B. Braswell, editor of The Athens (Ga.) Banner-Herald, is one of those asserting progress toward equality of educational opportunity has not been hampered by the ruling.

Editor Charles E. Green of The Austin (Tex.) American-Statesman, says people are taking the integration move "pretty much in stride." He adds, however: "I think if the enforcement is too rapid it could set things back."

HARRIMAN URGES ZEAL IN BIAS FIGHT

Times 2-28-56 New York

Says Moderation Cannot Win Against Bigot Standing for Oppression

Times 5-8-56

Governor Harriman called on Ne wYorkers yesterday to show "zeal, not moderation" in leading the nation in a war against discrimination.

He was a luncheon speaker at the annual conference of the twelvt citizens' councils of the State Commission Against Discrimination at the Sheraton-Astor Hotel.

Mr. Harriman, a possible Democratic Presidential nominee, called for greter support of the Court's ruling on school desegregation.

He called the decision "the most important moral advance of our time."

"It needs more than ever the moral backing of every citizen, as wel las the dedicated implementation of the courts, the Chief Executive, the states and the Congress," he said.

Mr. Harriman also inferentially criticized Oswald D. Heck, Speaker of the State Assembly, for his attack two weeks ago on Charles Abrams, head of the anti-discrimination commission. Mr. Heck charged that Mr. Abrams was a "zealot" and lacked "balance" and was "unfit" for the post.

Says Only Zeal Can Win

"Only zeal, not moderation, can win the fight against discrimination," the Governor said. Only the zealot fighting for equality can win against the bigot standing for oppression.

"The danger today is not from those who stand for equality and press for it with zeal, but from those who impede their efforts by petty partisanship, from the inresponsibilities who would like to turn the masses into the mob, and from the indifferent, who don't care."

Saying that heretofore the Federal Government had banned discrimination in state-aided operations, he acclaimed as an "historic shift" New York's new law against discrimination in federally aided housing.

He said the state had "moved from the old doctrine of 'states rights' to embrace a new doctrine of 'states duties.'" He departed from his text to charge that the South had "perverted" the states rights doctrine "to mean domination" of minorities.

"It is the rights of the individual that we should be expanding and protecting," he said, "not the rights of states or of government."

Flies to Washington

The Governor left the luncheon to fly to Washington to appear today before Senate and House subcommittees to urge appropriations for flood control projects on the upper Susquehanna River in Broome County.

Deputy Mayor John Theobald read the speech of Mayor Wagner, who was to have been at the luncheon but was attending the funeral of his cousin, Mrs. Kenneth Steinrich. The Mayor said in his speech that he could "understand" a southern appeal for "gradual" school desegregation, but that the South had rejected "moderation" or its equivalent for outright opposition to the court ruling.

Mr. Abrams said both major political parties would be "pressed for watered-down civil rights planks" in the national platform this year. He said also that "current political jockeying highlights" an attempt to effect a North-South alliance that, he warned, threatened gains in the fight against discrimination.

He said that because of greater governmental power today such an alliance could affect social and other legislation and Federal housing policies and lead to "leveling down the national morality."

About 1,100 leaders in labor, management, religious, educational and civic groups from throughout the state participated in afternoon panel discussions on problems in combating discrimination.

Segregation Views Aired at Princeton

Herald p. 5-B

Miami, Fla.

Southern Editor and NAACP Official Cool but Cordial

Thurs. 5-3-56

PRINCETON, N.J. —(AP)— The editor of a South Carolina newspaper said at a symposium that Southern white people have a "right" to separate education because of "social differences which cannot be bridged."

Another speaker, an official of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said school segregation only postpones "the final facing of reality."

Thomas R. Waring, editor of The Charleston (S.C.) News and Courier, defending the concept of separate but equal educational facilities, said at the Princeton University meeting:

"It's unfashionable these days to suggest there are cultural differences that can't be bridged. The Southern whites demand the right to bring up their children in the same culture they were raised in."

Waring and Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, were cordial but cool as they faced each other before an audience of some 250 students, faculty members and townspeople.

Wilkins said he was "deeply hurt" by the statement of a University of Alabama student, putting the state of Alabama first and the United States second. The statement was made on television during the "Miss Lucy" controversy at the University, Wilkins said.

The NAACP official said he fights for "southern white boys" as much as for southern Negro boys.

He charged that "southern whites are doing an injustice to their children" by segregating them and keeping them from facing the racial situation.

"The Negro goes north to seek higher wages rather than to escape segregation in the south," he said.

Waring criticized northern intervention in the desegregation matter.

"After 25 years of unsuccessful propaganda from the North," he said, "I think their suggestions would carry more conviction if they included plans for large-scale colonization of the North by southern Negroes."

The editor said there is a desire for segregation in the North. He added: "White northerners are moving to the suburbs principally to obtain separate schools."

Says South Can Solve Own Problems

Post-Herald Mon. 5-7-56

Birmingham, Ala.

Blasts Agitation By Outside 'Intruders'

WASHINGTON, May 6 (U.P.)—Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D., La.,) said today that "bloodshed" would result if school integration is forced on the South within the next five to 10 years.

Ellender was one of several congressmen who debated the civil rights issue on Sunday television shows.

The programs amounted to a preview of the expected bitter civil rights fight at the Democratic National Convention next August. They also featured a side attack on the Eisenhower administration's stand on the issue.

Ellender said white and Negro leaders in the South can solve the integration problem if they are "not agitated" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other "intruders from the North."

But he warned that "there would be bloodshed . . . in all of the Southern States" if any attempt is made "overnight" to enforce the Supreme Court's school integration decision.

Ellender also said the platform adopted by the Democratic convention will determine whether there will be a 1948-style Dixie bolt.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.), who led the fight for the strong civil rights legislation which prompted the 1948 walkout, served notice he was in no mood for compromise this year.

He conceded there "may be some difficulty" at the Democratic convention but said he is convinced a party majority will adopt "a good strong civil rights program" backing the Supreme Court's integration ruling.

Humphrey said some Southerners may bolt the convention but predicted that "most will stay and support the party candidate and platform."

At the same time, the Minnesota Democrat assailed the Eisenhower administration as "Leap Year Liberals" who pay lip service to the Democratic civil rights plank but do little about it.

"Get me 15 Republicans in the Senate and we'll have a civil rights program," he said.

Ellender said Southerners believe the desegregation drive was "accelerated" by the Republicans under Chief Justice Earl Warren, a GOP appointee.

He said he doubted if integration in primary and secondary schools could be brought about in the South in the next five or 10 years. Asked if the South would accept a more gradual shift to integration, he said only that the problem should be handled "by the people involved."

Sen. John W. Sparkman (D., Ala.) predicted that the South will be solidly Democratic this year with no spilt or third party. Sparkman, the party's 1952 vice presidential nominee, appeared on the American Broadcasting Co. television show, "Celebrity Parade."

He said he hopes the Democratic convention can write a civil rights plank in the party platform which, "while not satisfying to everybody, at least will be acceptable to the country as a whole."

Rep. James C. Davis (D., Ga.) said "he certainly will not concur" if the Democratic Party platform includes a civil rights plank similar to the one written in the 1952 campaign. Davis appeared on the NBC-TV program, "American Forum."

Roadblocks to desegregation can and must be swept away

Afro American P. 5

MIAMI, Fla. — "The action of the United States Supreme Court in outlawing school segregation reflects the Christian spirit of all nations and all people."

This declaration was made by Dr. Roy C. Ross, executive secretary of the National Council of Churches, to the delegates of the 35th quadrennial conference of the AME Church here Thursday night.

Speaking at Dinner Key Auditorium, where the conference sessions are held, Dr. Ross said there are some roadblocks to the court's decision but "it can be done."

He emphasized that "it can be done if those responsible match a sense of good judgment with human dignity" as the court has done.

Sat. 5-12-56

THE COUNCIL official, who recently returned from a trip around the world, said he found "churches are rising in common judgment in order that they may move forward."

He said he also learned how much of a "big role America plays in world affairs, but at the same time how inadequately we play the role."

He expressed appreciation for the connection of the AME Church with the council, which represents 35,000,000 Christians.

* * *

DR. ROSS was introduced to the conference by Bishop D. Ward Nicols, secretary of the AME Bishops Council, who also serves as vice pesident of the National Council of Churches and is vice chairman of the council's general fund.

Bishop Nichols took a trip to Russia as a representative of the Council. — ART CARTER.

Writer to Survey North Race Bias

Herald Fri. 5-4-56

Miami, Fla.

NEW YORK —(UP) — A former newspaperman announced Thursday he is making a survey under a Fund for the Republic grant to determine "how successfully" desegregation is proceeding in the North. P. 10-A

David Loth is a former newsman with The New York World and The New York Times, as well as an author and information executive.

Loth said the survey will cover the last two years since the U.S. Supreme Court ordered public schools desegregated and is expected to provide "a representative and comprehensive list of places and groups where Negroes and whites were segregated two years ago but now meet or learn or work or play or worship together."

He said the list will cover virtually all phases of human relationship.

"Leaders of both races have told us that such an inventory can help maintain and continue the orderly process of desegregation," Loth said.

"We think it will show the ways in which integration is proceeding and encourage those who hesitate to embark upon a desegregation program in the face of resistance or apathy."

Loth added that "while national attention has been focused on the South, it is obvious that segregation is a Northern problem too.

"We believe the results of our survey when published, which we hope will be within a few months, will indicate how successfully the North is proceeding.

38a 1956

GENERAL

Asians Told U. S. Race Picture Distorted Abroad

Courier-Journal 5-6-56

Five Visitors Studying South In on Panel Talk

By POUCHER COLEMAN

Seeking information about racial problems and industrial growth in the Southern United States, five educators from Asia were told yesterday that:

1. The rest of the world has a distorted picture of the race problem in the United States, and this country is moving rapidly toward desegregation.

2. Industrialization in the South, which has grown rapidly in recent years, presents different problems than it does in Asia.

4-Hour Panel Held

The questions came up at a 4-hour panel discussion at the Seelbach Hotel. Participants were:

Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University and a former resident of Louisville; Dr. William J. McGlothlin of the Southern Regional Educational Board; Norman E. Isaacs, managing editor of The Louisville Times, and Dr. Robert Warner and Dr. Ray Birdwhistell, University of Louisville professors.

The Asian members were Drs. U Lu Pe Win, Burma; Nguyen Quang Trinh, Vietnam; G. P. Malalasekera, Ceylon; Sukit Nimmamaheminda, Thailand, and Mian Mohammad Sharif, Pakistan.

The Asians were told by Clement:

The U. S. Supreme Court decision ruling public-school segregation unconstitutional did not come too suddenly, as some people have contended. As far back as 1917 a desegregation case involving housing was taken to the Supreme Court.

Segregation has not caused American Negroes to listen to Communists' appeals. They feel the law is on their side, and they prefer to resort to law rather than violence in their fight against segregation.

Blames Press Reports

Isaacs said press-association dispatches to foreign countries—or the lack of them—are responsible for other nations' lack of understanding of our race problems and how we are solving them.

"Cable space is limited and violence is news," he said. "Violence gets into dispatches abroad. If a presentation like Dr. Clement's were put on the wire, it would correct many misapprehensions."

Several members of the panel referred to a Gallup poll published in The Courier-Journal yesterday morning. It showed that an overwhelming percentage of Americans interviewed favored integration, either immediately or gradually.

Traces Industrialization

McGlothlin traced the industrialization progress of the South, which did not reach its present pace until after World War II.

He cited as former deterrents the freight rate structure which he said discriminated against the South in favor of Northeastern industrialists, and the South's aversion to social changes.

Birdwhistell, acting as moderator, commented that unionization has tended to increase equality in wages paid in the north and the south.

It's Local Problem In U. S.

Warner noted that industrialization in the United States is a problem of local authorities; in Asia it would be controlled by the central governments.

Malalasekera repeated what he had told Mayor Broaddus the previous day: "All Asian countires need more information about the United States."

He addde: "We are not anti-American. We are pro-ourselves."

Two public sessions are planned at the University of Louisville today.

Dr. Davidson To Preside

At 10 a.m., U. of L. President Philip G. Davidson will preside at the Playhouse at a meeting at which Sharif, Win, Dr. Clement, and Dr. Warner will speak.

At 8:15 tonight, all five Asians will speak briefly and the meeting will be thrown open for questions. McGlothlin will be chairman. The meeting will be in the Allen Courtroom at U. L.

SOBELOFF SCORED BY SOUTHERNERS ON RACIAL VIEWS

Times 5-6-56 New York, N. Y.

Assailed at Senate Hearing on Judgeship Nomination as 'Unsympathetic'

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 5—Solicitor General Simon E. Sobeloff was bitterly denounced by a group of witnesses from the South today at a Senate hearing on his nomination to the United States Court of Appeals.

Mr. Sobeloff was nominated for the Fourth Circuit, which takes in Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia and the Carolinas.

"Mr. Sobeloff doesn't show that he's proud of the white race," Bruce Dunstan, a real estate man from Richmond, Va., said. "He is totally unsympathetic to the problems of the while people of the South."

Another opponent, William Stephenson of the Virginia League, told the hearing:

"Virginia says: 'Deliver us from a man with such foreign ideas.'"

Mr. Sobeloff's nomination was endorsed by the American Bar Association, several Maryland bar leaders and judges, the Justice Department and Maryland's two Republican Senators, J. Glenn Beall and John Marshall Butler. Mr. Sobeloff is from Baltimore.

The hearing, before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee, was the first action taken on the nomination since President Eisenhower submitted it last July 15.

Presented Compliance View

Much of the delay apparently has resulted from the opposition of some southern Senators who associate Mr. Sobeloff with the decision of the Supreme Court in 1954 that held segregation in the public schools was unconstitutional.

Actually, Mr. Sobeloff was not Solicitor General when the Constitutional issues in the school case were argued. He appeared in the case only the next year, 1955, in arguments as to how the decision should be implemented. He then presented the Government's view that gradual compliance should be allowed—the position eventually taken by the Court.

Word of continued opposition to the nomination was sent today by three southern Democratic Senators, Sam J. Elvin of North Carolina, Olin Johnston of South Carolina and John Stennis of Mississippi. Nevertheless, the feeling at the Capitol now is that Mr. Sobeloff's long-delayed appointment will be approved before adjournment.

The subcommittee's Democratic chairman, Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming, and Senator Arthur Watkins, Republican of Utah—the only members present today—indicated they would vote to confirm.

The other members are Senators Thomas C. Bannings, Democrat of Missouri; John McClellan, Democrat of Arkansas, and Herman Walker, Republican of Idaho. Senator Hennings has said he will vote for confirmation.

The subcommittee may vote next week. After that the nomination goes to the full Judiciary Committee. The chairman, Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, has opposed Mr. Sobeloff's appointment. At this point, however, he is not expected to attempt to block action.

A large and occasionally noisy audience packed the hearing room today. Three women, wearing small Confederate flags on their dresses, cheered occasionally for the Southern witnesses.

Among those who testified for Mr. Sobeloff was Judge Morris N. Soper of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth circuit, for whose seat Mr. Sobeloff was nominated. Judge Soper said he and the two other members of the court, Chief Judge John J. Parker and Judge Armistead M. Dobie, all endorsed Mr. Sobeloff. He added that their youngest judge, Mr. Parker, was 70 years old, "and we need help."

Peters Case Mentioned

Aside from Mr. Sobeloff's asserted feelings against segregation, opposition witnesses mentioned his refusal last year to sign the Government brief in the case of Dr. John P. Peters.

Dr. Peters, who was dismissed from Government work after a loyalty hearing, had attacked the findings because he was not allowed to face his accusers. The Government brief, with which Mr. Sobeloff disagreed, argued that no one had any right to face an accuser in loyalty or security proceedings. The Supreme Court found for Dr. Peters, but on narrow grounds.

John V. Lindsay, executive assistant to Herbert Brownell Jr. the Attorney General, testified that Mr. Sobeloff's action in the Peters case "was taken with the knowledge and consent of the Attorney General."

He quoted Mr. Brownell, who is in Ohio, as follows:

"The conduct of the Solicitor General in all matters before that high office has been in the best traditions of the law."

One witness, Mrs. Peder P. Schmidt of Minnesota, began her statement by attacking fluoridation.

"We're not discussing that problem here," Sen. O'Mahoney said gently. "That goes to some other committee."

A farmer from Darlington County, South Carolina, O. L. Warr, said he did not question Mr. Sobeloff's ability or integrity but felt his views were too different from those in the states covered by the Fourth Circuit. He said the nomination was "a provocation" to sensitive southern feelings on the race issue.

Mr. Stephenson objected to a statement by Mr. Sobeloff that the Bill of Rights "is the embodiment of the highest religious teachings." Mr. Stephenson said this indicated a desire to mix church and state, and he added: "Whose religious teachings?"

The Fairfax Citizens Council of Virginia filed a protest against, among other things, Mr. Sobeloff's criticism of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act.

Senator Johnston had accused Mr. Sobeloff of improper conduct in connection with the receivership of the Baltimore Trust Company in 1935. He suggested subpoenaing the receiver, John D. Hospelhorn of Maryland, and the committee did so. But Mr. Hospelhorn praised Mr. Sobeloff and said he "discharged his duties most creditably."

Mr. Sobeloff testified last. He said he would handle any segregation problems "with fairness, understanding and moderation." But he emphasized that the Supreme Court has spoken on the principle and that, like any lower court judge, he would be bound by that ruling.

During one line of questioning Senator O'Mahoney mentioned the famous [illegible]phorism of Finley Peter Du[illegible] as "Mr. Dooley," that the [illegible]me Court follows the ele[illegible]turns. Te Senator asked [illegible]obeloff forr a comment.

"[illegible] Mr. Sobeloff said, [illegible]think I've got enough [illegible]w without commenting

Courier-Journal Photo

TALKING IT OVER during a luncheon break are, from left, Dr. William J. McGlothlin, Dr. Ray Birdwhistell, Dr. Rufus Clement, and Norman Isaacs, who spoke at panel meeting with five Asian visitors yesterday.

Kentucky Publisher Warns

Southerners Going Against 'Moral Conscience Of U. S.'

New Orleans, La.
Sat. 3-3-56

Gainesville, Fla. (ANP)—Anti-integration Southerners are setting themselves up against the "moral conscience of the rest of the country and indeed the world," a noted Southern newspaper editor said here last week.

Mark Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times, told a University of Florida audience that "desegregation hangs like a dark cloud over the South."

He spoke on a program sponsored by the University Lecture Committee and the School of Journalism and Communications.

Since the historic Supreme Court desegregation decision, he said, "councils have sprung up that are, despite their respectable sponsors, nothing more than uptown Ku Klux Klans, using instead of tar and feathers equally destructive economic pressure."

Ethridge called the interposition proposals advance by a group of Southern governors a pursuit of every evasion of the Supreme Court decree that they have been able to devise. He declared:

"Under the leadership of Virginia, which presented an idea and not a plan, some states have ridden off like headless horsemen into the woods of nullification.

"Nobody has proposed firing upon Sumter again, but the spirit of secession is there; secession from the moral conscience of the rest of the country and indeed of the world that is giving men of color their civil rights, their right to be free and to share fully in the bounties of civilization."

He said the challenge facing editors in the south is "to fight the black heartedness of prejudice and repression and fanaticism on the one hand and give calm counsel on the other to people who believe in living under the law and in expanding the freedom of all of us."

Says Dixie States Will Accede to Integration

Call Fri. 5-11-56
Kansas City, Mo.
P. 3

BY CONRAD CLARK

BOSTON, —(ANP) — "The South will comply with the decision of the Supreme Court of desegregation - although it may take a few years," Richard Harwood, staff writer of the Louisville Times in Kentucy, and a Nieman Fellow at Harvard, said here.

Harwood made his remarks before the Business and Professional Division of the American Jewish Congress at the Union Oyster House, and added that "if the South is unified today, it is the unity that arises in common adversity and produces a kind of desperate mob psychology."

Telling the group that the rural South is the key to the problem, because tides of intolerance are strongest there, Harwood pointed out that "economic conditions are so bad that the poor white need a scapegoat."

"This is a temporary state of mind and will pass as the pressures are diluted by time. Stronger forces than local bigotry are at work in the South."

Before concluding his remarks, the Nieman Fellow said "there are too many poverty-stricken families going through the hopeless routine of scratching soil that can never sustain them," in referring to what he called the rural slums.

"Their plight is not relieved by federal agricultural administration or the one that preceded it. What is needed for these people is not a system of price supports which benefit chiefly the large commercial farms, but rather a thorough-going program for economic and social rehabilitation," he concluded.

Not Dearborn's Mayor, But The People

Advertiser P. 4-A
Mon. 5-7-56
Montgomery, Ala.

THE Advertiser is pleased that The Christian Century, an organ of wide influence, has commended it for its Askelon clinic in Northern race disharmony. Nevertheless we are impelled to call attention to some dreaminess—typical of the idealists and romanticists—in The Century's editorial:

Thanks to The Montgomery Advertiser, a number of situations involving racial discrimination in northern cities are receiving needed attention. This Alabama paper, which is cool toward the white Citizens' Councils and which has tried, not always successfully, to be fair to the Negro protest movement against abuses on Montgomery buses, discovered the Trumbull Park tension in Chicago (see The Christian Century for March 21, pg. 366), and the practice of segregation in Dearborn, Mich.

When Mayor Orville Hubbard of Dearborn boasted that no Negro could live in Dearborn, where 15,000 Negroes work, the local council of United Church Women passed a resolution condemning him for this policy. The mayor replied that the churchwomen should move to a near-by segregated area inhabited mostly by Negroes. That did not stop the women, but brought to their help Episcopal Bishop Richard S. Emrich of Michigan. He called on "every pastor and Christian" to oppose the mayor's ideas, and presumably his practices. Bishop Emrich condemned Hubbard's racism as contrary to the "fundamental teaching of the Christian faith, the Constitution, our government under law and the wider interests of the United States." The bishop said: "Mayor Hubbard's views, picked up by the press and spread to Africa, southeast Asia and Japan, are worth many Russian divisions. He may for a time keep Dearborn white but he may also help to make some lands communistic."

All of this, thanks to The Montgomery Advertiser, will do good only if the church people of Dearborn and the ecclesiastical authorities of the city and of Michigan take steps to end segregation in Dearborn housing. This will inevitably require political action to elect a different kind of mayor, and that will not be possible without careful personal and community education.

What The Century has done here is to treat Mayor Hubbard as the cause, rather than the effect, of the segregated City of Dearborn.

As Mayor Hubbard explained to The Advertiser in the interview, one of the major reasons why his people have returned him to office for 15 years is because he believes in segregation and has seen to it that Dearborn is totally segregated. Get rid of Mayor Hubbard, who incidentally gives energetic, able government to his city, and Dearborn citizens would still be unwilling to have a Negro citizen reside in the city.

The Century suggests that if the pulpit and some citizen uplift group would pitch in, they could readily purge Dearborn citizens of their resistance to Negro neighbors. This, in the bountiful sparingly coming to report. phrase of Mayor Hubbard, is "social dream" stuff.

The Advertiser finds no satisfaction over a period of time, but it runs deep in the brutal fact that Negroes en- and comes natural. For example, The counter degrees of rejection wherever Advertiser is becoming increasingly in- they migrate in significant numbers, terested in the documented fact of Ne- but it must be reported as the pregnant gro discrimination against the Puerto reality confronting the clamorous dis- Ricans in New York. The Puerto Ricans have reason, our inquiries are revealing, to consider our formation of a NAAPR to supplement the NAACP.

Even Transplanted Yankees Are For It

Herald Mon. 5-7-56

Poll Shows South Is 100 Pct. for Segregation

Miami, Fla.

By NIXON SMILEY
Herald Staff Writer

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Polling Southerners to see how they stand on integration is a waste of time. P. 17-A

After three weeks of asking questions in Florida, Georgia and Alabama I have yet to find a white person who said he favors integration.

SMILEY

Strangely, the 100 per cent vote in favor of the status quo includes a large number of former Yankees who now operate tourist courts, restaurants or filling stations in the South.

Also among these with whom this question was discussed were college professors and business leaders.

In the South at present you could not expect a person to give you an affirmative answer even he is in favor of integration. He would be in danger of winning a reputation as a "nigger lover," which is the worst insult one Southerner can call another now.

★ ★ ★

EVEN FOR a person to suggest that he is in favor of gradual integration is dangerous. If he is in business he is almost certain to lose many customers. In small communities even the Negroes would hesitate to trade with him.

On the other hand, I have not talked with anyone who does not sympathize with the Negro, and everyone is in favor of aiding him in every way possible — short of integration.

In the Deep South, and particularly in small communities, even the suggestion that you might favor integration at some indefinite time in the future is a dangerous stand.

The case of Mr. and Mrs. Paul H. Reese, former Ohioans and now publisher and editor respectively of a newspaper in Mount Dora, Fla., is an example.

Mrs. Reese has urged Southerners in editorials not to resist integration or to hasten it. Her implication was the integration taken gradually would be painless.

In the meantime, however, she carried on a campaign against the sheriff of her county, Willis McCall, widely known for his bitter denunciation of integration ideas.

For their views explosives have been discharged in front of the Reese home. They have acknowledged that their stand on integration is very unpopular.

★ ★ ★

McCALL, on the other hand, represents the worst kind of Southern rabble rouser — the narrow-minded backwoods Cracker who makes "nigger hating" a profession.

I found that people in the Mount Dora area didn't want to discuss the Reese-McCall squabble.

An acquaintance of mine who has lived at nearby Leesburg for many years said that both Mrs. Reese and Sheriff McCall "give the county bad publicity."

"Most folks around here would like to see both of them shut up," he added.

I haven't asked the Negro whether he wants integration.

★ ★ ★

IN THE South the Negro usually tells the white man what he thinks the white man wants to hear.

For that reason, the claim by Southern white politicians that "most of the Negroes" in the South do not want integration is a worthless claim. It is true that the politicians may have asked many Negroes for their opinion, but the politicians got replies that they wanted to hear, rather than statements of the Negroes' true feelings.

Only by 'Other Fellow'

Herald P. 1

Southerners Deem Violence Unlikely Over Integration

Sun. 5-8-56 Miami, Fla.

By NIXON SMILEY
Herald Staff Writer

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—If and when Southern whites are forced into "integration" with the Negro, is there any danger of widespread violence?

SMILEY

Ask the opinions of Southerners in small towns and in the country and you get the answer, "Yes."

But press the same fellow for his considered judgment and his reply is likely to be different.

He expects that "somebody" will resist integration with violence, but not he.

During the more than three weeks I've been traveling through the South I've found nobody who, when pinned down, condones violence as a method of resisting integration.

People who know the Southerner well—or as well as he can be known — doubt that widespread violence will take place. This also seems to be the opinion of most Southern newspapers. Up to now there really has been only a small amount of violence. It has been local and it has been committed by persons with a hoodlum mentality.

In instances where whites have engaged in violent actions against the Negro since the Supreme Court's ruling in 1954, quick arrests have followed. Southern courts have not condoned violence.

Then, why all this hurrah over the integration question if the South's resistance is all talk?

Nixon Smiley, who was born in North Florida and grew up on a farm in Georgia, is revisiting that part of the South with which no one is as familiar as he. He is reporting on the changes which have taken place since his boyhood. This is another in his series of articles.

There is typical Southern strategy behind the actions taken by the several states. In the first place, these actions delay integration. And, more important, the Negro is certain to be deeply impressed by the white man's strong opposition to racial mixing.

The split between the two races is deeper today than at any time since Reconstruction days, when newly freed slaves were given political appointments in the South by a Republican administration.

During those days the whites used every means, including violence and blood-tingling intimidation of an ignorant race by the Klu Klux Klan in an effort to maintain white dominance.

But the South's present resistance to integration is not designed to frighten the Negro so much as to convince him of the white man's feelings. The white man wants the Negro to know in no uncertain terms that he does not want his children to mix with Negroes in schools; nor does the white man want to eat with Negroes or sit beside them on a bus.

Regardless of the expressed fears of some people in the North who know little about the South, such organizations as the present-day Klu Klux Klan and the several societies formed for "protecting" the white man have small following and are of negligible importance.

The intelligent Negro is not afraid of these organizations, nor is he afraid that the Southerner is going to do him bodily harm.

The days of police or mobs beating up "smart Negroes" is a thing of the past in the South. The federal government investigates reports of such beatings to see if the alleged victim's civil rights have been violated.

The "violent" South isn't nearly so violent as it once had a reputation for being.

But the South hopes that through its present strategy actual segregation may be maintained for years even when legal integration is a fact.

Negroes, it is hoped, will connue to send their children to schools located in Negro communities; and only the most thick-skinned Negroes are likely to brave the treatment they're sure to receive in white restaurants.

Integration is bound to come eventually. But the dream of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for quick and complete integration of the two races seems a long way off, at least from this viewpoint in the heart of Dixie.

IF THEY SAY IN DIXIE IS TRUE

Journal + Constitution

Prosegregation Problems Beset Negroes 'Up North'

Sun. 5-13-56 P. 6-A

Atlanta, Ga.

EDITOR'S Note: What happens to the Negro who turns his back on segregation in the South and hopefully heads north? What are his chances for a better job, better housing, better schooling north of the Mason-Dixon Line? Here is a first hand report by an AP correspondent who has covered the segregation story on both sides of the line since the Supreme Court's history-making decision.

38

By BEM PRICE

DETROIT, May 12 (AP) — The problem of race relations is not confined to the South.

There is racial discrimination in the North, certainly in the parts I visited. Many of the harsh things Southerners say about the life of the Negro outside the South are true.

But there is a difference: Legal and actual.

In Baltimore, New York, Chicago and Detroit the schools are integrated. Negroes are working at jobs which are closed to them in the South. With the exception of Baltimore, Negroes come and go in hotels, restaurants and theaters.

Further, each of these cities in the past 10 years has adopted anti-discrimination ordinances — Baltimore just last month.

Each city has set up an active public commission against discrimination with the expressed mission of breaking down prejudice because of race, religion, ancestry or national origin.

There is nothing comparable to these commissions anywhere in the South.

* * *

THERE STILL IS discrimination against Negroes in private employment in these four cities and barriers against them in private housing. A survey in New York, for example, indicates that 90 per cent of privately owned housing is not accessible to Negroes. All public housing is open to them, however.

Los Angeles, with the exception of the housing field, is the same. The Negro population has a greater geographic spread in Los Angeles than probably any other city of comparable size in the nation.

Housing is the greatest single source of racial tension in all the cities.

There are cities such as Cicero, Ill., adjacent to Chicago, and Dearborn, Mich., next to Detroit, which exclude Negro residents through community pressures.

And you can find instances in the North of mob action when a Negro family moves into an all-white neighborhood.

Where statistics are available, it can be shown that Negroes account for most of the arrests for major crimes—two-thirds of the murders in Chicago, 69 per cent of all felonies in Detroit.

New York City does not break down its arrest figures by race. Deputy Police Commissioner Walter Arm explained why.

"We find," he said, "that crime is among the poor. It is not by race."

* * *

THE MAJORITY of people on the general relief rolls are non-white—69 per cent, for example, in Detroit. Chicago gives aid to 55,433 dependent children, 75 per cent of whom are Negro.

Does the Negro flee the South just to get on relief rolls? The question was put to Welfare Commissioners Dan Ryan of Detroit, Henry McCarthy of New York City and Alvin Rose of Chicago. Their answers:

"I personally don't think the Negro moves North to get on welfare," said Ryan. "I think he comes in search of job opportunity."

McCarthy said: "They don't come to New York to get on relief. They come to work."

"No," answered Rose, "and besides it is almost impossible to get on relief immediately. There is a residency requirement of one year in the state and six months in Chicago. They have to have all sorts of records, too, before they can qualify—birth records, school records, doctors' certificates."

All three commissioners told the same story: The number of actual employables on general relief is small. More than 75 per cent of the people on relief are the aged, the ill, mothers with small children, and children.

Despite the slums and the discrimination, Negroes still are pouring North and Westward by the thousands. Even the most menial job pays between $1.50 and $2 an hour.

There are no really reliable figures on this migration and there won't be until after the 1960 census. One study, though, estimates that Negroes are arriving in Chicago at the rate of 2,500 a month.

* * *

IN LOS ANGELES, it was found that Negroes are arriving in the area at the rate of 1,500 a month. Many are coming directly from Alabama and Mississippi. Formerly the influx came largely from Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma.

The one real sore spot among Negroes is housing. In the three largest cities some sections of the slums are almost incredible—you wonder how humans can survive—and the pattern is the same. Negroes are concentrated—Harlem in New York, Center City in Detroit and the Southside in Chicago.

In New York's Harlem I found 50 people crowded into three rooms with one bathroom—and the toilet worked only irregularly. The smells and filth equaled anything in the Orient.

These concentrations of Negro population began in the days of the so-called restrictive covenants; that is, clauses in real estate deeds prohibiting the sale of property to non-whites. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled these clauses unconstitutional in 1948.

Even so there still are tacit agreements among property owners and real estate men, Negro leaders assert, not to sell to anyone but whites.

In the wake of the 1948 election, however, the pressure to escape the slums has been terrific. Negroes have moved outward, usually spreading block by block. Often they moved into homes vacated by whites who have shifted to the suburbs.

One result of this pressure is that the hearts of the major cities, Los Angeles excepted, are being taken over more and more by Negroes.

Where the two races meet they often clash. Perhaps the most famous cases are those involving Cicero and the Trumbull Park project in Chicago.

* * *

THE TROUBLE BEGAN in Cicero in July, 1951, when a Negro bus driver and his family moved into an apartment. The resentment in the all-white community reached its peak July 12 when 5,000 people rioted. It took 250 policemen and 450 National Guardsmen to restore order. The bus driver moved and since then, so far as Negro leaders know, no Negro has tried to move into the community.

Trumbull Park on the far Southside of Chicago, has been festering since 1953, when a Negro and his family moved into a housing project. After a series of riots, the Chicago police were forced to assign 1,200 patrolmen to maintain order.

The Trumbull Park disorders have continued intermittently since. Even now almost 100 policemen are assigned to the project to maintain peace.

Until recently members of the 28 Negro families now living in Trumbull Park were escorted into and out of the project by police. Now they come and go on their own though police keep a watchful eye on the routes they travel.

There have been repeated racial disturbances in Detroit.

Last October a Negro couple with three children moved onto Chalfonte street. A mob of about 1,000 collected and hurled rocks at the home. Two po[illegible]n were injured. The family sold and moved.

* * *

DETROIT IS A city where racial tensions are watched closely by the police. In fact, the city maintains a bureau of special investigation which deals largely with racial incidents.

Two of the detectives in this bureau are Sgt. Thomas Nickerson and Ed Boggs.

"Our job," said Boggs, "is to maintain order. Whatever we think we keep to ourselves. Anytime anybody wants to throw a brick at a house in Detroit, he had better remember one thing: There is going to be a cop between him and his target."

Boggs and Nickerson said also they always expected trouble after a racial incident in the South.

"After the Till murder case down in Mississippi," said Boggs, "we must have investigated 40 beatings of whites by Negroes. They just wanted to take it out on somebody."

(Emmett Till, a 14-year-old Negro, was slain in Mississippi last summer. The two white men accused of his murder were acquitted.)

The city of Dearborn, which adjoins Detroit, has achieved a certain measure of fame. It contains no Negro residents and the mayor, Orville Hubbard, is outspokenly prosegregation.

Charles Wartman, editor of a Negro newspaper, the Michigan Chronicle, said of Hubbard: "There's nothing like him anywhere else in Michigan. . . . I will say this, the pressure of Negro expansion has not reached Dearborn. For a Negro to move to Dearborn, he would have to take a large hedge hop. If the Negro population reaches the boundaries of Dearborn, they will move in."

Despite all the troubles of the North with discrimination there is no real comparison with segregation in the South, where the races are separated by law. The North is making steady progress toward equality.

Fifty Years of Progress

Disputed Fri 12-9-56 P. 6

"I'm going to talk to you today about cases I have lost," said Assistant State Attorney General Fred Hansen, when he talked recently before the "Hungry Club," an affiliate of the Hutcherson Branch of the YMCA, Tulsa.

Oklahoma City

The first assistant to Mac Q. Williamson proceeded to take for his subject, "Segregation in the Schools," beginning with Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation and bringing it on down through the Ada Lois Sipuel and G. W. McLaurin cases. Hansen told his audience that most attorneys like to talk about cases they have won, but this was an occasion he desired to talk about cases he had lost. Negroes in Oklahoma know that Mac Q. Williamson, as attorney for state government, vigorously upheld state laws until they were declared void by the United States Supreme Court. Since that time, as a loyal and patriotic American, the attorney general and his force have advised the governor and the state superintendent of public instruction to proceed in Oklahoma with a program of integration.

38a General

The first information Attorney Hansen provided for his Tulsa audience was that Abraham Lincoln in his first executive order, did not free all of the slaves in the United States. His order freed forever the slaves in Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana (certain parishes excepted); Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia (West Virginia and other portions excepted). About 3,120,000 slaves were thus freed; 830,000 slaves in the excepted parts were not freed."

When the 13th Amendment was written to the Constitution of the United States, that legislative enactment freed all of the remaining slave units in the nation who were not given their liberty by Lincoln's proclamation. This amendment was passed by Congress about eight months following the death of the immortal Lincoln. There were actually almost a million blacks who were still chattles in the states, following Lincoln's proclamation.

The 14th Amendment converted the former bondmen into citizens, and the 15th Amendment conferred upon them the right to vote. All of these war amendments constitutionalized Lincoln's freedom for Negroes and added all of those who were left out in the first ultimatum issued by the Civil War President.

Having disposed of Lincoln's executive order and the subsequent war amendments, Mr. Hansen hurried on to the first obstruction thrown in the path of Negroes during the period of Reconstruction.

Quite evidently the states down in Dixie quickly gave their attention solely to the separate provisions of the segregation laws of Louisiana, back in 1890, and dismissed entirely that provision that required the accommodations to be equal.

It was during the case of Plessy vs Ferguson the Supreme Court announced a theory of "separate but equal." According to Hansen, Louisiana state laws, following the Plessy vs Ferguson decision, required railway companies carrying passengers in their coaches in that state to provide equal, but separate, accommodations for the white and colored races, by providing two or more passenger coaches for each passenger train, or by dividing the passenger coaches by a partition so as to secure separate accommodations; and providing that no person shall be permitted to occupy seats in coaches other than the ones assigned to them, on account of the race they belong to . . . are not in conflict with the provisions either of the Thirteenth Amendment or of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

Those of us who live in this day realize that if Louisiana and the other southern states had lived up to, with integrity, the ruling of the Supreme Court, there would probably never have been any change in the law by the Supreme Court. But in 1946, when the Oklahoma Conference of Branches introduced the Ada Lois Sipuel case into court, the only observance of the law the South was paying any attention to was the separation of the races. It notoriously had forgotten entirely that the Supreme Court had said the accommodations must be equal.

A lot of folk did not know that in the Plessy vs Ferguson case the issue was not about schools but about steam boats. But the South made the principle that had been made about steam boats applicable to railroads, and finally to the schools. The rule was still to be that the accommodations must be separate BUT EQUAL.

All of us who have traveled in recent years realize that the Negro was finally forced out of pullman accommodations, which provide for eating and sleeping, while Negroes were told that those accommodations were provided solely for white people. This writer on one occasion, when invited to address college students at Wiley college, Marshall, Texas, was forced to sit up all night in traveling to this community, and we all know now the difference between the physical aspects of the Negro school and the white institution in the district where black folk live is easily distinguishable.

Unquestionably, the conservative position the Negro has always taken in this country would have persuaded him to have accepted separate arrangements for an indefinite period if the administrators of the law had insisted upon the "equal" provisions of state constitutions. This might have been carried out if the public service corporations had not declared in the nineties that it would be confiscatory to carry out those provisions of the law. The South was exposed as having a "beer income and a champagne appetite" when it came to the question of providing equal accommodations for a large portion of its citizenry, who lived in forced beggardom. Fair employment practice laws are slowly lifting Negroes to a plane in the economic structure where they can now pay for the accommodations the law says public service organizations must provide for them.

Some idea of just what white folk thought of black people can be gotten from an address William H. Murray, who was later governor of Oklahoma, made to the constitutional convention November 20, 1906. Murray is considered the framer of the constitution of this state and had the most outstanding voice during that period. At the opening of that convention, Mr. Murray is quoted as saying to the delegates:

> "We should provide for separate schools (for Negroes) and give the legislature power to separate them in waiting rooms and on passenger coaches and all other institutions of the state . . . As a rule they are failures as lawyers, doctors and other professions. He must be taught in the line of his own sphere, as porters, bootblacks and barbers and many lines of agriculture, horticulture and mechanics in which he is an adept . . . "

It will be recalled that Oklahoma came into statehood have had to suffer in Oklahoma for the last fifty years, and with the majority of white people thinking in terms of all of the statutory provisions that have joined with the "Negro domination." Interested territorial politicians took theory of Bill Murray and his followers that Negroes should the position that Negroes would eventually dominate the not be trained to be anything other than porters, bootblacks new state, and with their inferiority reckoned in terms of and barbers. Perhaps when Murray got back from his experience in South America, he had finally discovered that bootblacks, porters and barbers, the folk who fashioned the some of the dark people he had met had contributed to sendnew commonwealth were of course greatly disturbed. A lot ing him back to Oklahoma a pauper, and had given him a of folk have never known that Oklahoma passed a separate post course in race relations. At least there is no later school law different from any other in the Union. Oklahoma's two-mill levy for separate schools, which functioned record that shows him as the exponent of the doctrine that up to the outlawing of separate schools in the United States, all black folk are chumps. It was left for those who came was entirely different to any separate school law in the na- after him to establish fake law schools and attempt to perpetuate segregation. Murray did declare martial law and establish a line across which white and black people could not cross in Oklahoma City.

The address delivered by Mr. Hansen to the Hungry Club in Tulsa is a fine chart that both races should have in their possession, to trace the path down which the people of Oklahoma have trod towards a higher morality and social decency. Bill Murray lived long enough to learn over television that one cannot make racial units inferior by law, and he lived long enough also to see the governor, who sat in the same seat he had occupied, assisted by the attorney general of Oklahoma and the state superintendent of instruction, implement a program of integration. The Grandfather law, declared invalid almost a half century ago, along with the problems we are today facing up in Wagoner county and Okmulgee county, cause us to wonder whether or not our fundamental charter was written by statesmen or demagogues.

Assistant Attorney General Hansen's speech to the "Hungry Club" plows right on through the difficulties Negroes

Alabama Editors Are Saying

Advertiser P. 2-B

Trouble Brewing

Advertiser P. 2B

The Andalusia Star-News

Montgomery Ala.

The United States Supreme Court has directed that segregation on buses be outlawed.

Conferences of federal officials have been scheduled in Washington to implement this decision.

The Ku Klux Klan is riding again. Trouble, serious trouble, is brewing. Integration can be forced in the Deep South only at the point of bayonets by the armed forces.

And that enforcement will be accepted only so long as the troops remain on active duty in any locality where the Supreme Court edict is to be enforced.

Dixie is not yet ready for a ban on segregation.

Sun 11-25-56

Saying 'Shut Up' In Angry Times

Advertiser P. 2-B

Montgomery Ala.

IT WOULD be agreeable if the prospect was, that in evading the Supreme Court's impossible race mixing ruling, the South could abstain from repressions of free speech and unwise acts of inhibition and restraint.

But this unfolding "generation of litigation" won't witness any such tidy restraint if American history is a reliable guide.

The Southern people are embattled; the angry buzz is swelling; the Klan is emerging again; there are boycotts; citizens of both races who do not see things exactly as their neighbors do have their mouths zippered to avoid the pillory.

In every period of American history there have been times of anxiety, fright and belligerence that led to bigotry and repression. Usually these periods are begotten by wars or the fear of wars.

At such times, there is a brutish mob spirit that roars "shut up!" at the dissenter. There is a desire and often a design to wad a gag into the throat of the dissenter.

You can't kill a thought that way, but the public mind in times of turbulence thinks you can.

The inflamed public mind foolishly concludes that you can stop the music, as it were, simply by silencing a few "agitators." All human history mocks that assumption, but the lessons of history are lost to the impassioned.

Free speech is, as is so often said, a quite dangerous thing. It has and will lead to trouble. But free speech is not half so dangerous as the repression of free speech.

★

BUT, alas, in times of heat and fear American liberties have, from the birth of the Republic, been debauched—

¶ Against the dreadful flare of the French Revolution, the administration of John Adams enacted the Hitlerite Alian & Sedition Laws. There were fines and prisons for those who spoke or wrote "to defame" the President or Congress. Editors went to jail for criticizing President Adams. Congressman Matthew Lyon of Vermont went to jail for four months for calling Adams a stuffed shirt.

¶ During the Civil War, Lincoln suspended the writ of habeas corpus. Like a Himmler or a Beria, Secretary of War Stanton arrested some 13,000 citizens for disloyalty. They happened to be mostly Democrats who had done nothing wrong, but were merely thought to be risks.

¶ In World War I, Eugene Debs, four times the Socialist candidate for President, was sentenced to 10 years for a speech in Ohio.

★

THESE incidents in the course of War I reveal the national and individual instinct for intolerance and suppression—

¶ Several hundred servicemen swarmed into a Socialist newspaper office, wrecked the plant, slugged the editors.

¶ Police forced 118 steel strikers in West Virginia to kiss the flag.

¶ Congressman Victor Berger, of Milwaukee, was deprived of his seat because he was a socialist by a congressional vote of 309 to 1.

¶ The New York legislature refused to seat five Socialist legislators.

¶ A Californian who laughed at some recruits drilling in San Francisco was imprisoned.

¶ A New Yorker got 90 days for spitting on the street near some Italian officers.

¶ A movie producer got a $5,000 fine and a 10-year-sentence for trying to produce A Birth Of A Nation-type movie on the American Revolution. The judge's idea was that this would offend England.

There is no lack of examples down to the present, including a press muzzling law promoted by the Klan in 1927.

★

THE dread and anger aroused by the struggle over race mixing may stimulate such excesses.

Action must, has and will be taken in certain areas to resist a court dispensation that is unbearable.

But unwise acts of inhibition and restraint on free speech should be guarded against.

That is what the past teaches, if we are cool enough to read the past.

Presidential candidates asked to back integration

Pro-American P. 5

Baltimore Md.

NEW YORK—The American Jewish Congress recently urged the presidential candidates of both major parties to provide "affirmative leadership" in public school desegregation.

Sun. 10-13-56

The appeal was made in a resolution adopted by the group's executive committee in which Justice Wise Polier of the Domestic Relations Court presided as chairman.

The resolution asks the candidates to "assert and reassert their support of the Supreme Court's decision, their intention to bring about prompt compliance with its terms and their repudiation and condemnation of all efforts to nullify the decision and oppress those who assert their constitutional rights."

* * *

MAKING REFERENCE to the recent barring of two colored students from Texarkana (Texas) College despite a Federal court order to admit them, the agency charged that "The mob plainly engaged in a direct assault on the functioning of the Federal judiciary."

It further stated that:

"When such lawlessness exists, government by law is in danger," and urged that the Department of Justice enforce laws "prohibiting interference with the functioning of the Federal courts by taking prompt action against such persons" who defy the court order.

38a 1956

GENERAL

South Nothing More Than Old Confederate States

Afro-American Sat. 11-10-56 P. 6

Baltimore Md.

ATLANTA — "Today's South is nothing more or less than the old Confederate States of America, perpetuating the slave status of colored citizens by establishing a police state."

That was the blunt charge made last week by E. M. Martin, first vice president and secretary of the Atlanta Life Insurance Company here.

"The South," Mr. Martin declared, "is passing and enforcing laws that contravene the Bill of Rights, the Constitution and the inalienable rights of all human beings.

* * *

"HISTORY IS repeating itself—the white South is again getting rich and powerful off the sweat and blood and robbery of colored people of practically all their economic, political and social rights under the Constitution.

"Unless the Federal Government has the moral courage to protect its colored citizens, it is just a matter of time before these rapers of American democracy will take over and run America as they tried to do back in the '60's.

"It has been over 90 years since the Emancipation Proclamation and our Southern Democratic party has made the plight of the colored citizen in the deep South the laughing stock of the outside civilized world.

* * *

"THERE IS absolutely no hope for civil rights from the Democratic party until the party itself has the moral courage to rid itself of the dirtiest and most brazen rapers of freedom and democracy anywhere in the world — not excepting South Africa.

"Yes the Republican party has a few skunks here and there, but the Republican party, as a whole, has nothing in it that approaches, even in a small degree, the rapers of the colored race and freedom, as practiced by the Southern Democratic party.

Battle against slavery not won, says executive

ATLANTA — "I, a descendant of chattel slavery, know that the battle is not yet won," writes E. M. Martin, one of the South's leading business execuives.

"The firm which I have served for over 40 years, is owned wholly by colored people. It has admitted assets of over 40 millions, and surplus to policyholders of over 10 millions.

"Over 12 millions are invested in U.S. bonds; 226 Atlanta Life employes served in the armed forces during World War II, and a lesser number in the first World War. These boys fought to make the world safe for democracy.

"Isn't it high time for America to clean up the killers of liberty and justice in its own backyard, and guarantee freedom to its 12 million colored citizens in the South."

"The conscience of the whole civilized world, including many Southerners, was shocked by the brutal killing of the Till boy in Mississippi.

* * *

"BUT THERE was not enough Christian democracy in Mississippi to punish anybody for it.

"The public conscience was so low, degraded, and bloodthirsty, that I rather think God must be ashamed of Mississippi and all of His so-called Christian churches in that state.

"Southern Democrats are not satisfied with keeping colored citizens out of all government. They go further than this.

"Hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars are collected in taxes and fees of all kinds and descriptions from colored people.

* * *

"BUT, IN spending all these millions, colored persons, save for a few welfare and school jobs, are shut almost completely out of all work above that of a maid or janitor.

"And they call this democracy and say the Southern white man is the colored man's best friend.

"God have mercy on their souls!

"Not satisfied with all this, a great witch hunt goes on against any persons, white or colored, who dare recognize the divinity of the human personality in a colored man.

"The rulers preach the inferiority of men of color and consign them to a slave status, unworthy of association, in a supposed free economy, with other citizens.

"When we consider the white Slavecrats and those that succeeded them, raped colored women up to more than a million mulattos as of 1870, decent white men should bow their heads in shame and keep their mouths shut on this subject.

"It was and still is the rapers of Christianity and Democracy who yesterday raped colored slaves and later, colored near-slaves, who today, cry loudest about race mixing.

* * *

"I CAN CONCEIVE of nothing more degrading and even lower than the beasts of the field than raping of colored women to the tune of a million mullatoes, and no marriages or support, but in many instances their children were sold into slavery.

"Even monkeys, dogs and the lowest breed of animals have respect for their offspring, but not so the rapers of Christianity and Democracy, either yesterday or today, in the Deep South, if she happens to be colored.

"The truth of the whole matter is that the great mass of colored persons consider the rapers of their women, the robbers of their just rights and liberty, as little more than white brutes, clothed and covered with the blessings of the state and church.

* * *

"I DARE SAY the colored man or woman has not yet been born who would be happy as man and wife with any of the rapers of Christianity, Democracy, and killers of the souls of men.

"There are not enough rivers and seas in the Southland to wash the stains of the blood of colored victims off the hands, minds and hearts of great Southern governors, Senators, and above all many of the great ministers of the so-called Christian churches.

"Lord have mercy upon them, for they know not what they do."

"It took a tremendous amount of love of God to pen the twelve words above, but there is no greater command in all God's universe than the first commandment, 'Love they neighbor.'

* * *

"I THINK that millions in the South, who have suffered with me, know what I am talking about. My grandmother was a slave and I heard from her own lips about the hells of slavery.

"If we can send armies around the world to carry democracy to men and women who have shed no blood and sweat for America, is it too much to ask America to protect the freedom of 12 millions down here in the Southland?

"Twelve millions who have been deprived of practically all manhood rights, even the right to move around freely in public places — including schools, courts, parks, housing, jails and public conveyances?

"Boycotts are staged against the products of firms that employ colored persons in positions above janitors and maids.

* * *

"WORSE THAN this, in some city and state governments, money that colored persons pay for taxes, is spent to starve out by denying work to those who have the courage to petition or protest this systematic robbery.

The jobs of the colored and white man are not safe if they advocate supporting the decision of the Supreme Court in the matter of segregated schools, or the right to serve in private or public work on an equal basis with white men.

"If these rapers of American democracy get away with defying the Supreme Court by not only threatening bloodshed, but actually nullifying the law with subversive government, White Citizens Councils and the like, it will be just a matter of time before they take over and control the Federal Government."

Integration pace rapid, report says

Afro-American Sat. 11-10-56

Baltimore Md.

NEW YORK (NNPA)—Widespread progress in desegregation of public facilities and services throughout the United States was reported Monday in "Integration: North and South," published by the Fund for the Republic.

P. 3

The 120-page book, by Harold Fleming and David Loth, lists state by state and community by community, cases where racial bars have been dropped in public and private schools, employment, public accommodations, churches, hospitals, professional organizations, military establishments, housing and recreation.

The report covers the period since the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

IT REVEALS THAT in states outside of the South remaining racial segregation and discrimination is not only being reduced steadily but also that colored citizens are obtaining positions of leadership in all walks of life.

The report on the South records 1,100 instances of desegregation of schools, housing, transportation, employment and public accommodations, leading to the conclusion that there is "no longer a Solid South of segregation."

Preparation of the report was financed by a grant from the Fund for the Republic.

Mr. Fleming is responsible for the section of the report dealing with the southern states. He is director of the Southern Regional Council, a 12-state organization which is working to promote better race relations in the South.

* * *

MR. LOTH, A FORMER newspaperman, prepared the material on the northern and western states.

In a foreword, Morris L. Ernst, attorney and a director of the American Civil Liberties Union, declared "this volume is news of a high order, untinged by subjective editorial comment . .

"In every hamlet and city, in every state of the union, there are people of good will who will be heartened to action by reading of peaceful progress elsewhere."

Race Disputes Hit Dixie Anew On 3 Fronts

Pittsburgh Courier New York P. 24 Thurs. 10-11-56

By the United Press

Disputes over rights of Negroes to vote, to sit with whites in football stands and on buses, and to equal opportunities in the armed forces erupted in the South today.

The U.S. Department of Justice asked Congress yesterday to investigate whether Negroes are being illegally deprived of voting rights in Pierce County, Ga., and in Quachita and Rapides Parishes, La.

City officials of Tallahassee, Fla., asked a state legislative committee to investigate a racial bus boycott and activities of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D., N. Y.) asked Defense Secretary Charles Wilson to investigate a charge that Negro servicemen at Donaldson Air Force Base and Fort Jackson, S. C., are being denied educational courses.

A segregationist leader accused the Navy of deliberately "slapping us in the face" in racial mixing of spectators at Louisiana's new law banning athletic events does not go into selling tickets to the Tulane football game without regard to race.

Navy spokesman said, "We have always sold available tickets to anyone who applied effect until two days after the Tulane-Navy game Saturday. A

Tennessee Drowns Jim Crow

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

There was weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth among Tennessee's embattled segregationists when the state Supreme Court ruled that Tennessee's segregation laws were unconstitutional in view of the U. S. Supreme Court's segregation decision. Sat. 11-3-56

The state court upheld racial integration in the Clinton, Tenn., schools and refused an injunction to bar 12 Negro pupils, but its decision is bound to be even more far-reaching.

Florida's highest court has handed down a similar decision although delaying integration until it can be done "without public mischief" which the police, of course, are paid to prevent.

Jim crow within a few years will no longer have a roosting place.

Can the South Escape?

That powerful minority of the Southern white population which defies the U. S. Supreme Court decision hopefully believes that it can by various machinations escape from obeying the law.

Turn and twist as they may, legally and otherwise, these misguided folk might as well understand clearly that their efforts are doomed to failure, no matter how much they denigrate, libel, intimidate and affront Negroes.

These people, while powerful, are a smaller minority than they were during Reconstruction times and afterward, and they are growing smaller despite their frantic propaganda.

They are up against the 14th Amendment which specifically prohibits denial of equal protection of laws of any individual, and it was on this amendment that the Supreme Court based its monumental decision.

Every move the Unreconstructed South is making today to defeat desegregation is illegal and cannot stand up in court, which explains why these people are trying to kill off the NAACP.

The best thing we can do is to give the NAACP a financial war chest which will enable it to weather the flood of legal cases which has been launched to bankrupt it. What about a new membership in the NAACP?

If, as has been monotonously repeated, the South is so noble, so Christian, so Anglo-Saxon in race, religion ethics, and political concepts, how does it happen that three centuries of the system has produced the Negroes of which it complains and a white leadership that openly defies the supreme law of the land?

Separation or Segregation; Prejudice or Preference alabama Journal Montgomery Ala.

In the November Atlantic magazine appears such an able presentation of the white South's attitude toward the Negro race, that it deserves wide attention. It is written by Dr. Herbert Ravenall Sass, of Charleston, a frequent contributor to the Atlantic.

The article goes right to the heart of things, as is indicated by its title, "Mixed Schools and Mixed Blood." It is temperate, it is scholarly, it is unanswerable in its logic. There is no detraction from its force and impressiveness by an accompanying article by a Harvard professor which is thoroughly intemperate and freighted with the arguments the fanatical abolitionists used a hundred or more years ago when the Negro race was in slavery.

Dr. Sass contributes some impressive new thoughts on the differences of word interpretation in the North and in the South. "The South has had a bad time with words," he writes. P. 4

We suffer from the fact that segregation is considered synonymous with separation. Separation is actually the word which describes what the South regards as essential for the welfare of two races. Atl. 11-2-56

Similarly the South is injured by continual use of the word prejudice (meaning race prejudice) when "preference" is the word for "a natural reaction to facts and conditions observed or experienced, and through the action of heredity generation after generation it becomes instinctive." Amplifying the difference between "prejudice" and "preference," Dr. Sass writes:

"I am sure that among white Carolinians there is, as yet, almost no hatred of the Negro, nor is there anything that can accurately be called race prejudice. What does exist, strongly and ineradicably, is race preference. In other words, we white Southerners prefer our own race and wish to keep it as it is.

"This preference should not and cannot be eliminated. It is much bigger than we are, a far greater thing than our racial dilemma. It is—and here is another basic fact of great significance—an essential element in Nature's huge and complex mechanism. It is one of the reasons why evolution, ever diversifying, ever discriminating, ever separating race from race, species from species, has been able to operate in an ascending course so that what began aeons ago as something resembling an ameoba has now become Man. In preferring its own race and in striving to prevent the destruction of that race by amalgamation with another race, the white South is not flouting Nature but is in harmony with her."

Very important in connection with the Sass contribution to the Atlantic is the fact that it gives nation-wide publicity to a dignified and scholarly treatment of a subject that in the North has been chiefly treated either through emotion or by silence.

'NO SOLID SOUTH ON SEGREGATION

Times-Picayune New Orleans, La. P. 19

Fund for Republic Reports Study Findings

Tues. 10-30-56

By HENRIETTA LEITH

NEW YORK, Oct. 29 (AP) — The Fund for the Republic said a two-year survey of integration in North and South shows that "there is no longer a solid South of segregation."

A detailed report of the findings of the study was made public by the fund. The studies of desegregation in the North and in the Southern and border states were carried out separately by David Loth and Harold Fleming, respectively, under grants from the fund. General

The Fund for the Republic receives funds from the Ford Foundation, but operates independently.

Studies Integration

Both studies dealt with incidents of desegregation in education, private and public employment, housing, transportation, religion, organizations, recreation and other public facilities.

The period covered is from May, 1954 — when the Supreme Court ruled that segregation in schools is unconstitutional — to May, 1956.

In a foreword to his report on the 12 "Solid South" states and the border states of Oklahoma, Missouri, West Virginia, Maryland and Delaware, Fleming said:

"The common notion that 'desegregation just can't work' in the South is plainly contradicted by the findings.

"The nearly 1100 instances of desegregation discovered were almost evenly divided between the five 'border' states, on the one hand, and the 12 'Southern' states on the other. Virtually all of them took place smoothly ...ously."

'Far-Reaching'

Fleming said the survey showed that the Supreme Court decision of 1954 was "simply the most far-reaching in a long series of developments" and desegregation incidents of the past two years "were additions to a substantial list of Southern precedents."

Loth, commenting on his findings, said most Northern instances of integration were accomplished "without ill will or protests," but added:

"The study should not lead to complacency. Many of the instances cited are no more than opening wedges in breaking down discriminatory practices, particularly in the key fields of employment and housing."

In the field of education, Loth's report showed that four non-southern states which authorized segregation in schools before 1954—Arizona, New Mexico, Kansas and Wyoming — all had practically eliminated it during the past two years.

Fleming's study showed that more than 350 school districts in nine of the 17 Southern and border states had integrated schools to some degree, while in a number of areas where schools were still segregated, school buses were carrying white and Negro children together.

Cites Instances

Fleming also cited numerous instances of desegregation of parochial and other private schools, in teacher organizations and in higher education.

He said only five states — Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina — still enforce complete segregation in state-supported colleges, and all of those but South Carolina had at least one private college admitting both white and Negro students.

Loth's survey of the North cited the fact that a Negro served as acting mayor of Hartford, Conn., another as commander of an Illinois National Guard unit, one as vice-mayor of Cincinnati and another as deputy police commissioner of New York City.

In his Southern survey Fleming found that as of 1954 Negroes were serving on city councils in 11 Southern cities and had been elected or appointed to office in 20 other communities.

He also noted that "a small but growing number of Southern employers are disregarding the taboo against use of Negroes in skilled, professional and white-collar jobs."

...ia, North Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Arkansas, with litigation in progress in many others.

"It seemed apparent," the report said, "that legal segregation on all public carriers was destined for an early death."

during the past two years, with 34 hospitals using the professional staffs of public or private hospitals in nine of the 17 Southern border states for the first time.

Negroes Serve

Fleming found Negroes on the services of Negroes.

He said segregation had been abandoned on local transit systems

38a 1956

GENERAL

Solid South Retribution

Guardian Sat 9-1-56

Boston Mass.

By Monroe Mason

Problems far exceeding racial segregation confront 16,000,000 colored Americans as the civil-rights dilemma spreads into unknown nationwide political ramifications concocted by solid South democratic leaders who crave for retribution.

Defiance of the U. S. Supreme Court on the part of racial hatred die-hards of the solid South, is only a minor incident to ponder over as they secretly plot an alleged future economic program of mandatory subjugation to block racial advancement and above all total destruction of the NAACP!

Will the presnt G. O. P. regime stand by complacently and not head-off an alleged pending grave crisis? Boycotts of Southern colored leaders without violence serves only a limited purpose for local respective jurisdictions to make the nation understand a far reaching climax looms as to whether or not racial equality in all categories can be exacted.

The F. B. I., to date has been handicapped not to openly release its vast investigation powers, because of strong political inter-meddleing instigated by leaders of the present democratic Congress. This was demonstrated and activated in the democratic national convention proceedure of moderation to defy the U. S. Supreme Court's racial desegregation decisions.

Retraction, in part of a paragraph in last week's article of the writer, "Civil Rights Planks," a grave error is noted. It should have read, "In all sections of the nation, except the solid South and many border States segregation in any category is strongly condemned." We are to make this correction in order to assure readers of this publication how the majority of this nation abhors bigotry and racial hatered.

The civil-rights plank in the democratic national convention platform catapulted lock, stock and barrel into the arms of U. S. Senator James O. Eastland, Miss., This has a tendency if a colored voter casts a democratic ballot for President in the November national election, it will be a solid vote for EASTLAND and continued racial segregation in America!

After Labor Day, a furious financial dilemma, more staggering than civil-rights will be uncovered concerning 16,000,000 colored Americans, propagated in alleged secrecy by the 84th democratic Congress, because of racial hatered by solid South legislative leaders for racial curtailment of financial bank loans.

Since the U. S. Supreme Court public school desegregation decision, a sinister economic financial blockade was given the legislative greenlight, which apparently could not be stalled by the Northern democratic block ordering alleged racial curtailment of financial bank loans under pretexts of property devaluation in dominant white neighborhoods. The nation's leading financial institutions including insurance companies have manifested deep interest in this alleged secret racial financial loan curtailment to applicants with doubtful assets that do not conform with Federal or respective States loan and mortgage requirements.

COLORED HOME OWNERS BARRED

A Boston leader of finance revealed to the writer this alleged pending racial financial loan curtailment, if not blocked before getting a head-start will decree financial damage to thousands of colored home owners throughout the nation! Northern democrats are as much to blame, if the above allegations are true as their Southern colleagues in Congress. Republican legislators unfortunately did not have a lookin at this alleged backstage secret racial financial mortgage loan curtailment.

The three colored democratic Congressmen have been very lax in their efforts according to many bystanders to promote a genuine economic racial status, especially at a time when 16,000,000 Colored Americans need protection on all fronts, including civil-rights.

NAACP organized fulfillment of duties already performed accountable to racial desegregation seems a small burden compared to a nationwide racial financial stalemate. Thurgood Marshall and his NAACP legal experts nad better jump a jet plane before it is too late and get a slant on what the solid South race haters in Congress have up their sleeves allegedly drying-up financial and mortgage loans to sound business men representing 16,000,000 colored Americans.

If "TV" viewers, radio listeners and those who attended the democratic national convention heard any mention from any democratic leader concerning the above racial in a Federal or State court to sue for libel or slander, We are of the opinion that statutes of any geographycal area in the nation have'nt a scintilla of legal coverage to keep a writer from informing the public of proposed racial inhumane degradation.

Guardian

SCAPEGOATS OF FOREFATHERS

Racial segregation has been a terrible cross to bear over 80 years for 16,000,000 colored Americans now a part of this nation, who remain scapegoats of their forefathers. The smouldering nationwide financial loan mortgage muddle confronting a racial group, if not blocked or investigated in time will stampede millions of Americans into untold economic extremes at present cannot be measured. Will gradualism and moderation be offered as a panacea when future politicl stock-taking nears a reality?

Rep. John W. McCormick, democratic majority leader of the 84th Congress and platform chairman of the democratic national convention resolutions committee, also former Gov. Paul A. Dever, who greatly assisted writing the civil-rights plank in the democratic platform, both of Massachusetts contrived and contributed along with solid South leaders to alienate the U. S. Supreme Court's doctrine of civil-rights.

The above two Massachusetts leaders buried political respectibility of their Yankee manhood when they kow-towed overwhelmingly to solid South leaders under a dismal clouded shadow to preserve democratic party unity. Will the voters of Massachusetts ever understand why these two exceptional Baystate leaders would veer so strongly to the solid South, when in the past this same contingent had completely emasculated New England's textile industry?

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR JUSTICE

There are two objectives political minded colored citizens of the nation must arduously strive for, (1) contribute unstintingly to the G.O.P., campaign fund, especially in states where all votes are counted, (2) stupendously boost the NAACP financial chest for assurance of further racial desegregation victories. The following paragraph of the national convention democratic platform on civil-rights describes how the solid South dominated, gaining control of the racial segregation issue.

Recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States relating to segregation in publicly supported schools and elsewhere have brought consequences of vast importance to our nation as a whole and especially to communities directly affected. We reject all proposals for the use of force to interfere with the orderly determination of these matters by the courts.

A National States Rights Convention, is scheduled to convene in New Orleans, La., September to advocate states rights, segregation, interposition and the Southern manifesto. It is also expected to oppose statehood for Alaska, Hawaii and Federal aid to education. Below, are highlights gleaned from press releases since the national democratic convention adjourned —

1. The two senior colored members of Congress have been feuding privately over civil rights. They are Congressman Dawson, who was born in Georgia and is highly respected by his House colleagues, and Congressman Adam Clayton Powell of Harlem, N. Y., the U. S. Supreme Court! Can a political party have recourse secret financial loan curtailment, the writer is forced to admit a brother on the outside informed him.

When the facts are placed in the writer's hands, it is understood many faces will be red with shame and wonder how such an underhanded racial political strategem could take place in America including segregation in defiance of who is married to singer Hazel Scott and commutes between Harlem and Washington. Dawson has accused Powell of stirring up the civil rights issue for personal publicity colored people have already made tremendous progress and shouldn't spoil it.

2. Powell not only boycotted the Democratic convention but is secretly considering a bolt to the Republicans. He has sounded out Vice President Nixon and White House Aide Max Rabb about deserting the Democratic ticket — if the Democrats wage a lukewarm civil rights campaign. In fact, Powell put in writing to Vice Preisdent Nixon that he is "ready and willing" to campaign for an Eisenhower - Nixon ticket.

3. The third Colored Congressman, Detroit's Charles Diggs, isn't contemplating anything so drastic. But he has threatened privately that he won't campaign for the Democrats unless they come out fighting for civil rights.

4. Colored leaders have received word that Attorney-General Brownell, in a play for colored votes, will indict several election officials in Mississippi for refusing the right to vote.

EFFECTIVE BULLSEYE RANGE

The above has political significance, but does not strike the bulls-eye effectively, whe nit is reported the first of the present year, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, including Boston has been invaded by a drastic loan racial mortgage curtailment.

New and additional loan racial applicants have been relegated to long waiting lists and in many instances turned down without any reason. An offhand explaination, is lack of investment loan capital, which any white applicant can bypass. A local veteran's organization has also been reported a victim securing a loan to renovate its headquarters, because of this vicious financial loan tangle. Boston's mayor, John B. Hynes recent decision to junk over 800 delapidated dwellings in the Hub has made matters worse for colored citizens to buy a home or rent an apartment;

The following report from San Francisco's G.O.P., national convention should be given wide acclaim, when the platform plank on civil-rights prescribes elimination of racial segregation in public schools with all delberate speed. Ths should be done locally through Federal courts.

The elmination of racial segregation must be attained through intelligent study, understanding and good will.

The above was to the point and without equivocation! It is believed millions of colored voters will cast ballots repudiating the EASTLAND standard of White Supremacy in the November Presidential election. The nationwide racial financial loan curtailment injustice, now mounting should also be rebuked as an Un-American calamitous economic political monstrosity!

Summerizing the current political gamut, we conclude both dominant parties are almost in accord that racial economic security, is greater than civil rights!

Tell It To Old Grandma

Advertiser Tues. 9-11-56

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request, name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserve the right to shorten letters ★ No poetry, please ★ Repeat: No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it.

Montgomery, Ala.

The Nine-Man Oligarchy

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Utilization of the national Guard, or any group of state peace officers, for the maintenance of order is not necessarily an endorsement of integration, as some people seem to think. Race riots and violence must be controlled, if possible, and it is the duty of the state governments to make every possible effort in that direction. For example, Gov. Clements, of Tennessee, was doing no more than his duty when he sent tanks and guns to Clinton. But the necessity for such action is a disgraceful commentary on our modern civilization. The U. S. Supreme Court, of course, must bear the blame for planting the seed from which these obnoxious weeds now growing will, in the judgment of millions of thinking Americans, finally "choke down" the progress of our civilization.

The United States Constitution is "the law of the land." There are those who say Supreme Court decisions constitute the law of the land. Millions of people are wondering, though, by what process of reasoning can a clear mind entertain such a notion. Any mere student of civics knows that our federal government is based on the constitution—not on a decision of the Supreme Court. Many people are wondering why and when a decision of the Supreme Court displaced the constitution as the law of the land. As a matter of fact, though, they know such a calamity has not happened—yet. And they know there is not even a hint of racial integration in the constitution, nor any of the amendments. All good citizens have respect for the constitution because it is the permanent document upon which our government is based, and correctly interpreted, school buses and machine guns wouldn't have to meet at the same buildings. Where are we headed?

If a Supreme Court decision is the law of the land, then why did the present court in 1954 undertake to nullify a decision of the Supreme Court in 1896, and by the foundation for a long series of race riots? It should be plain to everybody that the Plessy vs. Ferguson decision was based only on the constitution; but the present court frankly admits that it drew from the phylosophy of European sociology for arguments to support the 1954 decision. Knowing that racial integration is not essential to equality in rights and privileges, and knowing there is not a word nor a syllable in the constitution requiring integration, is the reason why so many good citizens cannot accept the Supreme Court's decision, instead of the constitution, as being the law of the land. That's the reason why the need for legal means to prevent integration is so urgently indicated. Workable legal means must be found. Otherwise, it is feared that violence will increase in other areas and continue for years to come.

Owassa, Ala. W. C. BRAXTON.

They Would Paint The White House Black

Editor, The Advertiser:

On May 29, 1956, I left Montgomery, traveled to Louisville, Ky., crossed the Ohio River on the K&I bridge the same day and since then have been north of the Mason-Dixon line.

I spent two weeks in Harrison County, Ind., and visited the old and historic town of Corydon, the county seat. Corydon was the Capital of Indiana till 1825 when it was moved to Indianapolis. It was captured by General Morgan during the Civil War. The old capitol building still stands and is quite an attraction for tourists.

I traveled from Indiana to Columbus, Ohio. It was in Columbus that the North maintained a prison when the war was being fought. This prison was just as famous, (or infamous) as Andersonville but somehow did not receive as much publicity.

I have visited in the towns and cities of Elwood City, Union Town, Washington, Pa., Hagerstown, Frederick, Baltimore, and Dover, Del. I found most of the people up here have about the same attitude toward the race question as the people down South.

All the thunder you hear from up here about the South's mistreatment of the Negroes does not originate with the masses of the people in the North, it comes from the NAACP, from over-ambitious newspaper reporters and from all the politicians. Here in Pittsburgh most of the swimming pools have been closed to prevent rioting among white and Negro boys, also at Washington, Pa., and many other towns.

Through the Pittsburgh Press and the Post Gazette I have kept abreast of news from Montgomery and Alabama while away. Also I read an article in the Readers Digest written by Hodding Carter in which it appears to me that he has deserted the South and joined hands with the rabble rousing politicians up here, who would, if they have their way, paint the White House black.

Pittsburgh, Pa. JAMES H. GREENE.

Show The Way

Editor, The Advertiser:

Why don't our high government officials, beginning with Truman, Eisenhower, the Supreme Court judges, and Gov. Folsom, set a good example for the nation, and put their children or grandchildren in colored schools?

MRS. ANNIE DURHAM.

Milstead, Ala.

Our Opinions

Defender Chicago Ill.

Unholy Crusade For Segr

The use of the Bible to support causes wholly at variance with Christian ethics has been frowned upon by legitimate evangelists and their disciples as an indefensible prostitution of the Holy Scriptures. Obviously universal condemnation of this iniquitous indulgence is no deterrent to the individual who is fired by an inordinate passion for power and notoriety.

Sat 9-8-56

In an interview given to the press a few days ago at Baton Rouge, La., "Archbishop" C. C. Addison, a native of Colquitt, Ga., but now a resident of New York City, is reported as having said that he was "out to destroy the NAACP," for, he went on, "the only proper way to live together in peace and harmony is in segregation."

He quoted as proof of his fuzzy thinking, the 11th chapter, first verse of the book of Genesis which reads:

"And the whole earth was one language and of one speech."

These are the opening words of the biblical passage that deals with the tower of Babel and the confusion of tongues that followed. Interpreting this is his own "ecclesiastical" way, "Archbishop" Addison came to the conclusion that "we take our segregation from the Bible," and that, said he "it is a sin to integrate."

It is difficult to view these utterances with anything but a feeling of melancholy and disgust. To whatever source he attributes his reference, the "Archbishop" is lending his "holy" voice to the gospel of confusion and hate at the very moment when more and more cries are being raised in massive protest against the evil of racial segregation.

It was a familiar trick of the southern advocates of segregation and slavery in pre-civil war days to refer to the Bible as the authority for their nefarious practices. But today, even the most rabid Negro haters no longer hide behind the Scriptures in defending white suprmacy and medieval social concept. For, they realize that the good Book can be quoted with equal vigor by both Saint and Satan.

Please note carefully dear reader, "Archbishop" Adison is "president-general of the pro-segregation African Universal Church and Commercial League corporation." That's the name of the church which is located in New York City and whose titular head has been touring the South in the last two months organizing his pro-segregation group.

We suggest that the "Archbishop" would serve better the cause of his pro-segregation communicants by affiliating himself with the Ku Klux Klan of his native state where the members of this mystic order proval of an unsolicited defender of white supremacy from an unseeming quarter. This is no laughing matter. The fact that the white press has given hearing to this type of Negro leadership is an ominous warning that "Archbishop" Addison's preachment, ludicrous as it is, may find enough support to retard if not obstruct the march of progress toward integration. Enlightened metropolitan public opinion may smother this dangerous movement. But it will not do so by complacency nor by ignoring the destructive power of any itinerant Caesar bent on changing the course of history.

Israel and School Integration Believed Factors in N. Y. Vote

Political Grassroots—

Inquirer

Third in a Series

By JAMES DEVLIN

NEW YORK, March 8 (AP).

THE Israeli and segregation questions may be potent factors in the fight for New York's 45 electoral votes.

Phila. Inq. 3-9-56

A sampling of public opinion by this reporter indicated these issues might bring some voting switches.

A Negro upswing in the Republican voting column appears a possibility.

Philadelphia Pa.

Democrats contend they will make gains among supporters of Israel here.

The survey, following President Eisenhower's announcement for a second term, covered roughly a 150-mile area. It included New York City and Albany, both ordinarily Democratic, and the usually Republican Hudson River Valley and Westchester county.

Harlem, populous Negro center regarded as Democratic since New Deal days, is smarting over racial incidents in Democratic Southern States.

p. 3

Some of its residents say the Republicans are doing more for the Negro than the Democrats and that there will be an increase in the Harlem Republican vote.

* * *

ON ISRAEL, Democrats voice belief the Republicans have lost ground.

They say there is dissatisfaction among Israel's friends over the Administration's policy in the Middle East. They cite the sending of tanks to the Arabs when Israel is asking for arms.

"The trouble is," commented one Democrat, "whenever the Administration does anything that causes criticism, the average person blames the Cabinet officer involved and not Ike."

While not commenting on the Israeli or segregation issues, Republican State Chairman L. Judson Morhouse and his Democratic counterpart, Michael Prendergast, both saw victory ahead in the November election.

Morhouse said Mr. Eisenhower's popularity was such he might exceed his 1952 plurality of 850,000. He said more young Republicans than ever before would be working for Mr. Eisenhower's re-election.

Prendergast retorted that Averell Harriman, Democrat, wiped out this big majority and was elected Governor by about 12,000 votes in 1954. He contended the Democrats can win again this year.

* * *

THE President's announcement he will seek a second term quickly divided his followers and opponents on sharp lines on the possible influence of his heart attack.

"There isn't a person," said a New York City Republican worker, "who doesn't know of somebody who had a heart attack and lived to be 92 years old. Sure, Ike could get a heart attack during a second term, but so could anybody else holding the office of President. The health issue won't hurt Ike."

"Ike was pressured into it," said an Albany Democrat "He's foolish to run—and I'd say that whether he was a Republican or a Democrat. Look at what happened to Franklin D. Roosevelt. Health is bound to be an issue in this campaign."

Democrats generally believe Vice President Richard M. Nixon—their sharp critic—will make a good target if he is Mr. Eisenhower's running mate again.

BUT the rank and file supporting Mr. Eisenhower appear perplexed at the controversy that intermittently boils about Nixon—and particularly at reports some Republicans in upper echelons want to drop him.

"I don't know what all the fuss is about," said a Republican in traditionally GOP Westchester county, well-to-do residential section outside New York City. "It seems to me he has worked loyally for Eisenhower and has done a good job."

In Albany, where Thomas E. Dewey served as Governor, several Democrats registered belief Dewey would supplant Nixon on the Eisenhower ticket. But a Republican expressed doubt, saying such a line-up would provoke former Taft elements in the party.

A porter in Grand Central Terminal said "all you hear" in Harlem are pledges to vote Republican. Others with him nodded assent.

The Republicans, he said, are doing more than the Democrats toward desegregation.

He mentioned, as Nixon had recalled in a speech recently, that Chief Justice Earl Warren, who handed down the school anti-segregation ruling, was a Republican.

Though Harlem schools are not segregated, he said the Negroes there were very much behind the fight of the Negroes in the South.

All Negroes, he said, want their children to grow into a world of equal citizenship—"that's the issue."

* * *

A MAN waiting for a bus in Albany gave this as his reason for opposing Mr. Eisenhower. "I just don't like a soldier as President. A soldier is too accustomed to taking orders."

A restaurant hostess said she was sorry Mr. Eisenhower didn't feel he should retire to his Gettysburg farm, but declared, "I wish he could be President for 20 years; he and Mamie are such nice people."

Along the Hudson River Valley, traditionally Republican, a farmer said he believed Mr. Eisenhower would get a heavy "sympathy" vote—ballots in admiration of his decision to stick to the job despite his heart attack.

A Democratic office worker in New York, apparently thinking along the same lines, said ruefully: "Ike will get the vote of everybody who ever had a heart attack."

Some Democrats say privately they believe Mr. Eisenhower's personal popularity is as great as it was in 1952.

But they believe they have one advantage they didn't have before. In 1952 it was a matter of campaigning against a national war hero with no political background. Now, he has a Presidential record, which the Democrats can attack as vigorously as the Republicans can praise.

Harriman may announce in a matter of weeks his candidacy for the Democratic Presidential nomination to make it a three-way race with Adlai E. Stevenson and Sen. Estes Kefauver.

"Harriman probably prayed that Eisenhower would seek a second term," a Democratic cab driver mused, "because, if Harriman is nominated he will be the younger of the two candidates. Against any other Republican, his age (64) might have worked against him."

On Desegregation

Viewpoint of the White South

Atlanta Constitution

Raleigh N.C.

By AL KUETTNER.

OXFORD, Miss., March 19 — (UP) — Let's slow down for a few minutes and hear the white South's viewpoint on desegration.

The average white Southerner is a law-abiding individual to whom violence is repugnant. He doesn't want to be in the position of defying the Supreme Court. He is as sorry as other Americans if the controversy over the Negro's place in society is casting his country in a bad light around the world.

Atl. C. 3-18-56

But he is accustomed since childhood to separation of Negroes and whites in his community. He has come to believe it hasn't worked too badly. The Negroes themselves have been content for the most, he thinks. The North is mistaken if it pictures all the South's colored people as straining to intermix.

Dread of Mixed Marriages.

He has a dread of one of his children marrying a Negro. He thinks almost all Northern parents would feel the same. But he feels that will be the outcome if Negro and white children begin mixing freely in the classrooms, the playgrounds, the swimming pools, the high school dances.

He knows that in many places, particularly rural areas, the Negroes are so poorly educated they are not prepared for leadership. Yet in many places so vastly do Negroes outnumber whites that with real equality at the polls, Negroes would occupy all offices.

He is trying to make up his mind how to proceed. The opinions of his friends and neighbors influence him mightily. Should he get the tag of "nigger-lover," it may ostracize him socially and ruin him economically.

He wants a sensible solution, an end to this struggle. Where can he turn for organized leadership?

He has a choice of the White Citizens' Councils that stand for preserving strict segregation at all costs and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which wants integration now.

The majority of the South's people can't conscientiously endorse either. They believe that somewhere between the extremes lies the answer to the nation's biggest social issue since the Civil War.

Let's listen to famed novelist William Faulkner. Faulkner is emerging as a spokesman for the "moderates." This correspondent talked with him at his picturesque colonial home here in Oxford.

Need of Moderation.

"The need of the South today is an organization with aims that lie somewhere between the NAACP and the Citizens Councils," says Faulkner.

"Such a group would provide the impetus for bi-racial commissions representing the best of both races. Perhaps in time such a moderate movement could take members away from the NAACP on one side and the Councils on the other."

That phrase "in time" is important. Faulkner fears there is real danger of bloodshed should integration be forced on the South.

"A few of us realize that segregation is going," he says, but the job should be accomplished by choice from within the South.

Danger of Shooting.

"Moderates only hope they can keep outside forces from bringing friction to the fighting point. And, believe me, there is real danger the situation may reach the shooting stage at some points."

Faulkner blames much of the current problem on "the failure of the press and the churches to speak out earlier. They are the voices of authority to which the people usually listen and they are silent."

Faulkner contends that another difficulty is the "unhappy choice" of the term integration.

"In my opinion," he says, "the opposite of segregation is not integration but equality. Integration would take care of itself if the Negroes had real equality."

Disagrees with Carter.

Faulkner disagrees with Editor Hodding Carter of Greenville, Miss., who feels that the gradual migration of Negroes from the South will eventually help the situation by redistribution of the population.

"Negroes who leave the South merely transfer the problem rather than cure it," Faulkner says. "I am afraid the North would be a great deal more impatient with the Negroes than we are."

Faulkner's is one of the few influential moderate voices being heard on the race question. One of the reasons for silence from this group is the fear of criticism, rebuke or reprisal.

Gov. Clement's Moderation.

Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee has appealed for a moderate approach.

"The greatest danger we face in the South today is the possibility of extremists and agitators from either side gaining control, either through law or politics," Clement said. "Our people are good people, and when left alone, can and will work out any problem,"

There have been some concrete examples of progress with the "moderate" approach.

In Cross-Fire.

In Nashville, Tenn., 26 civic groups tackled the problem at individual study sessions. They wrote separate reports on their findings. A majority emerged with a recommendation to comply with court orders and integrate schools.

But like most of the middle-of-the-roaders, the "moderates" are catching it from both sides.

Both the Citizens Councils and the NAACP are attacking them as "fence straddlers" who are waiting to see which way the majority is going before jumping that way.

2 Dixie states move to evade parks ruling

Afro American P.6 Sat. 4-28-56

Baltimore, Md.

ATLANTA—Both Georgia and Alabama have, to different extents, seized upon the technique of leasing public parks to maintain segregation.

In Atlanta, the state parks director leased nine Georgia state parks to private citizens. The 12-month leases were signed at an average price of $2,000.

Meanwhile, in Montgomery, Gov. James E. Folsom signed into law a bill permitting the state to sell or give away parks, playgrouns or other recreational facilities and public housing projects.

* * *

A FEDERAL district court had already invalidated the State of Virginia's attempt to do the same thing.

The Fourth United States Circuirt Court recently ruled that colored persons should be admitted to state-owned parks regardless of whether the parks were operated by the state or by individuals leasing the parks.

Although no reference to race was made in the Alabama bill, it is interpreted as being a measure to counter-act the Supreme Court ruling that segregation in public facilities is unConstitutional.

* * *

IN GEORGIA, Roy Chalker, parks director, was quoted as admitting that the transfer from public to private operations was designed primarily to maintain racial segregation

The Georgia legislature had already passed a bill, signed by Gov. Marvin Griffin, similar to the one just passed in Alabama.

Mississippi and South Carolina have also enacted similar measures. Under the Alabama law, such transfers of public property must first be approved by the voters in the areas involved.

RACIAL STRIFE HALTS INDUSTRIAL GROWTH?

Commercial Appeal

Winthrop Rockefeller Warns Of 'Bad Impression'

P.11 Mon. 4-23-56

ASKS FOR 'COOL HEADS'

Memphis, Tenn.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, April 22. — Winthrop Rockefeller, chairman of the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission, warned Sunday that some Southern states are making a "bad impression" on the industrial world by their attitude on integration.

He addressed the Arkansas State Society in Washington and held a news conference.

Advocating a policy of "law and order", Mr. Rockefeller said some of Arkansas' neighbors to the South and East are getting an "unhealthy reputation" with the industrial world they are seeking to impress.

People of Good Will

He said people of "good will" must handle the integration problem, otherwise there will be strife and boycotts, and industry will stay away from strife areas.

Boycotts, he said, work both ways and "industry wants no part of it."

Mr. Rockefeller said no one is demanding integration in all school districts immediately, and integration should come about gradually.

His advice to Arkansas is to "keep a cool head."

Industry Pulls Back

Replying to questions, Mr. Rockefeller said his commission had information as to specific instances where industry has "pulled back" to see what will be worked out in the South.

Discussing education problems, he asked the state meeting whether Arkansas "can aford a dual system" of education. In his opinion, he said, it cannot, and an integrated system in the long run would be less costly and more advantageous.

Mr. Rockefeller told reporters he is not actively participating in politics in Arkansas.

Not A Candidate

Asked about reports that he might be interested in running for Governor, Mr. Rockefeller said he had "no idea" of such a thing and pointed out that under the state Constitution a person must reside in Arkansas seven years in order to be eligible. He has lived in the state about three years, he said.

Mr. Rockefeller reported to the more than 300 Arkansans at the meeting that the state is making progress in industrialization. He said 12 new industries have located in the state since the first of the year and many others have expanded.

"We figure that the state will get $1,700,000 a year in taxes from these new industries," he said.

RACIAL PROBLEMS CITED BY PASTOR

Commercial Appeal

Climax Of Desegregation May 'Break' In North

Fri. 3-23-56

ISSUES ARE VIEWED

Memphis, Tenn.

The climax of the desegregation problem is likely to break out ni the North and not in the South, a Pennsylvania Presbyterian minister said here last night.

P. 30

Dr. Donald Barnhouse, pastor of 10th Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, made the remark during a talk on "Segregation from the Biblical oPint of View" at the Christian Youth Auditorium.

Speaks Again Tonight

Dr. Barnhouse, who has appeared a sa speaker in several of Memphis' churches over the past years and has radio and television programs heard locally on WMC and WMCT, The Commercial Appeal radio and television stations, will be at the Auditorium again at 7:30 tonight.

He pointed out that 300,000 Negroes have moved into Philadelphia in the past 20 years, "and much the same is true of Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Detroit and other large Northern cities."

"If a depression should come," he said, "white people seeing Negroes in good jobs will let their racial prejudice break out."

Disagrees On Theory

He said he believes in Old Testament doctrine of separation of the races so far as intermarriage is concerned, but "taking away basic human rights" of Negroes is "something this nation is not going to stand for."

"Many people base their prejudice on the idea that the Negro is the descendant of Ham, the son of Noah who was cursed," Dr. Barnhouse said. "No anthropologist, ethnologist or true Biblical scholar in the world believes this."

"We are Americans," he said, "and no power in this land can block the progress of individual Negroes and the general movement toward desegregation. The Supreme Court has decided what our course shall be."

"A major problem," Dr. Barnhouse said, "does remain, though, in that some people want to put that progress into high gear before the motor's warm enough."

P.20 Herald Tribune—Rosenberg

A. Philip Randolph

Herald Tribune

'Gradual' Integration Is Opposed

Sun. 4-15-56

New York

Randolph Speaks At Lunch Here

A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, said yesterday that all Negroes must reject the doctrine of gradualism in their fight against segregation.

Speaking at a luncheon in the Hotel Commodore at which he received an annual award from the League for Industrial Democracy, Mr. Randolph said that segregation is a sin, and a sin should not be "gradually acepted or gradually rejected."

Segregation, he said, "is based upon the negation of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God, and degrades, demeans and demoralizes the dignity of the human personality."

Hails 'Pasive Resistance'

The union president praised what he called the "new spirit of passive resistance" by Negroes in the South, which he said will prevent riots and bloodshed.

"Negroes are manifesting great wisdom," he said, "in not resorting to the impotent weapon of violence in retaliation against the violence of White Citizens Councils, for just as violence cannot enable Negroes to win their civil rights, neither can violence on the part of White Citizens Councils defeat the struggle of Negroes to achieve their civil rights.

The League also gave an award to its president, Nathaniel M. Minkoff, secretary-treasurer of the New York Joint Board, Dressmakers Unions, International Ladies Garment Workers Union. Both awards were for "distinguished service to democracy and human progress."

Appeal for End of Bias

Appeals for ending segregation and racial conflict were issued simultaneously yesterday in calls for prayer by Dr. Abraham J. Feldman, president of the Synagogue Council of America, and Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, president of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.

Dr. Feldman expressed the hope that law-abiding citizens would co-operate with the courts and civic and educational authorities in a "concerted effort to hasten the implementation of the decrees of the Supreme Court . . . which enjoin the ending of segregation with the greatest practicable expedition."

Dr. Blake said, "All of us in every part of the nation share the responsibility for the racial conflicts in our nations because we have not understood the needs of men and have not cared enough . . . let us pray that we may be freed from race conflict and from all bitterness."

LOGICAL STEPS IN FIGHT URGED

Times Picayune

New Orleans, La.

Emotion, Prejudice Hinder South's Effort--Smith

Thurs. 9-20-56

GREENVILLE, Miss., Sept. 19 (AP)—Rep. Frank Smith (D-Miss.) told Greenville Lions Wednesday arguments based upon emotion and prejudice hinder rather than aid the South in its fight against implementation of the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation.

P. 34

Smith said the South's fight should be "calm and cold blooded" and carried on within the Democratic party.

"Too often the opposition to programs have taken on the looks of a side show," he said.

"This makes many people throughout the nation think that this opposition is inspired entirely by politicians.

"Our job is to convince the leaders in the rest of the nation that our problem is based upon practical realism, not upon emotions and prejudices."

Smith predicted if it came to "a showdown vote in Congress," the South would lose because "the weight of public opinion is against us."

The congressman compared the present situation to the prohibition fight of the 1920s.

"The best historical analogy is the prohibition amendment," he said. "It was passed but when the enforcement failed, the opinion of the majority became that the best control of the liquor traffic was through legalization and local option." Mississippi has been dry since the national prohibition amendment.

Segregation In The North

Advocate p.4

The Christian Science Monitor

It is surprising how many Americans believe their principal racial problem is confined to the South. For the fact is that nearly one-third of the Negroes in the United States now live in the North. They are largely concentrated in "cities" within cities, twelve having a population of 100,000 and three nearly 1,000,000 each. And adjustments are by no means always easy or peaceful, as recurrent disturbances prove.

Jackson, Miss

There is no legal segregation in the North but segregation forms the general pattern wherever large groups of Negroes are found. Their own desires to live among their own kind plus economic pressures tend to restrict them to certain crowded and deteriorating neighborhoods. And since children normally attend schools nearest their homes, segregation naturally governs there too as a general practice.

Sat. 8-4-56

Such segregation, although never touching the experience of millions of Northerners, greatly concerns many city and school officials. In some cases they are attempting to force a mixing of races—even going across normal school zones to do it. The theory is that mixing is itself educational. Directly involved is the old concept of the "melting pot" as an adjunct of democracy. And there is insistence on the right of equal opportunity.

Considering the official and political efforts to combat segregation in the North it has proved remarkably persistent. In several respects it resembles a phenomenon American cities have long known-immigrants from abroad forming their own racial or national enclaves, maintaining their own customs and languages, even their own newspapers. Often the forces making for such clannishness come as much from within as from without.

So it is with the American Negro—in the North and the South. Too often it is assumed that segregation is a wholly artificial pattern enforced by unworthy prejudice. Some of it is like that. But much segregation comes about naturally through the same processes of selection which cause individuals to choose like-minded associates or families to seek congenial neighborhoods. And white resistance to Negro migrations within cities arises partly from the fact that such movements are usually in groups — due in turn to Negro desires to have friends or relatives as neighbors.

Officials in the North who are trying to force a mixing in the face of such forces of natural selection should be able better to understand why desegregation moves slowly in the South. So too should Northern whites who object to their neighborhoods being changed either by racial migration, by industrialization or by any social force causing deterioration. And possibly also Negroes who prefer not to live alone in white neighborhoods, a preference which reduces the opportunity for them to be treated as individuals and centers attention on race.

All of us can deal more wisely with this situation if we recognize that here there are two rights in conflict. One is the right to equal opportunity. The other is the right of the individual to choose his associates. Both are closely related to the democratic ideal. To enforce either against the other by law takes something away from that ideal. To seek accommodation of the one to the other by voluntary action supports the democratic ideal and is likely to bring the most practicable and enduring solution.

Patronize Our Advertisers

With Their Own Money

Weekly p.2

Negroes Shouldn't Buy Segregation

New Orleans, La.

Sat. 9-22-56

MONTEAGLE, Tenn. (ANP) Negroes hold a large part of the purse strings of the South, concluded Negro and white leaders who attended a series of workshops on integration at Highlander Folk School this summer.

Negroes shouldn't buy segregation by opening their purses to members of the White Citizens Council and other segregationists, the 203 participants agreed.

A plan of "opposition without belligerence", or as L. A. Blackman, Elloree, S. C., put it, "talk less but do more," was the keynote of the workshops attended by leaders of the grass roots integration movement from seven Southern states.

In addition to the national example of Montgomery, Ala., described by Mrs. Rosa Parks, small groups in many places are refusing to purchase anything from white merchants who belong to the White Citizens Council and other segregationist organizations.

Passive resistance is spreading as the Negroes' answer to segregation and economic oppression. Workshop participants heard many stories about unreasonable job discharges and unjust mortgage foreclosures on both business and personal property by white leaders who were angered by Negroes demanding integration in the schools or the right to vote.

In one instance a white merchant, who physically assaulted a young Negro boy, was forced out of business because Negroes refused to buy from him and later refused to trade at a store where he got a job.

The former merchant, after a series of three jobs, finally found a job in a plant where he is now a strong union man working with Negroes. according to Richard Horn of Bessemer, Ala.

Citizens of Orangeburg, S. C. brought near economic ruin to several local merchants who started a campaign of economic oppression against Negroes who signed a petition for school integration, according to Henry L. Parker, curate of the Orangeburg Episcopal church.

Instead of the school officials replying to the petition, the White Citizens Council members fired Negroes, withdrew all credit to small merchants and farmers and threatened white businessmen who might have helped the Negroes, he reported to a workshop at the Highlander Folk School.

Life Magazine Finds Intermarriage Chief Fear Of Segregationist

Advocate Jackson, Miss.

Sat. 9-22-56

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—Southerners who believe in segregation are generally thoughtful, pious people and are not, as in sometimes pictured, latter-day Simon Legrees who do now with the law what used to be done with the whip. They may call the Negro a "Nigra" or a "nigger" but have long since ceased meaning any harm or insult by it. On the other hand they believe strongly in the segregation of the races and, as might be expected, hold these beliefs for a variety of reasons.

The nature of segregation attitudes of several typical white Southern segregationists are described in the current (September 17) issue of LIFE Magazine as part of its series on the "Background of Segregation." LIFE lists the following views are representative of white segregationist opinion:

Advocate

The end of segregation will soon lead to intermarriage between white and Negro on a large scale. "Of all the arguments advanced against integration, this is the most commonly heard," the magazine says.

Sat 9-22-56

Other millions, particularly in the low and middle-income groups, fear the Negro for economic reasons. As the industrialization of the South proceeds, this fear will probably grow even greater.

p.3

Problem Of Standards

"Many are not afraid of the Negro in any fashion but simply believes he falls short of their standards, whether of intelligence, morality or simple sanitation," LIFE says.

Another major southern attitude is that the problem does not exist. Under the theory of "separate but equal," many Southerners have worked hard in recent years to improve the lot of the Negro only now to find that Negroes themselves are resentful of these efforts in their home of complete integration.

Candid Southerners will admit that they cannot help being influenced in some part by a feeling any casual observer of human nature readily understands: having been kingpins for many years they are not anxious to relinquish or even dilute the status.

"The South in general will also, if pressed, admit that segregation will probably end some day. But it insists that much time is needed to bring it about. And it feels that it must end segregation in its own way; preachments from other parts of the country will only cause further bitterness and delay."

Divergent Views

Collectively the white segregationist views presented are, according to LIFE, representative of that hallowed but vague institution, "the Southern way of life." They belong to men in various parts of the south, following various occupations. Featured by the magazine are: James Polhill, 34, a white-collar worker of Louisville, Georgia; Walter Templin, 42, a factory worker in Birmingham, Alabama; Kenneth Cass, 50, Mayor of Greenville, South Carolina; William McCamy, plantation owner of the Mississippi Delta country; and Marshall Joyner, 38, a sharecropper in Greenville, North Carolina.

Also presented are the divergent views on segregation of some of the South's leading spokesmen: Senator James Eastland of Mississippi; Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia; Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution; and Hodding Carter, editor of the Delta Democrat Times in Greenville, Mississippi. The attitudes of these public figures, LIFE says, fall generally into two camps. One holds that desegregation would be an unadulterated evil. The other does not hold that desegregation would be an unadulterated good; it points out that the South has undergone great change in recent years and is still changing, and implies that segregation therefore is no longer desirable or practical.

Bishop Says Negroes Should Be Treated As Mission Of Charity

Advocate Jackson Miss Sept. 9-22-56

Notre Dame, Ind., Sept. 18—Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel of New Orleans, outspoken for of racial segregation, declared that America's 15 million Negroes should be regarded "not as a liability but as a mission of charity planned in the wisdom of Divine Providence for their integration with the higher and better way of life." When this point of view prevails, he predicted, "we will see the dawn of an era of edification that will give to the world a new vision of our country's ideals."

The Louisiana prelate outlined "the Christian viewpoint of the racial problem" in an address to more than 500 married couples attending the national convention of the Christian Family Movement at the University of Notre Dame. He spoke at the Grotto of Our Lady of Lourdes following a candlelight procession to the campus shrine.

Stressing that the entire human race has its origin in "one man and one woman made to the image and likeness of God, gifted with an immortal soul and destined by the Creator for the kingdom of Heaven," Archbishop Rummell declared that differences in color, habits of life and achievement have developed among large groups which are only partially known to human science and which will probably remain a mystery in the bosom of God." He insisted that "the basic unity of origin, nature and destiny remains common to all, a continuing demonstration of the harmony that is characteristic of all the products of God's creation."

Southern Burden

Courier P.-D. Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 9-29-56

38a General

SADDEST spectacle in the whole world today is the sight of a vast SECTION of this nation staggering to perdition under the enormous burden of WRONG, a burden which has grown HEAVIER with the years.

While the REST of the nation marches onward and upward to greater progress, prosperity, fraternity and liberalism, Southern DEMAGOGUES burden Dixie with moral wrong, legal wrong, economic wrong, political wrong and intellectual wrong.

The South is burdened with the MORAL wrong of racial fear and HATRED which shapes its every move, policy and program, and makes a mockery of the Christianity it professes.

The South is burdened with the LEGAL wrong of violating every day the laws, Constitution and court decrees of the land which are EVERYWHERE regarded as the hallmark of CIVILIZATION and which Dixie professes to uphold and revere.

The South is burdened by ECONOMIC wrong which keeps it chained to mediocrity by refusing to utilize fully its available manpower for regional development in order to maintain narrow RACIAL job restrictions which benefit a few, but penalize the many.

The South is burdened by POLITICAL wrong through disfranchisement of eligible Negro voters, thus making democracy a FRAUD and delusion, retarding regional development and penalizing other sections of the country which in truth HAVE universal suffrage.

The South is burdened by INTELLECTUAL wrong which, by constantly LYING about one-third of its population in newspapers, textbooks and magazines and insisting upon UNANIMITY of opinion on its BIGGEST problem, keeps the section a cultural Sahara.

Can the CIVILIZED minority of Southerners lift this huge burden off the shoulders of Dixie and lead it out of BARBARISM?

Let us hope they will strive HARDER than they have to do so!

Says Race Issues Factor In U. S. Foreign Relations

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 7-7-56

MIAMI — The impact of racial segregation practices in the United States on its relations with other nations of the world was sharply pointed up here Friday by Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., permanent U. S. delegate to the United Nations.

Lodge, speaking at the 39th annual convention of the Lions International in Miami, said:

"When we make progress on such problems as segregation, it helps us tremendously in our foreign relations, for we want foreign nations to know we feel that all men are created equal."

Turning his atention to foreign affairs, Lodge declared "although the world is still a dangerous place, it has never been safer or less dangerous" at any time since before the Korean War.

He continued: "We can have peace if we wage peace with the same vigor that we have waged war when forced to do so."

The U. N. Representative cautioned, however, that we must not get "musclebound or paralyzed" in our methods of reaching our goal. "We must build strength not only in the military but more important, we must have strength in faith," he said.

Lodge said the new look in Russia is a "change in appearance only" and warned, "we must keep cool heads."

The U. N. Ambassador praised President Eisenhower for his "great job of promoting peace" especially during the summit conference at Geneva, and said while we must continue to help our allies, "we must not make gifts in such a way as to destroy the value of the gifts."

Lodge said earlier that he feels sure President Eisenhower "will run and be re-elected."

Lodge will be one of the Massachusetts delegates pledged to Eisenhower at the GOP national convention in San Francisco.

Voluntary Solution to the Racial Problem Is More in Keeping With the Democratic Ideal

Journal-Constitution Atlanta, Ga. 8/5/56

The Christian Science Monitor

IT IS SURPRISING how many Americans believe their principal racial problem is confined to the South. For the fact is that nearly one-third of the Negroes in the United States now live in the North.

They are largely concentrated in "cities" within cities, twelve having a population of 100,000 each and three nearly 1,000,000 each. And adjustments are by no means always easy or peaceful, as recurrent disturbances prove.

There is no legal segregation in the North but segregation forms the general pattern wherever large groups of Negroes are found. Their own desires to live among their own kind plus economic pressures tend to restrict them to certain crowded and deteriorating neighborhoods. And since children normally attend schools nearest their homes, segregation naturally governs there too as a general practice.

FORCE ATTEMPTED

Such segregation, although never touching the experience of millions of Northerners, greatly concerns many city and school officials. In some cases they are attempting to force a mixing of races—even going across normal school zones to do it.

The theory is that mixing is itself educational. Directly involved is the old concept of the "melting pot" as an adjunct of democracy. And there is insistence on the right of equal opportunity.

Considering the official and political efforts to combat segregation in the North, it has proved remarkably persistent. In several respects it resembles a phenomenon American cities have long known—immigrants from abroad forming their own racial or national enclaves, maintaining their own customs and languages, even their own newspapers. Often the forces making for such clannishness come as much from within as from without.

So it is with the American Negro—in the North and the South.

Too often it is assumed that segregation is a wholly artificial pattern enforced by unworthy prejudice. Some of it is like that. But much segregation comes about naturally through the same processes of selection which cause individuals to choose like-minded associates or families to seek congenial neighborhoods.

And white resistance to Negro migrations within cities arises partly from the fact that such movements are usually in groups —due in turn to Negro desires to have friends or relatives as neighbors.

Doris Fleeson is on vacation.

SOME UNDERSTANDING

Officials in the North who are trying to force a mixing in the face of such forces of natural selection should be able better to understand why desegregation moves slowly in the South. So too should Northern whites who object to their neighborhoods being changed either by racial migration, by industrialization or by any social force causing deterioration.

And possibly also Negroes who prefer not to live alone in white neighborhoods, a preference which reduces the opportunity for them to be treated as individuals and centers attention on race.

All of us can deal more wisely with this situation if we recognize that here there are two rights in conflict.

One is the right to equal opportunity. The other is the right of the individual to choose his associates.

Both are closely related to the democratic ideal. To enforce either against the other by law takes something away from that ideal. To seek accommodation of the one to the other by voluntary action supports the democratic ideal and is likely to bring the most practicable and enduring solution.

Brownell Says U.S. To Sue To Force Desegregation

Defender Chicago, Ill. p. 3 Sat. 7-7-56

WASHINGTON — (INS)—Attorney General Herbert Brownell predicted last week that the U. S. government will file a number of cases in the next year to enforce racial integration in the nation's schools.

Brownell, appearing on the CBS "Face The Nation" program, said: "We believe there is going to be quite a volume of litigation" in a number of states.

He noted that thus far the Justice Department has taken action in only one case, involving Hoxie, Ark., where a controversy over a school board decision to end school segregation has flared.

Brownell said that the anticipation of numerous school cases is the basis for the administration's proposal that a special assistant attorney general be authorized to deal with civil rights questions.

The Attorney General, a top GOP political strategist, also declared that "President Eisenhower will be the Republican presidential candidate.

He said: "I myself am confident that the Republicans will put on a ticket of Eisenhower and Nixon."

Brownell added that as far as he knows, Mr. Eisenhower has not disclosed his intentions to anyone since he underwent his abdominal operation.

The administration official predicted that Communists — in government will be a 1956 campaign issue because of what he termed the success of the Eisenhower administration in its loyalty-security program.

He said he has no idea whether Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R) Wis., will be used by the Republicans in the campaign this fall.

Brownell also disclosed that he has written Senate investigations Chairman John L. McClellan (D) Ark., a report on the activities of Los Angeles attorney Murray Chotiner.

Chotiner, campaign manager for Vice President Richard M. Nixon in 1952, has been named as having been hired as legal adviser for two uniform manufacturers blacklisted by the army.

Says attacks on court based on political aims

Afro-American p. 12 Baltimore, Md. 8-4-56

ATLANTA, Ga. — The vitriolic attacks of Southern politicians against Supreme Court desegregation rulings are the result not of widespread pressure from white Southerners, but of a deliberate and sinister exploitation of the issues for political purposes, according to Dr. Robert Martin.

The Howard University political scientist who is currently teaching in the Atlanta University Summer School, said, "Their protest is against the whole pattern of change, particularly against the colored man as a political force."

Speaking to the Atlanta University Summer School Assembly he said that the fact that two-thirds of the potential colored electorate does not vote constituted a challenge which colored leadership must meet.

* * *

DR. MARTIN discussed six factors which were changing established political patterns, developments which are important not only for colored persons but for the nation as a whole, particularly the Southern scene.

These are an increasing political interest among colored people which has led to the development of civic consciousness; an increase in registration and voting, exemplified by the fact that colored people voting in the low income bracket in the North is double the white; a shift of the colored voters from the Republican to the Democratic party, based on a more realistic appraisal of what the two parties have to offer him; a movement towards voting on class lines; urbanization with a resulting cohesiveness of the voters; and an increasing sophistication of the colored voters.

Colored voters hold a balance of political power in many states, Dr. Martin said, and he hoped that the colored voter would use his political potential to help build a better South.

WHAT'S HAPPENING ON THE

Desegregation Front

Sat. 6-30-56

UNION ASKS IKE TO TAKE HAND IN ALABAMA

CINCINNATI—Some 800 delegates attending the International convention of the United Packinghouse Workers of America, AFL-CIO, called upon President Eisenhower to intervene in the six-month-old Montgomery bus boycott to the end that city officials obey the recent federal district court ruling outlawing racial segregation on city buses.

The delegates also voted to support the organization's recently-launched drive for a $2 million fund to fight discrimination in the South.

* * *

CONTINUE BUS STRIKE IN FLORIDA

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—The five week old strike against the local bus company will continue, leaders of the movement said here on Monday.

Dan Speek, chairman of the transportation committee of the Intercity Civic Association, revealed that the boycotters have at their disposal a 25-passenger bus, two station wagons and 74 automobiles.

So far, the bus company, which is losing money daily, has refused to meet the demands of the local citizens which include:

Ending segregated seating, employing colored drivers and instructing white drivers to treat all passenegrs with courtesy, regardless of race or color.

* * *

BALTIMORE NOW HAS INTEGRATED POOLS

BALTIMORE — For the first time in the history of the Monumental City, all city swimming pools are operating on an integrated basis.

When the pools opened on Saturday, there were some colored persons on hand at practically every pool in the city. There were no incidents. Negro lifeguards have been employed at most of the pools.

department of education of North Carolina College in Durham, here Sunday.

Addressing the opening session of the American Teachers Association Region III meeting at Winston-Salem Teachers' College, Dr. Browne called integration in schools in accordance with the May 17, 1954 decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, the "big crisis" in education today.

Among the basic issues in education today, she listed the right of teachers to join organizations, a merit system that fairly evaluates teachers of all races alike and classes for the "gifted" Negro child as well as for the "retarded" child.

COMMITTEE TO PROBE S. C.

COLUMBIA, S. C. — All but three members have been chosen for a special legislative governor's committee that will probe alleged NAACP activities at S. C. State College.

Lt. Governor Ernest F. Hollings announced on Saturday the appointment of three state senators to the committee. The governor has already named three to the committee. It remains now for Speaker Sol Blatt to appoint three House members to the group.

GUNFIRE INTERRUPTS RACE

KINGSTREE, S. C. — Catholic leaders who last week sponsored a Negro religious meeting have been accused by a S. C. Citizen's Council official with "taking affirmative steps to attack and destroy the local customs and traditions of our people."

The meeting, which featured a film of the life of Christ, was interrupted by a flurry of pistol shots. Emory Rogers, executive secretary of the Association of Citizens' Councils of South Carolina, said in Summerton that his group "deplored" the action of the white men who fired the shots.

NO BUS BOYCOTT FOR MIAMI

ling upon the bus company to employ Negro drivers on predominantly Negro runs.

G. E. Graves, local NAACP attorney, said that a federal court suit challenging city laws regarding segregation on buses would be filed "very soon." At Tallahassee, Negro citizens have been boycotting buses since May 28. This week the bus company there announced that it may have to go out of business because of the lost patronage.

Was 14th Amendment Ever Legally Adopted?

The fine and timely article by Mr. David Lawrence in your July 27 issue recalls to my mind many things in history that seem to have been forgotten by most of us. One of these is that there were actually 36 states in the Union at the time Congress proposed the 14th Amendment on the 16th day of June, 1866. Between that time and the time that the Congress, by resolution, declared the amendment adopted, the states of Ohio and New Jersey withdrew their ratifications. One state admitted to the Union just a few short days before the declaration of adoption on the 21st day of July, 1868, was also counted in the three-fourths of the states ratifying the amendment. This is perhaps where Mr. Lawrence obtained the figure of 37 states at the time, yet, it is anxiomatic that this action by that particular state could have no retroactive effect on the proposal of Congress on the 16th day of June, 1866.

The states of Kentucky, Delaware and Maryland never did ratify the amendment. None of the Southern states ratified it until the Congress, by punitive threats of martial law, without the sanction of any of the Southern states representatives, compelled a ratification.

Yet the concurrent resolution of the Congress on the 21st day of July, 1868, included the names of these states as ratifying the amendment. The order in which this resolution placed the states as ratifying the amendment is as follows: Connecticut, Tennessee, New Jersey, Oregon, Vermont, New York, Ohio, Illinois, West Virginia, Kansas, Maine, Nevada, Missouri, Indiana, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Iowa, Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Alabama, South Carolina and Louisiana, being three-fourths and more of the several states of the Union. This is, by actual count, 25 states, and when you take into consideration that New Jersey and Ohio had at that time withdrawn their ratification by the same solemnity by which they had ratified the amendment, it is readily ascertainable that much less than the necessary three-fourths had done so. Also, it is a matter of figures that it took 27 out of the 36 to make the ratification legal.

Although I do not see how any action by the 48 states now could become retroactive to the date of the proposal of the amendment, it is my honest conviction that the legal way to eliminate all this fuss and furor that we have on hand now, would be to resubmit this amendment to the several states, and by educational work, I am quite sure that the states now comprising the whole of the United States would reject any such.

R. G. KELTON, Oneonta, Ala.

WHAT'S HAPPENING ON THE

Desegregation Front

Sat. 6-23-56

SEES INTEGRATION WITHIN 25 YEARS

WINSTON-SALEM — Acceptance of complete integration in public schools was predicted within the next 25 years by Dr. Rose Browne, chairman of the MIAMI—A vote to fight bus segregation in the courts rather than boycott city buses was taken at an NAACP mass meeting here Sunday.

Some 4000 persons adopted a resolution condemning a bus boycott as "untenable" here, but cal-

Ike, Adlai Decry School Violence

Defender Sat. 9-22-56

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower and his presidential rival, Adlai Stevenson, took similar positions last week in declaring that action should be taken to halt the spread of racial strife in the school segregation problem.

Stevenson, who said the American people are deeply concerned over the "ugly disorders," indicated that he will make major proposals for solving the integration problem.

The Democratic presidential candidate backed up his earlier endorsement of the Supreme Court desegregation ruling by condemning the outbreak which have "warped the path of civil rights."

WIDE CONCERN

He has "encountered a widespread and sober concern over the absence of leadership in Washington in the face of mounting opposition to the court ruling."

President Eisenhower's comment was made during his weekly press conference and marked an abrupt switch in his expressed previous opinion on the government's role in civil rights crisis.

Eisenhower promised that the Justice department would assist federal courts that bring contempt action against local officials who disobey the integration decision.

If the courts bestir themselves, Eisenhower promised, the Justice Department will do its part.

"When the courts do call properly upon the Attorney General, I am sure he will assist in every possible way," Eisenhower said.

FIRST SUGGESTION

It was the first time during the current turmoil in the South that the President had suggested in any way the Federal government could do more than voice pious hope that the decision will be accepted.

The question came up when a newsman noted that a Texas Ranger in Texarkana, Texas, stood by idly as a mob threatened two Negro students.

This is what the reporter asked the President:

"Would you consider that an incident in which the Federal government had a responsibility and, if not, can you give us an idea of what the formula is that would have to be followed for the Government to intervene?"

REVIEWS CASE

The President first reviewed the proposal whereby the Federal Court issues an integration order. Then taking a hypothetical case, he assumed that the students were denied entry to the school because of violence.

In such a situation this is what the President thinks should happen:

"Now that the court must decide whether it believes it—someone is in contempt of that court. And at that point I think it is customary for the court to call in the Justice department to assist in bringing in the evidence and thrashing the case out.

"And then, that having been done, if anyone is in contempt, I assume that is the job of the U. S. Marshal to serve the warrants and to take the men, the offenders, to jail or to pay their fines ,or whatever happens."

SHARP CONTRAST

Although the President's language sounded restrained, it was in sharp contrast with last week's press conference.

At that time the President professed ignorance with what was going on in Texas, and said he was unfamiliar with Gov. Shiver's defiance of the Supreme Court.

Not only was the President ready with an answer this time, but he said that Attorney General Brownell had prepared the answer for him.

Washington merry-go-round—

How some Southerners look at racial unrest

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Drew Pearson is touring the Middle East. During his absence, the Washington Merry-Go-Round will be written by his junior partner.)

BY JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15—The raw truth behind the Southern race riots is that a new movement is rising in the South.

The extremists are fanning race hatred, bullying local officials, and inciting mob violence.

This is what Southerners, themselves, are saying privately.

"I am bullied and interfered with in my duties by our local White Council," a Louisiana registrar writes me.

"The White Councils are making personal friendship between individuals of the two races almost impossible," says a Georgia businessman.

"The extremists are leaving no middle ground for the moderates,' says an Arkansas politician. "We are forced to choose sides—either for the Write Citizens Council or the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

"A whole new generation is being taught extreme race hatred," claims an Alabama minister. "They are learning a kind of hate we did not have before, but which other sections often believed about us."

THESE STATMENTS come from Southerners who believe in segregation. Their views do not imply any hostility toward Negroes. Rather they believe segregation is necessary to protect their families from lower Negro standards.

They consider Negro morals, education, and healths as below their own standards.

They are willing to help their Negro neighbors achieve better conditions.

They consider integration progressing and are reconciled to accepting it—eventually. Meanwhile, they believe segregation is a necessary safeguard.

"MANY, MANY white people here in the South have warm personal friends among the Negroes, but still believe in some degree of segregation," an Alabama schoolteacher explains. "Now all this is changing. The Citizens Councils are raising a tide of race hatred that is making fearful inroads into the backlog of good will that really did exist here in times past."

Solutions listed

THOSE WHO believe time is on the side of integration are wrong, several Southerners warn.

"It is a mistake to think integration may safely go slow, and it will come out right in the end," says one. "The extremists aim not merely to keep segregation where it now exists, but to undo the work of integration where it has already taken place.'

NOTE: ost Southerners contacted by this column look to President Eisenhower for leadership on settling the race crisis.

Adlai jumps gun

HERES THE INSIDE reason Adlai Stevenson proposed ending the draft:

He was tipped off that President Eisenhower had the same idea in mind. So Stevenson jumped the gun on Ike, came out with the proposal first.

Both candidates would have worded the promise the same way. They favor dropping the draft as soon as world conditions permit.

Story by Mrs. McKeon

EMILE ZOLA BERMAN, the lawyer who defended Marine Sgt. Matthew McKeon, tried to suppress a story in today's Parade magazine. The Sunday supplement got an exclusive story from Mrs. McKeon, describing her emotions while her husband was on trial for leading six Marines to their death in a swollen creek. Berman's office tried to stop the story, though Parade had a written release from Mrs. McKeon. Despite legal threats, Parade Editor Jess Gorkin published the story anyhow.

Too many 'job seekers'

THE STAID First National City Bank of New York has found a unique explanation for the slight rise in unemployment. It's not a lack of "employment opportunities," but a "super abundance of job seekers" that has caused the problem, claims the bank's newsletter. This sounds like the Agriculture Department's description of the soil bank program. After years of castigating the New Deal for plowing under crops, the Republicans couldn't bring themselves to announcing they, too, are now sponsoring the same thing. Under the GOP program, the announcement says, farmers will "incorporate crops into the soil."

THE WHITE HOUSE is withholding its OK for the small airlines to fly charters overseas. This protects the charter business for the big, scheduled airlines. But it's costing the taxpayers a small fortune. Uncle Sam pays the independent lines for flying empty in order to pick up a government load overseas.

New dean

NICARAGUA'S Ambassador Guillermo Sevilla Sacasa will be the first Latin American in history to become dean of the Washington diplomatic corps. He'll replace Norwegian Ambassador Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne as the diplomatic dean in November. A stanch friend of this country, Sevilla Sacasa takes pride in the fact that Nicaragua has seconded every important U. S. motion at the United Nations.

Navy bullying

GUAM RESIDENTS are up in arms over the way the Navy is pushing them around.

Six years ago, Congress made Guam a self-governing territory and gave the islanders a 20-point bill of rights. This was supposed to give them the same privileges as other American citizens, but the Navy has tenaciously refused to yield control of the island.

Citizens can come and go as they please in Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. But on Guam, the Navy has final say-so—with no appeal from its ruling. As a result, many Americans on Guam find themselves harassed.

The island's only airport and commercial docks happen to lie within the naval base. If the Navy doesn't like a person, it simply excludes him from reentry in case he leaves the island on a business trip or emergency visit to the U. S.

This can be done by denying him a "security clearance" to pass through the naval grounds. There is no appeal from the Navy's ruling, and the reasons for denial are kept secret.

The Guam Chamber of Commerce may formally charge the Navy with violating citizens' constitutional rights.—(c)

HARRIMAN FAVORS USING F.B.I. IN BIAS

Times P. 6-A

New York

Blames Outside 'Agitators' in South for Disorders—Hits President's Stand

Sun. 9-9-56

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 8 (AP)—Governor Harriman said today President Eisenhower should use the Federal Bureau of Investigation to investigate "out-of-state agitators." Mr. Harriman charged they were mainly responsible for violence over racial integration in Southern schools.

"The President should use the F. B. I. to investigate the whole question of these agitators crossing state lines to start racial trouble," the Governor said. He did not name or identify the agitators.

The Governor charged that the President was shirking a responsibility to provide moral leadership and to "develop a climate of public opinion" which would speed school integration in accordance with the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

Mr. Harriman said he was "shocked" to read the President's news conference comments on the question.

"The President just doesn't seem to know what's going on," Mr. Harriman said. "And, what's more, he doesn't seem to care."

Speaks to Rally

The Governor came here to address a campaign rally of Monroe County Democrats. He declined to speculate on the possible state Democratic choice as a candidate for the United States Senate.

Mr. Harriman also declined to speculate on possible Republican Senatorial candidates. But he said he thought current attacks on State Attorney General Jacob K. Javits for allegedly accepting political advice from Communists came mostly from Republicans.

He specifically mentioned Senator William E. Jenner, Republican of Indiana, as one source and declared: "You can call Jenner anything you want to, but you can't call him a Democrat."

Mr. Harriman said in answer to another question that he considered the dominant state issue this year to be "the need for a progressive Legislature next year to carry out the new vision program the Democratic Administration has started."

BIAS FIGHT URGED BY BILLY GRAHAM

Times P. 17

Laymen's Group Hears Plea to Churches to Speak Out and Help Ease Tensions

Sat. 9-15-56

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 14—The Rev. Billy Graham urged churches today to "speak out" to ease racial tensions that were gripping the South.

"The church has been too silent," he declared. "This is the hour for the church to speak out and call for love of neighbor, to play the role of the Good Samaritan."

The evangelist, a North Carolinian, bars racial discrimination at his religious revivals in South or North. Today he said that no matter how many laws or rulings were made against segregation, they would be ineffective without moral support from the people.

He said he agreed with a recent statement by Vice President Richard M. Nixon that no law was stronger than the will of the people to keep it.

"Race bias," he said, "is a social problem that can only be effectively dealt with when human nature can be changed. The object of the church is to lead men to Christ and to apply His teachings to their daily lives. * * * This would produce the needed social transformation."

Mr. Graham spoke at a news conference in conjunction with the first national meeting of an inter-denominational group of laymen.

The National Convention of Christian Men has brought together members of thirty Protestant groups. It is being sponsored by United Church Men, the laymen's department of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.

Three thousand delegates from thirty-three states met at Cleveland's Public Auditorium to proclaim their faith in God, exchange ideas on church programs, and to seek to relate religion to daily living.

Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church in New York for twenty-four years, also spoke to a news conference. He said he saw a "travesty" in the "hatred and corruption" being injected into children by parents in Clay, Ky., and other centers of racial strife. He predicted that in ten years the South would be astonished to recall that it ever had been wracked by the pain that integration was now causing it.

Dr. Peale returned on Tuesday from a summer in Europe. He said he had found religious life "dull" in Scandinavia and other countries where the emphasis was on a "formalized" state church. He told the convention that a Christ-centered message was the church's best asset and had made religion more dynamic in the United States than elsewhere.

2 IN CABINET BACK G.O.P. BIAS STAND

Times P. 14 C

Summerfield and Brownell Express Satisfaction With Progress of Integration

Mon. 9-17-56

By ALLEN DRURY

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 — Members of the Eisenhower Cabinet defended the Administration's record on desegregation today.

The issue was a major topic of week-end political discussion for spokesmen of both parties.

Two members of the President's Cabinet, on separate television programs, expressed satisfaction with the present rate of progress in integrating the schools.

Arthur E. Summerfield, Postmaster General, told questioners on "Face the Nation" that the President had used "the proper discretion, patience and understanding" in his handling of the matter. The program was produced by the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., appearing on the independently produced TV program "Reporter's Round-Up," said progress had been "remarkable and fine."

Mr. Summerfield and Mr. Brownell also defended the Administration against recent charges by Adlai E. Stevenson that it had condoned "corruption."

Mr. Summerfield said "nothing could be farther from the truth" than to make such an accusation.

Mr. Brownell said the record of the Administration "has been in marked contrast to the scandal and corruption that existed in the Truman Administration."

Talbott Case Cited

Both men were asked about the resignation of Harold E. Talbott, former Secretary of the Air Force, who quit his job after a Congressional committee disclosed that he had solicited business from the Pentagon for a concern in which he had an interest.

Mr. Brownell said that "putting things in perspective * * * what we want to do on a program of this sort is to take the over-all picture * * * there has never been in my time an Administration that is as clean and decent."

Mr. Summerfield said that Mr. Talbott had made "a mistake in judgment, but certainly committed no act that could be called corrupt."

JOSEPH BREIG

Old Wounds In The South

Catholic Week Fri. 8-31-56 P. 4

During my tour of the South I gathered that half-healed old Civil War wounds are bleeding again as a result of the U. S. Supreme Court decision which outlawed the segregation of whites and Negroes in our public school systems.

In other words, this problem is more complicated and grievous than it appears on the surface. Desegregation is only a part of it. The Court's ruling brought to a head a complex of painful issues which involve tradition, emotion, history, family and sectional pride and memories, deep-rooted customs, and the like.

These are explosive things.

BREIG

I suspect that it is impossible for a northerner, in the North, to understand southern feelings about the War Between the States. To us, it is almost as remote and unreal as the First Punic War. In every way, I think, the American Revolution is much closer and more meaningful to northerners.

* * *

THE SOUTH, if my impression is correct, is very different. There have not been millions of immigrants in the South, as in the North, to dim old memories and to distract historical attention. The South is still somewhat sick at heart over the Civil War. The South feels the old injustices, and feels also defeat's terrible blow to pride.

These deep feelings, which probably are more subconscious than conscious and intentional, are involved in the school desegregation controversy. It is by no means merely a matter of white and Negro children sitting in the same classrooms under the same teachers. Indeed, perhaps that is one of the smallest parts of the problem, when you get right down to it.

* * *

A SOUTHERNER, without realizing what he is doing, is as likely as not to talk rather as if the Supreme Court were a Northern Supreme Court, and as if desegregation were something that the North thought up to press upon the South. I seemed to sense old, half-buried resentments, as if the southerner and I were somehow different, rather than being simply two Americans.

But I do not think that southerners intend it that way. They are ready, I believe, to discuss things calmly and realistically when they discover that you are reasonable and sympathetic, and concerned with human relations as one of America's profound meanings. But first you must understand the touchiness of this matter of desegregation, and how very much history, habit and tradition is bound up in it.

* * *

WE NORTHERNERS, of course, must not forget that we ourselves are not without grave fault. A southerner might courteously point out that we in the North have never given the Negro complete justice in such profoundly important matters as housing, job opportunities and freedom to live where he chooses. The southerners have a knotty problem to solve, but so have we.

What we all need, I suspect, is first to remind ourselves that we are all Americans, and then to review together, seriously, humbly, harmoniously and in a spirit of unity, some deep American fundamentals.

* * *

THE VERY HEARTBEAT of America is the statement in the Declaration of Independence of the tremendous truth that all men are created equal and are endowed by their creator with certin inalienable rights, and that to protect these rights, governments are instituted among men.

This being true, there is no more noble or patriotic task for any American, whether he lives North, South, East or West, than the work of making America a reflection in every respect of the splendid ideal set forth in the Declaration.

I came away from the South convinced, first, that desegregation is not going to be easy and that we must be patient, prayerful and prudent; and second, that people as courteous, kindly, hospitable and humane as the southerners are will not fail in due time to implement the idea set forth by the Founding Fathers.

I hope, however, that nonoby will think of me as one of those reporters who visit an area for a week or two and then elect themselves experts. I am simply setting forth my conclusions for what they are worth.

BIAS FIGHT URGED BY BILLY GRAHAM

Times of N.Y.

New York

Laymen's Group Hears Plea to Churches to Speak Out and Help Ease Tensions

Sat 9-15-56

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 14—The Rev. Billy Graham urged churches today to "speak out" to ease racial tensions that were gripping the South.

"The church has been too silent," he declared. "This is the hour for the church to speak out and call for love of neighbor, to play the role of the Good Samaritan."

The evangelist, a North Carolinian, bars racial discrimination at his religious revivals in South or North. Today he said that no matter how many laws or rulings were made against segregation, they would be ineffective without moral support from the people.

He said he agreed with a recent statement by Vice President Richard M. Nixon that no law was stronger than the will of the people to keep it. The Supreme Court has declared segregation in public schools unconstitutional and has made integration "the law of the land."

"Race bias," he said, "is a social problem that can only be effectively dealt with when human nature can be changed. The object of the church is to lead men to Christ and to apply His teachings to their daily lives. * * * This would produce the needed social transformation."

Mr. Graham spoke at a news conference in conjunction with the first national meeting of an inter-denominational group of laymen.

The National Convention of Christian Men has brought together members of thirty Protestant groups. It is being sponsored by United Church Men, the laymen's department of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.

Three thousand delegates from thirty-three states met at Cleveland's Public Auditorium to proclaim their faith in God, exchange ideas on church programs, and to seek to relate religion to daily living.

"To call Christian men of all denominations together will do a great deal to break down prejudices between denominations," Mr. Graham asserted.

The 37-year-old Evangelist, who has preached to millions throughout Europe and Asia, said communism was growing. He said it would continue to penetrate new areas because of its adherents' "complete dedication to their principles and ideals."

Mr. Graham also spoke before the convention to a luncheon meeting of 1,600 persons at the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce.

"We are seeing in the United States a resurgence of interest in religion," he told the group "but I am not willing to believe there is a religious renaissance until I see men of both races loving each other instead of fighting and hating."

Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church in New York for twenty-four years, also spoke to a news conference. He said he saw a "travesty" in the "hatred and corruption" being injected into children by parents in Clay, Ky., and other centers of racial strife. He predicted that in ten years the South would be astonished to recall that it ever had been wracked by the pain that integration was now causing it.

Dr. Peale returned on Tuesday from a summer in Europe. He said he had found religious life "dull" in Scandinavia and other countries where the emphasis was on a "formalized" state church. He told the convention that a Christ-centered message was the church's best asset and had made religion more dynamic in the United States than elsewhere.

The author of best-seller books on "positive thinking" and "confident living" announced earlier in the day the forthcoming publication of his twelfth "and last" book. It will be entitled "Really Live Your Life." He finished it in Switzerland last month.

Says JC Costs U. S. $12 Billion A Year

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 9-15-56

CINCINNATI, Ohio—"America can no longer afford the luxury of first and second class citizenship," Maxwell Abbell, chairman of the President's Committee on Employment Policy, told guests at a luncheon session here last week of the National Urban League annual conference.

He estimated that racial discrimination costs the nation over $12 billion dollars a year "because the skills of members of discriminated groups are not fully utilized in the national economy."

The committee, headed by Mr. Abbell, was set up by the President about a year and a half ago to root out discriminatory employment practices in Federal agencies.

MR. ABBELL asserted that his committee and the President's Committee on Government Contracts were set up to see that there is no hiring discrimination in firms doing business with the government directly or indirectly.

Together, he said, they "affect about 25 per cent of the industrial labor force, a very strong and effective leavening influence toward complete elimination of discrimination in employment."

The committee's educational efforts, he added, "are even more important than our hearing of cases."

"A past history of discriminatory practices has discouraged many from trying to qualify for positions that formerly were not open to them and now that they are being opened, the qualified applicants often are not available," he said.

A LACK OF adequate training facilities for Federal employment in some southern communities and the fact that colored schools in the South are "far below the standard of the white schools in the same communities," are also responsible, he said, for the lack of qualified colored applicants for Federal jobs.

He concluded that "in the field of education lies the greatest opportunity for advancement of the colored people in future economic and employment opportunities, not only in the Federal Government but in private and other public employment as well."

E. B. Henderson Answers Writers Of "Uncle Tom" Letters To Press

Journal & Guide Norfolk, Va. Sat. 7-28-56

Editor, Journal and Guide:

Every once in awhile some brain-washed Uncle Tom writes, sponsors or allows a white person to write a letter for him to be published in some local paper. The regular subscriber to local small town press is one who signs himself Davis Lee from New Jersey.

A recent example of such a letter was publisher in the Farmville (Va.) Herald in which the writer prides himself on his relationship with "the good white people," pities the poor teachers who believe in the NAACP, and condemns Negro ministers for "profaning" the house of God by permitting NAACP meetings.

• • •

HIS NAME is given as Bluit Andrews. It is doubtful that he wrote the letter which asks Negroes to be satisfied with Jim Crowism because white people pay most taxes and therefore we should be grateful that they treat us as well as they do.

He deplores the effects of miscegenation which has mongrelized his race and claims the NAACP is trying to further the process and suggests that God's vengeance will take care of the crime of bespoiling the Negro race.

THE AMERICAN colonists had their Tories, the white westerners had their renegades and Uncle Toms came out of slavery. Mr. Bluit Andrews istypical of the Negro who, being cared for by his good master during slavery, looked with terror on the thought of being free. I attach a letter I have written to the Farmville Herald which I wish you would publish.

—E. B. HENDERSON
Falls Church, Va.

To the Editor
The Farmville Herald:

First may I compliment the fairness of your report of the NAACP mass meeting on June 17.

However I should like to reply to the letter published in your paper entitled 'Racial Segregation Best For All," and signed by one Bluit Andrews. Mr. Andrews stresses the need for pride of Negroes in their race; he be-speaks the vengeance of God upon those guilty of mongrelizing the pure Negro race. He urges Negroes to throw off allegiance to the NAACP and accept the beneficence of the good white people of Farmville.

• • •

WITH REGARD to definitizing race, I doubt that Mr. Andrews has the intelligence or the education to philosophize thereupon. He prides himself upon being a Negro but apparently does not understand what it should be to be an American citizen. He deplores miscegenation which he untruthfully ascribes as a motive of the NAACP.

It has been estimated by many sociologists and anthropologists that if one drop of Negro blood makes one a Negro, then one in every five presumably white Americans has a Negro ancestor since miscegenation has been taking place since shortly after 1619.

• • •

FOR MANY years over 20,000 light skinned Negroes have passed over unidentified as such into the American stream. There is no intent of the NAACP to mongrelize. This blame can be placed elsewhere as Mr. Andrews has indicated.

Mr. Andrews urges school teachers and ministers to disclaim the NAACP. By inference he condemns the ministers in Alabama who are stimulating Negroes to the point of protecting Jim Crow. He quotes the Bible but evidently has not read of the struggles of the Hebrews to throw off the yoke of oppression under the leadership of their great spiritual leaders.

• • •

HAD IT NOT been for the NAACP and its American way of proceeding through the courts Negro teachers would yet be paid salaries less than teachers of white schools, and be teaching in the pitiful one-room shacks in many places. Negro boys and girls would have to be sent out of the state for some kinds of college education they are now able to get at the University of Virginia.

Despite his belief in equality of education being possible under segregation, the Supreme Court has in a unanimous decision ruled that equal opportunity is not possible under practices of segregation, Mr. Andrews' opinion to the contrary notwithstanding.

• • •

MR. ANDREWS poses the specious argument that since Negroes pay less taxes they should be grateful. Is it not true that some white people pay less taxes on property than some white people and some Negroes? Does not Mr. Andrews pay the same tax on his automobile, his gasoline and his cigarettes? The public schools were set up largely by Negro legislators during reconstruction for the masses of people, usually poorer people; the richer people still prefer private schools.

Like some other groups playing God, Mr. Andrews speaks for God in defending segregation just as many did to defend slavery. If he had been born a slave I would have expected him to defend the system and leave it to God and the good white people to take care of him.

• • •

HE CONFIRMS my claim that he has been so brainwashed by the people he serves that he cannot appreciate the effort of the NAACP and many thousands of Christian white people to save our children from being satisfied with the kind of restricted citizenship he enjoys. I don't know what his economic security rests upon, but it is a sure bet that he wants to play Uncle Tom to his employers and his friends. Unfortunately history will record him as an enemy to his race, and to the ideals of democracy and freedom.

E. B. HENDERSON
Falls Church, Va.

Vatican paper hits jim crow

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 9-15-56

VATICAN CITY—Ossveratore Romano, a Vatican City newspaper, last week called racial segregation in America as a "sin against the nature of Christianity."

The editorial comment made references to the flair of racial tension in Tennessee caused by the integration of a formerly all-white public school, and added:

"Adequate" punishment should be given persons who discriminate against another on grounds of race. It suggested that violators be denied what the violator would take away.

Solid South Held Broken on Segregation

Post & Times Herald

The first region-wide attempt to find out how integration is progressing in the South in the wake of the Supreme Court order of May 17, 1954, has turned up some surprising results. Here is a report on the survey, soon to be published by the Fund for the Republic, which sponsored the study:

Washington, D.C.

By Bem Price
Associated Press

After turning up 1100 examples of racial barriers dropped in all walks of life in Dixie over the past two years, a Southerner concluded: "There is no longer a solid South of segregation."

Herald 9-16-56

Reporting on a carefully documented survey of 17 southern and border states where segregation has been the historic pattern, Harold C. Fleming said:

P. 18-A

"The common notion that desegregation just can't work in the South is plainly contradicted by the findings."

The survey turned up examples, by specific location, of desegregation in schools, housing, public health and welfare, private enterprise, Government, public transportation and public accommodations.

Fleming, a native of Georgia and assistant director of the Southern Regional Council at Atlanta, said the survey is not complete andt hat the examples cited must be taken as merely representations.

All-South Membership

The council is an interracial group devoted "to equal opportunity for all." Its membership is confined to southerners.

Fleming's findings—all 1100 of them—are to be published shortly in book form by the Fund for the Republic, which provided the money for the survey, along with a companion study on the removal of racial barriers in the 31 states outside the South.

The study, now in the hands of the printers, was made available in the aftermath of recent disturbances in the South over the admission of Negroes to public schools in Mansfield, Tex.; Clinton, Tenn.; Texarkana, Tex., and Sturgis and Clay, Ky.

In assessing his state-by-state survey, Fleming, a student of his region for 10 years, wrote:

"The 1100 instances of desegregation discovered were almost evenly divided between the ive 'border' states on the one hand and the 12 'southern' states on the other. Virtually all of them took place smoothly and harmoniously.

"Obviously," he said, "a large reservoir of good will and capacity for change exists among private citizens, even in states where the official climate is harsh. There is no longer a Solid South of segregation."

Two-Year Survey

The survey covers the period from May 17, 1954—date of the U. S. Supreme Court decision holding school segregation unconstitutional—to May of this year.

It is the first region-wide attempt to find out what movements toward integration have taken place in the wake of the Court's opinion among all segments of Southern life.

The survey did not deal with what was expected to take place, but what has actually happened in two years. The findings in part:

Education: More than 350 public school districts in 9 of the 17 states integrated. Negro children are attending Catholic parochial schools in 21 Southern cities. Ninety-five Southern colleges are newly desegrated.

Public Service: Maryland appointed or elected 11 Negroes to city and state posts. Developments in this field are not a reliable measure of the extent of Negro representation. For example, in 1954, Negroes already were serving on city councils in at least 11 Southern cities and held elective or appointive office in more than 20 others.

Public Housing: Segregation is virtually unchallenged in the South, but Negroes were living in public housing projects occupied by whites in Taylor and Crystal City, Tex.; Baltimore, Charleston, W. Va.; St. Louis, and Rayne, La.

Transportation: Segregation dropped in cities in Texas, Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Religion: Twenty ministerial associations are integrated, overwhelming majority of churches segregated but at least 10 formerly white churches accepted Negro members.

Public Places: Desegregation in hotels, restaurants and theaters are confined mainly to cities in five border states.

Ike's Rights Bill Target Of New Dixie Manifesto

Defender P. 1 Chicago Ill. 38a

WASHINGTON — (INS) — Eighty-three Southern congressmen signed a manifesto Thursday denouncing President Eisenhower's civil rights legislation as "sinister" and "iniquitous."

Sat. 7-21-56

Among the signers were four Republicans — William C. Cramer, Fla., Richard H. Poff and Joel T. Broyhill, Va., and Bruce Alger, Tex.

The signers pledged themselves to employ "every available legal and parliamentary weapon" to defeat the legislation when it is called up in the House Monday.

The President's bill, which carries bipartisan sponsorship, is aimed at protecting the Negro's right to vote and sets up a special civil rights division in the Justice department to help achieve this end.

ASKS COMMISSION

A commission would also be created to investigate any charges that economic and other pressures are being brought in the South against Negroes.

The new manifesto was signed by all House members from Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia. There were signatures also from Florida, North Carolina, Tennessee and Texas, but not all congressmen from these states signed.

The manifesto was similar to the "Interposition resolution" signed two months ago by 101 representatives and senators which stated their opposition to the Supreme Court decision banning racial segregation in the public schools.

TEXANS SIGN

Only six of the 22-member Texas delegation signed Thursday's statement. They were Reps. Martin Dies, Wright Patman, John Dowdy, Walter Rogers, Brady Gentry and O. Clark Fisher, all Democrats.

Seven out of eight signed from Florida. Rep. Dante Fascell, a Democrat, did not. Five of North Carolina's 12 members did not sign.

They included Democratic Reps. Harold D. Cooley, Thurmond Chatham and Charles B. Deane, all of whom refused to sign the interposition resolution.

TWO DEFEATED

Cooley has since won renomination to Congress, but Chatham and Deane were defeated. The other North Carolinians who did not sign were Carl T. Durham, a Democrat, and Charles R. Jonas, a Republican.

Defender

Two Republican Congressmen from Tennessee also did not sign. They were B. Carroll Reece and Howard H. Baker.

The signers termed their manifesto a "warning of grave danger." They said the civil rights bill was cloaked in "pious language," violated states' rights, and constituted "an insult to all liberty loving American citizens."

PREDICT DISCORD

They added that if adopted, the bill would add "further fuel and flame to discord engendered by certain agitators" and would harm "the harmonious relations existing between the races."

Sat. 7-21-56

Despite the opposition of the Southerners, it was predicted that the civil rights bill will win by an overwhelming margin. Rep. Keating (R-N. Y.) said not more than 20 or 30 Republicans will vote against the measure.

Nashville Banner

Constitution

President Is Pouring Oil On Troubled Racial Waters

Mon. 9-17-56 P. 4

Atlanta, Ga.

President Eisenhower's reply to questions put to him on the topic of existing racial tension was a reaffirmation of: (1) Respect for the South; (2) the priority of states' rights in their area of responsibility; (3) confidence in the heart and spirit and essential decency of the people.

The American people recognize the genuineness of that view and reciprocate the respect and trust it manifests.

The President is not a troublemaker, barging in to provoke an animosity, to promote a class struggle or otherwise trespass on a delicate situation. As the top symbol of federal authority, he does not choose to exploit but to subordinate that authority, recognizing where a primary responsibility rests—in state hands.

That is a refreshing and reassuring statement of policy: There is not going to be any encroachment of federal force—for Dwight D. Eisenhower doesn't believe that is the legal and proper and workable solution of any such problem. Rather there is going to be on his part, emphasis of obligation at the state and local level. There also is going to be stress put on the educational processes, the influences of mind and spirit and heart—recognizing the inability of law and force to change a man's heart.

We hope the eager beavers were listening. Here is a man who understands a deep-seated problem, and wisely counsels caution and patience. Here is a man in official position whose concept of official responsibility precludes reckless treatment of such a matter; who, though the Chief Executive of the federal government, has the most pronounced respect for the prerogatives of the states.

No wonder he is the choice of America to steer the ship of state. America knows where he stands. Where on this domestic question does Adlai Stevenson stand? Where does Estes Kefauver stand?

What is their concept of states' rights?

In the Eisenhower view local and state governments have moved promptly to prevent violence.

It is not, he reminded, the people who have incited to riot—rather it is the extremists on both sides.

In his view, too, there is no room for Klans—nor is there room for carpetbaggers—in this troublesome picture. The incitation by race-baiters on either side, from the Klan-minded to the NAACP, cannot be tolerated.

Leading, training, teaching take time. There is time.

The President is right and the South—likewise a believer in states' rights—knows it.

GENERAL

Study Lists Desegregation Gains

Herald Tribune New York P. 27

South Found Yielding on Color Line

Sun. 9-16-56

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP)—After turning up 1,100 examples of racial barriers dropped in all walks of life in the South over the last two years, a Southerner concludes: "there is no longer a solid South of segregation."

Reporting on a carefully documented survey of seventeen Southern and border states where segregation has been the historic pattern, Harold C. Fleming said:

"The common notion that desegregation just can't work in the South is plainly contradicted by the findings."

Survey by Southerners

The survey turned up examples, by specific location, of desegregation in schools, housing, public health and welfare, private enterprise, government, public transportation and public accommodations.

Mr. Fleming, a native of Georgia and assistant director of the Southern Regional Council at Atlanta, said the survey was by no means complete and that examples cited must be taken as merely representations.

The council is an inter-racial group devoted "to equal opportunity for all." Its membership is confined to Southerners.

Mr. Fleming's findings—all 1,100 of them—are to be published shortly in book form by the Fund for the Republic, which provided the money for the survey, along with a companion study on the removal of racial barriers in the states outside the South.

The study, now in the hands of the printers, was made available in the aftermath of recent disturbances in the South over the admission of Negroes to public schools in Mansfield, Tex.; Clinton, Tenn.; Texarkana, Tex., and Sturgis and Clay, Ky.

Desegregation Harmonious

In assessing his state-by-state survey, Mr. Fleming, a student of his region for ten years, wrote:

"The 1,100 instances of desegregation discovered were almost evenly divided between the five 'border' states on the one hand and the twelve 'Southern' states on the other. Virtually all of them took place smoothly and harmoniously."

The survey covers the period from May 17, 1954—date of the United States Supreme Court decision holding school segregation unconstitutional—to May of this year.

The findings in part:

More than 350 school districts in nine of the seventeen states had integrated to some degree. There were no integrated public elementary or secondary schools in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Virginia or North Carolina or South Carolina.

Negro children were attending previously all-white Roman Catholic parochial schools in twenty-one Southern cities located in Arkansas, Kentucky, Maryland, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

Since 1935 some 164 accredited colleges and universities in Southern and border states and the District of Columbia have opened their doors to Negroes. Of these 164 now open to Negroes, ninety-five have newly desegregated at some level since May, 1954.

As of May this year, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina enforced complete segregation in state - supported institutions. However, all but South Carolina had at least one private college which admitted students of both races.

2nd manifesto

Pro-American Atlanta Journal

WASHINGTON — The second Southern manifesto was signed Friday by 83 Dixie members of the House of Representatives pledging to use every available weapon to prevent passage of civil rights legislation.

Sept. 21-56

The document pleaded with congressmen from other sections to join their fight to keep colored citizens disfranchised and segregated. Many congressmen from Florida, N.C., Tennessee, Oklahoma, Texas, West Virginia, Missouri, Maryland refused to sign.

WAY OF LIFE SEEN AT STAKE IN SOUTH

Times P. 9-C

Sociologist Says North Did Not Fear Mixed Schools Would Spread Integration

New York

By DAMON STETSON

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Sept. 7—A California sociologist suggested today that the history of race relations in the North provided new insights for interpreting present developments in the South.

In a paper presented at the annual meeting here of the American Sociological Society, Dr. Frank F. Lee of the University of California brought out what he termed an essential difference between the problem of school integration in the North and in the South.

He said the North, while separating the races in most areas of behavior, did not do so in education because integrated education did not imply a threat to other forms of segregation.

"The South, on the other hand, interprets school integration as imperiling the 'Southern way of life,'" he declared. "Thus, the North has been enabled to proceed with school integration while the South has not."

To substantiate his contention, Dr. Lee reported on a study that compared the history of race relations in a small Connecticut town and the South in general.

In the Connecticut town, he said, racial integration did not develop until about 1870, whereas in the South segregation was scarcely breached until recently.

Segregation in Churches

He said that churches had become segregated institutions in both areas. The basic difference, he explained, was that the segregated church did not appear in the Connecticut town until after 1920, while it had developed decades earlier in the South.

The same trend, he said, is apparent in housing with the Connecticut town resorting more to residential segregation, which the South has maintained for the most part, through the years.

"Thus," Dr. Lee said, "we see a discrepancy between the continued pattern of segregation in all three areas of behavior in the South and the contradictory trends in the Connecticut town."

He added:

"This discrepancy suggests that school intergration has been possible in Connecticut towns, and presumably in the North as a whole, because for over a century it has not symbolized integration in other institutional areas."

On the other hand, he said, in the South the entire system of slavery has been destroyed. Dr. Lee asserted it was natural therefore, for this area to place extra symbolic value on what was left and to insist on firmly retaining all possible remnants of its previous system.

In an address before the American Statistical Association, also meeting here, Howard G. Brunsman of the Bureau of the Census outlined some of the present thinking regarding the 1960 population census.

He asked for suggestions from users of census data and said serious consideration was being given a number of proposed changes in the treatment of areas.

RACE PROBLEM FINE, BROWNELL

Times-Picayune

Courts to Take Cases One at a Time

Mon. 9-17-56

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 (AP)—Atty. Gen. Brownell said today progress in school desegregation has "been remarkable and fine."

And, he added in a filmed television interview — "Reporters' Roundup"—the Justice Department will make every effort to see there is "no partisan aspect" to integration.

New Orleans

Brownell was asked about the use of U. S. marshals to enforce district court orders on integration. He replied:

"That is getting into pretty much of a speculative realm there because we would have to know what the facts of the particular case were . . . We take these cases one at a time.

"So far, there is no doubt that great progress is being made in the integration of the schools and in an orderly way without the necessity of any action by the courts of the type that you suggest."

At present, he added, the Justice Department is involved in only one court case. It is appearing as a "friend of the court" in an appeal to the U. S. Court of Appeals from action by the Hoxie, Ark., Board of Education in ordering integration.

His department is appearing to "support the courageous action" taken by the local board, Brownell said.

In response to questions, the attorney general said he believes the record of the Republican administration "has been in marked contrast to the scandal and corruption that existed in the Truman administration."

Asked why "it took the administration much more than a year to find out about the conflicts of interest in the Dixon-Yates case and in the Talbott—former Secretary of the Air Force Harold Talbott—incident," Brownell said:

"I think that there again putting things in perspective, that what we want to do on a program of this sort is to take the over-all picture . . . There has never been in my time an administration that is as clean and decent."

During the Dixon-Yates controversy, it was charged that Adolphe Wenzel, a Budget Bureau adviser in the matter, held the advisory post while serving as an official of a New York firm which later became the financial agent for the proposed Dixon-Yates steam plant at West Memphis, Ark.

Talbott resigned about year ago after a congressional inquiry into charges he had continued certain business interests while serving as Air Force secretary.

Cancellation of the Dixon-Yates contract by the government has resulted in court action, which is pending.

Mrs. Roosevelt Called Prodder of Integration

Constitution P. 4 Wed. 9-26-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Atlanta—I note that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt says that President Eisenhower should have set up a racial conference. I personally feel that had Mrs. FDR conducted herself as our past two charming first ladies, namely Mrs. Truman and Mrs. Eisenhower, that we would have no racial problems. This situation arose in the Roosevelt administration and she certainly added kindling to the fire.

I believe in every American having his rights, but I cannot see that we will ever accept our colored friends socially, especially in our schools. I feel that the colored students will receive far more snubs and hurt feelings if they are ever put in our schools, as they will never be invited to the school parties, etc., so why not let them stay in their own schools? It will be best for all concerned.

GEORGIAN.

God Created Segregation, Pastor Says

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Mon. 9-16-56 P. 5

Discord Traced To Slave Trade

By KAY McLEOD

Segregation was established when God created the earth, making flowers, trees, fish, birds, animals and humans different, an East Point Methodist minister said Sunday.

"If segregation is a sin, God did not know it," the Rev. George O. King told his congregation at the East Point Methodist Church.

The clergyman said that segregation of every sort is evident in the world today. He said, "The separation into groups of like interest, endowment, experience and ability is our pattern in finances, social orders, educational processes, recreational facilities, residences and every other area of life."

WORSHIP

"To worship in separate groups is just the same," he continued. "It makes for the good of the whole and for orderliness."

Developing his sermon largely from the Second Commandment, the Rev. Mr. King cited part of the fifth verse of the 20th chapter of Exodus, which mentions ". . . visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generations of them that hate me."

In tracing the history of the Negro in America, he said that of all the races and nationalities represented in this country today, the Negro is the only one which did not come of its own accord.

SLAVE TRADE

The minister pointed out that slave trading during the early 1800's brought the Negro here. He traced current racial discord to this slave traffic and pointed out that this is the third generation since that period in America's history.

The minister then charged that the Emancipation Proclamation freed "a people who did not ask to be, . . . with none of the background or training to be free people."

The Rev. Mr. King said that the South had no land or jobs to offer, and thus the only course open to the Negro was "to become the white man's burden."

Now, continued the minister, "today's customs . . . social order . . . and friendships are being challenged by those who have failed to recognize the wisdom of time and the wholeness of our problem."

"MOSES"

The minister charged that "certain organizations, for membership fee, have promised to be Moses and lead again to the promised land. . . ."

The Rev. Mr. King referred to a story concerning the Mansfield, Tex., school conflict, which quoted a 17-year-old Negro boy as saying: "Mister, I don't wanna go to school in Mansfield. I'd rather go to school among my own people in Fort Worth. But I'll go to the Mansfield school if the NAACP makes me."

He cited opportunities open to the Negro in this country—educational opportunities, the ability to own merchandise and the freedom to sell his manufactured goods at prices equal to those of any other.

PROGRESS

The conclusion that the minister reached from this comparison was that "the Negro in and of himself has not been able to advance in any great way . . . ," but that "no race of people . . . has made so rapid progress as has the American Negro in the past 100 years."

The minister said that the answer to the racial problems of America is not to be found in riots and insurrection. He said that each instance of racial violence in this country is but fuel for the fires of the war of propaganda which is being waged by communistic countries.

The answer, said the minister, is rather to be found in "understanding . . . the other man's hopes, dreams and ideals, . . . sympathy to those less fortunate, . . . trust in prayer, . . . and a searching of our hearts for bitterness and prejudice."

"PLACE FOR EACH"

The minister concluded that, "God has a place in His kingdom for everyone . . . all may not work . . . side by side . . . , but there is a place for each to make a contribution."

The Rev. Mr. King, who said he has been working on the sermon for more than a year, thus became the second Methodist minister in this area within the past month to take a stand in favor of segregation. Dr. Charles Allen, pastor of the Grace Methodist Church, on August 19, affirmed his belief that separation of the races was not un-Christian.

Earlier, two Baptist ministers, the Rev. Dr. Roy O. McClain, Atlanta First, and the Rev. York Chambless, Smyrna First, took the stand that force would not solve the racial problem.

Cost Of Prejudice

Daily World
Sun, 9-9-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Says Jim Crow Costs U. S. $12 Billion A Year

CINCINNATI, Ohio — (ANP) — "America can no longer afford the luxury of first and second-class citizenship," Maxwell Abbell, chairman of the President's Committee on Employment Policy, told guests at a luncheon session here last week of the National Urban League annual conference.

He estimated that racial discrimination costs the nation over twelve billion dollars a year "because the skills of members of discriminated groups are not fully utilized in the national economy."

The committee headed by Mr. Abbell was set up by the President about a year and a half ago to root out discriminatory employment practices in federal agencies.

Abbell asserted that his committee and the President's Committee on Government Contracts, which works to see that there is no hiring discrimination in firms doing business with the government, directly or indirectly affect "about 25 percent of the industrial labor force, a very strong and effective leavening influence towards complete elimination of discrimination in employment."

The committee's educational efforts, Abbell said, "are even more important than our hearing of cases." He stated that "a past history of discriminatory practices has discouraged many Negroes from trying to qualify for positions that formerly were not open to them and now that they are being opened, the qualified applicants often are not available."

A lack of adequate training facilities for Federal employment in some Southern communities and the fact that Negro schools in the South are "far below the standard of the white schools in the same communities," are also responsible, he said, for the lack of quailfied Negro applicants for Federal jobs.

He concluded that "in the field of education lies the geratest opportunity for advancement of the Negro in future economic and employment opportunities, not only in the Federal government but in private and other public employment as well."

★ Tell It To Old Grandma ★

Advertiser
Fri, 9-7-56

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request, name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserve the right to shorten letters ★ No poetry, please ★ Repeat: No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it.

Montgomery, Ala.
P.4-A

Works Both Ways

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Congratulations on your "Askelon" series. It seems that you have done more than anyone to bring the hypocrisy of the North and West in integration to light. It is true that misery loves company, but little that is constructive ever comes out of that philosophy.

Law-abiding people obey rules and laws because they are rules and laws, but grudgingly and even truculently when they think that they are against their interests. However, show them that the rules are in their interest and their attitude changes.

Now the NAACP, power-hungry politicians and sociological do-gooders have spent the last 20 years showing the Negro the disadvantages to them of segregation, and convincing them that it was designed to keep them out of the white man's territory. The South has spent the same time in defending themselves of this theory and shouting, "You, too."

Now I think it is time for you—since you already have the ear of the nation, and I might add, the whole world—to go on from here and show that segregation also keeps the white man from invading the Negro's domain, taking over his businesses, positions and jobs. Also, show the advantages to the Negro race of segregation.

Some suggestions: Number of high school and college graduates, ministers, teachers, lawyers, doctors, businessmen, hotel, home, store and farm owners, bellhops, waiters, ball players, criminals, band leaders, officers of clubs, porters, in fact, every occupation, dollars spent and paid per capita for education, bank loans, department store credits, bank accounts and saving accounts, welfare, public housing and all the sociological phases. Also show that when a Negro works and lives as a respectable citizen, he gets the respect that he earns in the South as well as in the North.

Montgomery. MRS. E. M. H.

Leave Us Be

Editor, The Advertiser:

The Southern man is a hard-working, God-fearing man; patient, slow to anger, living by God's laws as handed down by Moses, and living too by the traditions handed down to them by their fathers, who followed that law.

Would it be asking too much to be let alone here in the South? We would appreciate it very much. We haven't tried to tell anyone else how to live and whatever the North does in this integration matter in their own states is alright with us.

We will always have segregation. Even if Negroes go to white schools; they will always be segregated.

MRS. BONNIE MITCHUM.

Montgomery.

The Negro And The Boycott

Advocate Sat. 4-21-56

In recent news reports from widely scattered sections of the country, Negroes are being called upon as a result of the wide publicity given the Montgomery, Alabama, affair, for increasing use of the boycott as an effective weapon for use in obtaining their goal of first class citizenship.

Jackson, Miss.

In every case, it will be noted that those who are calling upon Negroes for this increasing use of the boycott are using as an example the non-violent resistance campaign of the sainted and gifted Indian Leader Mahatma Ghandi, which led to the independence of India, which is now rapidly becoming one of the leading nations of the world.

In spite of the great success of the campaign led by Mahatma Ghandi, we find it most difficult if now impossible to find an analogy in the situation of the Indians in India under British rule and that of the Negro in the United States, particularly those in the deep South.

In 1948, we attended the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where seated next to us in the press gallery there was a young Indian correspondent from the Bombay Times.

In the course of a conversation, which we had with this young Indian regarding Ghandi and India, which had not yet achieved its independence, he said to us, "That in a very few years now India would be a great and independent nation,' his assertion being based on the fact as he stated, "That there are more than four-hundred million Indians in India and only about 60-million Englishmen in the entire world who accept for a handful of civil servants are separated from India by 10,000 miles,' adding in conclusion the statement that before England from thence forward could continue to dominate India, there would have to be an Englishman in India to walk beside every Indian."

The lack of an analagous situation regarding the 16-million Negroes in the United States dwelling in the midst of 140-million white people appears to us too obvious to mention here.

There are certainly a sufficient number of white people in the United States, to find one to walk beside every Negro in a counter boycott.

We are now and have always been for the lack of analogy above stated and for many other reasons, been opposed to the boycott as an effective Negro weapon, and without further efforts at profoundity despite the tenor of the times; in our opinion, the most effective weapon of the Negro particularly in the South, is a smile, a prayer and a song.

BIAS BREEDERS ASSAILED

State Senator Bids Brownell Act Against Provocators

Pitts. Sun

State Senator Samuel L. Greenberg appealed yesterday to Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. "to crack down on racial subversives stirring up conflict in Southern communities."

In a letter to Mr. Brownell, the Brooklyn Democrat declared that organized groups of "outsiders" were creating racial animosities in many communities where racial integration in public schools was peacefully underway.

Senator Greenberg said that these breeders of hate, fighting school integration by inciting to riots and unrest, are openly attacking the Constitution and our basic civil rights laws."

He said that much of the "hate literature swamping the South emanates from the North and is reminiscent of Nazi propaganda used in attacking the Jewish people."

BILLY GRAHAM SEES PROBLEMS

Times Picayune

Discusses Race Mixing with Southern Clerics

P. 24

NEW YORK, Sept. 28 (AP)—Evangelist Billy Graham says most of the South's Negro and white ministers agree that "race relations are worse now than they were two years ago."

New Orleans

And, said Graham, most of the clergymen "confessed that the church is doing far too little about it."

Sat. 9-29-56

Writing in the current issue of Life magazine, Graham said he came to that conclusion after discussing the problem of integration of the races with Southern ministers of all denominations.

Too Early in Deep South

The evangelist said he also believed that the vast majority of Southern clergymen do not hold extremist views on the explosive integration issue.

"Most of them feel," he wrote, "that segregation should be ended now on buses, in railroad and bus stations, hotels and in restaurants.

"However, most of them feel it is far too early to implement school integration in some sections of the Deep South.

"They seem to feel that the day will come when both races will be psychologically and spiritually ready for it, but that the time has not come yet."

'Problems Not Easy'

While many "misconceptions" about integration exist, Graham said, there are many real "difficulties" to be solved.

"There is the fear of intermarriage and the mongrelization of the race," he wrote. "These problems, I admit, are not easy. They definitely exist. With many of these difficulties the sociologist, anthropologist, scientist and legislator can help."

Graham said he himself had decided "after study of the Bible, as well as current events," that all of his future "crusades" would be conducted on an "equal basis."

He pledged to "hold no more crusades unless all of any race can sit where they please."

Morning Mail

Separate Negro Nation Is Suggested

Until the recent Supreme Court decision it had become very noticeable that our race relations had been, and were becoming more increasingly good for many years.

Post Herald

Now that there is organized opposition to integration, we Southerners have become the target of much abuse and scorn, some of it in tirades even from pulpits, and some of this scorn coming from the outer world. Especially is this true of heathen Russia, which seems to hold so much weight.

P. 14

Most Negroes, or their ancestors, since they were brought to this land in utter bondage by slave traders and ship owners, can attribute their education, or the primary part of it, to the Southern states. We desire to continue segregation, because we believe it to be to the best interests of both races and the writer firmly believes it is the desire of the true leaders of both races.

Certainly no reasonable person could blame the black race, or any other race, for desiring or trying to improve their race or station in life, but is the devilish monstrosity of miscegenation or mongrelization the answer to it?

I have noticed that some of the big labor bosses have referred to our attitude of opposition to integration as being very foolish. George Meany is advocating a program of education to correct it. He also wants an anti-lynching bill put through Congress as soon as possible, disregarding the fact that we have not had a lynching in the South in over 10 years. He was also silent as to whether his anti-lynching bill would include gangster bump-offs or not.

Birmingham

It is my sincere opinion that the happiness, peace and prosperity for both races and our posterity, is for the black race to be set up in a government of their own somewhere.

This would, of course, be very costly, but not as much as some of the wars we have participated in during this generation in an effort to promote freedom for mankind over nearly all the earth. I know similar suggestions have been made but this would solve for good, and for all, this perplexing old race problem. I know of no other peaceful solution, if there is any other at all.

O. W. BAKER,
Thomasville, Ga.

Negro's Humility, Whites' Conscience Will Eventually Solve Race Problems

Commercial Appeal P. 3

Mon. 9-23-56

To The Commercial Appeal:

I fear some of our fellow white citizens are seeing ghosts in the area of race relations today.

Memphis Tenn

All the birds of the air have wings—the jaybird, the mockingbird. They all fly through the sky to the limbs of trees or to the crags of the rocks which are their destinations. And so with human birds . . . all they want is to fly where God's children belong. They don't want to mate promiscuously, for the very gregariousness of their instincts causes each to seek its own.

Blair Hunt

In our beloved Southland and in many Northern and Eastern cities, there is inter-racial hypertension. There is hate. A climate has been created which probably causes the communists to be filled with glee and the imps of hell to have a carnival of mirth.

We have tried boycotts, lawsuits, cross-burnings. It is time to halt . . . and have a respite . . . and try love and humility.

This old world is changing. There is a yeast of discontent among the colored races of the world. The big white man knows what is happening. But it seems that the little white man does not know what is happening. He doesn't seem to know the changes taking place in the international picture in which the balance of power is shifting to the apparently neutral nations of the Middle East. And they are colored nations. Let us pray that the little white man may awaken before it is too late . . . before hate runs rampant not only in one land but throughout the earth.

Despite the probable heaping of abuse upon my head by racists of my own group, many of whom think you are wrong if you are not cursing the white man, I dare to say, in this period of emotionalism and interracial high blood pressure, that humility is our salvation. It is the salvation of any minority group, unable and unprepared to fend for itself. Mark my word, humility. I do not say servility. Servility is the mark which befits a slave. Servility is slavish. Humility is majestic. Humility is an attribute of God. The best picture God ever took is that of Jesus Christ. And Jesus Christ is the spirit of humility.

If Negroes possess the majesty of humility, the friendship of good citizens, and without fail, the friendship of God (for that race that has God for its friend cannot be overwhelmed by any foes), he can soar to all places and heights where God's children belong.

Maybe our militant organizations should shift from high gear to low gear. Maybe we should change our "modus operandi," and place a greater emphasis on accelerating our racial, economic, intellectual and moral maturity. We cannot afford to lose our footing, our friends, our face and our souls.

I think the white man has a terrific conscience. We, a minority group, cannot command his conscience, but we can appeal to it.

In this age when the ferment of discontent is permeating that great lump of peoples in the East and Middle East, we Negroes of America can do much to save the soul of America.

Remember, "All God's chillun got wings," and all God's children want to fly. All of God's children should fly and move into the remains where God's children belong.

Tempers, tantrums and tears, yes. But remember the meek, the humble, shall inherit the earth.

BLAIR T. HUNT
Booker T. Washington
High School
Memphis.

Indonesian Can't Find Anymore Of Those Lynchings

UNIVERSITY, Miss. — (INS) — A visiting Indonesian journalist said Monday on the University of Mississippi that Communist propaganda has "grossly exaggerated" reports of racial violence in the South.

Aliaswad Salen, publisher and editor of the Pontianak Pembangun (Construction) in West Kalimantan (Borneo), said that he expected to find severe racial discrimination, including lynchings, in his tour of the South has a guest of the State Department.

He said, however, that his tour of the region has resulted in a change of some of his opinions. He added:

"The Communists are doing a much more effective job of telling Indonesians their side of the issues than is your information service."

This, he said, is due mainly to the fact that the Communists own 20 per cent of the newspapers in his country.

If Times Had Been Hard

It would be difficult to say how much hatred has been evoked by the upheaval following the race mixing decision two years ago. You encounter wrath, fear, resentment and—above all—a chilling. But hatred is a strong word, and among those of both races with whom we have personal contact, little hatred has been encountered. Well this is, because hatred—unlike anger, which is clean—is corrosive, foul, consuming.

Perhaps the feeling that has been stirred represents the minimum when considered against the force of the provocation and aggravation. If so, the essential reason may be that the trouble comes at a time of prosperity and contentment unmatched in American history. Times are fat, bellies are full. One recoils from the thought of what passions might have been unleashed had the court decision come in a time of economic depression.

FREEDOM AND JIM CROW

Sirs:

It was with great interest and pleasure that I read your series on "The Background of Segregation" (LIFE, Sept. 3, 10). I was particularly pleased with your historical approach to the problem of segregation, for it is only with such an approach that one can secure a correct perspective on this problem. Few American colleges offer courses specifically relating to the history of the Negro in America. As far as I know such courses are virtually limited to predominately Negro colleges.

I would like to mention a serious omission in your otherwise admirable survey. The Negro himself did not passively accept slavery (waiting for the more humane and noble among his white brethren to strike a blow against slavery) as is evidenced by some 250 Negro revolts and conspiracies during the history of slavery. A Negro abolitionist, Martin R. Delaney, wrote a letter to William Lloyd Garrison in 1852 which he concluded thus:

> Were I a slave, I would be free,
> I would not live to live a slave;
> But boldly strike for LIBERTY—
> For FREEDOM or a Martyr's grave.

MARTIN L. KILSON JR.

Cambridge, Mass.

Sirs:

The picture, "battle at the courthouse" (LIFE, Sept. 10), deserves more explanation. In fairness to all concerned this unfortunate incident should be reviewed.

The Colfax riots were incited by backers of William Pitt Kellogg, unsuccessful gubernatorial candidate. Racial tension grew until fighting started in town and the Negroes took refuge in the courthouse. Many shots were exchanged before the whites set a torch to the building and white flags appeared. A group of whites then walked over to the courthouse to accept surrender of the Negroes. As they neared the entrance the Negroes suddenly opened fire on this group of whites.

This naturally enraged the whites. It was then that the scene illustrated in your magazine was enacted.

T. J. CARRUTH

Crowley, La.

Sirs:

In your lurid illustration of the capture of Fort Pillow you show the Confederate soldiers under Forrest's command gleefully shooting down Negro women and children. I suppose this is based upon the report of a congressional subcommittee which stated "... the rebels commenced an indiscriminate slaughter sparing neither age nor sex, white or black, soldier or civilian." Actually the aged, women, children and other civilians in the fort were removed before the Confederate attack.

JUDGE WINFIELD B. HALE

Tennessee Court of Appeals
Rogersville, Tenn.

● Although most of the aged and noncombatants were removed, some staved and were killed.—ED.

'They Ain't Ready'

The ungrammatical expression "They ain't ready" has frequently been used as descriptive of the cultural backwardness of many colored Americans, but it now seems that it can be applied with greater aptness to our many white "friends" favoring continued segregation.

These people of the White Citizens Councils and their associates and sympathizers are daily demonstrating that "they ain't ready" to assume the manhood status of law-abiding Americans, are not liberty-loving, not patriotic, and certainly not democrats.

Since Americanism is supposed to embody all of these beliefs and qualities, and these people do not qualify on any count, this certainly proves beyond doubt that they have not even attained the level of the great men who founded the Republic, or even the barbarians who went before them.

Over 180 years after the Declaration of Independence, we find mobs of grown people preventing groups of two, six or a dozen Negro youngsters from entering public schools supported by the taxes of black and white alike, and regardless of the supreme law of the land.

We find high elected officials sworn to uphold the Constitution openly engaged in evading and circumventing the law of the land which they are supposed to uphold.

We find employers, merchants, bankers and politicians conspiring to starve out and destroy colored men and women who are merely upholding the law of the land upon which the Supreme Court has placed its blessings.

We find so-called learned men who are respected as intellectuale and teachers prostituting their minds and circulating canards about the inherent inability of Negroes to learn, and quoting dubious data in support, to justify thwarting the Supreme Court decisions.

We find the sympathizers of these people, those living outside the South, aiding these barbarians by finding excuses for their disobedience of the law and mistreatment of fellow citizens.

And, even worse, we find the leading politicians of each major party evading the great moral and legal issues involved and blaming each other for a condition which neither side will wholeheartedly and forthrightly denounce.

This is certainly a sorry spectacle for a country which boasts of its world leadership and which decries Communism, Nazism and Fascism, neither of which was ever more guilty of flouting humanitarian principles and established law.

It is therefore quite clear that "they ain't ready" to measure up to the standards which they press others to attain, whom they dub "backward" for not attaining them.

And what are we to think of the other "superior" people who sit silently by and do nothing while the foundation of our civilization is being destroyed?

Religious Climate Changes

Not many years back it was almost impossible to get the Southern white clergy to take any kind of stand on racial prejudice and civil rights, but last week the Baptist General Convention of Texas urged all Christians to take a 5-point pledge against racial violence, while representatives of 18 million Methodists from the world over committed their church to erase all racial discrimination. Of course there are thousands in the rank and file church members who do not agree with these statements, as indicated by their daily actions, but they get no aid and comfort from the top, and in their hearts they know they are wrong.

Within the past five years every responsible church group in the United States, North and South, has officially expressed the same sentiments.

This indicates that the religious leaders of this country are either more courageous, more Christian, more far-sighted or there have been much greater changes for the better in their followers than most observers would have imagined possibly twenty years ago.

This is not to say that there have not been forthright clerical statements on this vital issue in the past, but these were the views of liberal individuals rather than official expressions of great religious bodies.

This augurs well for the future of Christianity in this land.

Negro Leaders Say:

Friction In Deep South Is Spreading

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 7-28-56

LOS ANGELES—Racial friction in the South is getting worse, according to three fighters for civil rights from Dixie.

The three leaders—Gus Courts of Belzoni, Miss.; the Rev. Walter White Jr. of Jackson, Miss.; and Lee A. Blackman of Elloree, S. C.—all concurred in the opinion that economic pressure and barriers to voting were the two principal weapons being used by the die-hard Dixiecrats.

Courts, head of the NAACP unit in Belzoni, suffered a bullet wound from gunshots fired by whites who resented his efforts urging Negroes to vote in Mississippi. He told of an economic boycott wherein White Citizens Councils had contrived to keep him from getting supplies for his store.

The Rev. Mr. White declared that conditions have been getting worse ever since he and other Negro leaders refused to cooperate with Gov. J. P. Coleman's segregation program.

■

BLACKMAN, who was an active campaigner in securing South Carolinians to sign petitions urging a termination to school segregation, declared:

"Even though pressures by whites are getting stronger all the time, I am going back."

In Blackman's home town of Elloree, he was refused credit but the Negroes there retaliated against the boycott by doing their buying in another county, which caused some of the prejudiced white merchants to close their stores.

Dr. C. H. Tobias Urges South To Stop Lawlessness

Post
Independent
Nashville, Tenn.
7-May-5-18-56

NEW YORK, May 10 -- To achieve less strained racial relations in the Deep South, the nation as a whole must inform that region it will not "tolerate" lawlessness, even though such lawlessness "emanates from minds sick with fear," it was declared here at the First Annual Forum on Anxiety and Tension.

Speaking on the subject of racial tensions, Dr. Channing H Tobias, NAACP board chairman, repudiated the theory advanced by some Southern spokesman that racial tensions had erupted as the result of the Supreme Court's anti- segregation school decision.

"In Alabama, as in Poland, there is 'peace' as long as the people whose rights are being denied have no channel through which to express their discontent and little or no opportunity to challenge the status quo," he asserted. "To interpret their silence under this totalitarian regime is to fail to realize what lies beneath the surface. The absence of violence under such conditions is not to be equated with peace and harmony."

Dr. Tobias emphasized that "it was not the Court's decision which precipitated the present crisis in the South." He maintained it was rather "the organized defiance of that ruling, which, in the ultimate is defiance of federal authority."

"Despite the protestation of those who seek to cloak themselves in the garb of respectability, there is no 'legal' way to disobey the law," the NAACP official declared.

He contended that segregation was instituted in the South to replace slavery "as an instrument of 'white supremacy.'"

"The present hue and cry in the South is raised not so much against the leveling of physical barriers between the races as against the destruction of the symbols of a superior status," Dr. Tobias asserted. "Jim Crow bestows upon the insecure white southerner a cherished status of superiority which he does not have to prove in open competition."

"It is fear of losing this privileged position with its economic, social and political advantages and of being forced to compete with the Negro -- it is this suppressed fear which has aggravated the situation and inflamed many white southerners to disregard law and order, decency and humanity."

Dr. Tobias spoke on April 30. The forum was under sponsorship of the National Association for Mental Health.

"Can a leopard change its spots?" the teacher asked her class of tiny tots.

The children all agreed that he could not—all, that is, except little Willie.

"So you think a leopard can change his spots?" the teacher challenged Willie.

"Yes," Willie repl'd. "If he gets tired of one spot, he can get up and change to another spot."

AAA Asked to Deny Seal to Biased Hotels

World-Telegram
New York, N.Y.
5-16-56

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith today asked the American Automobile Assn. to withdraw its "seal of approval" from hotels, resorts and motels which deny accommodations to Jewish guests.

In making the request, the league said a similar attempt had been made in vain last year, when the AAA refused to take action.

The league charged that "many individuals of the Jewish faith, relying on AAA listings and recommendations, have been subjected to humiliation and embarrassment" by being barred from some hotels.

Segregation Is Doomed

Norfolk, Va.
3-18-56

NORFOLK — Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, Washington, D. C., declared in an address here Sunday afternoon that all opposition to the desegregation decision of the U. S. Supreme Court will fail. It will fail, he said, because the members of the court acted in keeping with the will of God.

The minister-educator was guest speaker for a joint celebration of Men's Day and Women's Day for First Baptist Church Berkley, held at Central Baptist Church to accommodate the large crowd expected. The program began at 3:30.

Sat. 3-12-56

DR. JOHNSON was introduced by P. B. Young, publisher of the Journal and Guide. He described the speaker as a scholar, an orator, a great administrator, and a humanitarian. Mr. Young, former chairman of the trustee board at Howard University, told of the development of Howard University under Dr. Johnson to a first rate university with a plant valued at $23,000,000.

Dr. Johnson pointed out that there was a difference of opinion in the South over the desegregation issue, adding that some localities would integrate the schools if they were allowed by the state to do so.

• • •

"ONE OF THE characteristics of a great people," Dr. Johnson said, "is that they can make changes with dignity." He noted that all but two members of Congress from the South signed the Manifesto, but he said Virginia's Attorney General Almond's interpretation of that document was that it amounted to nothing.

The speaker spoke of the opposition of White Citizens' Councils to desegregation, and d the group had a milder ne but is very much like the Ku Klux Klan. He noted t there had been some vio- ce in the South, but he urged congregation never to se from striving for a first ss citizenship and full ality.

Journal & Guide

E DESCRIBED the deseg- ation decision "the most olutionary event in Ameri- history" since the abolition slavery and the enactment the 13th, 14th and 15th endments to the U. S. Con- ution. "All opposition to the rt decision will fail," the eaker said, adding that thern people will not be sfied until "the last vestige he slave system has been ed away."

e said southern whites can be what God intended them e as long as they are willing give us less than they want themselves." He asserted another point that some te people have wanted to ress themselves on the se- gation question for years. desegregation decision, he tinued, "Will cement the y of this nation. It will e the South nearer to lead- ip."

r. Johnson defended the yers who handled the gregation cases and the ional Association for the Advancement of Colore People which sponsored th cases. The lawyers, he said showed no emotions at the court, but merely presented the facts.

• • •

THE NAACP is not a subversive organization, he said, asserting that it has "never concealed its purposes." Its victory over segregation, he said, "was achieved by the due process of law."

The Rev. W. B. Westbrook, pastor of Central Baptist Church, conducted the devo-

Rev. Westbrook Dr. Diamond

tions. The Rev. J. C. Diamond, pastor of First Baptist Church, Berkley, made remarks and read the announcements. The Booker T. Washington Choir under the direction of I. Sherman Greene, and the church choir sang. Kemper Hoffman of Norfolk Division of Virginia State College sang a solo. Dr. W. L. Hamiltn pronounced the benedictin.

DR. MORDECAI JOHNSON
Heard In Norfolk

Jewell Academy Commencement Speaker

Courier & Magazine
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 6-16-56

Integration Inevitable Says Courier President

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The inevitability of an integrated America was heralded here by one of this country's top women newspaper executives.

Mrs. Robert L. Vann, president and treasurer of The Pittsburgh Courier, said, "It (integration) may come too slowly for some of us and it may come too fast for others, but, as sure as night follows day, it is coming."

MRS. VANN was speaker at baccalaureate-commencement exercises at Jewell Academy. She appeared on program with Bishop M. L. Jewell, academy founder-director, and the famous Jewell Gospel Trio.

Mrs. Vann emphatically denied the claim that integration would lead to "mongrelization" of the races or that it would open the way for Negroes to marry whites.

"Negro men and women," she said, "Are not interested in marrying anybody just because of race."

"Prepare," she urged the graduates from 16 states, "for integration when that sure-day arrives."

■

BISHOP JEWELL'S annual report of "unusual progress" in all departments at the academy during 1955-'56 was a highlight. He is senior Bishop and chief overseer of the Church of the Living God, Pillar and Ground of Truth, which gives financial support to the academy.

a cloud on the horizon no bigger than a man's hand. Today it is a thunderstorm of indignation, emotion, honest conviction, prejudice and frustration.

It is well that it has come because it brings blazingly into the clear the depth, magnitude and perilous gravity of the matter with which we are dealing.

This is the stuff out of which the Union could be destroyed—or rise to greater heights.

We are dealing with an issue which now, not next month or next year, but now requires the greatest degree of wisdom, justice and moderation, the highest qualities of heart and mind and true affection that we have ever summoned in our whole history.

It is almost impossible to overstate the size and somberness of the problem.

Mishandled, it is capable of splitting the nation, the people and our political parties irreparably asunder.

It is the extremes in attitude and action which must, at all costs, be avoided: The extreme, as advocated by some, that the most gradual application of the law must be implacably fought; and the extreme, as advocated by others, that the most precipitate application of the Supreme Court decision must be pressed by force if necessary.

No; that is the road to impasse and turmoil.

The ingredients of any solution require a willingness to implement the Supreme Court decision modly by those who want to resist it totally.

Are there sufficient moderates among those who support the cause of public school desegregation, including the Negroes themselves? The latest Gallup Poll suggests some significant facts. It shows that 47 per cent of the Southern Negroes are either opposed to or undecided about desegregation. This is an adequate basis to induce others to tone down impatient and unproductive demands for haste. The same Gallup Poll showed that 20 per cent of the Southern whites either approve—or do not disapprove—of public school desegregation.

Moderation will come into being, will come to life and power only by leadership. The only leadership equal to the need, the only national instrument of moderation and conciliation is the presidency of the United States. The times once again call for presidential leadership at its best—wise, firm, kindly, fearless.

Roscoe Drummond

Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Fri. 3-16-56

Racial Extremists Must Be Repudiated

WASHINGTON—The manifesto of the 19 Southern senators and 77 Southern congressmen, seeking to erect a wall of nullification around the Supreme Court's unanimous decision against segregation in the public schools, contributes no constructive step at any point to solving the nation's problem of racial discrimination.

But it is well that it has come. It has been in the making for many months. A year ago it was erately by those who most want to implement it rapidly and a willingness to carry it forward moderate-

Of Laws, Judges And Lawyers

From The Essays of Michel De Montaigne (1533-1592)

Atlanta Constitution 3-26-56

I DO NOT much like the opinion of the man who thought by a multiplicity of laws to bridle the authority of judges, cutting up their meat for them. He did not realize that there is as much freedom and latitude in the interpretation of laws as in their creation. For our mind finds the field no less spacious in restricting the meaning of others than in presenting its own. For we have in France more laws than all the rest of the world together, and more than would be needed to rule all the worlds of Epicurus. And yet we have left so much room for opinion and decision to our judges, that there never was such a powerful and licentious freedom . . . King Ferdinand, when he sent colonists to the Indies, wisely provided that no students of jurisprudence should be taken there, for fear that lawsuits might breed in this new world, it being by nature a science generating altercation and division.

Why is it that our common language, so easy for any other use, becomes obscure and unintelligible in contracts and wills, and that a man who expresses himself so clearly, whatever he says or writes, finds in this field no way of speaking his mind that is not subject to doubt and contradiction? Unless it is that the princes of this art, applying themselves with particular attention to picking out solemn words and contriving artificial phrases, have so weighed every syllable, so minutely examined every sort of combination, that here they are at last entangled and embroiled in the endless number of figures and in such minute partitions that they can no longer come under any rule or prescription or any sure understanding.

We give legal authority to numberless doctors, numberless decisions, and as many interpretations. Do we therefore find any end to the need of interpreting? Do we see any progress and advance toward tranquility Do we need fewer lawyers and judges than when this mass of law was still in its infancy? On the contrary, we obscure and bury the sense; we no longer find it except at the mercy of so many enclosures and barriers.

There Are 'Good' Yankees

Advertiser

SOMETHING new has been added Up Na'wth — new and encouraging — voices raised urging appreciation of our problems, moderation and understanding. Mon. 3-5-56

They cite the inconsistency of Yankees denouncing one form of defiance of law in the South, while condoning other and more violent disregard in their own balliwicks. Montgomery, Ala.

An' evil or error is not to be corrected by pointing out that someone is in as bad or worse case. But the practice of people with greater sins reproving the lesser faults of others was deemed odious enough to be censured in the Sermon on the Mount:

"Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye: and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." (Matther 7:5).

38a

★

ANY Southerner who has associated much with yankees knows that many of them readily qualify to come under the general heading of "good people" — kindly, fair-minded men of good will.

But since Uncle Tom's Cabin and the Civil War, the Yankee has had a crusader complex. He sees himself as St. George slaying the dragon of Secessionist sin. Or, perhaps unconsciously he poses as another Don Quixote laying lance in rest for some Negro Dulcinea—often with as little consideration for realities as the knight of La Mancha showed when he tilted with windmills.

Criticism of the South thus stems from two sources.

First and most blatant, Yankee politicians appealing to the Negro vote, hand and glove with organizations having a vested interest in inflaming Negro sensibilities.

Second, honest and well-meaning people who reflect their century-old heritage and preconceived notions, stimulated by today's propaganda. The South's best hope for a fair deal lies with these last.

★

QUITE recently, for example, two great Northern newspapers have called attention to the sordid technique of some of their own politicians—vulgar demogogues who hit the South at any manifestation of racial violence, but condone by silence or inaction much worse mob violence in their own states.

Editorialized The Cincinnati Enquirer:

The attempts to coerce Miss Authurine Lucy into staying away from the University of Alabama were deplored and deplorable. An angry assortment of whites formed themselves into a mob. They hurled stones and vegetables at the student, broke a window in the car transporting her.

In recent weeks the country has witnessed acts of aggravated and organized violence in strikes conducted against Westinghouse and Republic Aviation. Crowds of pickets have barred access to plants by violence, hurled rocks, overturned motor cars and assaulted workers. These incidents have been the result of systematic violence.

★

The Chicago Tribune, sometimes labeled South-hating, held forth in similar vein, and even more emphatically.

The Tribune called attention to rioutous mobs interrupting defense production in New York State, domain of the sanctimonious punk Harriman. It noted that town police of Babylon, N.Y. and the Suffol county sheriff were unable to maintain order, and—

The Babylon chief wired the governor [Harriman] that his men were exhausted by their efforts to restrain the violence of the picket mob, and that the violence was increasing constantly. He pleaded for state police, the national guard, or any other force at the governor's disposal that could restore order. His plea was ignored.

Yet Gov. Harriman has been bawling for the use of federal force to impose desegregation on the Southern States. Mobs in Alabama are anathema to him, but he shuts his eyes to a civil insurrection against law and order in his own state.

A THIRD editorial, timely and thoughtful, of a more general scope, has come to hand from the St. Joseph [Missouri] News Press. Headed "NAACP Go Slow, Please." It stated in part:

We of this border state would like to give some friendly advice to this nationwide group that seeks more equality for the Negro. That advice is this: Go slow.

The Negro has come a long and grand journey since in midst of a terrible civil conflict Abraham Lincoln enunciatied his Emancipation Proclamation. Study the story of mankind. From twilight of antiquity to this very day, name us one race that has come as far in less than 100 years!

The South has its problems and we question whether the haste demanded by NAACP will help solve those problems.

38a

★

THE MODERN abolitionists may prevail, but sane voices have attained enough volume to give a gleam of hope. If they should come to be still stronger, let us hope that the spirit with which they speak will be met in the same mood.

Fireeaters and extremists on both sides helped precipitate a Civil War a century ago. Americans with a sense of history know that in the present crisis there is urgent need for moderation on both sides.

News Briefs

Weekly Sat. 10-20-56 P. 1

From Across the Nation

New Orleans La.

ESTIMATE 94,000 VIRGINIA NEGROES ELIGIBLE TO VOTE

NORFOLK, Va. (ANP)--Dr. G. W. C. Brown, who was elected president of the Virginia Voters League at its recent annual conference in Ashland, Va., is calling upon the local chapters in 18 countries and three cities to conduct an intensive campaign to get Negroes to pay their poll tax and register to vote. It is estimated that about 94,000 Negroes in Virginia are qualified to vote.

38a General

LUTHERAN CHURCH MOVES AGAIST RACE BIAS

CHICAGO (ANP)--"Any congregation which stubbornly clings to patterns of segregation and discrimination based solely on man's feelings rather than God's word should be the object of the concern of district officials of the denomination." This was the crux of the statement made by the American Lutheran Church here last week as it notified congregations that they are responsible for a ministry to their entire neighborhood regardless or racial or cultural composition.

NEGRO GI BRINGS GERMAN WIFE TO VIRGINIA

WASHINGTON (ANP)--The ire of a Southern Congressman hit the boiling point last week after he was told that his protests over a Negro GI bringing his German wife to live with him in Virginia were to no avail. Rep. Tuck (D-Va) asked and was told by the Immigration Service that nothing could be done about the Negro GI's case.

'Po White Trash' More Pathetic Than Negroes

World-Telegram + Sun

Mon. 9-17-56 P. 24

By ROBERT C. RUARK.

New York

LONDON, Sept. 17.—I sit here and read about the racial goings-on in Tennessee, where my wife was born and I am just a little horrified with what I read.

Robert C. Ruark

This is because I believe it is possible to like most people of whatever color or creed. Over some 40 years it has seemed to me that a man distinguishes himself by what he is, what he does, how he deals with others. I think I have the President of the United States and the Supreme Court with me when I say that the right of education and travel belongs to any American citizen. And without emphasis in color.

• • •

I have heard all the arguments over the years and they have left me strictly unmoved. To be a good black man is as good as a good white man. A bad black man is bad—a bad white man is bad.

General

But there doesn't seem to be any logical reason for penalizing at the start people who are neither bad nor good by denying them schools and drinking fountains and the first seat they can find on a bus or a train.

We have a thing in the South called "po white trash." It was a term the Negroes adopted to explain the kind of people who run lynchings and inspire mob violence. The quality white folks took over the same terminology to describe the same white people.

Erskine Caldwell has written a shelf of books about "po white trash" and while there is tragedy in them they rate no higher than the worst tragic examples of their black neighbors.

In the more benighted portions of our South the po white trash have no justification of their tragedy except to find something to kick. They kick it not so much in anger as in explanation of their own misery at being exploited as sharecroppers and underpaid cotton-mill hands and just plain hangers-on and street loiterers.

• • •

Where I have known them in God knows how many southern towns—as I was born and raised in the briar patch—they are of the clay-earing one-strapped overall-wearing tobacco-chewing pellagra-belt people. They are more sociologically pathetic than the Negroes they lynch.

I have no brief for the high-pressured politics which has tried to rectify a black-white problem by an overnight changeover into a psalm-singing equality. I have no time for the Negro who cannot compete on an honest scale of equality decency and observance of the rights of others. I have much less time for the others who use white supremacy as an excuse to abuse people who are not so far away from the slave business—sold by their own Negro chiefs into the trade—and who have not been given a chance as a whole to rise above the fifth-rate people who persecute them because of color and color only.

I keep thinking about the Declaration of Independence and phrases like "free and equal" and "the pursuit of happiness" and nowhere have I found a mention of "Nigger lovers, quality white folks or po white trash."

Integration Can Be Blocked

Editor, The Advertiser:

Just a line, although belated, to tell you that I thoroughly enjoyed your article in U.S. News & World Report, and I thank God that we have courageous Southerners like you around.

I was born and grew up in Escambia County, Alabama, and the first paper I ever read was The Advertiser. I always enjoy it now, when I return to Alabama on visits, and sometimes purchase it here on the news stands.

We Southerners will never have integration—if we refuse to accept it, and fight to prevent mixing of the races.

JOHN TROUTMAN.
1619 S.W. 18th St., Miami, Fla.

Back Home Up North

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have been living in the South now for nine years. I love it and the people very much.

This last summer I went home to visit friends and relatives in New York and Pennsylvania. I was very much surprised at what I found out.

If Negroes are refused a job, they yell race discrimination and sue the company. They usually win.

My sister-in-law asked if we really hated the colored people as much as they say we do. I was astonished at such a question. I replied that we don't hate them, but accept them as they are. They have their way of life and we have ours. The two are so different that they can never be made into one.

She then asked why we didn't let colored children go to school. I told her that they do go to school and in Montgomery have very modern schools.

Just think what would happen here in the South if the colored people acted as childish as they do in the North. There would be so much trouble and bloodshed.

MRS. C. D. LEVY.
Burkville, Ala

Graham Sees South Tense On Race Mix

NEW YORK, Spet. 27 (AP)—Evangelist Billy Graham says most of the South's Negro and white ministers agree that "race relations are worse now than they were two years ago."

And, said Graham, most of the clergymen "confessed that the church is doing far too little about it."

Writing in the current issue of Life magazine, Graham said he came to that conclusion after discussing the problem of integration of the races with Southern ministers of all denominations.

The evangelist said he also believed that the vast majority of Southern clergymen do not hold extremist views on the explosive integration issue.

"Most of them feel," he wrote, "that segregation should be ended now on buses, in railroad and bus stations, hotels and in restaurants.

"However, most of them feel it is far too early to implement school integration in some sections of the Deep South.

REAL DIFFICULTY

"They seem to feel that the day will come when both races will be psychologically and spiritually ready for it, but that the time has not come yet."

While many "misconceptions" about integration exist, Graham said, there are many real "difficulties" to be solved.

"There is the fear of intermarriage and the mongrelization of the race," he wrote. "These problems, I admit, are not easy. They definitely exist. With many of these difficulties the sociologist, anthropologist, scientist and legislator can help."

Graham said he himself had decided "after study of the Bible, as well as current events," that all of his future "crusades" would be conducted on an "equal basis."

He pledged to "hold no more crusades unless all of any race can sit where they please."

U. S. Negro Caught In An Economic Trap Which Has Dominated Him, Say LIFE

New York,—The U. S. Negro is caught in an economic trap which has dominated his life and had a major effect on national population patterns for half a century. The Southern Negro's fifty-year struggle to get out from under the deadly cycle of poor land, competition from poor Whites, and poor education is told in the current (September 24) issue of LIFE Magazine.

The article points out that since 1900 there have been two major Negro migrations—large numbers have moved entirely out of the South and large numbers have moved, within the South, from farm to city. The reasons for the moves have been primany to leave the South, but the majority have moved in search of better livelihood," LIFE says.

"The social unpleasantnesses of segregation have no doubt influenced marily economic.

Rural Negroes have always lived on bad farmland in the South, from which it has become increasingly difficult to make a living. In 1954 the median cash income of Negro farm families in the South was $742, whereas White farm families was $1616. But when the Negro leaves his poor farmland and moves to a Southern city he encounters massive competition from rural Whites who have also moved off the land in search of factory jobs.

"Employers will not hire a Negro for any job if there is a White man available for the same," LIFE says. "Even if discrimination in employment based solely on color were set aside, the Negro still could not compete with the White. Functional illiterates (the term for adults with less than fifth-grade education) are three times more common among young Southern Negroes than among young Southern Whites. Moveover, such schooling as the Negro does receive generally is far inferior to that received by Whites."

Difficult in North Too

a Southern city, the Negro moves North. There he finds it easier to get a job, but the job is still usually on

Failing to find a satisfactory job in the common-labor level. Northern employers do not have the South's great pool of underemployed White farm labor to draw upon, and in the past 15 years have had great need for the unskilled and semi-skilled labor which the Negro can supply.

"But the proportion of Negroes who reach the top of the ladder in the North is scarcely higher than that in the South. In comparison to the total of 8.5% of Negroes who rise to become 'managers, officials, proprietors, craftsmen and foremen' in the South, the figure in the North is 10%," the LIFE article says.

One Tenth of U. S.

The Negro population has constituted one tenth of the overall U. S. population since 1900. In 1900, however, 85% of all U. S. Negroes lived in the South, and of these, three fourths lived in rural areas. Today only 63% of all U. S. Negroes live in the South, and of these, only half live in rural areas.

In 1900 Negroes exceeded 40% of the population in six Southern states. Now they exceed 40% in only one state—Mississippi (44%). The ratio of Negroes to Whites has decreased in all Southern states, and is increasing today only in certain Northern states, such as New York and Illinois, which receive heavy migration from the South. Of the six million Negroes who live in the North today, 2.8 million were born in the South.

38a 1956

GENERAL

Notable Data In April 3 Issue Of Popular Magazine

P. 1

Globe Fri. 4-6-56

Nashville, Tenn.

Series of Articles Revealing Many Steps Taken To Obey Supreme Court's Decisions and Maneuvers Of Scofflaws Interesting Contributions To Historic Fight Over Era's Most Important Matter Since Civil War Was Fought

According to Alfred A. Knopf, author of "Rendezvous with Destiny," copyright, 1952, the instinct for liberty appeared first in the primitive Teutonic forest and spread from there as a heritage of the "Anglo-Saxon race." Because it was hereditary, it could never be acquired by those who were not Anglo-Saxon, no matter how long they lived in the United States nor how favorable an environment for the development for democratic attitudes was created around them.

38a

"The definition of an "Anglo-Saxon was left usefully vague. Usually it meant an American from Western Europe or from anywhere long enough ago unless it was Africa, and any one need not bother with the question of origins."

MOSS-COVERED ARGUMENT

The book recalls the "moss-covered " argument that "you can't change human nature" and says Progressives might have a laudable desire to lift the standard of living of Negroes and immigrants and to make women parterners in the democratic process but the progressive were fighting genes. The Rockefellers were born to be Rockefellers and the slum-dwellers to be slum dwellers; Negroes and women were created intellectually inferior and morally weaker."

It can be believed that these debunked ideas about so-called races and the tremendous population of women, white and colored, will persist with a fast-retreating element of todays population of men, who almost wholly are the persons ranting against the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954.

18 PAGES ARE USED

LOOK magazine for April 3, devoted 18 pages of the magazine to articles dealing with the segregation question. It is "must reading" for all who need to be brought up to date on the greatest domestic issue of these times. For one thing, it will show that the foes of the Supreme Court decision, even by their own actions and admissions, concede they have no chance in the foreseeable future of doing more than getting a victory for "gradualism" in desegregation. The nation's overwhelming majority of masses and of the best minds, are on the side of favor chloroforming the false ideas so long promoted on American soil by Anglo-Saxon extremists.

BOTH SIDES REPRESENTED

The well-prepared articles which LOOK publishes, gives both sides to the controversy over the UNANIMOUS opinion of the Supreme Court delivered on Monday, May 17, 1954. The article quotes the historic utterance of Chief Justice Earl Warren as follows:

"We conclude that in the field of public education 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. Therefore we hold that the plaintiffs are by reason of segregation complained of, deprived of equal protection of the laws." The article also quotes the decision of the Court reached on May 31, 1955, in which Chief Justice Warren said: "Full implementation of these Constitutional principles may require solution of varied local problems. While giving weight to these . . . considerations, the courts will require that the defendants make a prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance."

EISENHOWER VS POWELL

Thus in the two decisions, one who is not biased can see the reasonable attitude toward desegregation that has been taken by President Eisenhower, and how unreasonable is the attitude of the President's severest critic, Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat of New York's Harlem district. The President challenges Southern people to come together and calmly work out a satisfactory settlement of the desegregation matter. Congressman Powell, with no responsibility for the serious situation, is disposed to deal with it as an item of Tammany Hall politics. Powell is far more radical on the desegregation matter than any of the responsible leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Globe

WHAT EASTLAND SAYS

LOOK'S article, after referring to the Supreme Court's decisions by the Chief Justice, also devotes equal space to airing the views of radical Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi. He accuses the Court of responding to a pro-Communist political movement, says public opinion(even in Mississippi) is the law and that no law is of any force which does not have the force of public opinion behind it. That of course is stuff intended to inspire the wool hat boys who send the likes of Eastland to the U. S. Senate.

P. 2

The Look article has as an illustration, a map of Southern and border states, showing the progress made in carrying out the desegregation edict.

In explanation of the map it is revealed that there are only five of the Southern states that are out to circumvent the Court decision and thereby defy the authority of Uncle Sam. They are Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina.

There are seven states that have already desegregated, to some extent. They are: Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and also the District of Columbia.

The "on the fence states" in which the article says, "some will stall and some comply" are Arkansas, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina and Florida.

TENNESSEE HURTS KEFAUVER

Tennessee's position, of course, will be a hindrance to Senator Estes Kefauver's chance of getting the Democrat nomination for president and is almost sure to thwarting Gov. Frank Clement in his ambition to be keynoter of the Democrate Party's National Convention. Nashville's Hon. Cecil Sims best qualifies for the post of Democrat keynoter, he is able, as a distinguished lawyers, to take a stand in favor of "obeying the law of the land" without any mental reservations, as compared with Gov. Clement who hasn't seemed to have gotten that far in his books, at this juncture. In addition, Gov. Clement is out of step with a large majority of Tennesseans because of the way he has soaked the state's citizens with burdensome sales taxes —and the end is not yet.

One of the devices for "meanness sake" that some states plan to use says LOOK is to keep the Supreme Court busy hearing lawsuits on desegregation. It is well understood that the Court had anticipated this maneuver. It made the Federal District Courts the arbiters of these slick schemes. The Supreme Court can takeno more time than is necessary to say, "Nothing doing" in proper legal terms to such law suits and that will be that. Nobody as yet beaten Uncle Sam, either on land or sea, even if Mississippi et al haven't heard the news.

One of the most timely of the LOOK articles is one which reveals that it is FEAR that underlies the conflict over desegregation. A paragraph in Editor William Attwood's article says this fear is "social with profound sexual undertones.

"To a white Southerner classroom integration implies a kind of social equality that does not exist even on an assembly line. He will tell you that sooner or later, some Negro boy will be walking his daughter home from school, staying for supper, taking her to movies . . . and then your Southern friend asks you the inevitable, the clinching question: "Would you want your daughter to marry a Nigra?"

AS TO "MANGRELIZATION"

"And there is nothing you can say to quiet his fear. You can reply: "She can say 'no' can't she?" You can point out that integrated schools elsewhere have not led to intermarriage. Your friend only shrugs. The fear is too deeply ingrained. The sexual neurosis makes many whites impervious to logic. They are obsessed by the notion that Negroes, given a chance, will take over their women as well as their golf clubs and legislatures. And the fact that most of America's original mulattoes were sired, in the years of slavery, by Southern white men, in a segregated society, does not inhibit them from asserting that mixed schools will "mongrelize" the race."

HATE BEGETS HATE

Further, this article says an Alabama state senator can accuse Negroes of plotting to take over the Government by electing a Negro Vice President and then assassinating the President. A Citizen's Council leader can proclaim "This isn't the United States—this is Sunflower County, Mississippi" and a Virginia legislator can brag that "it looks like we won the "Civil War."

Says LOOK: "Is it any wonder that Negroes, too are alarmed? Inflamed by equally reckless parts of their own press, (not by the Globe, of course), convinced that their white neighbors want to set back the clock, they are becoming increasingly apprehensive and hostile. Many are in a mood to answer violence with violence, reprisal with reprisals.

"Fear on both sides has aggrevated racial tensions to the danger point and many anxious Southerners are predicting that things will get worse before they are better."

(More about the LOOK article next week.)

THOMAS L. STOKES

Evening Star
Washington, D.C.
Thurs. 5-17-56

Report on Negroes' Plight in South

Four Ministers Describe Pressures On Integration Petition Signers

Sometimes it is helpful to have a first-hand report from trustworthy persons about how our democracy is faring.

Just now a trouble spot where it is threatened is the South. There, as we know, a conflict has developed over public school integration, between groups on both sides, that has been intensified by haste and emotion. On the one hand there are Negroes who are anxious to see an early end to segregation; on the other, there are are whites who are trying to prevent any integration at all, even a start. These groups are headed up, respectively, in the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, NAACP, and the "White Citizens Councils" which sprang up in many parts of the South.

In any such conflict, the weaker party always suffers. So we find that Negroes who signed petitions urging integration or who belong to NAACP have become victims of all sorts of economic harassments to deprive them of the ability to earn a living which, of itself, would seem to be a violation in spirit of our constitutional guarantees of the right of petition and of peaceful assembly.

For a case study of what some Negroes are enduring, there is available a report covering three counties in middle South Carolina — Orangeburg, Clarendon and Sumter—made by four ministers of Negro churches, two Methodist, one Episcopalian, and one Baptist, and submitted to the National Council of Churches of Christ. They set forth the needs of the Negroes. The report says in part:

"Among the original groups of school integration petition signers were some persons who operate small businesses: cafes, community grocery stores, filling stations, and the like. These are the ones who had their wholesale supplies cut off. They could get nothing to sell. The white citizens councils threatened to cut off all white patronage from dealers who wanted to continue doing business with Negroes who had signed school petitions.

"Thus the livelihood of these small retailers was effectively cut off. Others who had signed the petitions were fired from the jobs which they had held for years. In order that their patronage might be restored, it was agreed that the names of these particular petitioners be removed from the petition. Though many of them wanted to stand pat and suffer the consequences, we deemed it better to relieve them of the pressure, because there were many of us who were more able to withstand the pressure.

"There are many who have not been able to find employment commensurate with the jobs they lost. Others have had mortgages foreclosed. All of us have had our credit cut off completely. The pressure of the citizens councils now extends to all who are known to be connected with NAACP. . . ."

In their report, the four ministers suggested to the National Council of Churches how credit needs for the Negroes—there are 200 families that need such credit—could be met by setting up funds in banks through co-operation of individuals, clubs, churches and other organizations which would be repaid at the end of the crop year when the harvest is in.

It might help, too, if we had a rugged character around like old John Quincy Adams who, when he became a member of the House of Representatives after leaving the White House, submitted day after day petitions to the House asking an end to slavery. For years they were not received because of objections by Southerners. But finally his persistence won and they were accepted.

The Gallup Poll

Post + Times Herald P.15
Wed. 5-9-56

71% of U. S. Prefers Gradual Desegregation

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Washington, D.C.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 8 The American public overwhelmingly adopts the viewpoint of "gradualism" when it comes to setting a time-table Court's desegregation ruling into effect.

Seven out of 10 persons questioned in a nationwide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion believe that the Government should try gradually to bring about integration of white and Negro children in the public schools — that is, over a long period of years.

Some people in this group—particularly in the South—volunteered the information that they didn't want integration in the public schools ever to come about.

About one person in every six, takes the view, however, that the Government should do everything it can to bring about integration immediately—within the coming year.

To sound out public opinion, the Institute assigned its staff of interviewers to talk to an accurate cross-section of Americans in all walks of life, including the proper proportions of whites and Negroes, living in every section of the country.

"The Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. Which of these points of view comes nearest to your way of thinking about the problem of segregation?"

1. The Government should try to bring about the integration of white and Negro children in public school gradually — that is, over a long period of years 71%
2. The Government should do everything it can to see that white and Negro children in all parts of the country to the same public schools within the coming year . 18

No opinion 11

100%

Of thase whco want gradual integration, roughly one person in four vouchsafed the answer that if the choice were theirs, they would never permit white and Negro children to be integrated in the public schools.

That's the picture for the Nation as a whole. In the South, only one adult in 20 today is in favor of immediate integration. Almost half of those in the 13 Southern states who want gradual desegregation also volunteered that they are against integration at any time.

Considering those who are against integration at any time as a separate group, here is the vote today in the South:

Gradually	45%
Immediately	5
Never want integration	39
No opinion	12

The survey also finds that the greatest majority for the moderate point of view, calling for gradual integration over a long period of years, comes from persons who have attended college. Proportionately the largest number who volunteered that they would never want integration come from those who have grade-school educations.

The vote by education levels, again considering those who volunteered a "Never" answer as a third category:

	College	High Sch'l	Grade Sch'l
Gradually	73%	59%	41%
Immediately	18	18	20
Never	4	14	25

Copyright, 1956, American Institute of Opinion

S.C. Governor Dares North To Welcome Negro Migrants

Constitution Sat. 5-12-56
Atlanta, Ga. P.2

RIVERS' BRIDGE, S.C., May 11 (AP)—Northern advocates of racial integration were challenged today by South Carolina Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. "to cast off their hypocrisy and accept the Negro into their communities, their institutions and their families."

Timmerman called on "the integrationist to prove his sincerity" by supporting a program of voluntary migration of Negroes from the South to communities "where racial mixing is acceptable."

FEDERAL AID

He said "a federal program of financial aid to enable those who want to mix to move" to other areas "would cost only a fraction" of the billions advocated for foreign aid.

Timmerman spoke at the 80th annual Rivers' Bridge Confederate Memorial Assn. ceremonies that commemorate a War Between the States battle near here.

Calling that war the "war of Northern aggression," Timmerman charged that its cause was not Negro slavery in the South but "the determination of Northern plutocrats to establish national control under which the policies of the North would determine the policies of the nation."

"Much has changed in the last 90-odd years," Timmerman continued, "but some things remain the same. The North continues to be prone to stick its nose into somebody's business, especially the business of the South, while ignoring and even promoting deplorable conditions in its own areas.

BAD AS ABOLITIONISTS

"Northern propagandists are as loud, obnoxious and untruthful today as the abolitionists a century ago . . ."

Timmerman said "the integrationist, like the abolitionist, is a hypocrite" because "he proclaims in the name of brotherly love that Southern segregation is discrimination, while ignoring and cultivating deplorable conditions in his own area."

"The ghetto of Harlem, the lawless slums of Washington, the frequent—but frequently ignored—race riots in schools, parks and playgrounds, the muggings and switchblade cuttings and 32 months of racial disorder in Chicago's Trumbull Park, all are models of those deplorable conditions," he continued.

'END OF SEGREGATION TO BRING BLOODSHED'

Commercial Appeal P.

That Is View Of Ellender If Integration Forced In The Next 10 To 15 Years

Memphis, Tenn.

By The United Press

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Senator Allen J. Ellender (D., La.) said Sunday that "bloodshed" would result if school integration is forced on the South within the next five to 10 years.

Senator Ellender was one of several lawmakers who debated the civil rights issue on Sunday television shows.

The programs amounted to a preview of the expected bitter civil rights fight at the Democratic National Convention next August.

'We Can Solve Problem'

Senator Ellender said white and Negro leaders in the South can solve the integration problem if they are "not agitated" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other "intruders from the North."

But he warned that "there would be bloodshed . . . in all of the Southern states" if any attempt is made "overnight" to enforce the Supreme Court's school integration decision.

Senator Ellender also said the platform adopted by the Democratic convention will determine whether there will be a 1948-stlye Dixie bolt. He said a plank calling for enforcement of the court's decision would be "too offensive" to Southerners.

Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.), who led the fight for the strong civil rights plank which prompted the 1948 walkout, served notice he was in no mood for compromise this year.

Sees Some Difficulties

He conceded there "may be some difficulty" at the Democratic convention but said he is convinced a party majority will adopt "a good strong civil rights program" backing the Supreme Court's integration ruling.

Senator Ellender said he doubted if integration in primary and secondary schools could be brought about in the South in the next five or 10 years. Asked if the South would accept a more gradual shift to integration, he said only that the problem should be handled "by the people involved."

Comment Of Southern Editors On Segregation

Atlanta Daily World 2/26

Ranging all the way from fear of violence to the fantastic fear of marriage between the races are some of the reasons that white editors of newspapers covering a cross-section of this region, give in explaining resistance to the Supreme Court decision on school segregation. The opinions are expressed in a poll regarding the question in the current issue of U. S. News and World Report after questioning editors of 15 newspapers of which two are Negro publications, including the Atlanta Daily World. The feature appears in the Feb. 24th issue of this national weekly magazine.

Most of the white editors give as other reasons for resistance to the decision in the South: resentment to outside interference, unwillingness to change a way of life which has been practiced a long time. One editor of a Kentucky paper gave as a reason for some of the resistence is the fact that some of the politicians have created this reaction. He said, that in Kentucky integration had already been achieved; in the University of Louisville and before that, Negroes were integrated in the University of Kentucky. He also contends that there have been a great many other advances made from this score. Atlanta, Ga.

A Virginia editor said: "Race relations are definitely worse since the court decision in question." He, however, admits that there are some Negroes in the University of Virginia and some in the dormitories. He feels that the net results would be on the numbers; that numbers are very crucially important."

In giving our view to U. S. News and World Report on the subject we stated some things that have appeared at different times in these columns. Our editor stated that the decision was due and could be applied without too much difficulty if there were a way to stop some of the politicians from stirring up tension and inciting resistance to it. He also cited the fact that political capital had been made of the racial issue for years and as a result this is a contributing factor to the present reaction expressed to the decision. It was pointed out that due to the present residential situation as to the two races there would be no mass mixing of the races if desegregation were legally put into effect.

Anyway, we recognize the fact that the court decision has been made into an issue for various reasons, of which we believe political interest is the main one. But, a fact is a fact and it should be dealt with accordingly. Fri. 2-24-56

Most of the editors interviewed felt that race relations have deteriorated since the decision. Maybe this was inevitable, but let us hope and work to restore them as quickly as possible. The two races must learn to live and work together in peace and goodwill and within the framework of the school and any other decision given by the highest court in the land.

THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

News P. 16-A Sun. 2-26-56

Question: Is Segregation Sinful?

Birmingham, Ala.

Ever and anon some doctrinaires arise to proclaim that "segregation is a sin." Yet a certain old book shows that Abraham and Lot "segregated" when they separated as best for both and without damage to either. Was their segregation a sin?

By the laws of Moses, administered by Joshua, the tribe of Levi was scattered among the other tribes, for priestly and levitical purposes. Each of the other tribes was to observe strictly its own boundaries. Each tribe was told not only not to marry among the heathen tribes around them, but within the tribes themselves all persons should marry strictly within their own tribes. Was that Mosiac law sinful, and did not that explicit law "segregate" each tribe very clearly, in regard to land, property and marriage?

When Jesus talked to the woman of Samaria, did He even intimate, and to even the very slightest extent, that the Samaritans should try to force their way into the worship in Jerusalem, or that the Jews should try to force their way into worship in Samaria? Did he not plainly and unmistakably say that "God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth?" That is what He plainly declared.

If some doctrinaires feel that they are far wiser than was Jesus Christ, or if they flatter themselves that they are far more religious than was Jesus Christ, does the reader think that their self-congratulatory idea is well founded? J. M. GLENN, Midway, Ala.

Ike Says Racial Dispute Must Not Divide Nation

Daily World P. 1 Thurs. 3-22-56 Atlanta, Ga.

BY JAMES LEE

WASHINGTON — (INS) — President Eisenhower warned Wednesday that the racial segregation dispute must not be viewed as "a tremendous fight that is going to separate Americans" and get the country into a "nasty mess."

The Chief Executive told his news conference that "it is incumbent on all South to show some progress" in obeying the Supreme Court order outlawing separate white and Negro schools.

In a call for moderation on both sides of the segregation issue, the President declared, "Again I plead for understanding, for really sympathetic consideration of a problem that is far larger, both in its emotional and even in its physical aspects, than most of us realize."

Mr. Eisenhower cited the worldwide efforts of the Rev. Billy Graham in trying to "promote mediation instead of conflict, tolerance instead of prejudice," as the spirit in which the segregation problem should be approached.

VERY TOUGH

The President said: "This is a very tough one and people have to search their own hearts if we are going to get a decent answer and keep going ahead.

"Now, let's don't try to think of this as a tremendous fight that is going to separate Americans and get ourselves into a nasty mess.

"Let's try to think of it of how we can make progress ..as far as I am concerned. I am for moderation, but I am for progress; that is exactly what I am for in this thing."

REJECTS DEFIANCE

The President rejected a newsman's statement that Southern legislators who signed a manifesto pledging all legal efforts to upset the segregation ban had "indicated defiance" of the Supreme Court decision.

Mr. Eisenhower said: "I don't believe they expressed their defiance. I believe they exprssed their belief that it (the Court ruling) was in error and that they have talked about using legal means to circumvent...it.'

He added that opponents of integration "have, of course, their free choice as to what they want to do."

On another phase of the racial dispute, the President said that Negroes who are being prosecuted in Montgomery, Ala., for refusing to ride on segregated buses were brought to trial under "a state law about boycotts."

He indicated his conviction that the Montgomery case was a state, not a federal matter, but commented: "I do believe that it is incumbent on all the South to show some progress. That is what the Supreme Cohrt asked for. And they turned it over to local district courts."

INTEGRATION FIGHT PLEDGED BY DIXIE BLOC

Daily Tribune Chicago Ill. Mon 3-12-56

96 in Congress to Battle Ruling

P. 1

BY JOSEPH HEARST

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, March 11 — When the Supreme court ordered desegregation in public schools it substituted "naked judicial power" for established law, 96 members of Congress from 11 southern states charged today.

In a "declaration of constitutional principles, to be read in both houses of Congress tomorrow, the southern lawmakers pledged themselves to use "all lawful means to bring a reversal" of the decision. They commended the motives of those states which have declared intention to resist forced integration by any lawful means, but did not mention interposition, by which some state legislatures have challenged the high court ruling.

"We regard the decision of the Supreme court in the school cases as a clear abuse of judicial power," the declaration said. "It climaxes a trend in the federal judiciary undertaking to legislate, in derogation of the authority of Congress and to encroach upon the revered rights of the states and the people."

Sen. George [left] and Rep. Smith

Two Republicans Sign

The declaration was signed by 19 senators and 77 representatives, all Democrats with the exception of Rep. Broyhill and Rep. Poff of Virginia. Sen. George [Ga.] and Rep. Smith [Va.] are to read it in the respective houses tomorrow noon.

All except three senators of the 11 states were signers. Those who did not sign were Kefauver and Gore of Tennessee, and Johnson of Texas, the senate majority leader. All or a majority of the house members from nine of the 11 states signed. Only four of the 22 man Texas delegation and four of the nine man Tennessee delegation signed.

The declaration cited earlier Supreme court rulings which, it said, established that provision of "separate but equal" facilities did not conflict with the Constitution. It said this interpretation became a "part of the life of the people of many states, and confirmed their habits, customs, traditions and way of life."

Charge Lack of Legality

It said that tho there has been no constitutional amendment or act of Congress "changing this established legal principle" the Supreme coutr, "with no legal basis for such action, undertook to exercise naked judicial power and substituted their personal political aand social ideas for the established law of the land."

"This unwarranted exercise of power by the court, contrary to the Constitution, is creating chaos and confusion in the states principally affected," the lawmakers said. "It is destroying the amicable relations between the white and Negro races that have been created thru 90 years of patient effort by the good people of both races. It has planted hatred and suspicion where there has been heretofore friendship and understanding."

The declaration said that "outside agitators are threatening immediate and revolutionary changes in our public school systems," and expressed concern for "the explosive and dangerous condition created by this decision and inflamed outside meddlers."

Warns of Agitators

The lawmakers, in saying they would work to prevent the use of force in the implementation of the court's decision, appealed to "our people not to be provoked by the agitators and troublemakers invading our states, and to scrupulously refrain from disorder and lawless acts."

Preparation of the declaration went on for some time in secret. News that it was being prepared leaked out last week. Sen. Thurmond [S. C.] said the final draft was worked out by Senators Fulbright [Ark.], Daniel [Tex.], Russell [Ga.], Stennis [Miss.], and himself. The original draft was drawn by Thurmond, he told reporters, and the initial meeting to put it into shape and get signers was held in the office of Sen. George.

The 11 states represented by the signers are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

Stop A Fire Before It Starts

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

Make no mistake; positions on the segregation issue are hardening, tensions are rising, temperatures are going up. The trouble at the moment centers in the Deep South, in the state of Alabama in the cities of Tuscaloosa and Montgomery, but rising tensions widen excitement. Higher temperatures can cause combustion. And fires spread.

For these reasons what Governor Folsom has proposed for Alabama and Adlai Stevenson has urged for the entire nation brings notes of sanity into a situation fast becoming far too emotional. They both propose biracial commissions, that for Alabama to be appointed presumably by Governor Folsom himself. And Mr. Stevenson calls on President Eisenhower to name one for the whole country.

Such steps should receive the strongest possible support from every thinking person.

What might such commissions accomplish in today's situation? "Study commissions" are sometimes set up as devices to postpone definitive action. But these should not be primarily study commissions. They should provide concentrations of leadership for both races toward reasonable thinking, toward cooling tempers, and away from bitter resentments and frantic fears.

Some observers have asked whether there is time or room for compromise between hostile positions already so far advanced. There is more room but perhaps less time than one might think. Compromise, however, may not be the first business. The first necessity may be to agree to disagree for the time being.

Important as may be full abolition of segregation to some Negroes, as greater value, greater to everyone, at stake. That is the unity of these United States and of the people who dwell within them.

The two races, now with some 144,000,000 whites and 16,000,000 Negroes, will have to continue living side by side, in North and South alike, for time out of mind. Are they going to live in peace and friendliness or in conflict and bitterness? Not so much how the segregation issue is finally worked out as how that working out is approached is likely to form the answer.

Respected and trusted commissions might do much to persuade the leadership of both races to compromise not on principles but on pressures, and that to push temporary advantages and win local skirmishes could lose for each the goals it seeks.

Those goals are no longer "white supremacy" in the sense some whites have meant nor racial "integration" as, no doubt, some Negroes have defined it. The goal for all is a modus vivendi in which races and individuals are neither kept apart nor forced together by law—in which voluntary association and disassociation both are given the freeiest play.

An Appeal To Whites And Negroes

Once again we should like to urge all people of Christian good will to do all in their power to exercise a moderating influence now before Southern race conditions become any more serious.

And as is so often the case, the greatest opportunity may lie not in big things or gigantic programs but just in friendlier everyday relations between our white people and our colored people. As one Southerner said a day or two ago, "Since these racial tensions have increased I have increased my efforts to show the other race little courtesies and kindnesses that I may have been overlooking heretofore." We also know of Negroes who are showing increased appreciation of their white friends with a tact and courtesy such as the finest persons in the Negro race have always been noted for.

Our Negroes will make a mistake if they depend on force to compel sudden and revolutionary changes in our schools. Our white people will make as great a mistake if we fail to give our Negro people all the rights, courtesies and help we can give them short of those which might promote amalgamation of the races. As one Progressive Farmer reader suggested several years ago, perhaps the greatest force for racial good will would be for each white person and each colored person to try to find each day some opportunity to do a kind deed or speak a kind word to some person of the other race.

We also cherish the faith that in many communities there is still a chance for some of the fairest-minded white people and the fairest-minded colored people to consult together and work out policies that can keep their localities peaceful, regardless of what happens elsewhere.

—The Progressive Farmer

South Faces New Situation

News + Observer

BY THOMAS L. STOKES.

WASHINGTON.—Publicity over the University of Alabama case at Tuscaloosa and the bus boycott at Montgomery has observed a practical political situation developing in the South looking to the national conventions and the Presidential election.

It revolves about this question:

What will the Southern states do at the Democratic convention and, after that, where will its voters go in the Presidential election?

Let us begin with this fact, just beginning to be realized, that Southern leaders, as well as leaders from other parts of the country, face a new situation—an accomplished fact, not a theory or something that just might happen. Wed. 2-21-56

Hitherto, at two previous national party conventions—1948 and 1952—it was a theory that might possibly come to pass, civil rights legislation.

Rebellion was provoked among the Southern delegates when such legislation was endorsed in the party platform. Nothing yet has been done about such legislation, so it is still in the realm of theory.

But now there are two accomplished facts. Raleigh, N. C.

First, there is the Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public schools.

Second, and bearing directly on the political relationships of the Southern states to their federal government and to national parties, is the interposition movement by which it is declared that states will not carry out the Supreme Court decision.

The legislatures of four Southern states—Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia—have adopted interposition resolutions. The governors of two other states, Mississippi and North Carolina, have announced their intention to secure passage of such resolutions. And Governor Allan Shivers, of Texas, is arranging to have the interposition questions on the ballot in Texas' primary.

Those are hard, cold facts.

Now, with this interposition movement in mind, let us project ourselves forward to the Democratic convention in Chicago in August.

Anybody who recognizes the realities knows that the Democratic platform can do nothing else but declare that the integration decision is now the law of the land, which is what candidates for the Presidential nomination reiterate constantly.

What will be the position of delegations representing Southern states which have "interposed" that they will not accept integration? Even, for example, if the platform follows the Supreme Court's "deliberate speed" and construes this as gradualism, while interposition says "never," not gradually.

Will Southern delegations content themselves with voting against the platform—or will they walk out?

If they walk out, where will they and their people go?

They can hardly go into the Republican party, since no one can imagine that party doing other than insisting that the Supreme Court decision is the law of the land and denying the doctrine of interposition.

That would seem to leave only a third party as a mechanism for the position of interposition. Will it come to that again as in 1948? Then, a walkout of some Southern delegates ended up in a third party — the "Dixiecrat" movement, which carried four Southern states and kept them away from the Truman-Barkley regular Democratic ticket. In 1952, four Southern states left the Democratic party and went to General Eisenhower in the second Southern bolt in succession.

Possibility of another revolt loomed when an outstanding Southern leader —Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, who refused to support Adlai Stevenson in 1952—joined the interpositionists the past weekend and called upon the South to organize for "massive resistance" to the Supreme Court decision.

Asked about a third party, Byrd told this reporter that he has not yet heard of any and does not know of any plans for such. Was he a potential third party leader? No, he replied.

Previously Senator Byrd has stayed clear of third party movements, though the Byrd organization in Virginia gave encouragement to the 1948 "Dixiecrat" movement.

The Presidential candidate of that movement—Senator J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina—told this reporter he knew of no third party movement as yet.

Thus we have now a "wait and see" attitude among Southern leaders.

The interpositionists lack a leader who knows where he wants to go.

Tell It To Old Grandma

Advertiser 2-24-56

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request, name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserserve the right to shorten letters ★ No poetry, please ★ Repeat: No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it

Montgomery, Ala.

What The Negro Stands To Lose

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER. — Inasmuch as we are Southerners, having been born and raised in Alabama, we are familiar with segregation in the South and realize the necessity of it.

For the past several years one or both of us have lived in states other than Southern: West Virginia, Kansas and Oregon. We are therefore in the position of having a bird's-eye-view of a situation with which we are familiar.

We have a high regard for the Southern Negro as an individual. We have equally high contempt for the agencies and implements such as the NAACP and the Supreme Court decision which would, through their radical and unlawful actions, cause the Southern Negro to inadvertently lose the respect and good will of his best friend—the Southern white man.

EARL TENNIMON,
J. C. TENNIMON.
Salem, Oregon.

Tues. 2-28-56

No Help Wanted

Editor, The Advertiser:

Alabama does not need a bi-racial committee to speak its piece on segregation. Even a branchheader knows that.

W. T. BARNETT.
Pine Level, Ala.

White Retaliation

Editor, The Advertiser:

Why don't the white people of Montgomery park their cars at least one day a week and ride the buses to go to work or shopping?

Fight the Negro with his own ideas. It would help the company stay in business.

MRS. C. A. LIVINGSTON.
Tuscaloosa, Ala.

It Started With FDR

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have just read your interview in U.S. News & World Report.

There is no doubt that there is hypocrisy in the North. It is in the Democratic party, however. Your good friends, Franklin and Harry started it.

You must realize that there is a lot of difference between between a Southern and Northern Democrat. The strength of the Northern Democratic Party is the slums of the cities.

In the North you can tell the character of any community by the registration.

Most Northern Negroes are pawns of Democratic ward healers.

These Northern Democrats tell the Negroes that the South is behind the times and that the Democraic Party of the North does not need the South.

I wish that a lot of you intelligent Southerners could go to a slums political meeting. I am a Mason and a Rotarian. There are very few Democrats in either organization in the North.

I ejoyed the article.

CARL C. DAVIDSON.
Ellwood City, Pa.

Segregation, According To A Gallop Poll

Dr. George Gallop serves his fellowmen in his occasional reach — with a poll. He comes through this week with one on the controversal segregation question with facts and figures indicating just how strongly does the average white Southerner feel about it. The footnote at the bottom of the poll announces the next will deal with "How the Southern Negro feels about segregation." Daily World P. 4

The poll is divided into two sections, with three divisions of opinions. The first section is a poll taken from Southern whites only. The second section deals with opinions of those outside the South. Wed. 2-29-56 Atlanta, Ga.

These figures furnish an interesting study of contrast in opinions — of those white people living outside the South and who have generations of experience in non-segregated schools, residences, churches, public recreation and common carriers and those living in the South with no experience whatever in non-segregated practices and principles.

General

The ICC has ruled that racial segregation of interstate passengers on trains, buses and in public waiting rooms must end. The poll among Southern whites would stand: Approve 19%; disapprove 76%; undecided 5%.

Noting the keen contrast in those white people outside the South who have known nothing but non-segregated customs: Approve 71%; Disapprove 24%; undecided 5%.

ICC's ruling outside the South: Approve 67%; disapprove 24%; undecided 9%.

It is noted that these figures in their striking resemblance are too conspicious to dismiss as so much information.

Any open-minded person would arrive at the conclusion that logic enters into this situation where two sections afford such a proximity in the approvals and disapprovals.

Again the poll shows that in border states of Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Texas where the whites outnumber the Negro 8 to one, one white in every four approve. Moving in what might be termed mid-South states, Florida, Virginia, Arkansas and North Carolina where Negroes constitute approximately, the opposition rises. This would disclose where the population is higher, the opposition likewise rises.

Those who are really interested in arriving at an unbiased solution of what has been allowed to run into a problem, would do well to emphasize that the leading fear the average Southerner expresses, intermarriage, has not been in peril all these years where there is almost an equal count of approval of the court's decision.

Too, the verdict of the experienced, over against the reduction in economic overhead and the cutting out of duplicity in maintenance and operation of facility, deserves serious consideration.

We believe that much of the opposition to the decision in this section is due to the fact that the politicians have made political use of the racial issue.

Though the Supreme Court has ruled on the question it remains for the district federal courts to act unless the issue is resolved in accordance with the high court ruling by action of the administrative authorities such as the state and local school boards.

This clearly indicates that the Negro citizens should busy themselves in getting more persons eligible to vote.

ELLENDER WARNS SOUTH ON FORCE

Times P. 1

Fears Violence Might Bring Back 'Carpetbaggers'

Herald 3-18-56

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, March 17—Senator Allen J. Ellender cautioned the South tonight to avoid any show of violence in resisting school integration. He said such resistance could invite a return of "reconstruction" government and rule by "carpetbaggers."

New York N.Y.

The Louisiana Democrat told a Louisiana radio audience in an address recorded in Washington that he and other Congressional signers of last Sunday's manifesto against integration were committed to resistance by "any lawful means." He added:

"What the South must avoid at all costs is violence, lawlessness, hatred and bloodshed. The outside agitators who seek the subjugation of both the white and Negro races in the South are hovering like greedy vultures for the time when racial antagonisms led to chaos, the breakdown of governmental authority, and general lawlessness.

"If this condition should occur, then I fear they will not hesitate to press for the use of force. If this should occur, then all our people could look forward to would be a repetition of the reconstruction regimes which brought the South only oppression and self-seeking exploitation."

Times P. 17-L

In "our fight to maintain the basic principles of our Federal, constitutional system," Mr. Ellender said, "we must not open our gates to an invasion of our states by a new and even hungrier breed of carpetbaggers."

Carpetbaggers were Northern politicians who invaded the South after the Civil War.

By the Supreme Court decision calling for desegregation of the public school Senator Ellender said, "Nine men have made it possible for 165,000,000 Americans to be made subject to a new and powerful kind of despotism."

The "declaration of constitutional principles" signed by the Southern Congressmen, he said, "is a sober warning" to the American people that the Supreme Court "has laid the foundation for what may yet prove to be a complete destruction of our constitutional system of checks and balances."

"We have served notice that the people of the South, both white and Negro, are not going to be used as either whipping boys or political pawns in order to fulfill the Supreme Court's new doctrine of sociological justice," Senator Ellender declared.

He added that the South had been invaded by "unprincipled, self-seeking, outside agitators—I refer primarily to the N. A. A. C. P. [National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.]"

Wilson's Reinstatement Urged

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., March 17 (AP)—White Citizens Council members last night asked Gov. James E. Folsom to use his influence in having Leonard R. Wilson reinstated as a University of Alabama student.

The resolution was adopted unanimously at a meeting of about 375 members of a pro-segregation council organized here recently. Mr. Wilson, 20-year-old Selma, Ala., former student, presided as temporary chairman of the organization.

Mr. Wilson was expelled by the university board of trustees for leading demonstrations against enrollment of Miss Autherine Lucy, the first Negro student at the school, and for criticism of the actions of university officials. Miss Lucy later also was expelled.

Shivers Speech Protested

HOUSTON, Tex., March 17 (AP)—Officials of the N. A. A. C. P. completed plans to have 200 protest pickets tomorrow at the Texas Southern University campus for a speech by Gov. Allan Shivers.

Despite requests that Negro civic groups boycott the speech, Mack Hannah, the university board chairman from Port Arthur, Tex., has predicted a capacity audience would attend. The speech will feature inaugural ceremonies for Dr. S. M. Nabrit, new president of the state Negro institution.

A membership meeting by the Houston chapter of the N. A. A. C. P. last night approved a resolution voicing a right to refrain from listening "to a man who has publicly declared he will do everything in his power to abridge the rights of Negro citizens and their children in this state."

FOE OF INTEGRATION HEADS A NEW GROUP

Times P. 23-C

NEW ORLEANS, March 18 (UP)—Thirty Roman Catholic laymen in this area have formed an organization for "investigation and study" of compusory racial integration.

Herald 3-19-56

The president of the organization is Emile A. Wagner Jr., a lawyer and outspoken foe of integration. He recently attacked officials of Loyola University of the South for inviting Hulan E. Jack, Borough President of Manhattan, to speak at an interracial meeting.

New York N.Y.

Known as the Association of Catholic Laymen, the group said in its article of incorporation it also would "seek out and make known and denounce Communist infiltration, if there be any in the integration movements."

The group is open only to "persons of the Caucasian race who profess in faith of the Holy Roman Catholic Church."

Mr. Wagner said the founders of the group intended to circulate 25,000 membership applications in the New Orleans area.

Catholic officials here, including Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel, have said integration of the parochial schools is coming. Archbishop Rummel called segregation "a moral sin."

Of the new organization's relations with the church, Mr. Wagner said that "on questions of dogmas we would certainly consult with a spiritual adviser."

President Urged to Call Governors' Racial Parley

Evening Star P. 6-A

Washington D.C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Mar. 23 (AP).—Gov. Leroy Collins yesterday called on President Eisenhower to convene a conference of Southern Governors to discuss racial relations.

Times 3-23-56

In a message to the President, Gov. Collins said that as a result of the Supreme Court's school integration decision and of activities of extremists on both sides "we are experiencing what well may become a serious deterioration of racial relations.

"We are fearful the progress we have made over many years may be dissipated."

In Washington, Secretary James C. Hagerty said the telegram from Gov. Collins has arrived but there will be no comment at this time.

The Florida Governor was authorized by a conference of State government leaders and educators here yesterday to call upon the President and Attorney General Brownell to meet with the Southern Governors and attorneys general. The conference was called to develop a workable plan to head off integration at the State universities legally.

Publisher Invites 'Moderates' to Act

ATLANTA, Mar. 23 (AP).—An Alabama newspaper publisher yesterday called on middle-ground whites and Negroes to work out a solution to Southern racial problems.

Buford Boone, publisher of the News at Tuscaloosa, said "moderates" have a patriotic duty to speak up and step forward in an effort to "bring some degree of sanity out of chaotic frenzy."

"Thus far, there has been no leadership for such an element," he said in a speech before the Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalism fraternity. "We need it badly."

Mr. Boone said Tuscaloosa was a tranquil city until a few weeks ago, but things are different now.

"We have been working at hating and fearing people in Alabama. We have been living in a state of mass hysteria.

"I have grieved to see a people for whom I have great affection speeding recklessly down a road leading to real trouble," he declared.

Mr. Boone described the events leading up to demonstrations against Autherine Lucy, Negro who attempted to enter the University of Alabama.

"She came down in a Cadillac with escorts," Mr. Boone said. "She was overdressed for a coed. She paid her fees with a $100 bill and she was taken around students waiting in long lines to complete the tiring job of registering."

North Carolina To Draft Program

RALEIGH, N. C., Mar. 23 (AP).—Gov. Luther Hodges said yesterday a special report recommending steps North Carolina should take in dealing with the school segregation issue will be available shortly after April 1.

It will be available before a special session of the State's General Assembly Gov. Hodges has said he will call this summer to deal with school problems.

The report will be made by a special School Segregation Committee created by the 1955 Legislature. Headed by Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, a former House speaker, it is expected to recommend a plan similar to that which has been adopted in Virginia. This would provide for tuition grants or transfers for students who objected to attending integrated schools.

Reporting the South

Post Times Herald

Editor Thomas R. Waring of the Charleston (S. C.) News & Courier has made a strong indictment of the Northern press for abandoning "fair and objective reporting of the race story." The gist of his argument, printed in an article in Harper's, is that because most newspapers and periodicals published in the North are unfamiliar with the "facts" on the race problem, they print only a one-sided version and ignore Southern views. He cites what he says are five differences between the white and Negro races which discourage white parents from permitting their children to mingle freely with Negro children in school. These he lists as having to do with health, home environment, marital habits, crime and intellectual development.

Jun. 1-3-56

It would be foolish to contend that there are not differences between the habits and cultural attainments of Negroes as a group and white people as a group. There also are wide differences between groups of the same race. Many of the differences Mr. Waring presents as facts, however, would not be accepted as such by others. And many of these so-called differences relate to environment rather than to race.

P. 10

Mr. Waring seems to think that newspapers, in the interest of fairness, should print derogatory comment of one race about the weaknesses of another race. Other persons have felt that such race-libels contribute to bad inter-race relations and have treated them as they would treat libels against individuals. Of course, such derogatory comment can reach a point where it becomes newsworthy. Racial antipathies cannot and should not be ignored when they become significant factors in public life. But we think the press has not ignored the existence of views such as Mr. Waring expresses. The meeting last week in Memphis, at which prosegregation forces from 12 states were organized into a group to fight the Supreme Court decision, for example, received full attention.

Washington D.C.

There is, to be sure, some basis for the sort of regional resentment Mr. Waring voices. No section of the country has done well enough in solving its racial problems to exhibit a pious superiority toward any other section. Too often there has been superciliousness rather than sympathy toward communities that have staggering problems of adjustment. It is important to understand without any self-righteousness the views Mr. Waring sets forth in good conscience—particularly the feeling that the South is being coerced.

What Mr. Waring seems to want, however, is something more: he seems to want agreement with what he says are Southern views, and to have such views influence the presentation of racial news. Here is the rub. Fair and equal treatment of all persons, regardless of race, has long been the proclaimed national policy; and the Supreme Court's decision prohibiting racial segregation in public schools is now the law of the land. It is proper, we think, that reporting of the racial question should start with this recognition.

'The Court Ruling Insults My Race'

Advertiser

[Zora Neale Hurston is a Negro novelist and playwright, a Barnard graduate and holder of both Rosenwald and Guggenheim Fellowships.—ED.]

Sat. 1-7-56

I PROMISED God and some other responsible characters, including a bench of bishops, that I was not going to part my lips concerning the United States Supreme Court decision on ending segregation in the public schools of the South. But since a lot of time has passed and no one seems to touch on what appears to be the most important point in the hassle, I break my silence just this once. Consider me as just thinking out loud.

The whole matter revolves around the self-respect of my people. How much satisfaction can I get from a court order for somebody to associate with me who does not wish me near them?

P. 4-A

The American Indian has never been spoken of as a minority and chiefly because there is no whine in the Indian. Certainly he fought, and valiantly, for his lands, and rightly so, but it is inconceivable of an Indian to seek forcible association with anyone. His well-known pride and self-respect would save him from that. I take the Indian position.

Montgomery, Ala.

Clamor for Rights

Now a great clamor will arise in certain quarters that I deny the Negro children of the South their rights, and therefore I am one of those "handkerchief-head niggers" who bow low before the white man and tell out my own people, out of cowardice. However, an analytical glance will show that is not the case.

If there are not adequate Negro schools and there are some residual, some inherent and unchangeable qualities in white schools, impossible to duplicate anywhere else, then I am the first to insist that Negro children of Florida be allowed to share this boon. But if there are adequate Negro schools and prepared instructors and instructions, then there is nothing different except the presence of white people.

For this reason, I regard the ruling of the Supreme Court as insulting, rather than honoring, my race. Since the days of the never-to-be-sufficiently-deplored Reconstruction, there has been current the belief that there is no greater delight to Negroes than physical association with whites, the doctrine of the white mare.

The Habits of Mules

Those familiar with the habits of mules are aware that any mule, if not restrained, automatically follows a white mare.

Lead a white mare along a country road and slyly open the gate and the mules in the lot would run out and follow this mare. This ruling being conceived and brought forth in sly political medium with eyes on 1956, and brought forth in the same spirit and for the same purpose, it is clear then they have taken the old notion to heart and acted on it. It is a cunning opening of the barnyard gate with the white mare ambling past. We are expected to hasten pell-mell after her.

It is most astonishing that this should be tried just when the nation is exerting itself to shake off the evils of communist penetration. It is to be recalled that Moscow, being made aware of this folk belief, made it the main plank in their campaign to win the American Negro from the 1920s on.

It was the come-on stuff. Join the party and get yourself a white wife or husband. To supply the expected demand, the party had scraped up this and that off of park benches and skid rows and held them in stock for us. The biggest types of Negroes were held to be just panting to get hold of one of these objects. Seeing how flat that program fell, it is astonishing that it would be so soon revived. Politics indeed makes strange bedfellows.

The South had better beware in another direction. While it is being frantic over the segregation ruling, it had better keep its eyes open for more important things. One instance of government by fiat has been rammed down its throat.

It is possible that the end of segregation is not here and never meant to be here at present, but the attention of the South is directed on what was calculated to keep us busy while more ominous things were brought to pass. The stubborn South and the Mid-west kept this nation from being dragged farther to the left than it was during the New Deal.

But what if it is contemplated to do away with the two-party system and arrive at government by administrative decree? No questions allowed and no information given out from the administrative department? We could get more rulings on the same subject and more far-reaching any day. It pays to weigh every saying and action, however trivial, as indicating a trend.

In the ruling on segregation, the unsuspecting nation might have witnessed a trial balloon. A relatively safe one, since it is sectional and on a matter not likely to arouse other sections of the nation to the support of the South. If it goes off fairly well, a precedent has been established. Government by fiat can replace the Constitution. You don't have to credit me with too much intelligence and penetration, just so you watch carefully and think.

No Elation From White Mare

Meanwhile, personally, I am not delighted. I am not persuaded and elevated by the white mare technique.

It is well known that I have no sympathy or respect for the "tragedy of color" school of thought among us, whose fountainhead is the pressure group concerned in this court ruling. I can see no tragedy in being too dark to be invited to the White House.

The Supreme Court would have pleased me more if they had concerned themselves about enforcing the compulsory education provisions for Negroes in the South as is done for white children. The next 10 years would be better spent in appointing truant officers and looking after conditions in the homes from which the children come. Use to the limit what we already have.

"Them's my sentiments," and I am sticking to them. Growth from within. Ethical and cultural desegregation. It is a contraditiction in terms to scream race pride and equality while at the same time spurning Negro teachers and self-association. That old white mare business can go racking on down the road for all I care.

Says South Segregates Self By Maintaining Race Discrimination

Ex-Bishop Tells N. C. Group Southerner Can't Head U.S.

Daily World Atlanta Ga. Wed. 1-11-56

WILMINGTON, N. C. — (INS) — A former bishop of the Methodist Church Tuesday termed the Supreme Court school segregation decision "The greatest thing that's happened in this country."

Dr. Stanley Jones, former missionary to India and author of a long list of books on religion, said the South by maintaining racial segregation was at the same tome separating itself from the rest of the nation.

"You will notice," he told the Wilmington Rotary Club, "That no president can be elected from a Southern state. You are segregating yourselves from leadership."

Dr. Jones said he had grown up and bad been educated in the South and had studied segregation problems during long service in India. He predicted the South will have to acquiesce to integration.

"We can take it grudgingly or graceful but, in the end, we will give up to it."

He said he realized one of the fears expressed by white people in areas where Negroes outnumber them. The supposition that by bloc voting the Negro citizens would control political affairs, is unfounded, Jones said.

He said the same argument was advanced for years in India but minority groups there acted as individuals rather than a group. (This pattern is observed in the sections of the United States where, civil rights not being the issue, Negroes vote in accordance with other wishes and interests and do so strictly as individuals.)

Insult Not For All Of Race-Lanham

Daily World Sat. 1-7-56

While announcing that he has never been a member of the Ku Klux Klan, Rep. Henderson Lanham from Georgia declared on the floor of the House Thursday: "The good people of Georgia and the Southland will find a way to protect our Southern womanhood from black rapists."

Lanham was supported by other members of the Georgia delegation which included Reps. Jack Flynt, James C. Davis and E. L. Forrester.

Lanham had become aroused over an FBI investigation of the Cobb County Jury selection methods. Cobb County is Lanham's district.

The investigation in Cobb County followed the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling in the case of Amos Reece, a Negro charged with the assault of a white woman. The ruling was that Reece had been improperly indicted.

Atlanta, Ga.

Meanwhile President Eisenhower in his State of the Union message Thursday asked full investigation of of racial troubles in the South.

"It is disturbing," he said in his State of the Union message, "that in some localities allegations persist that Negro citizens are being deprived of their right to vote and are likewise being subjected to unwarranted economic pressures.

Lanham, said in a telegram to C. A. Scott "those who pose as the friend of the Negroes continue to try to interfere with the orderly process of the courts of the state in their efforts to protect the women of the South from the black beasts who attack them, the white men of the South and even the good Negroes in the South will respond in a manner that will be surprising to the NAACP."

The above statement came from the office of Rep. Lanham in Washington.

In a telegram to Rep. Lanham, Mr. Scott said:

"You are quoted in an article by Ken Turner, in January 5, Atlanta Journal as referring to members of Negro race as black rapists in reference to Reece case in Cobb County. I hope this is incorrect and you will ask a correction by Mr. Turner. To refer to people as beasts is highly insulting, and I am sure you and I want to act as responsible persons in testing times like we confront. We cannot ignore this statement."

In his answer, Lanham said:

". . . was discussing case of Reece, convicted Negro rapist and used words "black beasts" only with reference to such as he and had no idea of applying terms to race as whole." He also inferred that his statement meant "any man who attacks a woman, white or black.

Billion persons overseas get facts on U.S.

Baltimore, Md. Nov. 1-1-56

WASHINGTON

Over a billion persons overseas were provided facts about the United States during 1955 by the U.S. Information Agency.

This information was made available by USIA's international press service.

It was composed of news commentaries, pamphlets, books and other publication material about U.S. foreign policy, American domestic events and the maneuvers and contradictions of international communism.

* * *

IN A YEAR-END report to Theodore C. Striebert, director of the Information Agency, the L. S. Briggs, said that more than 10,000 overseas newspapers and magazines, published in a total of 64 languages, were supplied with visual and text materials aimed at furthering U.S. policies and unmasking communist objectives.

* * *

MATERIAL NEEDED abroad immediately for the Agency's information program is transmitted six days a week in a 7,000 word wireless file.

Texts of all important speeches by the President and other top U.S. officials are sent by this file, which is monitored by 67 listening posts overseas.

Negro Speaks Up For Segregation

Commercial Appeal

'Prophet' Thoroughly Approves Citizens Council

To The Commercial Appeal:

I sincerely believe the White Citizens Council is one of the greatest organizations that ever could have come to the human mind.

Sun. 1-8-56

The White Citizens Council is not an organization to oppose the rights of others, but only to develop purity among their own race; neither is it an organization to create violence, but to prohibit it. I know several of these men personally.

This group should be looked up to and not tagged as Negro haters, as some might think. The way I see it, if the colored group would organize the same among themselves, we would have less crossbreeds among us. As to the integration of schools, I am certainly glad that Jackson has waked up to my 1953 prediction—that is, you will never have a peaceable integration until the parents on both sides agree, Supreme Court or no Supreme Court.

I am afraid the white people of the South have failed to consider the Bible; Psalms 76:6—"Promotion cometh neither from the East, nor from the West, or the North or South, but God is the judge, He taketh down one and He setteth up another." The South will never be able to survive under Northern leadership simply because they do not understand the conditions of the South, and in every Democratic or Republican convention for the past 45 years I have noticed that we pick out North, East or West leadership, and as long as the South depends upon such, it makes the South the underdog. They feel that you have made them your superiors in judgment, wisdom and leadership.

As a Negro minister in Chicago, I was a victim of one of the worst deals that could ever be pulled off on any American citizen. I traded for a 1951 Fleetwood air-conditioned Cadillac, with clear title, to one of the motor companies, with good credit references from the South, which they accepted. Six weeks later they repossessed the car while I was asleep. The notes were paid up from Nov. 1, 1955 to Jan. 1, 1956. Their alibi was that I needed a co-signer who was a property owner there before they could release the car. This has left me without the use of my car for 60 days even though the notes were paid up to date.

Not only did I get this experience, but I find many poor Negroes in Chicago who buy their television sets, and cars, and after they get one day behind they are pulled in under the kangaroo law. They receive garnishments on their jobs and are made to pay for those things even though the company has repossessed their property and disposed of it. These are facts, and this is what happened to me in Chicago. This has never happened to me in the South out of my 35 years in business.

PROPHET M. D. WILLETT.
P. O. Box 667,
Little Rock, Ark.

South's Newspapers And Race Matters

Advertiser Sat 2-18-56

From Time Magazine

THROUGHOUT the South virtually every page last week told the news of 26-year-old Autherine Lucy's fight to become the first Negro to enter the University of Alabama (see Education). Yet, like other desegregation news that has crowded its way increasingly into the Southern press since the Supreme Court decision, it got there almost against the will of most editors. Southern newspapers—with scattered exceptions—are doing a patchy, pussyfooting job of covering the region's biggest running story since the end of slavery. P. 4-A

The measure of the Southern press was taken last week by Jere Moore, editor of Georgia's Milledgeville weekly Union Recorder, who once routed the Ku Klux Klan in a local battle. Said Moore: "The newspapers of the South have failed to take the leadership demanded of them in this issue. They have been weak-kneed when they should have been strong. We have not tackled the issue." Montgomery, Ala.

Fear Of Community

Privately, many Southern journalists are far more enlightened than their fellow citizens on the segregation issue, but professionally they are hamstrung by front-office pressure and fear of community wrath. Others are too tied up in their own emotional knots to do justice to the problem. They have struck an uneasy balance between their jobs as newsmen and what they feel is their duty as Southerners.

Most Southern news executives have adopted a buck-passing rule of thumb: When in doubt about a racial story, use the press-association copy. For example, in the Autherine Lucy riots, papers in nearby Birmingham were the only out-of-town dailies in the South to send their own staffers to Tuscaloosa to cover the story. Sometimes papers lean on the wire services for racial news even in their own areas. When one major daily recently got tips of forthcoming anti-segregation statements by religious leaders, it passed the word along quietly to a wire service instead of going after the story itself.

The press associations do an even-handed job of straight reporting, but in the rush to meet deadlines with fast-breaking news, they give only bits and pieces of the whole story. Inevitably, they put the accent on spot news of conflict. Without any further effort to see the integration problem whole, so do most Southern papers.

The Extremists

At its worst, notably in Mississippi, the Southern press is full of slanting, suppression and rabble-rousing against integration. The most violent is The Jackson Daily News (circ. 38,813), whose ripsnorting old (78) Editor Fred Sullens incites readers against "mongrelization" under such front-page scare-lines as "You Are For Us Or Against Us." The best that Editor Sullens could say of the Negro was in a sentimental story on the funeral of an 83-year-old onetime janitor at the University of Mississippi; the paper started a scholarship fund in his name, and sang his praises as "a good Negro who knew his place."

Such papers as Sullens' Daily News now run more Negro crime news under bigger headlines than ever before—even when it means going as far afield as Chicago. They spike occasional wire stories that show integration working, e.g., a recent AP dispatch about the acceptance of three Negroes at the University of North Carolina. They print and reprint testimonials by Negroes who say that they prefer segregation and ignore Negro leaders on the other side, except to quote them out of context to make them sound like wild radicals.

Against this strident tone a new Jackson daily, the State Times (Time, March 7), tried to sound a more moderate note on racial issues. When the paper started about a year ago, Editor Norman Bradley, an alumnus of the liberal Chattanooga Times, played desegregation news calmly, sometimes chided the state for abuses and injustices committed in the name of segregation. But the paper's directors opposed his policy, and he quit in December to return to The Chattanooga Times as its executive editor.

More dignified than the extremists is another group of stalwart prosegregation papers typified by The Charleston [S.C.] News & Courier (circ. 53,286). It occasionally offends rabid racists by printing constructive news of the Negro community, and its editor, Thomas R. Waring, appeared in Harper's Magazine gently pleading "The Southern Case Against Desegregation."

But Editor Waring makes the case for his own readers with harsher strokes. He plays up news of muggings in Harlem and race riots in Chicago to support a recurrent editorial theme: look what happens where you have integration. In his editorial last week calling the Lucy uproar the result of "appeasement of colored people," his strongest word for the rioters was "impolite."

The Montgomery Advertiser

But the Southern press, up against tough and delicate problems, also has its shining examples of courage and fairness in handling its No. 1 story. In Tuscaloosa, from offices less than two miles from the University of Alabama, Editor Buford Boone of The News (circ. 15,681) topped off thorough coverage of the Lucy story with a hard-hitting editorial: "The University administration and trustees have knuckled under to the pressures and desires of a mob . . . We have a breakdown of law and order and abject surrender to what is expedient . . . The Montgomery, [Ala.] Advertiser (circ. 60,144) which sees no integration possible in the Deep South in the foreseeable future, nonetheless has given full coverage to the Negro boycott of Montgomery buses (Time, Jan. 16). It has devoted columns to interviews with leaders of the boycott, also ran a story showing that the first-come, first-seated policy demanded by the Negroes was already working in many Southern cities, including some in Alabama.

Texas

In Texas the only major dailies to take a flat stand for integration and the Supreme Court decision are the locally owned and jointly run San Antonio Express and News (circ. 141,734). Tomme Call, editor of The News editorial page, won first place in the 1955 annual editorial awards of the Texas Associated Press Managing Editors Association for a piece urging complete compliance with the Supreme Court decision.

"It was our feeling [that] any area trying to combat integration would be making trouble for itself and worsening race relations," says Call. "We went into it blind. We had no way of knowing what public reaction would me. We were pleasantly surprised at the almost complete lack of opposition."

Well-played stories of how integration succeeded in local schools have also distinguished the coverage of The Nashville Tennessean (circ. 113,439) and Banner (circ. 91,262).

Thick Hides

Southern editors who try to call their shots as they see them must develop thick skins. Notable example: Hodding Carter, whose Greenville Delta Democrat-Times (circ. 11,980) delivers courageous coverage in the midst of hostile Mississippi. "We print anything about the controversy locally, regionally or nationally that we can get our hands on," says Editor Carter. Mrs. Carter often gets threatening telephone messages for "that damned nigger-lover husband of yours."

Actually, many Southern newsmen took it for granted that their papers would soft-pedal such an emotionally explosive issue. But the surprise is that so many editors are now willing to stick their necks out.

Newsmen feel that any great improvement in the coverage of integration will come just as gradually as integration itself. Says Colbert ("Pete") McKnight, editor of The Charlotte [N.C.] Observer, one of the region's most conscientious dailies: "Northern editors try to oversimplify our problem. It just cannot be done. It will be at least a decade before many changes take place in Southern journalism."

TO THE RESCUE
The Cincinnati Enquirer

This year, the typewriter sentence should read: "Now is the time for all hungry politicians to come to the aid of the farmer."

DEMOCRATIC SOLIDARITY
The Chicago Tribune

House Leader McCormack claims Democratic unity is stronger than it has been for years. Witness, for example, Adlai's generous refusal to contest a probable Kefauver victory in the New Hampshire primary.

IF

If all Printers were determined not to print anything till they were sure it would offend no body, there would be very little printed.

—Ben Franklin, 1731

Patterns Of Resistance To Race-Mixing In The South

Advertiser Mon. 2-13-56

. . . While Jim Crowism on city transit systems in the border states and in some cities of the "upper" South has been disappearing gradually, cities of the "deep" South appear ready to fight to the last ditch to retain the long practiced seating arrangement.

Montgomery, Ala.

Thus concludes The Baltimore Evening Sun in a survey of city transit and segregation in the South, a survey which included Montgomery's stalemate over the "first come, first served" demand of Negro boycotters as well as a number of other conflicts. P. 4-A

With the glaring exception of Mississippi, and parts of Louisiana, The Sun reports, the South has by and large accepted "with good grace" the Interstate Commerce Commission's order affecting segregation practices in interstate commerce — waiting rooms and rest rooms. What The Sun does not bring out, however, is that this compliance is in more instances than not a token gesture to appease the all-powerful ICC. While signs have been changed in so-called "interstate" waiting rooms, the conventional patterns of segregation continue in most instances.

Broadly [The Sun continues] the degree of difference between interstate travel and intracity travel seems to be analogous to the difference between a municipal golf course and a municipal swimming pool. Quite a few cities in the South where the Negro ratio of population isn't particularly large have recently been dropping the color ban on the golf links, voluntarily or by court order. But this is not true in respect to swimming pools or wading pools and other facilities in the public parks.

Now before the U.S. Supreme Court is a suit involving city bus segregation in Columbia, S.C. The Circuit Court of Appeals, overruling the district court, decided in favor of the Negro complainants. Presumably, the Supreme Court will uphold the appellate court, if it follows the logic and precedent of the school segregation cases. Other significant developments:

¶ By direct Supreme Court order, Atlanta has just recently opened its golf courses to Negroes, but other recreation facilities are still strictly segregated. And, The Sun suggests, the issue of racial commingling at municipal swimming pools and the like, soon to be faced, will generate considerably more heat.

¶ A federal district judge has ruled in St. Petersburg, Fla. that the municipal swimming must admit Negroes, but the order has not been put into effect, and The Sun says, most cities in the Deep South are prepared to dispose of such facilities if race mixing is forced. In Greensboro, S.C., for instance, not "deep" but "upper" South, the city has ordered the sale of the city golf course and moved to close a nine-hole course built a few years ago expressly for Negroes.

It appears to us that The Sun has correctly assessed Southern resistance as directly proportional to the degree of intimacy involved in any given issue. Thus resistance is palpably greater to integration in classrooms, swimming pools and buses than to token removal of signs in interstate waiting rooms. The line is vague, but as the contact ceases to be commercial expediency (as, for instance, the integration in Montgomery elevators) and becomes something approaching a social relationship, resistance is immediate and resolute.

ADVERTISER INCLUDED

Advertiser, p. 10-A
Montgomery, Ala.
Sun. 2-21-56

Poll Of Editors Shows Racial Strife Worsened By Desegregation Mandate

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20 (AP)—Most of 15 newspaper editors interviewed on the segregation issue believe relations between white persons and Negroes in the South have worsened since the Supreme Court ordered an end to separate public schools for the two races.

Some of the editors—who come from the Deep South, border states and Texas—voice fear of bloodshed stemming from the integration move. There is marked difference of opinion whether the high court action has slowed or hastened progress toward equality of educational opportunity for Negro pupils.

The copyrighted interview in U.S. News and World Report, an independent weekly news magazine, include a statement by a Negro editor, Percy Greene of the Jackson, Miss., Advocate, that relations between the raes are "infinitely worse" than before the 1953 decision.

NEAR MURDER

In similar vein a white newspaper publisher, Buford Boone of the Tuscaloosa News, says his community "was almost an eyewink away from murder" in the rioting that developed over admission of a Negro girl to the University of Alabama.

"The mob on the University of Alabama campus would have killed this girl if they could have gotten their hands on her," Boone says.

And Frederick Sullens, editor of the Jackson, Miss., News, predicts:

"Violence will inevitably follow any hasty movement to force Negroes into the white schools of Mississippi."

Others expressing the view that race relations have worsened included editor Grover C. Hall Jr., of the Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser; James G. Stahlman, publisher of the Nashville, Tenn., Banner; Thomas Waring, editor of the Charleston, S.C., News and Courier; Hodding Carter, editor of the Delta Democrat-Times at Greenville, Miss.; and Virginius Dabney, editor of the Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch editorial page.

Estimates vary widely as to when, if ever, integration will be accomplished in the South.

5-10 YEARS

C. P. Liter, executive editor of the Baton rouge, La., Advocate and State Times, says he would be surprised to see it in his lifetime. Mark F. Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal, says he believes it could be achieved in 5 to 10 years.

C. A. McKnight, editor of the Charlotte, N.C., Observer, offers the opinion that integration will spread gradually in the South but "There are some sections that are simply not going to desegregate their schools even at the point of a bayonet."

E. B. Braswell, editor of the Athens, Ga., Banner-Herald, is one of those asserting progress toward equality of educational opportunity has not been hampered by the Supreme Court ruling.

Similarly, editor John M. Tapers of the Tallahassee, Fla., Democrat, says his state's "excellent start" in that direction has not been affected. Tapers says, however, "You can look for trouble" if attempts are made to enforce integration in the immediate future.

In the southwest, says editor Charles E. Green of the Austin, Tex., American-Statesmen, people are taking the integration move "pretty much in stride." He adds, however: "I think if the enforcement is too rapid it could set things back."

C. A. Scott, editor of the Atlanta, Ga., World and one of the two Negroes among those interviewed, says he believes most people would accept integration if they were not stirred up by authorities "for political, selfish reasons."

RACIAL EQUALITY TRACED TO BIBLE

Times p. 30-C

Segregation Affronts God and American Democracy, Dr. McCracken Declares

Mon. 2-13-56

There is no Christian argument for racial discrimination, the Rev. Dr. Robert J. McCracken declared yesterday.

The Bible is "crystal clear" on this point, he told the congregation of the Riverside Church. It holds, he said, that "there are no inferior races."

"Anyone who takes seriously the Christian interpretation of life will assent to the New Testament dictum, 'One God and Father of us all,'" he added.

American democracy also upholds the creed that "all men are created equal," Dr. McCracken observed. He noted that the United States was being branded "hypocritical" because of a divergence from these avowed principles.

"We arouse suspicion and even hatred by our discrimination against our own racial minorities," he went on.

"Racial discrimination imperils our world leadership and plays into the hands of communism."

Stand of All Churches

Dr. McCracken emphasized that "segregation based on color or race had been unqualifiedly condemned" in every interdenominational gathering of Christian churches since 1928.

The National Council of Churches, he added, "hailed the Supreme Court decision as 'a milestone in the achievement of human rights.'"

Individual denominations have taken similar stands, he said, making "an integrated church in an integrated society the declared policy of American Protestantism."

The Roman Catholic Church has "condemned racial discrimination as unjust and un-Christian," the minister pointed out, and added: "There is no difference of standpoint among the churches."

But the pronouncements of the churches, he warned, become "glittering generalities if they are not implemented."

"Segregation is still more entrenched in the Protestant Church than in any other institution," he said.

In another sermon on the racial issue, the Rev. Adam Clayton Powell Jr. decried incidents in the South of "lawlessness, murder, violence and contempt for the law of the land."

Speaking at the Abyssinian Baptist Church, 132 West 138th Street, he said: "This is an hour for a voice like Lincoln's to speak once again with moral courage. Such a voice must speak temperately without any reference to violence, but it cannot be a voice of gradualism and moderation."

Letters to The Times

Times
Jan. 2-12-56

To Understand the South

Race Problem Linked to Population Decline, Unbalanced Economy

P. 10-L

The writer of the following letter, Professor Emeritus of Vanderbilt University, is visiting lecturer in political science at Hamilton College.

New York, N.Y.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

As a Southerner sojourning in the North, I should like to point out a collateral condition of race relations in my region which the press and commentators of different regions have tended to overlook in discussing the unfinished business of ending the inherently unequal treatment of the Negro in public education and other public services. The condition calls for sympathy.

The recent election returns from Virginia on the segregation issue and reports of organizational activities in other Southern states in support of "white supremacy" indicate that there is a substantial minority support, including white support, for school desegregation in the growing industrial centers and areas of the South. The reports also suggest the generalization, not rigid or perfect in all particulars, that the most militant pro-segregation agitation is brought about by inhabitants or spokesmen of regions of relative or absolute decline in population and of unbalanced economy.

The accounts of the Tennessee group calling on Governor Clement and urging him to jump into the fight against the Supreme Court decision noted that members from the western part of the state predominated. West Tennessee counties to the number of twelve or more lost population between 1940 and 1950.

Decline in Mississippi

Mississippi, which is not silent in the present racial situation, registered a net decline of population between 1940 and 1950 (by a few thousand) and had not a single city of a hundred thousand at the latter date.

Rural Mississippi and other parts of the cotton country and cut-over timber country have been exporting people, including a substantial number of whites, to urban-industrial centers of the South, North and West.

This human export includes a large proportion of active and productive persons between the ages of 18 and 45. It leaves behind an unbalanced population to wrestle with an unbalanced economy, frequently without success.

This is a condition, not a theory, that produces frustration. It is not conducive to harmonious race relations. It tends to breed a two-way prejudice, a two-way aggression. Signs of unshared progress guarantee no immediate relief for the emotional tensions of frustrated individuals in disintegrated communities of the kind which have been poignantly portrayed by Mississippi's William Faulkner.

Psychiatric adjustment may be sought and found through response to demagoguery, partly with an escape of emotional steam through attacks on minority or segregated groups. The civic disease and its drastic remedy are contagious.

Political Situation

It is unfortunate for the cause of civic progress and the sense of moderation that in most Southern states a disproportionate and undeserved political power is exercised by static or declining counties and communities, where, incidentally, there is little or no Negro voting. This lopsidedness of power has a technical basis in the lag in redistributing seats in the state legislatures, in spite of constitutional provisions for decennial reapportionment.

Alabama has had no general reapportionment since 1901, and Tennessee is still moving along as if there had been no population census since 1900. Louisiana is rather modern with a heritage only from a constitutional make-up of 1921. Georgia is consistent in its backwardness with a county unit system for state primaries to bring the Executive branch in line with the Legislature as the product of a lagging and rural-weighted constituency.

This rural bias is not limited to the South. "Rotten boroughs" are found in Connecticut as well as in Alabama or Georgia. With few exceptions, urban people throughout the nation are under-represented in state, if not national, legislative halls. But the discrepancy offers striking manifestations in the South, where extensive urbanization is new and race cleavage is old.

Status of Cities

Birmingham, with a large Negro vote and labor vote, may have its county power in the State Senate balanced by the power of a constituency of less than a twentieth the population of the Birmingham metropolis. Its power in the lower house may be a little better but is distinctly fractional.

Atlanta, with an elected Negro on its city school board, may have a healthy organized movement for interracial cooperation. But that city is just a fraction of itself in the Georgia Legislature.

Nashville may have two Negroes on its elective City Council, a Negro on the School Board by appointment and real beginnings of desegregation in colleges and universities, including Vanderbilt University, once attended by the late Senator Bilbo. But the State Legislature cuts Nashville down to nineteenth-century size.

The ruralized legislatures tend to ruralize party politics, party committees and governorships. Many important economic interests adjust their political relationships accordingly, without battling for their urban deserts. They do not concern themselves for a Reform Act like Britain's of 1832.

But urban Negroes cannot go to the countryside for political justice. The city is their hope of democracy.

H. C. NIXON.

Clinton, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1956.

Moderation as Solution

The writer of the following letter, whose latest novel is "The View from Pompey's Head," is the author of several books dealing with the South, and is a native of Louisiana.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Shameful and saddening as was the attack upon Autherine Lucy at the University of Alabama, it is not impossible that it can be productive of good.

As you said in your editorial of Feb. 8 "Mob Rule at Tuscaloosa," it is not surprising that there should have been this flare-up of violence. My point is that this very flare-up may be diverted to useful ends. What do we do now?

I should first like to suggest that the first thing we do is to realize that even a Supreme Court ruling cannot change a way of thinking that has persisted for generations. It is also my suggestion that we realize—and here the burden of realization falls on the South—that when a sovereign state yields to mob rule it no longer fits into the definition of a sovereign state.

Atmosphere of Warfare

In a letter which you published on April 10, 1955, in commenting upon a visit to the South I mentioned that the mood and temper of the section was one of secession. I have just returned from another visit to the South, and now I find that the atmosphere is one of open warfare.

The segregation issue has more than got out of hand. What has happened over the past twelve months is that it has got into the hands of extremists on both sides. In one set of trenches we find those represented by the mob, which at least for a time brought the state of Alabama to heel. In the opposite set of trenches we have those elements in the North who would almost seem anxious, judging from certain questions put to Adlai Stevenson, to compel the immediate end of segregation by returning the bayonets of Reconstruction to the South.

It was Miss Lucy's misfortune to be caught in the crossfire. I find it impossible to believe that she would have been so maltreated a year ago. But just as the attack upon her must not be brushed aside as undergraduate irresponsibility, neither must the action of one mob be taken to represent the prevailing spirit of the South.

Preventing Fear

I may be disagreed with, and even proved wrong, but it is my conviction that once the South is rid of its fear that it will be required to reorganize the whole of its society within a few months or years it will begin noticeably to obey those impulses of decency, kindness and honorable behavior which, because of the statements of its extremists, would now seem to be blocked off.

Moderation admittedly has become almost a dirty word. However, if we examine the decision of the Supreme Court, what we find is that the justices revealed a very clear preference for moderation. And here we would all of us, North and South, be well advised to follow the lead of the court.

Extremism will get us nowhere. The answer is neither mobs nor bayonets. There indeed can be no answer unless it is provided by the moderate leadership of both sides, supported by equally moderate men and women who are able to join together in patience, tolerance and mutual goodwill.

If what happened to Miss Lucy helps bring this about, she will deserve our thanks as she now requires our apologies. HAMILTON BASSO.

Weston, Conn., Feb. 9, 1956.

Rise in Debt Examined

Low Delinquency Percentage on Loans, Absence of Inflation Noted

The writer of the following letter is Assistant Director of Research, the Amos Tuck School of Business Administration, Dartmouth College.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

In a letter published Feb. 5 the distinguished economist, Prof. Seymour Harris of Harvard University, argued that the recent great expansion of our economy was based on an excessive rise in mortgage and installment debts. I believe it can be shown that this rise was not excessive and was more beneficial than harmful.

The two criteria by which we can determine whether the growth of debt was excessive, are: (1) has it produced inflation and (2) has it been extended to people who lack the ability to meet the repayments?

Government statistics show that consumer prices have been stable (up 1 per cent since 1952) and that the delinquency rates on mortgage and installment loans are low, even for a period of prosperity.

There are two main reasons for the debt rise:

Almost five million homes have been purchased over the last four years and many families have shifted from renting to owning. While the shift from renting to owning does not involve much change in the financial burden of housing it does normally cause a rise in mortgage debt.

People have been progressing from the under-$5,000 annual income bracket (where only 45 per cent of families own their homes) to the above-$5,000 bracket (where about 70 per cent own homes). This progress in living standards results in greater mortgage debt, which is not necessarily more burdensome over the long run than rental payments.

The rise in installment debt has been due mostly to the rise in car purchases. Auto debt is up 76 per cent from 1952, while car purchases rose 80 per cent in this period. If the rise in debt was bad it must be because the sharp increase in car purchases was bad. Few persons believe this.

Consumer Spending

There have been both advantages and disadvantages in the recent rise in debt. The advantage was that it promoted a rapid and complete recovery from the 1954 recession without producing inflation or a high delinquency rate on debt. The disadvantage was that the rate of debt repayment is now rising. This in turn is slowing the growth of consumer spending. I believe, however, that it is better to have slower economic expansion from a point of full employment than it would have been to experience a slow recovery from the 1954 economic recession.

It is not possible merely to look at the growth in debt and over-all income to know whether the rise has been good or bad. Also to be considered are the shifts by families from lower to higher income brackets and the resultant effect on their pattern of consumer spending.

Shifts from lower to medium income brackets are quite apt to produce a new spending pattern which involves more debt. Healthy progress in living standards can be achieved in this transition which should not be arbitrarily denied the consumer.

THEODORE A. ANDERSEN.
Hanover, N. H., Feb. 7, 1956.

Propaganda Tack

Herald Tribune
Sun. 2-12-56 P. 1

South's Segregationists Take to Quoting Lincoln

New York, N. Y.

Related articles appear in this section on Pages 17 and 20 and in Section 2 on Page 1.

By Robert S. Bird

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb 11.—It may surprise Northerners to hear on Lincoln's Birthday that probably for the first time in history Abraham Lincoln this year is a hero in the South.

Lincoln has been transformed into a hero of the anti-Negro, anti-integrationist South. He has become the adopted hero of the White Citizens' Councils, the widespread movement that has suddenly sprung up all through the South to preserve segregation to the bitter end.

The whole South is being bombarded with the Lincoln propaganda put out by segregationists ranging from the moderates to the Negro-hating extremists. Lincoln's speeches and writings are being finecombed for morsels which will lend support to their arguments that he himself was a segregationist to the core.

Lincoln is being quoted in speeches everywhere—in letters to the editor, in editorials, newspaper columns and on the air—to show that he did in fact advocate separation of the races.

Whether or not these Lincoln utterances are taken out of context of his writings and lifework, the fact remains that as a propaganda instrument they are a major phenomenon in the agitation going on throughout the Deep South today. They are being used to give a purported weight of historic authority to a movement which up to now is striving hard to mask its defiance of the Supreme Court under a cloak of respectability.

Unlike the Ku-Klux Klan of former days, the White Citizens' Councils up to now pretend to be abhorring physical violence. Instead they are resorting to more subtle and perhaps more dangerous methods.

Negroes who "get out of line" are suddenly finding themselves out of jobs and rendered, for practical purposes, unemployable. The weapon of retaliation is economic, and the Negroes are responding with the same weapon here in Montgomery. They are carrying on a boycott with extraordinary success, and this success is engendering a racial hatred which has not been felt here in many years.

As a Northern observer who has passed only a week in this heartland of Southern racial tension, this reporter has heard and observed enough to realize that a lifetime of study would be needed fully to understand the titanic forces which are coming into head-on collision in the South as a result of the Supreme Court decision on integration in the schools.

Herald Tribune

Expressions of Violence

Almost any conversation with a taxicab driver is replete with hatred and expressions of violence against the Negroes. The more successful politicians are hardly more moderate in their explanations of the situation. Newspaper editors, even those on journals which advocate at least a gradual integration policy, say the situation is "a dilemma without a solution in sight." Negro leaders say the upwelling of feeling among their people is getting beyond their own ability to control, and they are as fearful as responsible white leaders of the danger which looms. This description of the tension and peril which exist here is heard on all sides and at all levels of both white and Negro society. It is not exaggerated.

P. 16

In Montgomery, dynamite has been thrown twice at homes of Negro leaders in recent weeks, though everybody marvels at the fact that except for these two incidents there has been no report of physical violence between a white and a Negro recorded since the integration decision. In a left-handed way, this is worrisome to people because it makes them wonder when such an incident will come and how bad it will be.

Incident Expected

That such violence has not occurred may very well be due to the efforts made up to now by the Citizens' Council to prevent overt action. Yet nobody outside this anti-integrationist movement, which embraces all classes of Southerners, has any confidence that the organization's mounting inflammatory propaganda barrage can long be maintained without the occurrence of physical incidents.

The way Lincoln is being made to lend support to the anti-Negro campaign can be illustrated in a column which will appear tomorrow in "The Montgomery Advertiser." J. Fred Thornton, associate editor of this newspaper (which is regarded as extremely moderate for the South), points out on the editorial page that the "god of the Yankees" has been given in the North "a crusading halo—sending forth the hosts of the righteous against infidels. When the Yankee of today sets out to give sinners and segregationists a foretaste on earth of the hell that is to be theirs hereafter, he devoutly believes that Father Abraham looks down and applauds.

"White Supremacy"

"That Lincoln was an outspoken advocate of 'white supremacy' is conveniently overlooked. Lincoln opposed the extension of slavery, but he was no abolitionist. After the Civil War had been raging a year he wrote, 'If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it.'

"If Lincoln were alive today he could qualify as an organizer for the White Citizens Councils. He wanted to segregate the Negro—all the way back to Africa, or to other tropical countries. In a speech delivered while running for the United States Senate, on Sept. 28, 1858, just two years before he was elected President, he said:

"'I will say then that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of bringing about in any way the social and political equality of the white and black races—that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of making voters or jurors of Negroes, nor of qualifying them to hold office, nor to intermarry with white peoples; and I will say in addition to this that there is a physical difference between the white and black races which I believe will forever forbid the two races living together on terms of social and political equality. And inasmuch as they cannot so live, while they do remain together there must be the position of superior and inferior, and I as much as any other man am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the white race.'

"Looking to the future of the nation, I would say that much depends on which concept of their god is to prevail in the Yankee soul—that of the kindly, compassionate Lincoln, or the one that pictures him as smiting the Phillistines south of Mason and Dixon's line hip and thigh. Right now the harsh, hostile interpretation is on top, as the Yankees strive to ram down our throats a social revolution that Lincoln never believed in and that they do not practice themselves. As with other religions, a lot depends on who does the interpreting and applying."

BAD TASTE AND BAD HISTORY

Times P. 28

Spokesmen for the Republican party in the coming campaign are clearly going to make the most of the present Administration's record in promoting the integration of Negro citizens into the normal life of America. They have much to be proud of in that record, and they are entitled to boast about some genuine advances.

Herald Tribune

But there is such a thing as carrying partisan claims in this area too far. Vice President Nixon did exactly that in talking about the segregation decision of the Supreme Court in his Lincoln Day dinner speech before the National Republican Club in this city. Mr. Nixon listed some truly impressive gains for our Negro citizens. But then he said: "And, speaking for a unanimous Supreme Court, a great Republican Chief Justice, Earl Warren, has ordered an end to racial segregation in the nation's schools." And, he added, "we did this, mind you, we did this all in just three years."

By thus directly linking the desegregation decision to the political campaign Mr. Nixon has done an immense disservice to the Chief Justice, to the court and to the nation. Statements such as his feed the fires of the die-hards; weaken the authority and the prestige of the court; reinforce the will to resist; heighten emotions that are already dangerously high, and enhance the crudest kind of political partisanship.

Times, 2-16-56

Furthermore, the implications are not even accurate. Though the Chief Justice was, of course, appointed by President Eisenhower, only one other justice of the Supreme Court was named during this Administration. Each of the remaining seven is a Truman or a Roosevelt appointee. If anything could be bipartisan, the unanimous desegregation decision was; and it is as misleading to include it in the list of Republican accomplishments as it would be to claim it for the Democrats.

Let Mr. Nixon ponder the words of a well-known Republican when he was asked about the desegregation decision being "brought out under the Republican Administration." He replied: "The Supreme Court, as I understand it, is not under any Administration." That was the way President Eisenhower felt about it in May, 1954, and we have no doubt that that is the way he feels about it today.

The Integration Debate

Times Newark City, N.J.
Mar. 3-4-56

An Analysis of Leading Candidates' Positions on a Paramount Issue

P. 16

By JAMES RESTON

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13—The solemn debate over the Supreme Court's desegregation decision is providing some striking evidence about the leading candidates for the Presidency.

President Eisenhower and Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois, the leaders of the two major parties, are emerging as the moderates who wish to keep race relations out of the campaign as much as possible.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, Governor Harriman of New York and Senator Etses Kefauver of Tennessee, other leading candidates, are pressing the issue and intruding it into the Presidential race.

The President has spoken of this question with great caution since the University of Alabama crisis. He has taken the position that the fulfillment of the Supreme Court's school desegregation order is still before the courts and that aggressive Federal action now can only inflame and retard progress toward racial equality.

He also has refused to support those who would deny Federal funds to states that do not comply with the court's desegregation order.

Mr. Stevenson has taken the same position. Meanwhile, he has appealed for patience and unity in a gradual solution of the problem.

Nixon Attacks Democrats

"I can think of no greater disservice to our country," he said in a formal statement in Portland, Ore., yesterday, "than to exploit for political ends the tensions that have followed in the wake of the Supreme Court decision."

Vice President Nixon, meanwhile, in a return to his slashing political style after several moderate speeches, took precisely the opposite position in New York tonight.

He discussed the issue in wholly partisan terms before a Lincoln Day audience at the Waldorf Astoria, stating that the "Democrats know that their hybrid party is helpless and futile in this field and will stay that way."

They know too, he added, "that President Eisenhower's great Republican Administration has registered the greatest advance for the rights of racial minorities since the Emancipation Proclamation itself."

He added that the Republicans had abolished racial segregation in the District of Columbia, the armed forces and in Federal contracts and civilian employment; that they had "abolished racial discrimination in travel by bus, boat and rail; and that "a great Republican Chief Justice, Earl Warren, speaking for a unanimous Supreme Court, has ordered an end to racial segregation in the nation's public schools."

Mr. Nixon's conclusion was that "the only hope for continued progress toward the realization of the American dream of equal opportunity in every respect for every American is through the election not only of a Republican President but a Republican House and Senate.

All the candidates agree with the objective of the Supreme Court decision. They differ clearly, however, about how it should be put into effect, what role the Federal Government should play in the University of Alabama case and how segregation should be debated in the campaign.

Governor Harriman said yesterday, "I think the Executive Branch of the [Federal] Government should see to it that the orders and decisions of the Supreme Court are enforced."

Mr. Stevenson said on the same afternoon, "as a practical matter we must recognize that punitive action by the Federal Government may actually delay the process of integration in education."

Governor Harriman would deny Federal school building funds to states that maintain segregation. Mr. Stevenson, like President Eisenhower, has taken precisely the opposite position.

"True integration," he said yesterday, "requires more than the mere presence of children of two races in the same classroom; it requires a change in the hearts and minds of men. No child can be properly educated in a hostile atmosphere. * * *

"We will not * * * reduce race prejudice by denying to areas afflicted with it the means of improving the educational standards of all their people. * * *"

Difference in Both Parties

Senator Kefauver has been much nearer to Governor Harriman's position than to Mr. Stevenson's. Thus there is a basic difference in both parties. President Eisenhower is avoiding any partisan argument over the race question; Mr. Nixon is embracing it. Mr. Stevenson is using all his eloquence for patience; Governor Harriman and Senator Kefauver are advocating Federal action and sanctions to achieve the end of equality.

Politically, this line-up creates an interesting contrast in opinion, policy, tactics and character. If President Eisenhower runs again, Mr. Nixon's views will, of course, be overwhelmed by the President's views.

But if the President does not run again, the campaign could well develop into a contest between the moderates and those who speak and advocate more extreme and partisan solutions of great national problems.

Accordingly, it was a matter of some comment here tonight that the Vice President reverted tonight to the old position of the aggressive divisive attacker, while Mr. Stevenson sides with the President in calling for unity and harmony.

Stevenson Keeps Promise

Mr. Nixon's role is, on the whole, popular with many political elements that will be powerful at the Republican convention in San Francisco. Mr. Stevenson's position is not popular with the liberal elements that well may dominate the Democratic convention in Chicago.

Nevertheless, the former Illinois Governor is carrying out on segregation a promise he made to himself at the end of the last campaign and announced in California on Feb. 4.

"I shall try in these coming months," he said, "to fool no one—not with slogans or false promises or easy answers to hard problems. * * *

Human Dignity, Key To Minority Problems, Labor Leader States

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.
Fri. 2-10-56

NEW YORK—Recognition of the dignity of the human individual is the "central and basic philosophy" for the solution of minority problems in America and throughout the world, A Philip Randolph, international president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters said in an address here.

"If we believe that God created all mankind, then we believe that all men are brothers. If we are all brothers, we are all equal before the law and equal before government," the Negro labor leader told the Catholic Interracial Forum last night.

A vice president of the newly-merged AFL-CIO organization, Mr. Randolph said: "The American labor movement is gearing itself to the recognition of this principle by concerte and practical developments."

He predicted that the merged labor organization will exert a great influence in eliminating racial discrimination "within the ranks of labor and in the various areas of American life" through a special department it has set up to deal with questions of civil rights.

Among other indications of the strong position the AFL-CIO is taking on interracial justice. Mr. Randolph cited the following:

President George Meany of the AFL-CIO "strongly committeed against racial discrimination."

The constitution of the AFL-CIO has a major provision at all wage earners are entitleld to the benefits of organized labor.

Two Negroes have been appointed to the Executive Council of the organization.

A million-and-a-half Negro members will exert a strong influence for integration.

A special department has also been set up in the union to deal with problems of communion. "Free trade unionism and communism are incompatible and exclusive forces, Mrs. Randolph declared.

"The communist ideology is the monoply of total power in the national community and the monoply rests in the hands of a dictatorship Under communism there can be no free trade union movement, no free management, no free church, no free cooperative society and no other institution which is a source of authority, power and responsibility."

A third special department of the new organization will guard against corruption.

The AFL-CIO leadership is determined, Mr. Randolph said, that: "There must be honesty with respect to the destiny of wage earners and the handling of their funds."

Powell Accuses Ike Of Washing Hands of Blood In South, Like Pilate

Call P. 1
Fri. 3-9-56 Kansas City, Mo.

WASHINGTON.—(INS) — Rep. Adam C. Powell (D) N. Y., Friday accused President Eisenhower of "trying to wash his hands like Pilate of the blood of innocent men and women in the southland."

Powell's remark came as he made public part of a letter he reeived from the President advising him that Congress had taken no action on Mr. Eisenhower's recommendation for establishment of a commission on civil rights.

The legislator had asked the President to use his powers to protect the "lives, physical security, and civil liberties" of the Negroes arrested in Montgomery, Ala.

Charging that Mr. Eisenhower's action amounts to buck-passing, Powell declared that the President alone has the "clear and immediate duty" to summon to the White House leaders of both races in all areas of tension.

The congressman said: "He cannot delegate this conference to anyone else. The amount of time that he has spent shooting quail could have been profitably spent in conference with Negro and white leaders to keep Negroes from being shot."

Powell said "right thinking American People" demand that Mr. Eisenhower show that "he has the physical strength for an immediate conference." Otherwise, Powell said, "We are not going to be able to accept his words that he is physically fit to be President of the United States for another four years."

Powell's remarks were made in a speech prepared for delivery at founder's day exercises at Howard university in Washington.

Star 3-9-56 Kansas City, Mo.

The New York Democrat also attacked Democratic presidential hopeful Adlai Stevenson, who has asked that civil rights be taken out of the campaign. Powell said Negroes reject completely Stevenson's "moderation" proposal and said: "The only way out of the morass is bold imaginative thinking, not straddling — consecrated, alert and positive leadership, not middle-of-the-road shilly-shallying, pussyfooting, doubletalking."

Election Brings Passions To The Surface

Herald P.6-A

Politicians Heat Up Integration Issue

Thurs. 2-16-56

By WALTER LIPPMANN

THERE IS MOUNTING evidence of grave trouble ahead over integration in the public schools of the Southern states. For in recent weeks we have come nearer to the question which can divide the country dangerously.

LIPPMANN

Is the decision of the Supreme Court to be put into effect gradually and with the eventual consent of the leaders of Southern opinion or is the Federal government to be called upon to enforce integration against the resistance of the South?

Miami, Fla.

This question poses as fateful a dilemma as any internal American question that has arisen for several generations.

It arouses great human passions which cannot be reconciled, which can only be assuaged and accommodated in this generation.

They are passions which boil up quickly into violence, and they can be kept within bounds only when and only while there is great wisdom and resolution in the leaders of the country.

The temptation to play politics with these passions is almost overpowering. And it is the approach of the national election, the struggle between the two parties and also the struggle within the parties, particularly within the Democratic party, which have brought the dilemma to the surface.

★ ★ ★

IT IS SIGNIFICANT that the closer a public man is to the presidency, the more he will shrink from the idea of Federal enforcement, as distinguished from persuasion and accommodation.

Governor Stevenson has been notably firm and decisive and the President, though his words were a bit cloudy, is certainly not considering intervention by the Federal executive power.

It is the politicians, the men who have little or no prospect of themselves being in the White House and bearing the President's responsibility, who are heating up the issue.

There is no likelihood that the Republicans in Congress will agree to take the issue out of politics. For it is a most damaging issue to raise among the Democrats. Nor is there much likelihood that Governor Stevenson's rivals for the nomination will forbear to raise it. It is such an easy way to make things difficult for him.

The issue will have to be debated in the open. The fundamental question to be debated is whether integration is to be promoted by persuasion or by Federal enforcement. These are two different roads, and no one should think he can go down both of them at once.

★ ★ ★

CONSIDER, for example, the Powell Amendment which would withhold Federal aid from states or school districts that do not integrate their schools.

Let no one suppose that the Southern states will give in and accept integrated schools because some Federal money is withheld from them. To suppose that they will give in is to mistake the temper of the South, particularly the temper of the Deep South.

What, then, are Rep. Joseph L. Martin and Governor Harriman going to propose next, once they find that withholding money does not induce the Southern states to yield?

If they start on the path of coercion, the authority of the executive power will be engaged and new measures of coercion will be demanded to uphold that authority. For unless the Federal government is going to confess that it is beaten, it must, keeping the path of Federal enforcement become more and more coercive.

No one should doubt that the attempt at Federal enforcement will intensify and harden the resistance of the South. Those who are disposed to try to work out integration gradually will resent the Federal government's efforts to coerce them.

The problem of integration will become progressively more insoluble in the South, the racial passions will become increasingly sharp, the sectional feeling increasingly disruptive.

Let us stop and think before we let irresponsible politicians push us into the whirlpool.

End Race Clashes, Williams Demands

Herald P.13-A

Fri. 2-17-56

CHICAGO—(UP)—Michigan's Gov. G. Mennen Williams has clashed with both President Eisenhower and Adlai E. Stevenson in demanding federal action to halt racial disturbances in the South.

Williams charged that the President has "remained inexcusably inactive" and has a "duty" to uphold the rights of Negroes.

Miami, Fla.

The Democratic governor also criticized any Republican or Democratic leader who "would temporize with this question, or wait for it to go away."

This was apparently a criticism of Stevenson, who is on record against denying federal aid to segregated schools or the use of federal troops to enforce the Supreme Court's anti-segregation order.

Stevenson is campaigning for the Democratic presidential nomination and Williams has been mentioned as a possible dark horse candidate.

Another possible candidate, Gov. Averell Harriman of New York, sides with Williams in demanding no aid for segregated schools.

Other top Democrats, including presidential candidate Sen. Estes Kefauver, Tennessee Democrat, have called for presidential or congressional action to speed the end of racial segregation in the schools.

Williams made the attack on the President in his speech before 1,000 persons at a dinner of the Israel Histadrut campaign.

"I think it is time for the President of the United States, and I believe it is his duty, to exert the great power and prestige of his office, as head of the federal government, to see that the rights of United States citizens are protected in every part of the Union," Williams said.

Dr. Gallagher Links Senator Eastland To Demagogues Inflaming Racial Issue

Times 2-20 Herald 2-21

Thurs 2-16-56

Dr. Buell G. Gallagher, president of City College, called "disgusting" last night "the manner in which demagogues like Senator [James O.] Eastland fan the popular anxieties of the moment to start the flames to warm their own political pots."

His reference to the Mississippi Democrat was made in an address at commencement exercises of the Mount Sinai Hospital School of Nursing, held in the hospital's Blumenthal Auditorium, Ninety-ninth Street and Fifth Avenue. Sixty-one diplomas were awarded.

Dr. Gallagher deplored "the discrimination at places like the University of Alabama and the intrusion of mob violence from outside the university in determining the pressures which guide responsible academic authorities." He said:

"What society desperately needs right now is a fresh infusion of white corpuscles in the civic blood stream. The poisons of racial prejudice and religious bigotry are liberally fed into our common life by the ignorant, the uninformed and the small-minded, not to mention those with vested interests."

He praised nursing as one of the few professions substantially free from prejudice and expressed the hope that the day would come when no Negro doctor would need to hand over his patient to a white doctor at the reception desk of a hospital.

Dr. Gallagher took the press to task for emphasizing the negative incidents in the race and religious prejudice picture and not giving sufficient attention to progress being made. He mentioned the former State College for Negroes in West Virginia, where 700 Negroes and 400 white students were studying together within four months after the Supreme Court's ban on segregation in the schools.

Dr. Buell G. Gallagher

South Covered Like War By North, Editor Asserts

Times New York

COLUMBIA, S. C., Feb. 18 (AP)—Thomas R. Waring, editor of The Charleston News and Courier, declared today that the South was being covered like a war zone by northern newspapers.

Herald 2-19-56

Addressing the final session of the South Carolina Press Association's midwinter institute here, Mr. Waring said northern newspapers and magazines had a "corps of correspondents" deployed all over the place" because of the race-segregation problem.

"If we maintain decency and some semblance of order," Mr. Waring said, "we may be able to convince some of the people of the North that we are not a complete bunch of in the South are not a complete bunch of barbarians."

RABBI CHAMPIONS NEGROES OF SOUTH

Times

Klein, in Presbyterian Pulpit, Proposes Relief for Those Suffering From Injustice

Mon. 1-16-56 P. 18-C

A proposal to set up a relief program to help Negroes in the South was made in a sermon yesterday morning by a rabbi at a Protestant church.

Rabbi Edward E. Klein of Stephen Wise Free Synagogue, 30 West Sixty-eighth Street, was the guest preacher at the Presbyterian Church of the Master, 360 West 122d Street, in Harlem.

Pointing to what he termed grave injustices and economic reprisals against Negroes in the South, he said that relief should not be given away as a charity but should be provided to "make those suffering people feel that they are not alone in their struggle against injustice."

Speaking on "Black and White Justice," the rabbi declared that the American Revolution was a recognition of the Biblical commandment: "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

New York

The Declaration of Independence, he commented, stressed that all men were created equal. This, he said, was "the American translation of the vision on the hills of Judea."

N. Y.

But, he went on, "all men are not treated equal," some being treated by separate standards of "black and white justice."

Referring to the recent killing of the Negro boy, Emmett Till, in Mississippi, the rabbi said that there justice had been made a mockery for the state's 986,000 Negro citizens.

It is time to realize that "what happened to a small child in Mississippi had its repercussions in Washington, Moscow and New Delhi," he emphasized.

He commended the Supreme Court's decision of May, 1954, to end segregation in schools as "an act of faith," and he voiced the hope that it would provide people with a zeal to end injustice.

Rabbi Klein declared that attempts by some Southern states to flout the decision of the court represented "subversion of the greatest magnitude" because because they were "subversive" of the Constitution.

In this election year, the rabbi asked the voters to demand that their legislators compel the Justice Department to investigate "subversion" by the White Councils in the South.

"Desegregation will not be a reality," he said, "until the color of the skin becomes as unimportant as the color of the eyes or the color of the hair."

All Human Races Are Just Alike

Some Have 'Wrong Idea' About Desegregation

Commercial Appeal

To The Commercial Appeal:

The Negro is the same as any other race in the world.

When a student studies to become a doctor, whether he is white or Negro, he takes the same courses. If there were any difference, the ones to use their knowledge of medicine on the Negro would have to take special courses. When the student is graduated he can practice on any one, regardless of his race.

The Negro eats, drinks and sleeps the same as any race, no more, no less. When a baby is born his mother shares the same months of pregnancy as anyone else. There are classes of people in the world in all races, high, medium and low. And they act in a manner fitting their class.

When God said "all men were created equal," He was not looking at the color of the skin. He went beyond that. He was looking at the vital part of a man, the heart or soul. When one of these is black, regardless of how white the face or body is, the man is still black in God's sight.

When speaking of equal rights, some people get the wrong idea. Some think the Negro wants to visit the white man, or court his daughter. That is wrong. He only wants equal rights in education, jobs and other opportunities.

If he is qualified for a job as teller in a bank and the bank needs one and he applies, he would like to get the job. Negroes and whites have worked together for many years and have been friendly; but at quitting time the friendship is left on the job.

And if the children hate and despise the Negro as the parents say they do, then there should be no fear of love between the children of the two races in desegregated schools.

OBSERVER

Vicksburg, Miss.

CULTURE TAKES TIME

To The Commercial Appeal:

Our racial problems in the South, where Negroes in many instances are in the majority, are much different from those in communities where there are only a small number of Negroes.

No thinking person in the South wants anyone to take advantage of the Negro and does not want to prevent the Negroes from having equal facilities and opportunities. We Southerners recognize that as the races now exist they are very far from being equal and are far from being ready to be made equal.

A race cannot be made equal, it must earn equality, and the white race has been developing its civilization for seven thousand years. It is not reasonable to think that the Negro race could develop the same civilization within 200 years out of the jungle.

F. C. DEUPREE.

P. O. Box 8337, Jackson, Miss.

Ex-Boss Of Sears Hits Court Ruling

Advertiser Sun, 1-15-56

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 14 (AP)—Gen. Robert E. Wood, who retired last year as chairman of the board of Sears Roebuck & Co., said today "I don't believe in integration or in the decision of the Supreme Court."

P. 2

He made the statement in reply to a question from a student at The Citadel, the military college of South Carolina, where he addressed the cadet corps.

The first question in the discussion period which followed his speech was, "What effect will the race question have on the South's economic progress?"

Ala.

"I don't believe the race question will have any effect on the economic problems," Wood said. "The race question will be solved. I don't believe in integration or in the decision of the Supreme Court. I believe that compromises will be worked out."

Indian Saw Little Bias In South

Herald Tribune Mid-Year City N.Y. P. 2

Bombay Writer Describes Trip

Fri. 1-6-56

By William J. Humphreys

From the Herald Tribune Bureau

© 1956, New York Herald Tribune Inc.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—An Indian writer, here on the way home, said tonight that he recently made a fourteen-week visit to the United States and traveled in the Deep South without anywhere seeing "any evidence of widespread segregation."

Chunilal K. Madia, thirty-three, a novelist and newspaper man of Bombay, boarded a plane for Frankfurt en route home. He said he visited ten American states and that his companion on the trip, a Gold Coast native employee of the United States Information Agency, was treated as wel as he was himself.

Near "Incident"

Mr. Madia, a U. S. I. A. employee at Bombay, said the only thing resembling an "incident" occurred at Chattanooga, Tenn., when a soda fountain attendant conferred briefly with her employer before serving him.

"I visited the so-caled diehard states in the South," he said when asked about possible discrimination at hotels, "and there was no evidence of the widespread segregation in the Southern states that Communist newspapers allege in writing for Asian peoples. I experienced no discrimination."

Interracial Clashes

He said he was much impressed upon seeing white and colored students seated side by side in classrooms at the University of Oklahoma, and even more impressed by the fact that American students at universities and colleges are able to work to pay their way. In India, he said, young people have little hope of getting advanced education unless they have parental support or full scholarships.

Mr. Madia has won two prizes in international competitions sponsored by the European Edition of the New York Herald Tribune. He writes in the Gujarati language, the native tongue of the late Mohandas K. Gandhi. Mr. Madia won a third prize in a 1950 competition and three years later won a first prize.

'Revolt Of The Rednecks'

Advertiser

One of the more graphic and soundly researched books on Southern politics we have encountered of late is Revolt Of The Rednecks, by Prof. Albert Kirwan of the University of Kentucky. It deals with the politics of Mississippi from Reconstruction through Bilbo.

P. 2-B

It's theme is the story of how the Delta plantation aristocracy—aristocracy of brains and training as well as money—lost control of the state to demagogues such as "White Chief" James Vardaman and "The Man" Bilbo. The direct primary was the chief means.

Montgomery, Ala.

Mississippi has more Negroes than any other state, so it is, of course, more impassioned on race matters than the others. But for a while in Reconstruction, Mississippi had a Negro in the United States Senate. Then, after federal troops were removed, there were so many Negro voters that the white man had to trade with Negro politicians. Remarkable as it sounds today, they agreed on slates in which Negroes were elected to some offices. Of course in the end a constitutional convention was held, as in Alabama, to disfranchise Negroes.

Mississippi's story is not basically different from that of Alabama, but the passions and extremes were greater.

You get the feel of today's Mississippi in this judicious, balanced chronicle of its past.

Methodist Bishop of Indiana says U. S. must solve Race problem or give over to Russia

OMAHA — Businessmen of Omaha were told last week that what America does about solving its race problems will determine its continued leadership in world affairs.

The Ad-sell League, a forum of 1100 Nebraska men, received this counsel from Bishop Richard C. Raines, head of the Methodist church in Indiana and recently returned from a six-months tour of Europe, Africa, and Korea.

Wherever he went, the churchman told the league, the first question asked him was, "What is the United States doing about its Negro problem?"

"Our attitude on segregation is doing much to hurt America's prestige abroad. If America is going to . . . lead, she has got to be forthright in living up to the fundamentals of democracy, namely, that all men are created equal.

Stating it his belief that "God wishes America to have world leadership, the prelate said, "I'm convinced that there is a lot wrong with the United States. But no other country has so much right about it."

He said there are four adjustments America must make, and listed them as:

1. Learning to worship with the Negro; opening our churches to him;

2. Learning to live with the Negro as a human being;

3. Backing the desegration of schools;

4. Taking away the artificial barriers that keep Negroes in the low economic bracket."

He continued: "The world needs the United States—but it needs it cleansed and purged with a sense of spiritual discipline.

"This generation of Americans must cleanse itself of racial prejudice if America rather than Russia is to lead the world."

Assertion of State Rights Is Aim of Interposition

Evening Star Thurs. 1-12-56 P. A-26

RICHMOND, Jan. 12 (AP).—A resolution of interposition as a means of delaying, at least for a while, the enforcement of the Supreme Court's ruling against compulsory segregation in schools was introduced yesterday as the Virginia General Assembly opened its 1956 session. Washington, D. C.

Other States where interposition is being given serious consideration include Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and South Carolina. Georgia's Legislature has a formal resolution before it now.

While the doctrine of interposition is almost as old as the Union itself, it apparently was first mentioned as a possible weapon in the segregation-integration controversy by William Old, a Chesterfield attorney, in a pamphlet he distributed last summer.

Pushed by Editor

Widespread attention was attracted to interposition when, in one of the most intensive editorial efforts in recent years, James J. Kilpatrick, Richmond News Leader editor, began in late November to discuss it editorially and reprint resolutions from the past.

The News Leader editor urged a resolution of interposition be adopted by the special assembly session which met November 30. Gray Commission members, after considering the theory, decided to wait. Whether the commission itself will recommend interposition to the regular session is not clear. At any rate, State Senator Harry Stuart of Elk Garden agreed to introduce an interposition resolution.

One proposed resolution would declare: "That the State of Virginia has at no time surrendered to the general (Federal) Government its right to maintain racially separate schools or other public facilities.

"That the State of Virginia, in ratifying the Fourteenth Amendment under compulsion, did not agree, nor did other States ratifying the Fourteenth Amendment agree, that the power to operate racially separate schools and other facilities was to be prohibited to them thereby. . . ."

Asks Congress Action

The resolution would say the State "explicitly denies that the Supreme Court had the right, asserted in its said decision, to enlarge the language and meaning of the compact in an effort to withdraw from the States powers reserved to them and daily exercised by them for almost a century."

To settle the dispute, the resolution would call on Congress to propose an amendment to the Federal Constitution which "would declare, in plain and unequivocal language, that the States do surrender their power to maintain public schools, and other public facilities, on a basis of separation as to race; and that if three-fourths of the States assent to such amendment of our compact, Virginia agrees it will be bound thereby."

The assembly would resolve that until the dispute had been settled by Federal constitutional amendment, the antisegregation decision would be "null, void, and of no effect. . . ."

Virginia's congressional delegation would be asked to propose a proper amendment in Congress.

Practical Politics

It is at this point that practical politics would enter the picture and the question of the effectiveness of interposition must be considered.

An amendment to the Federal Constitution may be proposed in two ways. Two-thirds of the members of Congress may approve an amendment, then submit it to the States. For it to become effective, three-fourths of the States must approve it. Or, two-thirds of the States may, in effect, force Congress to propose an amendment; then three-fourths of the States must approve it.

Chances that two-thirds of Congress would approve such an amendment cannot be determined. There is one proposal however, which might make it more likely.

The amendment to be proposed could be a reverse twist: It would say, for example: "No State nor Congress shall have power to segregate by race in any publicly operated institution."

Reverse Play

The argument, to get the measure through Congress, would be that even the northern representatives could not vote against that idea.

Then, following through on the reverse twist, interpositionists would try to defeat the amendment, once it had been proposed by Congress. By having the amendment stated in negative terms, then defeated, interpositionists would contend the Federal Government had failed to take away the power to segregate; therefore the power still would exist. Thirteen States could prevent the adoption of such an amendment. Interpositionists think they could swing it. Other observers are quite doubtful that even 13 States, generally regarded as Southern, would go along with the scheme.

This is the last in a series of three on the doctrine of interposition, taken from articles written by W. L. Wright, jr., and made available to the Associated Press by the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

How probable is it that these things—beyond a resolution in Virginia and perhaps six or seven other Southern States—will come to pass? Observers say it is not very probable.

So what good is interposition?

Assertion of Old Right

It represents, advocates contend, the assertion of an old right of the States. It would call attention, at least for the time being, to what interpositionists constantly mention: "Federal encroachment upon the States."

An interposition resolution might have some weight, too, in a court. Possible contempt proceedings against a school board for failure to comply with the desegregation decision might find interposition, with the declaration the decision is void in Virginia, cited as a reason for delay. This might persuade some judges. It might displease others.

Several persons, after studying interposition, seem to have come to the conclusion that, at most, it will represent a sort of formal protest by the State against the court's action. The permanent effectiveness of interposition probably would be as inconclusive as in the past.

At best, it would, apparently, be only a temporary measure. There are many who feel that even if an interposition resolution is adopted, all other normal preparations for making an effort to operate racially nondiscriminatory schools should be made with all "deliberate speed."

Caffey Denies Race Bias Talk

Star P. A-9 Tues. 1-31-56

ATLANTA, Jan. 31 (AP).—Maj. Gen. Eugene Caffey, judge advocate general of the Army, says remarks he made to the Georgia Legislature expressing admiration for a speech favoring segregation have been "misinterpreted" in news reports. Washington, D.C.

He addressed both House and Senate of the General Assembly briefly yesterday, explaining he had read a speech made to the Legislature last Tuesday by Representative John J. Flynt of Griffin.

"If I were going to make a speech I would hope to make one like that," he told House members. Then he visited the Senate, repeated that he had read the address by the Georgia Congressman, and declared:

"There was a lot of meat in that speech. I, for one, admire it."

"Not in Politics"

A newsman asked him afterward if that meant he was going along with Mr. Flynt's appeal to Gergians to join the interposition movement to preserve segregation.

"Listen, I'm not in politics," Gen. Caffey said.

Later in Washington, Maj. Gen. Guy S. Meloy, Army chief of information, said he talked with Gen. Caffey by telephone and declared the judge advocate general said his remarks had been "misinterpreted."

Gen. Meloy quoted Gen. Caffey as saying: "Representative Flynt is a friend of mine, but nothing I said was an indorsement of anyone or anything. I simply paid tribute to Jack Flynt's ability to make a speech."

No Further Comment

Gen. Caffey could not be reached for further comment in Atlanta last night. He is a native of suburban Decatur.

The Kelley bill reference was Mr. Flynt in his speech urged adoption of a "resolution of interposition" and sharply attacked the Kelley bill pending in Congress to provide school aid. He said the measure "in a sense is an effort to bolster the weak position of the Supreme Court decision" against school segregation.

to a measure offered by Representative Augustine B. Kelley, Democrat of Pennsylvania, that would provide $1.6 billion in Federal aid to States for school building over the next four years.

Interposition is the big gun—

Crossfire of five Dixie Legislatures centers on court's segregation ruling

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

With five Southern states holding legislative sessions, U. S. Supreme Court decisions against racial segregation are being challenged in a variety of proposals.

The little known doctrine of interposition appears to be the major hope of many Dixie advocates in the South's traditional separation of races. Through it they seek to nullify the segregation decrees.

But at the same time legislators in Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi and Virginia are pondering many other moves to maintain segregation in face of the decisions.

Meanwhile there appears to have been a slackening of litigation to force desegregation and activities such as economic sanctions—designed to discourage integration supporters.

However, in an irregular pattern, integration continues to encroach gradually upon the Deep South.

SPONSORS of the interposition doctrine hold that the federal government has only such powers as have been surrendered by the states, that the states have never surrendered the right to operate segregated schools, and that the U. S. Supreme Court exceeded its authority in holding public school segregation illegal.

Therefore, they contend, the states can interpose their sovereign power and declare the Supreme Court ruling to be void and of no effect.

Alabama has passed such a resolution, one is awaiting committee action in the South Carolina Legislature and one is ready for introduction in Georgia. In Virginia, a milder resolution, strongly protesting but not defying the court ruling, has been introduced.

Gov. Luther H. Hodges, who may call a special session of the North Carolina Legislature before next Fall, also favors that possibility of curbing "assumption of authority" by the Supreme Court.

INTERPOSITION and other legislation to maintain segregation probably will be discussed Tuesday at a meeting called by Virginia Gov. Thomas B. Stanley. Attending will be governors of three other Southern states now holding legislative sessions, Marvin Griffin of Georgia, J. P. Coleman of Mississippi and George Bell Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina.

At the same time, Georgia is moving toward a private school system. Administration bills to close public schools which are forced to integrate and make direct grants to students, were unanimously passed in the Senate. They will encounter House opposition, but passage there also seems assured.

The Georgia Legislature also has before it bills to close state parks if segregation cannot be enforced, to prohibit mixed athletic contests and to revoke charters of cities which do not maintain segregated parks and other facilities.

AT THE DIRECTION of voters, the Virginia Legislature has called a constitutional convention on the Gray Commission proposal to give grants to students who attend private schools either because parents refuse to send them to integrated schools or because public schools are closed.

Other legislation pending includes:

Bills in Georgia and Mississippi to require separate waiting rooms despite a recent Interstate Commerce Commission order.

A Mississippi proposal which could bar out-of-state attorneys in segregation cases.

A proposed Alabama "freedom of choice" constitutional amendment to let parents say whether their children will attend integrated or segregated schools.

A South Carolina bill to remove the tax exemption on church property which is used for meetings by Communists or the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

THERE ARE A NUMBER of segregation lawsuits, most of them seeking school integration pending in the various states. But there were few reports of recent new cases.

Use of economic sanctions by segregation supporters apparently has been sporadic, and in only a few instances, organized.

Most of the targets of such tactics have been individual Negroes signing petitions seeking integrated schools or NAACP leaders.

However, the Falstaff Brewing Co. was partially boycotted for a time in Mississippi and in Georgia, Roy Harris of Augusta, States Rights Council leader, in his political newspaper is urging boycott of Ford products because of activities of the Ford Foundation and the Fund for the Republic.

The Southern Gentlemen, a Louisian pro-segregation group of unknown strength, claims to have effectively boycotted several companies, including the Ford Motor Co.

In at least two instances, Negroes have fought economic pressures with counter boycotts. Such a move cut heavily into city bus patronage in Montgomery, Ala., and some Orangeburg, S. C., businesses are reported to have been hurt by loss of Negro business.

THE SEGREGATION situation is quiet for the time being in Louisiana, where Gov.-elect Earl Long pledged to maintain it, and in Florida where the theme of officials is gradualism.

The situation also is calm in Tennessee, where courts have ordered some school integration by next Fall, and Arkansas, where some schools already have ended segregation and others are under orders to do so.

Oklahoma and Kentucky are moving quietly toward full compliance with the court rulings against segregation.

Race Ruling Challenged By 5 Sta

Interposit Holding M Of Dixie Law

By THE ASSOCIATED P

With five Southern states holding legislative sessions, U.S. Supreme Court decisions against racial segregation are being challenged in a variety of proposals.

The little known doctrine of interposition appears to be the major hope of many Dixie advocates in the South's traditional separation of races. Through it they seek to nullify the segregation decrees.

But legislators in Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi and Virginia are pondering many other moves to maintain segregation.

There appears to have been a slackening of litigation to force desegregation and activities — such as economic sanctions — designed to discourage integration supporters.

IRREGULAR PATTERN

However, in an irregular pattern, integration continues to encroach gradually upon the Deep South.

Sponsors of the interposition doctrine hold that the federal government has only such powers as have been surrendered by the states, that the states have never surrendered the right to operate segregated schools, and the the U.S. Supreme Court exceeded its authority in holding public school segregation illegal.

Therefore, they contend, the states can interpose their sovereign power and declare the ruling to be void and of no effect.

Alabama has passed such a resolution, one is awaiting committee action in the South Carolina Legislature and one is ready for introduction in Georgia. In Virginia, a milder resolution, strongly protesting but not defying the court ruling, has been introduced.

PLAN TO CURB

Gov. Luther H. Hodges, who may call a special session of the North Carolina Legislature before next fall, also favors that possibility of curbing "assumption of authority" by the Supreme Court.

Interposition and other legislation to maintain segregation probably will be discussed Tuesday at a meeting called by Virginia Gov. Thomas B. Stanley. Attending will be governors Marvin Grifin of Georgia, J. P. Coleman of Mississippi, and George Bell Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina.

Georgia is moving toward a private school system. Administration bills to close public schools which are forced to integrate and make direct grants to students were unanimously passed in the Senate. They will encounter House opposition, but passage there also seems assured.

The Georgia Legislature also has before it bills to close state parks if segregation cannot be enforced, to prohibit mixed athletic contests and to revoke charters of cities which do not maintain segregated parks and other facilities.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS

At the direction of voters, the Virginia Legislature has called a constitutional convention on the proposal to give grants to students who attend private schools either because parents refuse to send them to integrated schools or because public schools are closed.

Other legislation pending includes bills in Georgia and Mississippi to require separate transportation waiting rooms despite a recent Interstate Commerce Commission order; a Mississippi proposal which could bar out-of-state attorneys in segregation cases; a proposed Alabama "freedom of choice" constitutional amendment to let parents say whether their children will attend integrated or segregated schools; and a South Carolina bill to remove the tax exemption on church property which is used for meetings by Communists or the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

LAWSUITS PENDING

There are a number of segregation lawsuits, most of them seeking school integration, pending in the various states. But there were few reports of recent new cases.

Use of economic sanctions by integration supporters apparently has been sporadic, and in only a few instances, organized.

Most of the targets of such tactics have been individual Negroes signing petitions seeking integrated schools or NAACP leaders.

However, the Falstaff Brewing Co., was boycotted for a time in Mississippi and in Georgia. Roy Harris of Augusta, States Rights Council leader, in his political newspaper, is urging boycott of Ford products because of activities of the Ford Foundation and the Fund for the Republic.

The Southern Gentlemen, a Louisiana prosegregation group of unknown strength, claims to have effectively boycotted several companies, including the Ford Motor Co.

COUNTER BOYCOTTS

In at least two instances, Negroes have fought economic pressures with counter boycotts. Such a move cut heavily into city bus patronage in Montgomery, Ala. and some Orangeburg, S. C., businesses are reported to have been hurt by loss of Negro business.

The segregation situation is quiet for the time being in Louisiana, where Gov. - elect Earl Long pledged to maintain it, and in Florida where the theme of officials is gradualism.

The situation also is calm in Tennessee, where courts have ordered some school integration by next fall; and Arkansas, where some schools already have ended segregation and others are under orders to do so.

Oklahoma and Kentucky are moving quietly toward full compliance with the court rulings against segregation.

PROGRESS HAILED FOR EQUAL RIGHTS

Harrington Sees New Era for South in 'Crumbling' of Superiority Idea

In spite of recent setbacks in the South, this country is progressing toward a society of friendliness based on the principle of equality, Donald Harrington said in a sermon yesterday.

At the Community Church of New York, 40 East Thirty-fifth Street, he preached on "Live and Die in Dixie!"

In support of his optimistic view he cited recent incidents in which Southerners had supported racial integration and noted that the Supreme Court's decision against segregation in the public schools had legally established equal rights and thus opened a way to combat injustice.

Nevertheless, Mr. Harrington said, there is much to be done, such as emergency measures in the South so that Negroes can register and vote without fear. He said their lives were now being threatened when they attempted to assert their rights.

He went on to say that American citizens should make every effort to assist the small farmer in the South, to support the work of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and to encourage trade unions in fighting segregation.

He attributed the troubled situation in the South to a flaw in its culture—the false idea that naturally some men were superior and some inferior. Although that notion is now "crumbling," he went on, the South's cultural heritage is a barrier to progress and it will prolong the struggle, but the barrier is bound to fall.

America stands for a humane and dignified way of life, Mr. Harrington observed, and its whole history gives evidence of this. Reviewing the development of a democratic society in this country, he called attention to the Emancipation Proclamation. And he read a passage from Ralph Waldo Emerson praising Lincoln's statement as an inspiration for all mankind.

The culture based on the equal rights of all men will triumph, the minister declared.

"Effects of Integration"

In connection with the article "Effect of Integration" by E. T. Smith in your paper on Jan. 18 it is shocking to note that as closely as the United States is being watched by other countries to see how she handles the Negro problem there are still certain individuals and groups who want to prove that integration won't work.

Why not try integration? All Americans know the effect of segregation, and judging from this article the writer is just as dissatisfied with these effects as are those Negroes and Caucasians who have a knowledge of the psychological effects of such an institution.

Mr. Smith did interpret some statistics in a different light. There are many different interpretations on various compilations of statistics, depending on the person who interprets them. As a law-abiding citizen who has a good psychology background and who respects the judgment of the well qualified men who sit in the Supreme Court of the United States, I interpret the statistics compiled by the American States Rights Association, showing "60 per cent of Maryland's convicts to be Negro, when less than 20 per cent of the population is Negro," to show how this race has been psychologically harmed by segregation.

Physical environment, including financial circumstances, plays an important part in personality development. Poverty, starvation, diseases brought on by improper diet and famine are good breeders of criminals.

In the areas of health and sexual conduct it is the poor underprivileged individual whose case is reported to health officials while those better off financially pay their private physician and never become a statistic. Thus again, a difference in interpretation of figures.

Would it not be lack of knowledge and training that causes many illegitimate births among the Negroes in seven Southern states?

The Negro has been greatly hampered by the generally impoverished cultural environment from which he comes. Poor adjustment in society, low morale and lack of interest in the finer things in life result from mistreatment and segregation itself.

Integration could be accomplished here in the United States if the majority of Caucasians and Negroes wanted it. The Negro is a human being and a citizen of the United States. He is not responsible for his plight and he must be aided by other citizens of his country. Just give the Negro a few years with improved conditions in the home and community, with schools where his facilities are equal to those of the Caucasian and then compare statistics.

The results will show fewer juvenile court records, welfare institution reports, police file cards and psychiatric studies. The eventual outcome will be our willingness to recognize the fact that there are not two separate races here in America, but all people are members of the human race.

We should be always consciously aware of the fact that the United States will not be respected as a world power until it accepts integration throughout the Nation.

ALICE L. RHODES
Washington.

The author of the letter is letting his good judgment be overridden by emotion prodded with loaded statistics.

Assume that on a per capita basis there are three Negro convicts for every white. How do those odds work out on comparative economic and social levels? Also, how many were residents and how many were going through?

Maryland lies astride one of the main arteries of migration for Southerners going North for better jobs. From what I have heard of the wage scale for unskilled Negroes in the South, they should have a particular incentive for making up the major part of the stream.

As for the other two manifestations of social irresponsibility, where was the data collected? Municipal and charitable institutions would be in the best position to supply large amounts of that type of information. The well-off and the rich handle those problems through private physicians. Those statistics may only prove that the majority of poor people in those cities are Negroes.

The best argument for integration is that very few areas opposing it can afford a dual system; so without it even the favored group will be cheated.

ARTHUR W. STIER
College Park, Md.

Southern Senators Plan Caucus On Plans to Thwart Integration

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27 (UP) —Senator Walter F. George said today he had agreed to call a meeting of Southern Senators to discuss the possibility of interposition, or intervention, by Southern states to nullify the Supreme Court's ati-segregation ruling.

The Georgia Democrat said several Southern Senators had asked him to call such a meeting and that he had agreed to do so. He said no date had been set.

George said he thought the session should be delayed until Senator Richard B. Russell returned from Florida. The Georgia Democrat, a leader of the Southern bloc, is in Florida recovering from a mild virus infection.

WALNUT RIDGE, Ark., Jan. 27 (AP) — Three Negro children tried to enroll at the white elementary school today, the second such attempt in Arkansas this week.

The children, accompanied by three adults, were turned away by A. W. Rainwater, Superintendent of Schools in this northeast Arkansas town.

"Walnut Ridge is committed in its plan for this school year insofar as integration is concerned," he told the Negroes.

Mississippi Bills Voted

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 27 (AP) —The Mississippi House of Representatives passed today three bills to keep Negroes out of white waiting rooms and rest rooms in railroad and bus stations. The Senate must act.

The bills apply to all passengers, intrastate and interstate, despite the Interstate Commerce Commission decision ruling out segregated facilities for passengers traveling between states.

Failure or refusal to provide the segregated facilities could bring fines of $1,000 a day.

To obey the proposed laws and also the I. C. C. order, railroad and bus companies would have to provide three waiting rooms and six rest rooms.

One waiting room and two rest rooms would be for interstate passengers. These presumably would not be segregated. There also would be segregated waiting and rest rooms for intrastate passengers.

Speeding Arrest Protested

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 27 (AP)—A Negro leader in the bus boycott said yesterday that the city commission's new get-tough policy was the cause of his arrest on a speeding charge.

The Rev. M. L. King was fingerprinted and held in jail before being released on his own recognizance.

Negroes have refused to ride buses here since Dec. 5 in protest against the seating arrangement required on buses by segregation laws.

'New Low' Laid to Eastland

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27 (UP) —James C. Hagerty, President Eisenhower's news secretary, accused Senator James O. Eastland today of hitting a "new low" by injecting the President's grandchildren into politics.

Mr. Hagerty replied to a speech in South Carolina yesterday by the Mississippi Democrat. Senator Eastland, attacking the Supreme Court's school integration decision, noted that two of General Eisenhower's grandchildren, David and Barbara, attended a private school in Virginia.

"Ike's like all interracial politicians," Senator Eastland was quoted as saying. "He wants it for the other fellow."

Mr. Hagerty, asked about the Eastland statement, noted that Maj. John Eisenhower, the President's son, had said that integration had nothing to do with the fact that his two eldest children attended a private school.

Mr. Hagerty also said that Major Eisenhower's youngest child, 4-year-old Susan, was attending an interracial kindergarten at Fort Belvoir, Va. A spokesman at the post said the Eisenhower children also attended an integrated Sunday school almost every week.

South Shows Varied Reactions To Transit, Other Bias Issues

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. P. 4
Wed 1-11-56

By PAT J. McDONNELL
For International News Service

Two Southern states resorted to police powers Tuesday to enforce racial segregation at Terminals serving interstate travellers, while other states generally ignored the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The ICC order to end seperaae facilities in airline, railroad and Bus terminals went into effect at midnight Monday. But there was no general effort in the South to comply.

Meanwhile, there were other developments in the South touching upon segregation in the schools and public recreational facilities.

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley and Virginia pro-segregation leaders moved ahead with plans for a constitutional convention to authorize a "private" school system supported by tax money. Virginians approved the plan by a 2 to 1 majority in a statewide referendum, in a rejection of the Supreme Court's school segregation order.

COLUMBUS GOLF CASE

In Columbus, Ga. Negro citizens formally asked the city commission for authority to use the municipal golf course, which is operated under lease by the Lions Club. Negroes had been turned down in an effort to play on the course earlier.

This Commission accepted the petition and advised a 20 man degelation. "You will hear from us in due time."

A. L. Haden, Jr., Director of the county States Rights Council of Georgia told the Commission it should not consider itself bound by the recent Federal decision which opened Atlanta Municipal Golf Courses.

Louisiana and Mississippi resorted to police powers [illegible] serve segregation in disrega[illegible] he Interstate Commerce Comm[illegible] order.

In Jackson, Mi[illegible] where railroad and Bus lines re[illegible] "for Colored Only" signs in w[illegible] ng rooms, city police put up ne[illegible] nes, and extra uniformed police were on duty at terminals to "preserve order." Similar action was planned in Laurel, Gulfport and Greenwood.

LOUISIANA ACTION

In Baton Rouge, La. Governor Robert Kennon termed the ICC order "unconstitutional" and ordered police of all levels to enforce the State's segregation laws.

There were no reports of attempts by patrons to cross the segregation lines.

Elsewhere in the South, the picture was one of transportation companies trying to observe conflicting Federal and State directives.

Bus terminals said they would not enforce segregation in Nashville, but the traditional "white" and "Colored" waiting room signs remained in place.

At the city's Union Railroad terminal, waiting room signs came down, but passengers continued to use separate waiting rooms, and restaurant patrons were served on a segregated basis.

At Tallahassee, Fla., patrons were segregated at the airport and two Bus Station. Seabord Airline Railroad took down a "White Only" sign over its big waiting room, but put up a new "colored intra-state" sign, and announced only Negroes holding tickets for Interstate transportation would be allowed in the White waiting room.

Church Asked To Eliminate Racial Bias

World Fri 1-6-56 P. 5

ATHENS, Ohio—(NNPA)— Christian leaders from East and West were told here Friday that a primary task of the church in the modern world is to smash the barriers of racial segregation and prejudice everywhere.

Birmingham, Ala.

The statement was made by the Rev. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary.

Dr. Mackay and others from the United States, India and Africa spoke at a general discussion during the fourth day of the six-day quadrennial meeting here of the Student Volunteer Movement. About 3,500 students from eighty nations attended the interracial gathering.

RACIAL BIAS

An Indian, a native South African and a United States missionary to Brazil said the "strongest blow" the United States had struck against communism was the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

In India and the Union of South Africa, they said students rose and stood at silent attention when the decision was announced.

The policy of apartheid (racial segregation) in the Union of South Africa was attacked and defended at meetings by native Africans and whites from South Africa.

As African clergyman said the chief problem on that continent 'is to liquidate white supremacy without nessarily liquidating the white people."

"Africans are convinced that until the doctrine of white supremacy is done away with present social economic and political inequalities in Africa will continue," the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, Congressional pastor from Southedn Rhodesia, said adding:

FIVE MILLION

"The present racial tensions are due to five million white people who are determined to dominate 193 million Africans.

"White supremacy means no participation by Africans in the government,' he said. "This means lower economic status, third-rate citizenship, humiliating treatment and surrender of human dignity."

They Still Haven't Learned

Afro-American P. 4
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 1-21-56

Viola Knapp was white. She lived in Vermont.

At the end of the Civil War she felt the call to go South and teach the freedmen who, for 240 years, had been denied either public or private education.

She reached Virginia and one of the Federal Government's newly established schools. She found herself a social outcast, despised and sneered at by all the white people in town.

No one spoke to her. No one even looked at her.

She had great difficulty in finding a place to live and finally moved to a tumbled down, two-room, abandoned house close to the school.

* * * *

HER OSTRACISM was complete. If she walked down one side of the street, any persons who happened to be on that side silently and instantly crossed over and walked on the other side.

If she went into a shop to buy something, every white person, present turned at once and went out leaving her alone with the clerk who served her without speaking or looking at her.

This 20-year old girl would have suffered from this a great deal except that she was from Vermont and she didn't care much about the disapproval of the neighbors because she felt sure she was doing the right thing.

What helped her ignore the disagreeable experience was her liking for another Northern white person who was ignored and ostracized in the same way.

* * * *

THE TWO LIVELY outcasts made each other's acquaintance, got themselves engaged to be married, did actually marry and raised a fine family.

Final result of all this was that the two persons whom the Virginia whites ostracized enjoyed a greater and wider horizon of life than if they had not gone crusading.

Secondly, one of the first pupils taught by the Vermonters when they came to Virginia was Booker T. Washington.

Strange, isn't it, that pretty nearly everything about that area of Virginia where Viola Knapp taught has been forgotten except for the fact that Booker T. Washington was born there and that is where he first went to school.

* * * *

ALL THE WHITE people of that area who ostracized the Vermont school teachers for teaching Booker T. and his other friends, are still ostracizing colored people.

They still haven't learned that prejudice and hatred throughout history have never paid and never will.

Dr. Moron Speaks Out

In this crisis on civil rights in education, there has been too much cowardly silence among college presidents and other school administrators.

That is one reason we were heartened by the boldness of Hampton's brilliant president, Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, in the heat of the debate over Virginia's plan to sidestep the Supreme Court decision.

Dr. Moron not only sharply disagreed with Colgate W. Darden, president of the University of Virginia, but demanded and received equal television time to answer him.

Especially significant was Dr. Moron's observance that two governors of Virginia had refused to name any colored persons on the commission created to study and advise them on the integration problem.

The President of the United States, he pointed out, had appointed two Virginians to sit as American delegates in the United Nations.

One was Colgate Darden. The other was Robert Lee Brokenburr, a native of Phoebus, Va., who now resides in Indiana.

Both men are eminently qualified to represent the United States. They sit side by side in a world forum.

But they dare not sit together in their native Virginia to advise the governor and the legislature on the problems of a single state.

That is the prohibitive price that Virginia and other Southern states are required to pay to maintain outdated customs and traditions.

This is the real tragedy of segregation.

We strongly commend Dr. Moron's outspoken example to presidents of other institutions, both public and private.

Colgate Darden didn't allow his position as president of a state school to silence his advocacy of segregation and the status quo.

If there's freedom of speech for white college presidents, in all fairness there should be freedom of speech for colored college presidents.

Rights vs. Wrongs

Despite his rantings about states rights, South Carolina's Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. continues to look the other way while bigots pile up a depressing record of state's wrongs.

Because of his indifference, the DeLaine case is now disturbing millions of decent Americans. Timmerman wouldn't give him protection; so the minister had to flee his home for his life.

More recently, klansmen, supposedly outlawed in South Carolina, met at Elloree and tossed threats at the 74-year-old NAACP president, L. A. Blackman.

Thus far Timmerman has uttered not a word.

Threats against citizens who seek only what is rightfully theirs under the Constitution at Lake City, Manning, Paxville, Sumter, Elloree, Orangeburg and other areas have gone unnoticed.

The miracle is that there have not been worse incidents in the state.

South Carolina's governor, like all other Americans, must soon be brought to realize that you don't kick people around anymore because of their race or color and get away with it.

You can no longer talk about principles of government out of one corner of your mouth while placing both hands over your eyes when these principles are being trampled to satiate emotional, hysterical prejudices.

Dr. Hutchins Reelected

The re-election of Robert M. Hutchins as president of the Fund for the Republic is a happy sign that the Fund's trustees have not been intimidated by the yappings of his enemies.

Actually, there is solid reason to believe the target of Dr. Hutchins' detractors is not Dr. Hutchins at all.

Their main design is to smear and, if possible, slow down the Fund's forthright promotion of greater interest in the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

Displeasing to them is the fact that under Dr. Hutchins more than $1 million has been granted by the Fund to the Southern Regional Council, the NAACP, the American Friends Service and the Catholic Interracial Council, and other organizations dedicated to making real the American ideal of equality.

The very bitterness of the attacks launched by the Eastlands, the Hearsts, the Talmadges, aided and abetted by the American Legion is ringing tribute to the substantial progress that is being made.

It Won't Work

Suggested by the rabidly segregationist editor of the Richmond News Leader, some officials of several Southern states are reportedly giving serious consideration to interposition.

The News Leader in a series of long and tortured editorials has presented this doctrine as a means of circumventing the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision.

In simpler language interposition is merely a fancy name for nullification or, carried to its ultimate conclusion, secession.

But the South tried that once and lost.

The issue was settled once and for all when General Robert E. Lee surrendered at Appomattox.

If nullification didn't work back in 1863, ordinary common sense dictates that it has no possible chance of success in 1956.

No Reason For Delay

President Eisenhower, in his State of the Union message to Congress, suggested an investigation of charges that Southern states are depriving colored persons of the right to vote and are enforcing illegal economic sanctions.

The Americans for Democratic Action has criticized the President's proposal as a delaying tactic.

The ADA insists that action, not an investigation is needed now and that the FBI has in its files sufficient information on which to act.

However, the President asks Congress to make a study so that it will have its own first hand information on which to develop necessary legislation.

Such a probe should take no longer than a month or six weeks at most.

What is needed is not only the President's action on the basis of FBI findings, but action by Congress to give the Department of Justice the necessary weapons to halt Dixie defiance and lawlessness.

Can They Beat Nature?

Three doctors in Israeli are reported to have found a way to distinguish the sex of a child before it is born.

That might be important if the prospective parents are to determine whether they should order a blue layette for a boy or a pink layette for a girl.

No other reason occurs to us why parents need to know eight months ahead of time the sex of their unborn offspring.

If the Israeli doctors can tell us how to regulate rather than determine the sex of offsprings so that a family that needs a boy can have one and one that needs a girl can have one, they will be rendering the world a real service.

The parents who have three girls in succession could be certain to have a boy the next time.

The musician who has hopes of a girl trio for orchestration or vocal purposes could be certain of another girl.

The athlete who has dreams of a basketball team of brothers could work toward that end with mathematical certainty of success.

On second thought, however, we suspect that once the Israeli or any other scientists uncover this secret, humanity will not be able to do much better with it than nature which has been on the job for millions of years.

SEGREGATION:

Newsweek p. 24
Mon. 1-23-56

Voting and Talking

Some Southern politicians were talking tough last week—tougher than they had talked at any time since the Supreme Court in May 1954 banned segregation in public schools.

Herman Talmadge, former governor of Georgia, got cheers from a rally of 600 in Americus, Ga., when he shouted: "We fought overseas to keep our rights. Why not at home?" Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi told audiences: "Before God, I now make the people of Mississippi this solemn promise: I will carry our fight in the North [and] in the South . . . The choice is between victory and defeat."

That much of the South will resist enforced integration to the last ditch was demonstrated only last week when Virginians voted 2 to 1 in favor of amending the state constitution to continue separate schools for those who wish them. Laws to be enacted under the constitutional change will provide private-school education at the expense of the state for children whose parents do not want them to attend integrated schools. (Integration is scheduled to begin in parts of Virginia next September.)

Predictions differed on how much the private-tuition plan will cost. One estimate is that the cost will be $1 million for each 1 per cent of the public-school population transferring to private schools. Also Virginians voted for the amendment in the face of warnings from numerous legal authorities, including Dean Frederick D. Ribble of the University of Virginia law school, that the tuition-grant is unconstitutional.

'PUBLISH IT NOT IN THE STREETS OF ASKELON'—III

Advertiser
Mon. 3-26-56
P. 4-A

In Dearborn, Michigan —Population 130,000— Not A Single Negro Is Allowed

Montgomery, Ala.

By Tom Johnson

[This Advertiser interview (recorded) is, in some degree, in the interest of newspaper economy. Which is to say, think of all the fat expense accounts the Detroit papers could save if, instead of dispatching their reporters to Montgomery for race strife tales, they would keep them in Detroit to cover that with which their backyard reeks. Why send a man all the way to Montgomery to interview Mayor Gayle about segregation when the man could stay in Detroit and interview the Mayor of Dearborn? Not only does the Dearborn mayor emit more lusty interviews than Mayor Gayle, but he obviously is a far more successful segregationist than Montgomery's mayor. Anyhow, what follows is another in an Advertiser series to jam home the validity of our sorrowful contention that wherever in America the Negro migrates in significant numbers, he encounters rejection, candidly in the South, pharisaically in the North.—Ed.]

"I AM FOR complete segregation, one million per cent, on all levels. I believe in economic equality [for Negroes] but social equality is a horse of a different color. If a man works—I don't care what color he is—he ought to be paid. But I'm against any of this social dream stuff."

JOHNSON

The man who uttered these words is no Jim Eastland or Sam Englehardt. He does not belong to the White Citizens Council and couldn't, practicably, if he wanted to. There is not a chapter within hundreds of miles of his home.

His views on segregation are intimately known by his constituents; yet they return him to office term after term as mayor. The reason is simple: Orville Hubbard, the peppery, ball-of-fire mayor, is just what they want in Dearborn, Mich., wherein resides not a single known Negro. Repeat: not a single Negro.

"They can't get in here," says Hubbard. "We watch it. Everytime we hear of a Negro moving in—for instance, we had one last year—we respond quicker than you do to a fire. That's generally known. It's known among our own people and it's known among the Negroes here."

Remarkable? More so, when you realize that Dearborn, with a population of 130,000, is the state's fourth largest city. It is the home of Ford's River Rouge plant and heavy industry which employ at least 15,000 Negroes.

Dearborn is jam-smack against Detroit, in Montgomery-Prattville fashion. Approximately 500,000 Negroes live there. Many of them commute to and from Dearborn to work, and it would be reasonable to assume that a few of them find it convenient to do their shopping in Dearborn. But live there? Not a one.

'Social Dreamers'

ORVIE HUBBARD—as his constituents call him—is as much responsible for the absence of Negro residents as anyone. He led the fight 10 years ago to keep the U. S. government from locating a 4,000-unit Negro housing project in his city.

Recalling that fight, Hubbard says: "We fought it openly. I think at that time the 'separate-but-equal' provision prevailed and I think even then they hadn't knocked out the occupancy by other than the Caucasian race [clause], which we had in all our [property] deeds up here."

Dearborn's residents were successful in keeping the "social dreamers" from locating the project in or adjacent to the city.

Orvie Hubbard's position is so well known that he has had little trouble in recent years, as this excerpt from our recorded telephone conversation shows:

Q. Has the NAACP ever called on you?

A. No, we'd chase 'em to hell out of town.

Q. When is the last time any Negroes called on you?

A. I think when I was running for circuit judge. A colored fellow brought me a petition. I gave him a can of beer and two bucks or something. He's from Detroit. He wanted to see me. He said he'd heard that I had horns.

Editor Praises Mayor Hubbard

BEFORE calling Hubbard, we talked with Royce Howes, a prominent editorial writer of the Detroit Free Press, to get set.

Said Editor Howes: "Orvie Hubbard is a very colorful and dynamic sort of character. In his own right, he's a political eccentric. You may find yourself embroiled in a hell of a fight with him, or you may find Orvie telling you everything there is to know about the subject. One thing I will guarantee you: you will get him on the telephone. Orvie answers all telephone calls personally. He, apparently, will talk to anybody about anything."

As an example of Orvie's eccentricity, Editor Howes said Mayor Hubbard was once restrained, under a libel judgment, from leaving the county for a long period of time. During this time, Hubbard had occasion to go to Chicago. Two fully-costumed clowns wearing make-up and sporting the other paraphernalia of circus buffoons boarded the train for Chicago.

Says Howes: "The question was, was one, or either, or none, of them Orvie?"

Apparently, the people don't mind his eccentricities.

"He is immensely popular and he runs a good town," said Howes. "The garbage is picked up regularly, the streets are paved, the fire department answers promptly when called, and it's a vastly cleaner town, in street tidiness, than Detroit. Everything about it—school system, good everything."

"Orvie Hubbard will fight like hell with you and very bitterly over something. But then when you're through with that subject, he'll forget the bitterness. It's never a lasting animosity."

'No Ifs, Ands, Or Buts'

WITH this picture of Hubbard in mind, we called him with some uneasiness. The uneasiness proved to be completely unjustified. We found Hubbard a friendly firecracker with a ready wit, a sense of humor and a robust willingness to talk.

This is where Hubbard stands:

"The politicians have made the race question a football. It's hot up here, but we've taken an open stand in our community. Detroit hasn't done it; they're in a hell of a mess.

"We're for complete segregation, no ifs, ands, or buts about it. That is my position and I tell the Negroes the same thing. I say, 'We don't have equality among the whites and you don't have equality among the Negroes. Why stir up something when you're getting along all right?'

"I say, 'Where in the history of the world has any man on the face of the earth progressed as fast as you folks have since the American civil war?' As recently as 1860, they brought 500 of them out of the Belgian Congo directly to the South.

"The politicians are trading out their votes. Our governor up here [G. Mennen "Soapy" Williams] is way over on the thing. He's doing it for votes, right? And civilization is suffering over it."

Against The Law, Don't You Understand?

BUT HOW are the Negroes kept out of Dearborn?

"We say it's against the law to live here," says Hubbard. "They say 'what law?' They say, 'You know what the Supreme Court says.' I tell them we're talking about the law of custom, the law of habit."

We persisted.

Q. But how do you actually do it?

A. It's against the law.

Q. Do you mean a city law?

A. The unwritten law.

Q. In other words, all the property owners would have to be in agreement with you.

A. Well, that's why I'm still mayor, 15 years.

'So Goddam Quick'

Q. THEY just wont sell to Negroes?

A. That's the way you do it.

Hubbard, proceeding with my higher education in Northern race strife, said the population of Dearborn has been doubled since 1950 by a large influx of Poles and Italians who were "crowded out of Detroit by the colored people coming in.

Those people, he said, "are so anti-colored — much more so than you in Alabama, if you took a vote on it."

There is no doubt in Hubbard's mind as to the sentiments of the North.

"If they ever took a vote on this up North, you'd be shocked at the results," he says. "But, no, people don't like to talk out loud because they don't want to stimulate the thing. If you ever got a constitutional vote before the people, it would pass so fast—so godam quick—that a lot of these politicians would take a spin for themselves and leave."

Morally Wrong

HUBBARD was born on a farm in Branch County, Mich., 53 years ago, but his heart is elsewhere:

"I'm a great lover of the South. If they'd only spend a fraction of the billions we poured all over this earth trying to buy friends that you can't buy—if they just poured a fraction of that down South to help rehabilitate the country they gave a commercial raping to, we'd have a mighty prosperous world today.

"Now don't misunderstand me: I'm not against a man necessarily because of his color, but I feel bitter about this aggression in trying to force them upon each other. I think it's basically wrong. It's morally wrong to force one race upon the other."

'You'd Be Surprised'

"YOU'D be surprised, honestly, at the people up here who are on your side. In the big cities particularly, it's worth. And they're playing it for everything it's worth.

"Then you've got these trouble makers and anders, like these fellows who learn a little bit about Blackstone and then go around creating trouble. Then you've got the sympathizers. The sympathizer with the problem is generally the fellow just as bad. They're blaming everything on everybody's mad about it. New York is a hell of a mess. It's Philadelphia—New York, Puerto Ricans for coming in there. But, you see, you've got these Democrat mayors. You've got one in Philadelphia, You've got the same thing in New York, who doesn't have it, like Humphry [Sen.

Hubert] in Minnesota. He doesn't have any up there. And then you have a few of these frustrated school teachers. You have that sort of a problem. I don't know, I'm getting old now."

'Don't Push Us Around'

Q. WHAT about your schools in Dearborn?

A. We don't have any there either. In our Henry Ford College, they do have a few.

Q. But that's a college?

A. Yes.

So says Orvie Hubbard, who also spoke these lines, which sound as if they're a long way from home:

"Like the colored fellow said to me. He said, 'You think the Negro's all right in his place.' I said, 'You're right. I have nothing against the Negro, but don't push us around. Quit pushing the whites around. We've been pretty good to you. We've nursed you along, we've kept you here since the Civil War, put shoes on your feet. Don't push us around.'"

—(AP) Wirephoto Specially Transmitted to Advertiser

Mayor Orville Hubbard of Dearborn, Mich. advises The Advertiser: "Our Italians and Poles are so anti-colored—much more so than you in Alabama."

★ Tell It ★

Advertiser P. 4-A

To Old Grandma

Mon. 3-26-56

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request, name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserve the right to shorten letters ★ No poetry please ★ Repeat: No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it

Montgomery, Ala.

Ah, Wilderness

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have read with interest your article in the U. S. News & World Report. In fact I was half-way through the article before I recognized your style and felt I was back at Debden [England] again.

JOHN T. GODFREY,
[Pres., Casco Laces, Inc.]
Freeport, Maine.

¶ Capt. Godfrey, of Woonsocket, R. I., was one of the great U. S. air aces of World War II. Flying with the famous Maj. Don Gentile (now dead) from the 4th Fighter group airdrome at Debden, England, Godfrey shot down many German aircraft in the classic daylight bombing onslaught that turned the tide. It seemed doubtful to his wartime friends that he would ever be able to get over the great days in a Mustang cockpit. How wrong: he returns to view as a middle-aged corporation president who has gone to reading U. S. News & World Report.—Ed.

A SOUTHERNER FACES FACTS

As the South seethed and rumbled around him, Mississippi-born Publisher Mark Ethridge of the Louisville Courier-Journal, speaking at the University of Florida, had some telling words last week for his fellow Southerners. Excerpts:

Time p. 21

DESEGREGATION, integration—call it what you will—hangs like a dark cloud over the South, and no editor can dare ignore it as a major editorial problem. Unfortunately, even tragically, the supreme court decision has set in motion some of the evil forces and evil actions which are too reminiscent of our darkest days. Councils have sprung up throughout the South that are, despite the feelings of their respectable sponsors, nothing more than uptown Ku Klux Klans, using instead of tar and feathers and the lash the equally destructive economic pressure. They say they are dedicated to the idea of defeating desegregation "by means short of violence." But already the spirit of violence has manifested itself . . .

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PUBLISHER ETHRIDGE

Now nobody desires to hurry the transition which the Supreme Court decreed to be the law of the land, which our intelligence told us was inevitable, which our consciences told us was right. Nor has the Supreme Court insisted upon a hurried transition. It has given the 17 states affected a "reasonable time" and, moreover, it returned enforcement to the local courts, knowing that special problems are presented where the population is overwhelmingly Negro. But Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana have not responded with the same understanding which the court had.

Chicago Ill.

THE SPIRIT OF SECESSION

Under the leadership of Virginia, which presented an idea, not a plan, they have ridden off like headless horsemen into the woods of nullification—even though they call it interposition—and in the pursuit of every evasion of the decree that slick, if not smart, lawyers may devise. Nobody has proposed firing upon Sumter again, but the spirit of secession is there: secession from the moral conscience of the rest of the country and indeed of the world that is giving men of color—who far outnumber us of the white race—their civil rights, their right to be free and to share fully in the bounties of civilization . . .

I must in candor say that the N.A.A.C.P. is vulnerable to attack. It is not one of my favorite organizations. It is as radical on its side as [Mississippi's] Senator Eastland is on his. By trying to hurry too fast, it could violate the spirit if not the word of the Supreme Court decision quite as grossly as Senator Eastland in trying to defeat it. It is contributing nothing toward a calm and rational working out of a very difficult situation. The reasonable people of the South are caught between two [dangerous] forces: one of them sitting down in the traces like a balky mule, the other trying to move it by setting firecrackers under its belly.

Mon. 3-5-56

THE NEED FOR EVIDENCE

But when all that has been said, it must be repeated that there are hard facts to be faced by calm and sober people—facts not advanced by political demagogues or agitators.

One of them is that the South will not be allowed to withdraw from the union; it will not be allowed to establish defiance of the Supreme Court as the law of the land; it will not be allowed to bend the will of the union to denial of the civil rights or full citizenship of a tenth of our population any more than it was allowed to continue to enslave that minority. It will not profit by attempts at slick evasion, even though it may long delay integration.

The rest of the country, I repeat, has no desire to hurry the process of integration, but it does most earnestly want some evidence of good faith and good will.

Race Relations In A Larger Picture

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.

Editor Edward J. Meeman In The Memphis Press-Scimitar

RACIAL tension in the South which has resulted in some violence shows that things have been moving in a dangerous direction. The progress of the South was set back several generations by one great unnecessary conflict which clear thinking and right feeling, reason and patience on both sides could have avoided. We cannot afford another conflict, great or small.

It is time to stop and think where we are headed, and make sure we are headed in the right direction.

No race in human history has made such progress as the American Negro since 1865. That progress has been accelerated since 1933. The rate of progress was still increasing when came the Supreme Court decisions of 1954 and 1955. At first it was thought that these meant further progress for the Negro. But in the South, where most of the Negroes live, the effect has been different from what was intended and expected. Since these decisions, not only has a brake been applied to the progress of the Negro but there has been some movement backward. Race relations in the South have deteriorated.

In order that we may deal intelligently and effectively with the present situation, in order that good race relations may be restored in the South, and progress in improvement of race relations resumed, we need to put race relations in a larger picture.

LET both races look at the larger picture. 3-2-54

Today the biggest issue in the world is the struggle between communism, tyranny, slavery, atheistic materialism and militarism on the one hand and democracy, freedom, individualism and spiritual religion and peace on the other. 3-2-54

Those of us who want to win that great struggle cannot afford to lose our heads, be we white or Negro.

Put the questions now being debated between white Americans and Negro Americans against that background of danger which threatens to overwhelm both races, and there should be no difficulty in settling our differences peaceably and amicably.

We cannot win this struggle without the loyalty of our Negro people. Of our total population of 150,697,361 as shown by the 1950 census, 15,042,286 are Negro. That is a sizable and important minority. In the South the proportion of Negroes is much greater.

Thinking, patriotic white people will recognize that we cannot afford, by any lack of justice or goodwill on our part, to lose the loyalty of this minority.

Thinking, patriotic Negro people will recognize that the "equality" which communists offer them is only equality in slavery, poverty and torture. It is strong evidence of the good sense of the Negro people that only a few have failed to see through the deceitful temptations the Reds offer them.

All over the world colonialism is coming to an end and colored races, yellow, brown and black, are being lifted to a position of equality. American Negroes, too, are asking for equality. Modern science tells us that all races have equal potentiality for development.

NEVERTHELESS, in the United States, and especially in the South, while right-thinking white people want the Negro to have every opportunity for equal development, most of them do not believe too intimate association of the races is a good thing. There is resistance to forced desegregation of schools and swimming pools, and the like. Such resistance should be only by legal means, should never be in spirit of hatred.

We believe the Negroes themselves want to associate with their own people in school, church and social life more than some of their present leaders will admit. If Negroes do not prefer their own modes of life and entertainment, why does it profit white men to run all Negro radio stations?

We believe that once the Negro wins recognition of his equal dignity as a human being, once he is no longer treated with contempt but is treated with respect, instead of there being more mixing of the races, there will be less, because the Negro and the white equally will prefer association with his own kind.

Why should we withhold from the Negro the equal respect his heart craves? A man who belittles one of another race only belittles himself.

The problem we must solve is not easy. But there is no question that if the citizens who are men of good will and moderate views will take responsibility for what is to be done, we will do the right thing, and come through safely.

The Gallup Poll

Post + Times Herald

White, Negro South Find Mixing Inevitable

Fri. 3-2-56 P. 19

Washington, D.C.

(Editor's Note: Following is the last report in a special series of articles on the problems of integration in the South by John M. Fenton of the Institute staff. Today's story deals with the future of segregation in the South.)

PRINCETON, N. J., March 1 Although an overwhelming majority of Southern whites—especially in the Deep South—are opposed to integration, a good many expect the day to come when segregation will end.

But they hope that day is a long time off.

With much bitterness at having something "shoved down our throats," 55 per cent of the white Southerners admit today that the time will eventually come when whites and Negroes will be going to the same schools, eating in the same restaurants, and generally sharing the same accommodations.

On the other hand, an important and articulate minority holds that integration will never come to Dixie. This group tends to feel it is something that "the South just won't permit."

Negroes—a majority of whom want to have mixed schools—are more optimistic about the chances of full-scale integration. They, too, however, think it will involve many years before it comes.

In seeking to determine the future chances for integration, we asked the following question:

'Do you think the day will ever come in the South when whites and Negroes will be going to the same schools, eating in the same restaurants, and generally sharing the same public accommodations?"

The results for white and Negroes:

WILL DAY EVER COME?

Southern Whites Only
Yes	55%
No	33
Don't know	12
Southern Negroes Only
Yes	70%
No	15
Don't know	15

This is how the Southerner feels about the eventual outcome of integration. When it comes to the question of any immediate acceptance of the Supreme Court's decision, his views are quite different.

Only about one white person in eight in the South thinks that the people in his community will accept the decision quietly without any trouble or attempts at delay.

A majority of the Negroes are hopeful of cooperation of some kind in setting up mixed schools—even though many think it will be delayed for some time.

To a great many white persons, the prospect of integrating with the Negro is so remote as to be unworthy of serious thought. These people are convinced that segregation will "just be kept like it always was."

The possibility that the South—if forced into integration—might not "have schools at all" is one discussed frequently. One hears much talk about the introduction of a private school system or—if that is not possible—"just keeping the kids out of school altogether."

Adding up the score on the question of what people will do, one finds that the "bitter-enders"—those who are thinking only in terms of preventing integration—outnumber the "go along reluctantly" group—by about 2-to-1.

A stubborn determination to "just not go along" with the Supreme Court's decision is most noticeable in the Deep South—in Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina and Mississippi.

In these states, all of which have a Negro population larger than 30 per cent (and in some instances, counties where more than 7 out of 10 persons are Negroes), only about one white person in five thinks there will be any kind of acceptance—willing or unwilling—of the integration decision at present. The rest talk about ways to continue segregation.

For many Southern whites eventual integration is a bitter pill that they feel they will be forced to swallow because of "outside interests" and a North that doesn't really understand their problems.

Copyright, 1956,
American Institute of Public Opinion

Equality for All Asked By Archbishop O'Boyle

Evening Star P. 4-A

Wed. 2-29-56

Washington, D.C.

The Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington, last night said the United States cannot pose as a truly Christian Nation until equality of opportunity exists for all Americans "in fact as well as in law."

He urged all Catholics to accept the challenge of battling persecution of minority groups, including Negroes.

In a speech before 800 Catholics at the fifth anniversary dinner of the John Carroll Society of Washington in the Mayflower Hotel, the archbishop said the United States cannot win the war for the minds of men until the challenge is met. He called for "an honest audit" of the race problem in America.

"To me," the Archbishop said, "the remarkable thing is not that some members of minority groups are retarded, but rather that so many have been able to advance as far as they have.

All Face Problem

"This is a real problem and it confronts us in every area of our Nation. Difficulties may be more publicized in some places, but we all face the problem in one way or other. Here is a real challenge to us as Christian laymen, to take leadership in bringing about full equality of opportunity, in fact as well as in law, to every American citizen.

"Until we do this, we cannot pose as a truly Christian nation. Nor can we win the bitter war for men's minds in the world struggle if the Communists can tell the hundreds of millions in Asia and Africa that they, rather than Christians, practice the doctrine that all men are equal."

The archbishop said the race question was not as difficult as it might appear to some "once we acknowledge that we are all children of the same Father."

Two Approaches

He offered "two broad lines of approach":

"First, each of us should ask: In what area, that I can influence, are Negroes discriminated against merely because of their race? Do I know of competent doctors who are not free to practice their profession in the same way that a white doctor of equal ability could?

"Are there areas of employment closed to qualified persons merely because of their race? Would we raise a social barrier against someone whom we would have welcomed, had not the mere accident of color intervened?"

The second approach to the race issue, the archbishop said, is suggested by an argument which runs this way: "It is foolish to seek to integrate Negroes into a white community, because the cultural and educational levels of the two groups are too far apart. How can we mingle two groups so different, without creating intolerable tensions?

"Perhaps the best answer to this objection is to go back into history and read what was said about our own ancestors. I will not offend your ears," the archbishop continued, "by repeating the scurrilous remarks that were common, not too long ago, about the Irish, the Italians, the Hungarians, Polish and many other peoples represented here.

"We were considered by some to be the dregs of Europe, the products of Old-World slums, the unsuccessful type that could not make a living in our native lands. We do not hear much about this today, precisely because this was a land of opportunity. We had a chance to advance and assimilate."

He said, however, the chance was made possible by the "accident of color."

"But racial prejudice bars this advance to members of the colored races. Negro or Chinese college graduates may be waiting on tables because they have no outlet for their training and talents. Can you expect a people to advance in the face of such discouragement? To me the remarkable thing is not that some members of minority groups are retarded, but rather that so many have been able to advance as far as they have."

Full Justice a Problem

The Archbishop said he recognizes "that the securing of full justice for our colored brethren presents problems. . . . not easily bridged."

"That there are difficulties, no sensible person would deny," he said. "But what is our attitude in the face of these problems? Are difficulties an excuse for inaction, or, on the contrary, a challenge to vigorous and intelligent action?"

"Are we negative and passive as steps are taken to bring full justice to the colored, or are we in the midst of the struggle, willing to risk mistakes, if necessary, but always striving to do the fair, the just, the kindly, the Christian thing?"

Safeguard for Workers

In a discussion of labor-management relations in the United States, the archbishop said the "strong union movement and enlightened social legislation" are serving as safeguards for the Nation's workers.

He said he would not enter into "the question of the relative power of business and labor or to compare the sins of one with the sins of the other." He described the groups as "partners in production . . . they prosper and decline together."

He called, however, for leadership in the field "with the imagination and courage to press forward toward positive harmony and friendship."

Cites "Grievous Price"

Archbishop O'Boyle said the United States is "paying a grievous price in world affairs today because we fail to keep in mind the Soviet philosophy of oppression of peoples."

He scored the preachings of Karl Marx, which "became a reality under the guidance of Lenin, Stalin and Khrushchev."

The Archbishop said he wanted to "emphasize that communism based on the denial of God and the deification of man has always been insincere, wrong and evil."

"Any dealings with the Communists based on any other beliefs are almost doomed to failure from the start," he said. "Statesmen may at times be compelled to deal with the devil but they cease to be statesmen when they confuse him with an angel of light."

There's a Pocketbook Angle To Racial Tensions, Too

Courier-Journal 3-6 Louisville, Ky

IN A distinguished contribution to understanding, The New York Times on Tuesday published an eight-page "Report on the South: The Integration Issue." It is the product of ten veteran Times reporters, thousands of miles of travel, interviews by the hundreds, weeks of patient digging for the facts. It may well achieve the classic status of another report on the South made by a Timesman of a century ago, FREDERICK LAW OLMSTED, whose dispatches became famous in book form as The Cotton Kingdom.

Notable in the current report, which merits the thoughtful study of all Americans North and South, is the introduction and summary by The Times's Southern Regional Correspondent, JOHN N. POPHAM. Nowhere have we seen so reasoned and dispassionate an interpretation of the many-sided South of today and of what WALTER LIPPMANN has termed the most dangerous internal problem faced by the nation as a whole.

Few who study the report can doubt The Times's conclusion that "some form of compliance with the Supreme Court's order to desegregate the public schools seems inevitable in most Southern states—perhaps in all." Few will reject its editorial opinion that "patience, restraint and moderation are required on both sides—as much in New York as in Alabama," or fail to be cheered by its opinion that "this delicate situation, despite all the difficulties, is in the last analysis a hopeful one."

For the diehards and for the fanatics in either camp, however, we would suggest a close perusal of the state-by-state reports that suggest the enormous economic cost to the South already being exacted by the businessman's fear of the possibility of prolonged racial turbulence.

As Mr. POPHAM summarizes: "The 'new south' with its expanding economy and industry is involved with the rest of the nation in promoting a decentralized defense and production economy. Many believe this will tend to contribute to civic and business harmony as a matter of national welfare and therefore emphasize interracial adjustments."

From Mississippi, to cite but one classic example, GLADWIN HILL reports: "The strongest immediate pressure for the achievement of a modus vivendi is economic. The state's economic future hinges critically on industrialization. Northern capital is not likely to choose Mississippi in preference to more stable parts of the South."

That could be said, of course, about any part of the South where racial tension and instability threaten to dry up the stream of Northern industries flowing steadily Southward since World War II. It was stated most strikingly by Florida's Governor LEROY COLLINS in a recent speech at Tampa, as quoted in the current issue of Southern School News:

"Believe me when I say Florida cannot afford an orgy of race conflict and discord. I have talked to many here and in other regions of the United States now poised preparatory to making substantial investments in Florida. One of the most effective appeals has been that we can offer soundness, stability, and security. Nothing will turn these investors away quicker than the prospect of finding here communities hepped up by demagoguery and seething under the tension and turmoil of race hatred."

There are other more morally and ethically impressive factors working toward a rational acceptance of the social revolution the Supreme Court has bespoken, of course. Not the least are the sense of justice and right preached by WOODROW WILSON and powerfully present in the consciences of millions throughout the South, nor the fact, as Mr. POPHAM reminds us, that "virtually all the principal religious faiths have spoken out against racial discrimination." But the economic aspects are a striking reminder to the intemperate and the fanatic that irrationality can wound not only the conscience of the South but strike directly at its pocketbook.

Southerners Who Find Segregation Immoral Forced to Shut Up or Leave

Herald. Sun. 3-11-56 P. 14-A Miami, Fla.

The years-old relationships between Negroes and whites in the South have been torn apart by the Supreme Court's order to end segregation in the schools. Daily the tension grows.

The Knight newspapers have sent Edwin A. Lahey, one of the country's top reporters, to check on the situation. Lahey has wide experience in reporting in Dixie. Here is the first of his reports.

38a

By EDWIN A. LAHEY
Chief of Our Washington Bureau

CHARLOTTE, N. C. — Southern thought is rapidly becoming set.

That is perhaps the most ominous fact about the segregation crisis in the South.

Here in the traditionally "liberal" atmosphere of North Carolina, an influential man sums it up this way:

"There doesn't seem to be any middle ground left. And there's not even any humor left in the situation, mostly, I suppose, because of the aggressive militancy of the National Ass'n. for the Advancement of Colored People."

Until the Supreme Court issued its orders in the school cases, and the NAACP demanded action on these orders, Southern whites showed a humane tolerance for local white intellectuals or clergymen who tried to point out that the institution of segregation was morally indefensible.

Today, most of the Southerners who cannot make the fact of segregation square with their Christian conscience have but two alternatives—to shut up or get out of town.

A Congregational minister near Charlotte is getting ready to leave, at the insistence of his church members, partly because he irritated them with his belief that there was no moral way to circumvent the Supreme Court order against segregation in the public schools.

There are no statistics readily available, but one well informed Southerner believes that a dozen or more clergymen in the South have had to leave their pulpits because of the strong pro-segregation feelings of their church members.

Without scratching very deeply in the South, a visitor can detect the same anguished mental twisting that Southerners went through a century ago, when their backs were to the wall on the issue of slavery, and a way of life demanded moral justification.

In 1956, just as in 1856, many Southerners are dipping into scripture to convince themselves that God intended all along for Negroes to have the seats in the back of the bus.

And one well established anthropologist in the South is busy with theories of racial differentiation that are a grim echo of the Germany of the 1930s, when Nazi scientists were determined to prove that Jews weren't people.

It is on the fringes of the South that the mental anguish prevails.

In the states that form the hard core of resistance to the Supreme Court, they are done with soul-searching. Instead, they are ruthlessly committed to the proposition of maintaining the pattern of racial segregation, in public schools and elsewhere.

Alabama has been occupying the stage in this show of resistance, what with the Autherine Lucy crisis at Tuscaloosa, and the bus boycott in Montgomery.

But Mississippi, where the idea of the White Citizens Councils was conceived, remains the heart of the resistance movement.

The state legislature in Mississippi in recent weeks has passed a number of laws intended to be used as tools to circumvent the Supreme Court.

One of these laws abolishes common law marriage. The effect of it officially brands as "illegitimate" any child born out of wedlock.

Of the 56,724 babies born in Mississippi in 1953, 7,337 were born out of wedlock, and 7,070 were Negroes.

The Legislature received no information as to how this law would help fight integration, but it was generally assumed that the official tag of "illegitimate" on the Negro offspring of common law marriages would be useful later in the administration of a pupil placement law based on the morals, health and welfare of the community.

Another new state law in Mississippi requires the personnel in the public school system to file affidavits listing the organization to which school employes have paid dues in the last five years.

This law will put the finger on any members of the NAACP in the Mississippi school system.

Still another law makes it illegal in Mississippi to foment or agitate litigation, or to solicit or contribute funds to finance litigation. The purpose is to put another crimp in the NAACP. The penalty for violation of this law is a year in jail.

Leo Aikman

Constitution 3-13-56 Atlanta, Ga.

As a Briton Sees the South

What does a student from abroad remember after a year in America? Many things, no doubt, but here is a summary on one young Englishman's impressions after a year's study at Duke University. This is what he went back and told the folks at home:

P. 4

"I shall remember long trips over a vast, sprawling country; a hundred friends made and friendly coeds, attractive with skilfully used make-up and stylish clothes; newspapers of good quality and, on Sundays, the length of a short encyclopaedia; television, crazy with commercials, going all day and most of the night with a choice of half a dozen different channels; and the serious-mindedness of the students, many of whom, this time last year, regarded a certain senator from Wisconsin as something akin to a psychopathic case.

"Over all, I shall remember the Southland, the barrenness of its backward areas, its new and growing industries, the richness of its culture, the soft, slow accents, the magnolia, the warmth of its people. And for better or worse I am returned from my year profoundly and unashamedly pro-American."

* * *

IN THE MAIL: Chiding note saying, "Goodness gracious, in commenting on Daytona Beach motor races, how could you leave out the name of Sir Malcolm Campbell, the great English racer!"

Answer: I did not leave out Sir Malcolm. I wrote that in 1935 he set a world's mark of 276 miles an hour on the sand at Daytona.

Sir Malcolm, sir, was eliminated in the composing room. And speaking once finally of Daytona, I would like to do business with Al & Bennie's Friendly Auto Auction or the Welcome Travelers Furniture Store.

* * *

HIGHLINES: The creeks are running, land is being turned, and a lot of guano is moving towards the fields. If the wind will subside before all the topsoil blows into the next state, folks stand a chance of planting crops under ideal conditions.—"Bub" Lang in The Omega News.

We know of no case where the church steeple fell on a worshipper, so you can go to church next Sunday if this is what has been keeping you away.—Jim Chism Jr. in The Pelham Journal.

Said the judge to the defendant, "I am going to give you the maximum punishment. I am not going to send you to our nice jail. I am going to let you go free and worry about taxes, politics, war, unemployment, traffic and the high cost of living just like the rest of us."—Bernice McCullar in The Stewart-Webster Journal.

Fascell Denounces Segregation Resolution

Herald

By AL NEUHARTH
Herald Staff Writer

WASHINGTON—Rep. Dante Fascell of Miami called the Dixiecrats' proposed resolution on segregation mere "chest thumping" without a solution Saturday and said he will not go along with it.

Several other Florida congressmen said they are still undecided whether to sign the decree which condemns the Supreme Court for its integration rulings. P. 2-A

Most of them, however, were expected to sign it before it is presented to Congress on Monday. Sun. 3-11-56

Selected congressmen, including Rep. Robert L. F. (Bob) Sikes of Florida's third district, were secretly circulating copies Saturday collecting signatures. Miami, Fla.

Sponsors of the movement, which originated in the Senate, said they are hopeful of getting near-unanimous support from Southern delegations. They predicted 100 signers.

The still-secret resolution, which was first reported in The Miami Herald last Thursday, has become one of the hottest political topics on Capitol Hill.

Many Southerners, including Sens. Spessard L. Holland and George A. Smathers of Florida, balked at "inflamatory" language in the original draft.

It has since been toned down, but Smathers said it still "denounces the Supreme Court in strong language."

Both Smathers and Holland

FASCELL

SIKES

now apparently are among the 19 senators who have signed the final dratt.

There has never been any disagreement among Florida congressmen on the basic issue of segregation. All are on record as being strongly opposed to integration of the races.

But the differences lie in the approaches to be used in trying to meet the touchy issue.

HOLLAND

SMATHERS

Fascell said, "I feel this is a problem which the people can solve only with calm, logical reasoning. I dont believe the resolution will accomplish anything, except maybe fan the public emotion."

Rep. Paul Rogers of West Palm Beach said, "I think I will sign it," although he indicated he would do so with some reluctance.

Rogers said he feels the school integration situtaion "is a matter of state jurisdiction, rather than a field for federal interference."

Rep. W. C. (Bill) Cramer of St. Petersburg, Florida's only Republican in Congress, said he has not yet seen the draft. Those close to him predicted he will sign it.

No copies of the resolution have been made public, but unofficial sources said the final draft does not include any reference to "interposition" as a means of fighting the Supreme Court rulings.

The movement began with the "hard core" of the Dixie senators, including James Eastland and John C. Stennis of Mississippi; Strom Thurmond of South Carolina; Richard B. Russell and Walter F. George of Georgia; and Sam J. Ervin Jr. of North Carolina.

'FOREIGN POLICY' NEEDED

Journal & Constitution

Georgia-Alabama Relations Are Bad

Atlanta, Ga. P. 15-E

Sun. 3-18-56

By M. L. ST. JOHN

GEORGIANS ARE more concerned than ever about foreign relations. Sen. George heads the Senate's Foreign Relations Committee. Former Gov. Talmadge, preparing to oppose Sen. George for re-election, is criticizing the nation's foreign relations policies.

M. L. St. John's column appears regularly in the daily Atlanta Constitution.

It, therefore, is interesting to see what is happening to Georgia's own "foreign relations." This state's dealings with its neighboring states are becoming somewhat muddled.

ALABAMA DISPUTE

During the past week, Gov. Griffin sought to intervene in a segregation dispute within the State of Alabama. His wrists were slapped by Gov. Jim Folsom. The Georgia governor offered to guarantee personally the education of a boy whom the University of Alabama expelled for attacking college officials in the segregation dispute and for leading a demonstration against a Negro student (who also was expelled). Gov. Griffin recalled that no one was expelled from Georgia Tech for demonstrating against him. Gov. Folsom said the Georgia governor was aiding "mobology" in Alabama. Gov. Griffin declined to comment on Gov. Folsom's statement.

The official relationship between Georgia and Alabama might be said to be a little strained.

CRACKS AT TENNESSEE

However, Gov. Griffin's move in Alabama was quiet compared with the remarks made by Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and chairman John Sammons Bell about Tennessee policies. Mr. Bell was unusually vicious in his comments when Sen. Estes Kefauver announced his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination and when Gov. Frank Clement was mentioned as a possible running mate for Adlai Stevenson. Mr. Cook told Tennessee how it should deal with its segregation problems. Gov. Clement hadn't requested Mr. Cook's advice.

When they returned from a meeting of Southern Governors in Virginia some time ago, Roy Harris was unhappy because no other Southern governor was willing to go as far as Gov. Griffin in the battle against the United States Supreme Court's antisegregation decision.

Georgia's relations with other Southern states have varied over the years. Gov. Ed Rivers was a founder of the Southern Governors Conference, seeking to unite the South in its efforts to improve itself and to erase discriminatory freight rates. Gov. Ellis Arnall didn't have much to do with the Southern Governors Conference. Instead, he carried Georgia's fight for freight rate equality directly to the Supreme Court. Gov. Herman Talmadge worked closely with the conference and was chairman of the Southern Governors organization.

LINDER'S FIGHT

Georgia's associations with her neighbors has been good and bad at the same time, with some elective officials warring on other states while the administration was friendly to its neighbors. For instance, former Commissioner of Agriculture Tom Linder had a long running fight with the state of Tennessee when he refused to recognize their dairy inspections. He also irritated Alabama, South Carolina and Florida from time to time with his wall around Georgia.

Georgia's dealings with her neighbors have improved, though. Commissioner of Agriculture Phil Campbell has removed some of the barriers. And the state of Georgia has acted to cripple the "marriage mills" on the Georgia-Tennessee line, where "quickie" marriages resulted in filled divorce courts in Chattanooga.

Yes, Georgia's "foreign relations" are muddled right now, with good and bad exchanges between this state and its neighbors. Perhaps the friendly Secretary of State Ben Fortson Jr. should be given the added duty of working out a "foreign policy" for Georgia.

Just Count Them

The Daily Oklahoman

WE WERE NOT aware that the country had such an amazing number of coronary experts until whole battalions of Democratic congressmen began to point out that all of the experts who treated Eisenhower were completely and hopelessly wrong. Nevertheless and notwithstanding, if we should acquire a pain in the ticker, we believe that we would call a doctor instead of a congressman.

The Race Issue And Instinct

Edward Fike, editor of the Rocky Mount (N.C.) Evening Telegram, reports in an editorial about a conversation he had with one of the area's most distinquished citizens on the race question.

What this citizen said was so impressive, according to Mr. Fike, that he invited him to put it in writing.

However, we are told the distinguished citizen, for professional reasons, declined and so Editor Fike had to put his thoughts down in his own words.

Afro-American 9-2

THIS IS WHAT, in brief, he said:

1. That what colored people really want ultimately is social equality and interracial marriage, and
2. That the white people resist integration because it is contrary to their instincts.

Baltimore, Md.

He defined 'instincts' as something that is natural, existing, cannot be killed, and is difficult to control.

Sat. 1-14-56

It's small wonder that any man who makes such absurb statements, whether he is distinguished or not, would hesitate to sign his name to them because they are absolutely false.

385

There is a story of two boys, one white and one colored watching a locomotive go by pulling a long line of passenger cars.

The white boy turned to the colored boy and said: "Don't you wish you were white so you could run that train?"

And the colored boy answered: "I would like to run that train black as I am."

* * * *

ANYONE WHO says the object of integrated schools is intermarriage is crazy.

The object of integrated schools is the best possible education for both races. The colored boy wants the best education available free of penalties because of accident of birth.

Moreover, as a citizen of the United States, he has a right to the use of public institutions.

Intermarriage is furthest from his mind and the minds of his parents. Besides, marriage is a personal matter.

There are many white persons who would not want their children to intermarry with other white persons. There are millions of white persons who would not invite millions of other white persons into their homes.

Colored people are equally as discriminating.

* * * *

NOW AS TO the matter of instincts.

Instincts go back to the earliest period of mankind when man was a barbarian dressed in animal skins.

Take the first law of nature—the instinct of self-preservation. Few would argue that that is an instinct which should not be modified and regulated.

And it has been modified by religion which states that we are to regard our brothers as ourselves.

Our heroes are those who have sacrified their lives for others, who have overcome the natural instinct of self-preservation, and have given their all for the common good.

Our natural instincts include hatred, greed, jealousy, avarice—all of the human impluses which we commonly call sin.

The individual who has the better control of these instincts is the individual who is the most civilized.

The civilized person in these days is the one who draws a circle and brings everyone in.

The person who is unquestionably an unhappy hangover from the barbaric period is the one who draws a circle and keeps everyone but members of his own little tribe out.

He's lost, a misfit and out of place in this bright, new era of 1956.

He Proves Our Case

Thomas R. Waring, editor of the Charleston (S.C.) News and Courier, presuming to speak for white Southerners, outlines five reasons in the current Harper's magazine, why white parents oppose desegregation of public schools.

He says first that it would be bad because of health, arguing that incidence of venereal disease is much greater among colored people than among white.

Afro-American

But he neglects to state that the incidence is no greater among a certain class of colored people than among white people of the same economic status.

Secondly, he complains that the master-servant relationship is still the rule rather than the exception in the South, neglecting to observe that that's no sound argument for its continuance in the future.

Baltimore, Md.

His third complaint that one colored child in three is illegitimate is on its face a questionable statistic, but even if true is no worse than in Sweden or France.

He ignores the more important and undisputable fact that there are millions of colored families with no illegitimate children.

Sat. 1-14-56

His fourth charge that the crime rate is higher among colored people overlooks the fact that our own country's crime rate is higher than Great Britain's, Germany's or Liberia's.

And further that at one time in this country the crime rate was highest among the Italians, the Poles, the Irish and every other minority group which was disadvantaged.

And finally, Waring asserts that the average colored child in Southern schools is two grades behind the average white child of the same age.

Ignored is the fact that for generations $70 per year was spent by Mr. Waring's South Carolina on the average white child's education while $6 was alloted for the average colored child's instruction.

The average colored child, under such an inequitous system is doing exceptionally well to be only two grades behind her more fortunate white school rival.

But more revealing than this is the proven fact that the average Southern white child is a grade behind the average Northern child, white or colored!

Here then, by his own thesis, whether it was his intention to do so or not, Editor Waring proves exactly what the Supreme Court said on May 17, 1954 and repeated on May 31, 1955.

That is that segregation is harmful to both races, is unconstitutional, and therefore must be eliminated.

BIAS BOARD HEAD URGES EQUALITY

Times

C. S. Abrams Outlines Policy of Promoting Complaints to End Discrimination

Mon. 1-9-56

Charles S. Abrams, chairman of the New York State Committee Against Discrimination, said yesterday that the commission should have the added function of promoting equality.

In common with similar agencies in sixteen states, Mr. Abrams said, the commission should promote equality "as an affirmative policy" in addition to being a policing agency against discrimination.

The former State Ren Administartor spoke at the annual conference of the Workmen's Circle Division of the Jewish Labor Committee at the New School for Social Research, 66 West Twelfth Street.

New York

Mayor Wagner, addressing the same meeting, said that the world, the nation and the city should wipe out the last vestiges of discrimination. The city, particularly, can not hold its head high "if we find even one little particle of discrimination," he declared.

Group's Policies Outlined

Mr. Abrams, who has been in his new office three week, made his first policy statement at the meeting. He made these points:

¶The commission cannot rely solely on the 350 formal complaints it receives each year. It should go out into the field, find where discrimination exists and then deal with its elimination.

Mon. 1-9-56

¶The commission should initiate investigations and complains directly. Quoting Governor Harriman to the effect that the winning of the "cold war" itself might depend on eliminating discrimination in employment, housing, education, public accomodation and other areas, he said the Governor had recommended this extension of the commission's authority last year and to the current legislature.

¶The commission should assume responsibility of minority problems in all its facets. Even where it has no power to act, it should make violations known so that they can be corrected.

¶Cooperation with city-sponsored programs and city agencies in human relations should be encouraged.

¶Industry-wide investigations should be instituted where conditions indicate discriminations.

¶Discrimination in publicly assisted housing is responible for creating a huge gulf between city and suburb and also for overcrowding and high rents within the cities.

¶Complains where violations occur should be encouraged as part of a program of greater public information.

Mr. Abrams called New York City's slums among the worst in the world. He said it was "about time that this problem, which lies at the root of discrimination, juvenile delinquency and inter-class tensions."

Declare War On Supreme Court

Defender

Sat. 1-7-56

MEMPHIS — Die-hard racists from 12 southern states, including a governor, several former governors, U. S. Senators and Representatives, met here last week to plot a revolt against the United States Supreme Court.

The new group, set up to fight racial integration calls itself the Federation for Constitutional Government.

Among those holding membership in the new organization are: Sen. James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi; Judge Tom P. Brady of Mississippi, author of a book called "Black Monday"; former Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi, the 1948 States Rights candidate for vice president; Herman Talmadge, the former governor of Georgia; and former Govs. Sam H. Jones of Louisiana and Coke Stevenson of Texas;

THURMOND PRESENT

Also Sen. J. Strom Thurmond, former governor of South Carolina; Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia; Reps. John B. Williams of Mississippi; F. Edward Hebert of Louisiana; James C. Davis of Georgia; L. Mendel Rivers of South Carolina and Watkins M. Abbitt and William M. Tuck of Virginia, former Virginia governor;

Chicago Ill.

Leander Perez of Louisiana, district attorney of Plaquemines and St. Bernard parishes; Fred Jones of Inverness, Miss., and W. J. Simmons of Jackson, Miss., two of the founding members of the infamous White citizens Councils.

Senator Eastland, in a speech before the meeting, called on the group to fight "the NAACP, the Supreme Court and the CIO." Some 100 persons were elected to the group's advisory board.

COMMITTEE TO RULE

Control of the organization was put in the hands of an executive committee of 12 members, one for each state represented.

Chairman of the executive committee is John U. Barr, a New Orleans industrialist. Barr is giving up his work to devote full time to the federation.

Defender

Barr reportedly said that the new group would work to "coordinate" the efforts of such state groups as the White Citizens Councils of Mississippi.

The councils were formed shortly after the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, barring segregation in public schools.

Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook, a rabid racist, said he was attending the secret meeting "just as an observer."

Observers also were present from New York, New Jersey and Illinois.

Meanwhile, in Washington, the Justice department announced it is giving "careful attention" to activities of the Citizens Councils.

Assistant Attorney Gen. Warren Olney, III, in charge of criminal prosecutions, and Arthur B. Caldwell, chief of the civil rights section, gave this information to the Jewish Labor Committee of New York City. The committee recently asked for an investigation of the councils.

In Jackson, Miss., Gov. Hugh White called the Justice department a "bunch of meddlesome jackasses," commenting "They can't do a thing. I'm not very interested."

A Challenge To 'Nullification'

BY ALFRED MYNDERS
(In The Chattanooga Times)

Times 2-12-56

The "right of interposition" which Georgia's Legislature will be asked to assert this week, on the segregation question, envisions a federal constitutional amendment to test the Supreme Court's right to order desegregation in the public schools. The fact that Thomas Jefferson helped draft a Kentucky resolution of interposition and that James Madison did the same thing in Virginia has been widely cited as justification for the present move in Georgia, Virginia and several other states. As pointed out yesterday, those two resolutions were in protest against the infamous Alien and Sedition Laws which had been enacted by Congress. Jefferson and Madison were defending the constitutional rights of freedom of the press and freedom of speech for all Americans, not merely for those in separate states.

The resolutions written by Jefferson and Madison are being widely circulated to uphold the present "interposition" movement. Those resolutions were written in 1798. They were not pushed because the Alien and Sedition Laws were allowed to expire.

Birmingham

THE NEXT GREAT crisis on this question came in 1830, and it was the subject of perhaps the greatest debate ever held in the Senate, that between Daniel Webster of Massachusetts and Robert Young Hayne of South Carolina, both great orators. Presiding over the Senate was the vice president, John C. Calhoun of South Carolina, secret author of the Carolina nullification movement. Carolina was in revolt against the "tariff of abominations."

The doctrine was that a state had a right to nullify a tariff law or any other law which it felt was unconstitutional.

There is not space to review that great debate. Hayne cited the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions of 1798: "Mr. President, the South Carolina doctrine is the republican doctrine of 1798; it was maintained by Kentucky and Virginia in the worst of times . . ."

Ala.

The eloquent Hayne cited the anger of his home state against the tariff. "Sir, if acting on the high motives—if, animated by that ardent love of liberty which has always been the most prominent trait of Southern character—we should be hurried beyond the bounds of a cold and calculating prudence, who is there, with one noble and generous sentiment in his bosom, that would not be disposed, in the language of Burke, to exclaim, 'You must pardon something to the spirit of liberty.'"

THE GREAT Webster in reply, cited that the Constitution, framed by the people, declares that the Constitution is the supreme law of the land. He further pointed out that the Constitution declares that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States." The Supreme Court cannot rule on the Constitution except in cases brought before it, and that was true in the segregation matter.

Webster's great speech ended with Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable."

The South Carolina crisis continued. In 1832, President Andrew Jackson actually feared insurrection. He declared "Nullification means insurrection and war. I will meet it at the threshold and have the leaders arraigned for treason."

He sat down with Livingston, his secretary of state, to prepare his answer to the threat of war in South Carolina. They wrote the Proclamation against Nullification addressed to the people of South Carolina.

BUT BEFORE completing it, President Jackson asked Livingston to carry it to the father of the Constitution, James Madison. The aged Madison, the same man who had helped Virginia write its resolution of interposition 34 years previously, was deeply aroused. He condemned the Carolina Doctrine. "This colossal heresy has gone too far. It must be stopped." He had already been told that the Nullifiers were quoting the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions he and Jefferson had written 30 years before.

James Madison made a number of changes in the Jackson draft, and on the following day, Jackson propounded that famous proclamation: "The Federal Union must be preserved." He declared: "I consider the power to annul a law of the United States, assumed by one state, incompatible with the existence of the union, contradicted expressly by the letter of the Constitution, unauthorized by its spirit, inconsistent with every principle on which it was founded, and destructive of the great object for which it was formed."

Henry Clay began pushing for a compromise tariff, and that finally resulted in the end of Carolina's Nullification battle.

James Madison was the author of Virginia's "resolution of interposition" in 1798, which is being so widely distributed in the South today. He was also the revising consultant in Andrew Jackson's proclamation against nullification in 1832. He was consistent in both cases, because he believed in the Constitution which he had done so much to create.

STEVENSON URGES EISENHOWER CALL BIRACIAL PARLEY

Times Jno. 2-28-56

He Proposes Southern White and Negro Leaders Meet to Allay Rising Tensions

P. 1

VISITS CAMPAIGN OFFICE

New York, N.Y.

Repeats He Will Not Try to Win Delegates Here, but Implies Friends May

38a

By DOUGLAS DALES

Adlai E. Stevenson proposed last night that President Eisenhower summon a meeting of Southern Negro and white leaders in an effort to allay mounting racial tensions.

The former Illinois Governor and candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination made the suggestion at an interview during his first visit to the Stevenson for President headquarters at 270 Park Avenue.

Questioned on whether his remarks on civil rights at Hartford, Conn., last Saturday represented a clarification or qualification of earlier remarks on the subject, Mr. Stevenson declared:

"I didn't change my stand in the least at Hartford or at any place else."

Perturbed by Tension

With respect to his proposal for a biracial conference of Southern leaders under Presidential auspices, Mr. Stevenson said:

"I for one have been very much disturbed by mounting tension in the South. In order to avoid any possibility of further disorder or further damage to the nation's reputation abroad, I think the situation merits the prompt attention of the President.

"The office of President of the United States has great moral influence and great prestige and I think the time has come when that influence should be used by calling together white and Negro leaders from the areas concerned in the South to explore ways and means of allaying these rising tensions."

Mr. Stevenson added that such a conference would "strengthen the hands of the thoughtful and the responsible leaders of bath races by whom such conspicuous progress has been made desegregation and in maintaining good relations with the races."

The candidate said he thought the prestige of the President could curb the tensions in the South and added: "It should be exerted before the situation gets any more serious."

Mr. Stevenson flew here yesterday from Boston, where he had sepnt Sunday with his two sons, Adlai and John Fell Stevenson, who are students at Harvard.

He said his visit did not import any change in the plans for promoting his Presidential candidacy in New York State. He has no intention of trying to promote convention delegates pledged to him, but he pointed out that any decision on that subject would be one for the State Stevenson for President organization to decide.

The candidate expressed the hope, however, that there would be no contentious situations that would make for ill will.

The New York Stevenson Committee, headed by Thomas K. Finletter and Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, indicated at the time of its formation earlier this year that it would not seek delegates in the June 5 primary in opposition to regularly endorsed delegates who will be favorable to Governor Harriman.

Asked to comment upo na remark by Senator Estes Kefauver Sunday that Mr. Stevenson was "not combating directly, but back-handedly" in the New Hampshire primary, Mr. Stevenson declared that he was surprised at the Tennessee Senator's "sense of sportsmanship that would allow him to make such a statement."

P. 22

Senator Kefauver is actively campaigning for delegates in the March 13 primary in New Hampshire. A slate of delegates favorable to Mr. Stevenson has been entered, but not at his request.

Mr. Stevenson said it was a "hard" decision to make because no conscientious man can think of the office as an ordinary burden or a part-time job.

Mr. Stevenson arrived at his headquarters at 6:30 P. M. and spent a half hour touring the offices and shaking hands, posing and chatting with many of the 300 volunteers working with the committee.

Appearing before television cameras, the candidate was introduced to Lincoln Kaye, 8 years old, of 82-25 209th Street, Queens Village, Queens, who recently had pledged his support to Mr. Stevenson and tendered a $2 contribution.

The boy had written that he had in common with the candidate an admiration for Abraham Lincoln and that "as President I think you will be just as successful and important."

Will Not Visit State

Mr. Stevenson said he had not entered the preferential poll in New Hampshire, had not visited the state and had no intention of going there.

In Boston he said on the same subject: "If my friends chose to support me in preference to Senator Kefauver in New Hampshire, I don't think it's subterfuge."

Assuming that he is the Democratic nominee again and is opposed by President Eisenhower, Mr. Stevenson said his optimism for winning was based on the fact that "the people have learned a great deal in the last three years."

As to the decision facing Mr. Eisenhower on a secon dterm, which many expect will be made this week, Mr. Stevenson said the President would have to decide whether he has the strength —mental, emotional and physical —"for the hardest job on earth."

Two Negro, 12 Whites Editors Give View On Segregation

Informer p. 3 Sat. 3-3-56

Houston Tex.

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. —(NNPA)— The explosive situation at the University of Alabama during three days of rioting on the campcs was "almost an eyewink from murder."

THIS STATMENT WAS MADE by Buford Boone, publisher of The Tuscaloosa News in copyrighted interviews in the U. S. News and World Report, an independent weekly news magazine published at Washington.

The magazine interviewed fourteen southern editors, including two colored editors, to get their views concerning desegregation because of their closeness to the problem.

Jeff Bennett, assistant to Dr Oliver C Carmichael, president of the University of Alabama, had reported earlier that the mob which engaged in three days of rioting on the campus was "trying to kill" Miss Authurine J Lucy, Birmingham secretary, who was the first colored person ever admitted to the school. Mr Bennett's report was made to Gov James E Folsom.

In two suits filed in Birmingham after she had been suspended from classes by the university's board of trustees, Miss Lucy charged that university officials intentionally permitted the rioting and used it as an excuse to bar her from attending classes.

Dr Carmichael called her charges "untrue, unwarranted and outrageous."

Miss Lucy was admitted to the university by order of the Federal District Court at Birmingham. The trustee board suspended her from classes "until further notice" on the pretext that her suspension was necessary to protect students and faculty members.

HEARINGS FEB 29

Her suits for reinstatement and for domitory and dining accommodations on the university campus are due to come up before Federal District Judge H Hobart Grooms in Birmingham on Feb 29.

MR BOONE INTEVIEWED

In the magazine interview, Mr Boone was asked: "Is there danger of violence if moves are made to enforce the decision against segregation?"

A. Well, of course, we had the situation here in Tuscaloosa which was almost an eyewink away from murder.

I mean by that that just a little bit of difference in some situations could have caused us to have the terrible weight of a murder on our conscience here in this community and in the State of Alabama.

We were extremely fortunate, we were extremely lucky. But make no mistake of it— the mob on the University of Alabama campus would have killed this girl if they could have gotten their hands on her.

Q. Is there a feeling there that this mob led primarily by students, or that perhaps the real instigators were from outside?

A. There are people connected with the university who would emphasize the outside influences. I think they do so quite honestly, but I think, also with some prejudice and some nature desire to defend the campus.

The best information I've been able to get from impartial observers, including representatives of our newspaper who were out there, and from law-enforcement officers, is that the major difficulties in every single instance came from the students on the university campus.

OUTSIDE ELEMENTS

There were outside elements and they undoubtedly were present and they were undoubtedly important but if it had not been for the students and the fact that what started out as a demonstration with some great element of good-naturedness to it— if that had not gotten out of control by reason of the fact that there was no aggressive effort to control the mob, I don't believe that we would have had the situation that we did have.

Mr Boone also was asked: "Why is feeling so intense on this issue? Is the objection to mixed schools largely on social grounds?"

A. The objection is primarly based upon custom and upon tradition. And the first thing the average Southerner will mention when he gets down into a serious discussion of this situation is intermarriage, which is his great fear in this situation— that, if there is a breakdown of segregation, the constant association of children in schools will break down the natural resistance which people who are different have to each other, from a marriage standpoint, and that there will be intermarriages in this area, and that the white blood will be contaminated.

Now, I'm giving you, I would say, the average Southern view in that regard.

Q. How long, in your opinion, will it be before the separate schools are ended.

A.... I think the situation is that we are in a state of slow change; that slow change occurs, and then we reach a situation such as occurred here at the University of Alabama, where something I would refer to as a "jump" has to be made.

And that jump is more dramatic than the slow change, and it brings more resistance, more of an outcry.

I think most of those jumps are going to come during a period of the next several years--- primarily and almost exclusively as a result of court action. I mean by jumps such things as opening a specific school to Negro students.

Q. On the question of the growth of Citizens' Councils in the South, is that an important development? Do you think it is, in effect, a revival of the Ku Klux Klan?

A. The growth and development of Citizens' Councils is a very important facet to this situation, but I would not compare the councils to the Ku Klux Klan, because the Ku Klux Klan operated primarily as cowards, behind hoods and under cover of darkness.

The Citizens' Council groups are operating out in the open and the members consider that what they are doing, in effect, is establishing an organization which will work for the same purposes in behalf of the white people as the NAACP is working for in behalf of the Negroes.

GREENE'S VIEWS

Percy Greene, editor of The Jackson (Miss.) Advocate, attributed the intense feeling in the South on the question of mixed schools to the belief that the No. 1 ambition of colored people is association with whites.

Greene said segregated schools will continue in Missisippi so long as colored leadership "allows the impression to be abroad that going to school with white people is the main objective of Negroes, and just as long as the Negro is denied the right to vote and the right to political participation."

GROVER C HALL, JR, editor of The Montgomery Adviser, said race relations in Alabama "have degenerated in a saddening way." In Montgomery where colored people are boycotting the buses, he said, "you've got the whites drawn up in one group and the colored in the other group."

ADVOCATES A BOYCOTT

The Tuskegee Civic Association is advocating a boycott of all white merchants in Macon County, who are opposing the right of colored people to register and vote. Tuskegee Institute is located in Macon County.

As a sign of changing political attitude, he cited Gov James E Folsom, who is criticizing "outside agitators" for the rioting on the University of Alabama campus.

"Now, the significance of this is that Folsom has been the only major Southern demagogue in our history, with the short-time exception of Tom Watson in Georgia, who has ever been able to harness the so-called red necks and the colored voters," Mr Hall said.

"It's been an extraordinary performance in American politics that up to now he's been able to keep both these elements very happily in the same vest pocket."

Mr Hall believes there would be violence if efforts were made to enforce a decision to desegregate the schools. He called the hypocrisy of the North "another very grievous thing to us." He said the people in Alabama "just don't mean to desegregate schools at all."

BLAMES NAACP

James G Stahlman, publisher of The Nashville Banner, blames the NAACP for the situation in the South more than any other agency.

"The surest way to revive any semblance of the Klan is for the NAACP to continue to kick up a furor," he said. "But the Citizens' Council represent a much higher element socially and intellectually and economically than you would normally expect to participate in the Klan movement."

Thomas Waring, editor of The Charles News and Courier, said the intense feeling in the South on the issue of mixed schools is due to "an underlying fear of eventual amalgamation of the races— meaning miscegenation, intermarriage, or whatever you want to call it."

HODDING CARTER, editor of the Delta Democrat-Times, Greenville, Miss, said he does not think "there is going to be any meaningful integration in Mississippi for years.

"Folks were a little stunned at first" over the Supreme Court decision against segregated schools, said Mr Carter.

"But as for the opposition to mixed schools, I think you don't get over something that has been not only sustained by the court but is part of the folkways of the white people down here for a hundred years."

C. A. Scott, editor of The Atlanta Daily World, believes that segregated schools could end overnight.

"Technically," he said, "it would be ended, but actually it is a matter of time. As long as the present pattern of residence prevails, it's going to be a long time before there will be mass mixing--even any degree of mixing, I'd say--even if the segregation laws are discontinued and, of course, actual integration begins."

MADE PROGRESS

CHARLES E GREEN, editor of THE AUSTIN AMERICAN-STATESMAN said "in the past 10 years in the State of Texas a great change has been, and progress has been made... And we are pretty proud of the way that we have made our progress" toward better schools and equal opportunity...

He said progress has not been slowed down since the Supreme Court decision, but if enforcement is too rapid "it could set things back."

C A MCKNIGHT, editor of The Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, said not for at least a generation will there be desegregated public schools in parts of the South.

MARK F ETHRIDGE, publisher of The Louisville Courier-Journal, said he believes segregated public schools could be ended in the Deep South in from five to.

VIRGINUS DABNEY, editor of the editorial page of The Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch, said he believes race relations in the South are worse since the Supreme Court decision and progress toward equal opportunity slowed down.

Asked how long he thought it might be before segregated schools are ended in the south, he replied:

"I haven't the remotest idea, to tell you the truth. I think it will be a long time.

Mr Dabney admitted that colored students have been admitted to "white" colleges and universities in Virginia without incident, and that some are staying in the dormitories at the University of Virginia this year.

Gallup Poll—

Does The Southern Negro Really Want Integration?

Commercial Appeal
Tues. 2-28-56 P. 1

By JOHN M. FENTON

Gallup Poll Staff Representative

PRINCETON, N.J., Feb. 27.—The Supreme Court's historic integration decision has directly confronted the 40 million people of the South with a problem as grave and unsettling as they have ever had to face.

Memphis, Tenn.

On the one hand, an overwhelming majority of the South's 30 million whites—as reported yesterday—are bitterly opposed to the idea of integration with the Negro.

On the other hand, there are the South's 10 million Negroes. How do they feel on this vital issue? Do they really want to be integrated?

The Negroes in the South share a common desire to give their children the best possible education and to obtain for their race the treatment which they consider to be in keeping with "the American way of life."

But thoughts of integration with the South's vehemently anti-integration whites have caused many a Negro to view with misgivings the possible repercussions when, and if, the time comes to "mix in."

Confused And Wary

In addition, just the idea of such a radical departure — for both races—from an accepted Southern way of life has left many Negroes honestly perplexed, confused, and wary of precipitate action.

Recently, this reporter spent some time in the Southern states, talking to persons from all segments of the Southern population and working with local reporters from the institute's field staff. We were seeking to determine the "why" of the South's feelings on the segregation problem.

What does the Southern Negro want? Results of our interviewing show that by a three-to-two ratio he wants to have an integrated educational system. About one Negro in nine at this time is undecided.

Negro sentiment is more strongly in favor of ending segregation in waiting rooms, buses and trains. The recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling which outlawed segregated travel between states is approved of today—among Negroes—by a vote of 6-to-1. Only about one Negro in 25 is undecided on this point.

Commercial Appeal
Tues. 2-28-56
Memphis, Tenn.

The questions that we asked and their results:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

SOUTHERN NEGROES ONLY
Approve	53%
Disapprove	36
Undecided	11

"The Interstate Commerce Commission has ruled that racial segregation on trains, buses and in public waiting rooms must end. Do you approve or disapprove of this ruling?"

SOUTHERN NEGROES ONLY
Approve	82%
Disapprove	14
Undecided	4

In determining the Negro viewpoint, we had conversations with hundreds of Negroes in all parts of the South. Negroes living on farms and in the cities were given a chance to express their views.

To make sure that a true picture of Negro opinion was obtained, the Institute assigned both white and Negro reporters to work on this phase of the study.

Idealism and Practicality

Behind the opinions on each side of the picture—the case for integration as well as that for continued segregation—there is a mixture of idealism and practicality.

Those Negroes who favor integration do so mainly for what one might term "idealistic" reasons—the idea that "all men are created equal" or that "We were all made alike, weren't we?".

"God created everyone equal and Negroes should have the same educational opportunities as white people," said a 22-year-old wife of a hospital attendant in Tallahassee, Fla. Commenting on the ICC's ruling, she went on, "My money is just as good as the whites and I should be allowed to sit where I please."

Other Negroes who favor integration have the opinion that such a move would help their children get a better education or generally increase the Negro's material comforts. Their viewpoint, by and large, is based on "practical" reasons.

"I'm for it," stated a 64-year-old chauffeur from Charleston, S. C., "I think the children will get a better education. As it is now in the South, the colored children don't get as good as the white."

A 52-year-old Atlanta furniture assembler had the following to say about segregation in trains, buses and waiting rooms: "I travel a good bit and some places you go there are no places for colored people. Why, it's a terrible pressure. Our street car service is an example of what we have to go through. There just seems no sense to it."

Fear For Children

The case for continued segregation in the schools—a view held by roughly one Negro in three—again has this mixture of idealism and practicality somewhere in its background.

The main difference is that in the vote for integration, the idealism predominates, whereas in the vote for segregation, practicality in the prime reason. In other words, the possibility of Negro children receiving unequal treatment from white teachers, the threat of trouble and violence when the schools are mixed, and—in some cases—the good chance that most Negro teachers would lose their jobs.

"I wouldn't like it," said a 62-year-old widow from Raleigh, N. C. "Why? Because it would be dangerous — we've never mixed before. I like our way of schools and I think the white people would rise up against it. I think the whites seem to have something against us."

"I think it would throw the colored teachers out of work," commented the wife of a TVA employe in Tuscumbia, Ala. "I just don't think the mixed races would get along together."

'Won't Have A Chance

Fear over how the Negro children would fare in mixed schools is evident in the views of a 55-year-old farm housewife from the little town of Cotton Plant, Ark. (pop. 1,838)

"I think the colored children should stay in their own race. If all the children were to go to school together, I don't think they will get along. The white children will tramp on the colored children and the colored children won't have a chance to learn like they should. I don't think the white teachers will take pains and teach the colored children."

Behind the vote for the status quo there is also a small amount of idealism—a desire to "keep things as they always was"—which is seen in the following viewpoint of a school teacher from Augusta, Ga.:

"I'm against it. I have never lived in any other section of the country—I was born and reared here. There are certain things I'm accustomed to and I feel we have done pretty well so far."

One also encounters some Negroes who are truly "on the fence" over the question of segregation. The housewife of a shipyard worker in Jacksonville said to me: "It's so hard to say how I feel—the Lord will just have to fix it. I've never been mixed up with white people. I was always black and I figured to stay in the black race. I've never been mixed up and I just don't know how it would come out."

ICC Ruling Different Story

As the results indicate, the opposition to integration comes primarily in the matter of mixed schools. On the question of ending segregation in waiting rooms and on public conveyances, only one Negro in seven is opposed to such a move.

A 46-year-old farmer who lives just outside of Plain Dealing, La., (pop. 1,321) disapproves of the Supreme Court ruling because "I feel like we are not quite ready for it. At first the young people—in both races—would do quite a bit of wrong things." But in the matter of ending segregation in waiting rooms and on buses and trains, he approves. "I think then that the children will be guarded by their parents and it will work all right," he reasons.

HITS HYPOCRISY OF SEGREGATION FOES IN NORTH

Daily Journal Chicago Ill. Sat. 5-12-56

So. Carolina Governor Raps 'Propagandists'

Rivers' Bridge, S. C., May 11 (AP)—Northern advocates of racial integration were challenged today by Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina "to cast off their hypocrisy and accept the Negro into their communities, their institutions, and their families."

Timmerman called on "the integrationist to prove his sincerity" by supporting a program of voluntary migration of Negroes from the south to communities "where racial mixing is acceptable."

He said "a federal program of financial aid to enable those who want to mix to move" to other areas "would cost only a fraction" of the billions advocated for foreign aid.

Hits "Nosey North"

Timmerman spoke at the 80th annual Rivers' Bridge Confederate Memorial association ceremonies that commemorate a Civil war battle near here.

Calling that war the "war of northern aggression," Timmerman charged that its cause was not Negro slavery in the south but "the determination of Northern plutocrats to establish national control under which the policies of the north would determine the policies of the nation.

"Much has changed in the last 90 odd years," Timmerman continued, "but some things remain the same. The north continues to be prone to stick its nose into somebody's business, especially the business of the south, while ignoring and even promoting deplorable conditions in its own areas.

'Loud, Obnoxious, Untruthful'

"Northern propagandists are as loud, obnoxious, and untruthful today as the abolitionists a century ago. . ."

Timmerman said "the integrationist, like the abolitionist, is a hypocrite" because "he proclaims in the name of brotherly love that southern segregation is discrimination, while ignoring and cultivating deplorable conditions in his own area."

"The ghetto of Harlem, the lawless slums of Washington, the frequent—but frequently ignored—race riots in schools, parks, and playgrounds, the muggings and switchblade cuttings and 32 months of racial disorder in Chicago's Trumbull Park [housing development], all are models of those deplorable conditions," he continued.

"By comparison, the southern Negro has achieved the best record of lawful conduct of any member of his race in the nation."

Singles Out Oregon

Timmerman said that under a voluntary migration program "the state of Oregon could become a real model for the nation."

"I mention Oregon," he explained, "because its two United States senators [Morse and Neuberger, both Democrats] have been loudest in proclaiming the virtues of integration, and I assume they represent the views of their people.

"I also mention Oregon because I have advocated such a program for Oregon before, and I have received little complaint from the people of that state. . ."

Gettysburg, Pa., where President Eisenhower has a farm, "could become an eastern mecca of integration," Timmerman continued. "High officials in Washington could establish their homes there and enjoy the blessings that they advocate for other people."

"I challenge the northern leaders of both major parties to incorporate such a program in the platforms of the parties," he asserted.

Issue One of Principle

"I challenge the senior senator from Oregon [Morse] to advocate and support this voluntary program as a major plank in his platform for reelection."

He said he does not expect his challenges to be accepted because "the integrationist is a hypocrite."

He maintained that "the time has come for the south to assert its political strength" since "the current trend in national affairs clearly indicates that the south can expect little consideration unless the states of the south are willing to organize."

"The south needs to stand firm and insist that the Democratic party write a platform and provide a candidate that is acceptable to the south," he declared. "The real issue is one of principle. It is our right to determine for ourselves the course of our future and our lives. It is more personal than the underlying issue of the war of northern aggression."

Able And Willing

Advertiser 12-b

At times past, Herman Talmadge had seemed to exploit the prejudice against the Negro in an undue and disagreeable way. But in the circumstances of today—with the white South at bay and combining itself more and more into a solid mass to fend the rash onslaught—Talmadge is no longer a singular figure. He will be joined by more and more hitherto discreet or liberal Southern congressional figures, or else they will not continue to be congressional figures.

If the adventurers and dudes among the Northern abolitionists continue their red-eyed exertions, the time is not too distant when you won't be able to tell Senator Fullbright and Lister Hill from Talmadge.

—The Advertiser, May 10.

See now Pg. 1 of today's Advertiser. The thing above has come to pass, almost at a bound.

Every single one of Alabama's congressmen and senators has given it to The Advertiser in writing that he is ready to address Citizen Council rallies, the same as a P-TA, Eastern Star or plumbers' local.

This willingness to associate their names with a Citizen Council is newborn; so new, in fact, that it will surprise some Council leaders. They have encountered some cold shoulders up until now from congressmen.

★

THE open-for-business statement of Alabama's congressional delegation in today's Advertiser will undoubtedly send Council speaking invitations flying to Washington. Soon thereafter the congressmen and the Council audiences will have met.

After that, it will be hard for congressmen to evade membership in a Council.

★

LET THE Northern press and the national political leadership mark well who has now said he is prepared to lend his name to Council rallies.

Above all, there is Senator John Sparkman, who just four years ago was the Democratic nominee for vice president.

There is the lionized "liberal," Senator Lister Hill. He has just been elected to another six-year term without opposition. It cannot be said by Northern apologists that he has signed up to preserve his hide. The fact is, Senator Hill's record is pure on the preservation of segregation. He is orthodox Alabama and Dearborn, Mich., on this issue.

Moreover, by this act, the two senators and all the other congressmen know that they are offending something like 40,000 Negro voters in Alabama. But they have done it in response to a demanding public sentiment that was expressed by the annihilation of Folsom at the polls.

★

BUT THIS is only one recent, spectacular demonstration of the irreconcilable resistance of the white South that should be scrutinized by Northern editors and Democratic leaders.

The dreamers, not all of whom were Northerners, were so superficial in their insights as to suppose that "liberal" North Carolina and Tennessee were different from other Southern states.

It is now in the record that North Carolina and Alabama are marching in close order along the same resistance road and that a North Carolina politician can't hold office without becoming an engine of resistance to race mixing. See Congressman Cooley. See Senator W. Kerr Scott.

★

BEHOLD Tennessee. Kefauver has now gotten his. He failed to get his own state delegation to pledge his vote to him at the coming Chicago convention.

Consider Gov. Frank Clement's reversal. He is beginning to talk like Talmadge. He was ambitious for preferment by the national party, but seeing the handwriting in Tennessee, he made an orthodox Southern statement recently in Atlantic City at the Governors' Conference.

★

WHAT has been missing in the Citizen Council is brains.

Second-rate medievalists have been too much in evidence.

Their clumsiness and grotesqueries have repelled many whose insistence upon race separateness was the same.

Recruiting the congressmen is a major step in achieving respectability.

★

THE COUNCILS should identify themselves with a program of ungrudging, full and positive help to the Negro in achieving his destinies, apart.

Treasure Chest

Courier P.10 Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 7-28-56

IN ORDER to EXPLAIN why it is that so many people fail to rid themselves of the broken crockery of white supremacy, color caste, racial discrimination and prejudice, one has to UNDERSTAND that they often derive pleasure and satisfaction from hugging this "treasure."

Even the most ragged, IGNORANT and impoverished persons enjoy PERSONAL satisfaction and social status from feeling that they are "better than" somebody else.

Since it is IMPOSSIBLE for people to change their color and features, those who regard themselves as superior to them are assured of PERMANENT prestige, than which there is nothing more satisfying to PETTY individuals, and to those who PREY upon them.

The cold fact is that the United States' LACK of skin pigmentation is a social and economic ADVANTAGE regardless of intelligence or qualification, and the LESS wit and skill a white person has, the more desperately he clings to the ONLY asset he has—whiteness.

This is HIS great treasure which he holds FIERCELY to his breast, recognizing that without it he would be NOTHING in competition with numerous Negroes.

His LEADERS understand this all too well and play upon it to hold his allegiance and thus RETAIN their advantage.

By the same token, even light-colored people who are non-whites, derive smug SATISFACTION from being a few shades lighter than some of their neighbors, and thus looking down upon them.

This is a mighty SORRY treasure, and as individuals become better EDUCATED they find out HOW sorry it is and are willing to toss it aside for the REAL treaures of intellect, training and culture.

Unfortunately for our nation, and despite universal schooling, too FEW people have emerged from inferiority and fear.

BROWNELL SPEAKS OF CONSTITUTION

Times P.68

Says It Is 'Living Law' Must Prevail in Conflicts—Gets Fordham Degree

Jan. 2-12-56

Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. declared here yesterday that the Constitution was the country's "living law," even when it collided with state or Federal legislatures, and that the Supreme Court was its final interpreter. New York,

The Attorney General made the statement in a speech before the Fordham University Law Ilumi Association after he had received the university's honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

Some observers regarded the statement as having special pertinence because of the Supreme Court's decision last year directing desegregation of public schools and the resultant disturbances at the University of Alabama. However, Mr. Brownell declined to be drawn into any comment on this.

Mr. Brownell's speech, "Dual Sovereignty Under the Constitution," reviewed important historical decisions of the Supreme Court in dealing with conflicts between the states and the Federal Government.

Discussing the contributions of John Marshall, the third Chief Justice of the United States, Mr. Brownell declared that his "nationalism" had been "boldly and eloquently proclaimed in case after case." In Marshall's decisions, Mr. Brownell said, "we find the birth of those concepts of Federal sovereignty which were to contribute such vitality and strength to the infant nation."

"Perhaps the real core of Marshall's legacy," the Attorney General said, "lies in the view that although the Constitution is the supreme law of the land, it must not lose contact with the daily affairs and needs of its people; that it is living law, even when it collides with the will of the legislature, state of Federa; and that the judiciary, with the Supreme Court at its apex, is the natural and final interpreter of the Constitution."

Mr. Brownell told the 1,250 persons attending the association's luncheon in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel that there had been increasing understanding "that the national government and the states need not and should not be regarded as competitors for authority."

Flexibility Noted

"Rather," he continued, "wisdom has dictated that we recognize two levels of government cooperating with or complementing each other in meeting the demands upon both. Especially significant has been the increased recognition of the importance of state and local governments as essential and necessary elements in an effective system of government.

"Experience has shown that both in theory and in result this dual system of sovereignty possesses the necessary degree of flexibility to meet the crises of the present and future as successfully as it has met them in the past."

Mr. Brownell asserted that it seemed "quite clear that if we bring to our governmental system patience, understanding, and a will to act wisely and effectively, both a proper and effective balance will be maintained.

The Attorney General observed that judicial precedent afforded "many guides to a determination of what may or may not be undertaken by either the state or Federal Government or both."

He said that the country's most difficult economic, educational and social problems could be solved peacefully within its system of dual sovereignty.

During the luncheon, which marked the Fordham Law School's Golden Jubilee Celebration, the association's medal of achievement was presented to Louis Stein, president of Food Fair Stores, Inc. Mr. Stein, a Fordham alumnus, was cited for "outstanding achievement in the fields of law and business and for distinguished leadership in educational and community welfare activities."

38a 1956

GENERAL

Whom God Wishes to Destroy

Courier P.O. Sat. 4-14-56

OVER two and one-half milleniums ago, Euripides wrote: "Whom God wishes to destroy, he first makes mad."

Today we see CONFIRMATION of this sapient observation in the ACTION of a hundred Congressmen and Senators OPPOSED to the decision of the United States Supreme Court ordering public school desegregation.

These people are presumably VOICING the sentiments of their Southern constituents who UPHOLD racial segregation and discrimination as a "way of life," but FAIL to recognize that they are digging their own GRAVES.

It is a SAD circumstance because Southern white people (who are NOT unanimous on these questions) constitute only 30 per cent of the population of this country which otherwise APPROVES of what Dixie opposes.

ATTACKING the Supreme Court of the United States for rendering decisions which Southern extremists RESENT thus becomes a form of SUICIDE which only mad people would think they could afford.

These mad people MUST know that persistence in their campaign against the Supreme Court can only lead to their OWN destruction.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

There has to be some FINAL arbiter of disputes, some agency to INTERPRET the basic law of the land; and, if THAT is flouted, what is there left to make representative government MEANINGFUL?

The FUNDAMENTAL questions raised by the Supreme Court are NOT answered by a campaign of vilification and the tossing of rotten vegetables in the hallowed corridors.

The QUICKEST way to completely DESTROY the traditional South and all it stands for, is for it, in its MADNESS, to persist in its attacks upon the SYMBOL of the American system of justice.

Dixie's Negro: A Wasted Resource!

Advocate

From The Charlotte News

Broach the "Negro problem" to any group of Southerners today and tempers are likely to sizzle like fatback dropped in a hot skillet. But out of the emotional atmosphere surrounding this aged-in-anguish dilemma, a sobering fact emerges: The Negro is a part, both creator and creature, of Southern culture, for whom the region is responsible as for all other groups.

Even those who despise the Negro will admit, if reluctantly, that he is an important factor in Dixie's economy. What is not always admitted is the fact that he will contribute more to the economic well-being of the region as he receives better education, better political, economic and social opportunities.

Jackson, Miss.

The South, for better or for worse, is inhabited by roughly 10½ million Negroes. This figure represents a gigantic manpower potential. But it is fairly obvious throughout the Southern states that Negroes are not contributing what they should to Dixie. They are not contributing because full use is simply not being made of all this human wealth.

Sat. 4-14-56

The most regrettable aspect of the situation is the difficulty many intelligent Negroes have in securing a higher education.

38a General

At the very time a great deal of public attention has been given to the pros and cons of racial segregation in Dixie's public schools, a private philanthropic organization has centered its attention on ways to help talented young Negroes to get a college education. The National Scholarship Service and the Fund for Negro Students, sponsored by the Fund for the Advancement of Education, has undertaken the task in an effort to make fuller use of this important manpower potential. Its principal aims: To discover more college-qualified Negro students in the South; to encourage these students to develop their abilities; to provide them with information and asasistance in obtaining college scholarships; and to furnish financial aid when needed. It is known as the Southern Project.

According to Benjamin Fine, one of the nation's leading education writers, the organization's talent search in Dixie has uncovered a surprising number of Negro students of college ability. In two years some 500 students have been aided.

During this relatively short period, the project has greatly increased the number of southern Negroes enrolled in colleges, increased the number of information and testing facilities for future Negro college students and, more important perhaps, increased professional and public awareness of an important slice of the nation's hidden manpower reserve.

Trained manpower is needed in the South and in the nation as a whole. With sufficient education, Negroes can help meet this need. Not only can they serve their own race better but they can benefit the nation's entire economic community. The aims of the Southern Project rise above prejudice. They are, in fact, more akin to national and regional self-interest.

Cast Out The Beam, You Yankees

Editor Virginius Dabney In The Richmond Times-Dispatch

THE noble city of Dearborn, Mich., (population 130,000), cheek-by-jowl with Detroit, won't permit even one Negro to settle there. Mayor Orville Hubbard of Dearborn is the first one to admit it, and he proclaims it loudly.

What does Gov. "Soapy" Williams of Michigan, who is always lecturing the South about its shortcomings in dealing with the race problem, have to say about this? "Soapy" practicaly blows a gasket at the thought of "race outrages" below the Mason and Dixon Line, but can he name a Southern city anywhere which positively refuses to let even one Negro settle within its borders?

Mayor Hubbard's approach to this problem is direct and effective. In a telephone interview with The Montgomery Advertiser he put it this way:

"They can't get in here. We watch it. Every time we hear of a Negro moving in—for instance, we had one last year—we respond quicker than you do to a fire. That's generally known. It's known among our own people and it's known among the Negroes here."

The Times-Dispatch strongly deplores this rough stuff — which evidently is carried on routinely in Dearborn, Mich. It must be plenty rough, in view of the fact that there are 500,000 Negroes only a few miles away in Detroit.

WE PRESENT these facts merely with a view of showing that our sanctimonious friends in the North ought to take a look around their own back yards before they offer advice so freely to us in Dixie. And we'd like to see them devote maybe 10% as much newspaper space to the "racist" goings-on up there as they devote to our shortcomings here below.

To such a monstrous situation as that in the Trumbull Park housing project in Chicago, for example.

Reference was made to this in these columns last week, but our attention has been directed since then to the following in the Christian Century for March 21:

"In August, 1953, one Negro family, and subsequently up to 30 Negro families, were moved into the project which already housed 450 white families. The whites in the project were neutral, but the whites in the surrounding neighborhood of South Deering objected violently—so violently in fact that from 200 to 1,000 policemen every 24 hours were needed to protect the Negroes. Today about 200 policemen are still needed. The police costs alone after 31 months are staggering . . . As for the preachers in the communities near South Deering, they might as well have been on the other side of the world."

Suppose 200 or more policemen had been required to stand by around the clock for 31 months in any Southern city to prevent Negroes from being mobbed—there would have been apoplectic strokes from Boston's Back Bay to the shores of Lake Michigan. Suppose any Southern city had deliberately prevented every single Negro from settling there, and loudly proclaimed its firm intention to keep on doing so. Averell Harriman, Hubert Humphrey, Soapy Williams and the whole kaboodle of professional "liberals" from the North would have shaken the rafters with denunciations of Southern "bigots," "Negrophobes," etc., etc.

BUT since these things are happening in the North, and not in the South, we don't hear a peep out of Averell, Soapy, et al. All they can talk about is how President Eisenhower ought to send federal troops into Alabama and Mississippi.

The South isn't perfect, and never claimed to be, but this hypocritical attitude toward us on the part of some Northerners is getting more than a little tiresome.

Editorial of the Week

Crisis In The South

AMERICAN democracy is being put to a crucial test in the South. Lawlessness and disregard of constitutional and human rights have become a virtual pattern in many states. Even murder is no longer excluded as a weapon of political domination.

Behind this reign of terror are those who are determined to maintain segregation and preserve "white supremacy." A voteless Negro population is their objective and no method of achieving this end—no matter how lawless—is barred.

Competing for first place in this brutal contest is Mississippi, where the Negro population is almost entirely disenfranchised. Here only ½ per cent of the nearly one million Negroes living in this state dared to vote in the 1955 primary elections. Only 1 per cent has been permitted to register.

Recently, Rev. George W. Lee, a Baptist minister living in Belzoni, Miss. and the first of his race to register in his county, paid with his life for the privilege of voting. So did Lamar Smith of Lincoln County. Later, Gus Courts, a leader of the NAACP, was critically wounded for urging Negro voters to register in Humphreys County. As usual, no indictments and no convictions. Such is Mississippi's recipe for keeping the vote 99.5 per cent "pure."

People in the South are often impatient with those who criticize their ways. They say we just don't understand, and this time they are right. We do not understand why Emmett Till had to be murdered for acting like a 14-year-old boy on a holiday. We also fail to understand the other methods the White Citizens Councils are using to undermine the law of the land; the refusal to sell food and supplies to those who are in favor of integrating schools; the denial of jobs to Negro teachers who are members of the NAACP; the cancellation of mortgages and loans on Negro-owned property and the countless other violations of human decency that make a mockery of our democratic traditions.

The public outcry against this campaign of terror has been heard throughout the country and immediate action by the federal government has been demanded. In response to this hue and cry, President Eisenhower proposed that Congress appoint a bipartisan commission to study, report and recommend. While such a study may have merit, we feel it is no substitute for immediate action. The Democrats are also skirting the issue, in the interests of party unity, and thus far they, too, have failed to come up with a plan for action.

In the meantime, people are living in terror in many parts of our land. How long will they have to wait?

(JLC Labor Reports)

RACIAL DISHARMONY OF NORTH IS CITED

Montgomery Editor Terms Unrest Significant

NAACP MAN SPEAKS, TOO

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 11.—A Southern editor and a Northern Negro leader both charged here Sunday that racial disharmony is prevalent in the North as well as the South.

Grover C. Hall Jr., editor-in-chief of the Montgomery Advertiser, said racial unrest in the North is even more significant because of relatively few Negroes "and they start out with equality and theoretical acceptance."

Gloster B. Current of New York, who directs the program and organizational activities of some 1,600 branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, had this to say:

"In the North we struggle with the subtleties and hidden aspects of discrimination and segregation. In no community in this nation where there is a sizable Negro population can you say the problem of race relations have been completely solved."

Addressed To New York

Mr. Hall made his comments in a letter to James A. Wechsler, editor of the New York Post, which was reprinted on the editorial page of the Sunday Advertiser. Current's remarks were included in an address Sunday to bus boycott leaders at a Negro church.

The Advertiser editor, whose late father won a Pulitizer prize for fighting the Ku Klux Klan, said a New York Post columnist told him an official map exists showing how school districts in New York "are gerrymandered to achieve segregation."

Noting that dozens of reporters from all over the world have covered the Montgomery Negro bus boycott story in recent weeks, Mr. Hall proposed that Mr. Wechsler assign the columnist, Murray Kempton, to him for a week in New York "to get something of the New York story for Alabamans."

"Since all the New York reporters are down here doing the Alabama story, I propose to help fill their vacuum in New York," Mr. Hall added.

'Real Story' Missed

The Alabama editor said, with few exceptions, New York newspapers "merely peck" at stories of racial discrimination in the North.

Current, the NAACP leader, said recent racial unrest in the South has brought the "dirty aspects of Jim-Crowism" and mob violence "out into the open."

"The nation does not like what it sees," Current continued, but "this is all to the good for during the present conflict a lot of soul-searching is going on, and that ultimately means something constructive will be done."

In all the "exciting conflicts of recent months," Current said, "the real story" of continued desegregation in border states is being missed.

"Where integration has been tried the evidence clearly demonstrates that it is workable," he said, adding that opponents of desegregation are "fearful this positive evidence would destroy the myth of 'white supremacy'."

Outlining the fight against integration by state Legislatures in the South, Current declared in an address prepared for delivery at the Bethel Baptist Church here:

"They can legislate until doomsday. None of these bills are going to stop the freedom train as it moves toward the distant station of full integration."

He said opponents of racial integration are using economic pressure, intimidation, terror-ism and violence, but white citizens councils have learned that "Negroes don't beg anymore. They have been working saving their money. They learned discipline, not to trade with a merchant who was a member of the council."

Politics Makes Strange Bedfellows

Defender p. 4

According to that nemesis of most politicians, Columnist Drew Pearson, some strange dealings are going on these days between the White House and the Grand Kleagle of the "Order To Preserve Segregation — even if it means going out into the streets and shooting down Negroes," James O. Eastland.

Chicago Ill

Now we've heard of slick horse trading in our time because there used to be a man in our town who could sell you a hobble-kneed mule, blind in one eye with his teeth out and make you believe he was a thoroughbred stallion, Trader Joe was his name and he's long dead and gone.

But now comes Trader Ike and Trader Herb and Trader Jim with another kind of fancy deal the like of which we ain't never hee'rd of, for these boys have got Trader Joe beat all hollow. They swap across party lines.

Sat. 4-21-56

While Herbie trots up to Capitol Hill with his overdue package of civil rights proposals — none of which has a feeble chance of passing, the chief stumbling block to rights passage, Democratic Jim Eastland is busily ladling out Republican patronage handed him by Ike in that bastion of white supremacy, MISSISSIPPI, USA.

We read on that one E. O. Spencer of Jackson, Miss., a turncoat in politics and a reputed member of the White Citizens' Council was a visitor at the White House and was entertained by Atty. General Herbert Brownell.

The loudest squawk on this nefarious bargaining has been from "absentee committeeman," Perry Howard who was shorn like a lamb after he and other ardent Taft followers campaigned against the nomination of Gen. Eisenhower in 1952 in Chicago.

The best explanation we can get out of the whole mess is that the Administration is buttering up Eastland who holds the powerful post of chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee to get him not to oppose the nomination of Solicitor General Simon E. Sobeloff to a Federal judgeship, and some other appointments Ike has coming up. We can bet the agreement has already been made to Eastland to just regard the civil rights proposals as so much hogwash. After all, it's an election year and you have to fool the colored people into thinking you're going to do something, when the truth is, you don't give a tinker's dam.

Hand us the air wick, Henry. There's an awful odor around!

Separation Of The Races By 'Nature'

News Thurs. 2-4-56

States having well organized colored community life, simply stationed colored and white students separately in their "natural" race where admittedly "human interest and enthusiasm" (a recognized factor in education) would "naturally" be greatest in association with racial kinship.

These states having thus respected "nature," or "natural" laws, have been ridiculed by critics and condemned by present Supreme Court.

P. 18

That it is right and honorable to respect "nature" and "natural" laws, applicable to the various subjects of man's dominion, is evidenced by the testimony of many great characters, a few of whom are quoted below:

Birmingham, Ala.

Charles Kingsley: "Study nature as the countenance of God."

Goethe: "There is no trifling with nature."

Longfellow: "The laws of nature are

Whitman: "Observe the divinity of nature."

Apostle Paul: "Doth not even nature itself teach you?"

Jefferson: "That it is to secure these rights (natural rights) that governments are instituted among men."

Emerson (abolitionist): "Nature respects race, and not hybrids. Every race has its own habitat."

Lincoln: "You (Negroes) and we are different races—we should be separated."

408 Title Building. PHIL JOINER.

Call P. 18
Kansas City, Mo.
Fri. 6-29-56

38a

Give To The NAACP Legal Defense-Educational Fund Inc.
107 W. 43rd Street
New York 36, N.Y.

"WHAT COUNTRY ARE WE IN NOW, MOM?"

Boycotts Hit Where It Hurts

Courier p. 11 Sat. 6-2-56

The boycott of buses by Negroes in Montgomery, Ala., made the parent company holler "Uncle!"

An apparently unorganized boycott of baseball parks of the Southern Association (because of jim-crow treatment in the parks and refusal to employ Negro players) has cut down revenue and become a matter of concern to the owners of clubs and the league leaders. It is a subject they don't want to talk about.

Pittsburgh, Pa

South Carolina has passed a law requiring merchants who sell Japanese textiles to display signs stating that they have Japanese wares. This is an open invitation to Negroes to buy these textiles as a protest against the discriminatory state employment laws in textile factories in South Carolina.

Boycotts, shrewdly used, are a powerful weapon. They hit where it hurts—in the pocketbook. When the Negro transfers his economic strength, or buying power, from his known enemies to his known friends, he will discover that the number of his friends will strangely increase.

Vacation Blockade

EACH vacation period in America demonstrates anew the extent of actual FREEDOM in the United States for colored citizens.

So far as THEY are concerned there is a vacation BLOCKADE as effective as any in history, since they are BARRED from the great majority of all beaches, mountain resorts, hunting lodges, motels and summer hotels in this country.

In large areas the blockade against Negro vacationists is LEGAL and in others it is CUSTOMARY, but the results are the SAME—they are UNWELCOME.

If these vacationists are seeking a beach resort, they will find themselves virtually BARRED from the ocean and many of the lakes and rivers, from the mountains and the glittering desert oases.

So far as finding places that will FREELY admit them as guests, they might as well IGNORE the overwhelming majority of the advertisements in the newspapers and magazines.

Were it not for the few "Y", church and private Negro resorts, colored vacationists would have scarcely ANY place to go.

To be sure there has been SOME improvement in the past ten years or so in opening publicly owned resorts, beaches, parks and swimming pools to Negro vacationists, but this is almost NOTHING to compare with places where OTHERS may go and where THEY are barred.

The population shift from country to city makes more IMPERATIVE the provision of vacation facilities but in this connection the urbanized Negro is far WORSE off than other citizens, and his NEED is as great or greater.

Thanks to the ENTERPRISE of a few Negro entrepeneurs, we do have a few MORE places to go; but the vacation blockade is STILL formidable.

Much more must be done before WE win freedom of the seas.

A Novel Statement

HERE is a rather novel if not eccentric statement:

ATLANTA, June 5 (AP)—A Negro lawyer wants Negroes to launch a counterattack on backers of racial segregation he says are using mass communications in an effort "to divide and poison the minds of Northern whites."

Dr. James M. Nabrit, Jr., secretary of Howard University [Washington, D. C.] . . . said articles by Southerners in national magazines and their appearance on network radio and television programs constitute a "dangerous course of action."

In the first place, had some secretary of a white college made a speech contending that Southerners should speak up, it is questionable whether it would have received the generous space apportioned to Dr. Nabrit's speech.

In the second place, it must occur to Southerners in one more spasm of exasperation that national newspapers, magazines, radio and TV have for years made pets of Negro spokesmen.

Now that the South is bewildering the North with what they have failed to behold in their own backyards, we get a bleat like that from Dr. Nabrit.

But what arrests the attention is Dr. Nabrit's testimony that the South is striking some telling blows. Northerners are neither fools nor scoundrels, they just haven't been competently informed by their papers, most of which are in hock to the ante-bellum fantasies of Harriet Beecher Stowe.

What is needed above all else is for the Southern people to put their senators and congressmen to work as engines of propaganda. They cannot be ignored and as a class they are more able than the run of the Resistance leaders. We need to get our congressmen wound up, and to dismiss our braying leadership since they weaken and embarrass the Resistance with their Tom Heflin style. Virginia, for one, is stern in its determination, but its leaders are cool and sensible; they command respect.

Racial Tension Persists

Time Called Remedy In South's Dilemma

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Mon. 7-16-56 P. 1

(Second of Two Articles)

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

It has been said that any effective solution to the school segregation dilemma in the Deep South will call for the utmost in human engineering.

Baker

After a trip of several weeks and several thousand miles in the area that premise rings true to this reporter.

Human engineering, according to many Southern observers, would include a delicately balanced and working combination between voluntary action and, at times, legal nudging; much must be left to local discretion, moral persuasion, appeal to reason, and time, time, time.

This does not sound reasonable to those taking the extreme positions.

On the one hand, there are those who would demand immediate and outright compliance, and with force if necessary. This side can see no middle ground. They reason that this is a question of fundamental human rights under our form of government and, they ask, what right does a community have to reject or permit, to any degree it sees fit, constitutional guarantees?

On the other hand, there are those who vow they will never comply. They see the Supreme Court's desegregation decision not only destroying a way of life, but also destroying the Constitution itself by taking away rights belonging to the states.

They, too, can see no middle ground, because anything less than their stand is acceptance of the decision and the principle of integration, and that they will not have.

There is no doubt that the vast majority of Southern whites prefer segregated schools, at least at this time. This presents a dilemma for the South: How to protect the constitutional rights of a Negro minority against the preference of the white majority?

If desegregation is to come to many areas in the Deep South with constant and recurring turbulence, it must be accepted, even though reluctantly, by a majority of the people.

There is a middle ground. On it are many Southerners, dedicated to law and human decency, who live in uneasy silence today because it is unpopular and unrewarding, in the present climate, to suffer the squeeze of the two extremes. It would seem they hold the answer.

The hard core of resistance today appears to be an immovable object. The Supreme Court decision, on the other hand, appears to be an irresistible force. One of the two must give.

Post & Times Herald

An official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in South Carolina had this thought:

Washington, D.C.

The press toward desegregation should be made now only in the more liberal and moderate places, in those places where tension is less. Let the tension ease in the Deep South and let the white man adjust to this new concept.

Times 7-16-56

His point is that time will help soften this hard core until some acceptance will come.

P. 19

It is logical that those areas in the South with fewer Negroes would require less time. It is no accident, of course, that Oklahoma with 6 per cent Negroes and Kentucky with 7 per cent are integrating their schools, and Tennessee (16 per cent) is moving in that direction.

It is no accident that the greatest resistance is in Mississippi (45 per cent), South Carolina (38 per cent), Alabama and Louisiana (32 per cent) and Georgia (30 per cent).

An official in Clarendon County, S. C., commented that "the Negroes picked the wrong spot when they filed their suit here, because we have nine Negroes for every white, and integration just won't work."

Much depends on the outcome of suits now pending, and the reaction to them. There still has been no defiance of a final court decree in these suits.

Particularly significant will be the outcome of a special session of the Virginia General Assembly which will consider a positive state policy, since its stand-pat policy has been cracked by a court ordering a start toward desegregation of the Charlottesville schools. The South historically has looked upon Virginia as a leader.

There are other questions yet to be answered. If the hard core does not soften, and tension remains or increases, will the South's industrial growth slow down, and, if so, will the South be willing to accept this?

Serious predictions have been made that public schools will be abolished in defiance of the Supreme Court decision. Is the South willing to let this tragedy happen? There are many persons in the South who are not willing to let it.

Is the South willing to live a life under constant tension and continuous litigation?

There is no one voice in the South today. There are many voices in varied places, and a battle is going on between the old and the new. There are prejudice and narrowmindedness and bigotry, but there also are morality, progress and courage, and the South is fighting it out.

Racial No Man's Land

Guardian Sat. 3-3-56 Boston, Mass.

BY MONROE MASON

White Supremacy will zoom to unknown heights if Rep. Adam C. Powell's amendment is not a part of the nation's public school construction bill now pending in the present session of Congress. P. 1

Also contemplated by fanatic leaders of the solid south and border states are economic racial reprisals with an objective to punish thousands of Colored men, women and children to make them involentary public wards like contrabands of war during the Civil War because of the segregation issue.

Foreign nagging against the United States will also become more intense as time marches on and provoking racial incidents multiply to cast darkened shadows over a nation whose sponsorship of democracy has been deemed as its greatest asset! Political leaders of both parties are dazed on how the tide has suddenly turned on the seething racial issue that has flagrantly leaped into a caldron almost far beyond solution.

An intensive racial boycott of riding on city buses in Birmingham, Ala., and malicious burning of magazines and newspapers published in the north has molded a grave problem that may involve the Federal Government to impose drastic measures on law enforcement agencies of these harrassed jurisdictions demanding them to assure law and order also safeguard racial citizens from frenzied White Supremacy mobs.

Nearly 30 pages of The Congressional Record, a legislative pamphlet of the U.S. Congress was recently devoted to an alleged expose of the National Association For The Advancement Of Colored People, depicting this organization as overwhelmingly Communistic and subversive.

So far nothing has been done to substantiate this legislative diatribe by citation of NAACP leaders to defend their organization or explain why this one-sided subversive charge should be given nationwide publicity without a chance to answer or challenge its authenticity!

Rep. Adam C. Powell, N. Y. along with the NAACP has been a stormy petral in Congress alarming the nation continuously since the U. S. Supreme Court's Desegregation Public School decision that his race must remain on guard against the upsurge of White Supremacy.

Guardian

The question has arisen in many sections of the nation has Powell extended his racial pleas too far in which a justifiable racial comprise could be endangered, if serious attempts were made to curb unlooked for spreading racial strife in the solid south and border states. P. 4

Powell's methods to attain revenge instead of peace, an-eye-for-an-eye and tooth for a-tooth have enraged leaders of the solid south and border states. His indomitable rebuke against White Supremacy has turned scores of colleagues who were friends against him.

Fighting fire with fire can be calamitious, if the flames get beyond control. It may end that Powell carried a racial burden too over laden for him to bear. The doughty Congressman from New York can blame himself if the above belief is verified. Too much sounding-off to the public before an objective is reached might be his downfall.

Reps. Diggs, Mich., and Dawson, Ill., two of his racial colleagues in Congress have been indefatigueable workers for their race, who to date never assumed an overpowering attitude of leadership to alienate friends or incumber the issue they sponsored.

On this premise Powell's amendment to the nation's school construction bill in Congress hangs on a narrow thread that can snap when the poll is taken for its passage. Public opinion pro or con on any issue can change overnight! Powell's dilemma at this stage is to build his fences stronger before the climax is reached in the forum where he is a member.

The above, is only a reminder for Powell not to alienate any of his remaining friends in Congress. To do so, the result will be disastrous.

Below, is a news flash in disagreement with Powell and his church leader with over 5,000,000 communicants.

MIAMI, Feb. 28 — The influential National Baptist Convention, refused to endorse a proposal to stop work on March 28 to pray for Alabama ministers arrested in a bus boycott.

Dr. Joseph Jackson, president of the 5,000,000-member organization, said the local boycott in Montgomery, Ala., was "all right" but that a work stoppage in the nation would amount to "a nationwide economic boycott."

"I don't believe religion should be used as an economic boycott."

"Calling a halt to work is not in the Christian tradition."

Rep. A. Clayton Powell, Dem., of New York, a minister himself, and a group of other New York clergymen called for a stop work for one hour on March 28 to offer a prayer for the ministers arrested in the Montgomery bus boycott.

Powell, a member of the National Baptist Convention, said the work stoppage would be a prayer "for delivery from persecution and for the delivery of persons aafflicted with racial prejudice."

We are in favor of prayer, but we shall not go along with a nationwide economic boycott," said Jackson, who is here on vacation.

He said he talked by telephone with Powell and "I told him I greed with the prayer aspect, but I advised him strongly we would not support a nationwide economic boycott. Any work stoppage would be exactly that."

New Orleans Archbishop Rummel Speaks

Herald Sat. 8-18-56 P.20-A

Segregation Violates Christian Charity, 500 Married Couples Told

Miami Fla.

SOUTH BEND, Ind. —(AP)— Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel of New Orleans, controversial foe of racial segregation, asserted Friday night that segregation is a violation of Christian charity and basic natural law.

He spoke on "The Christian Viewpoint of the Racial Problem" in an address to more than 500 married couples attending the national convention of the Christian Family Movement at the University of Notre Dame.

"Can anyone," he asked, "affix the label or merit of charity upon customs that exclude civilized human beings from sharing with their fellow human beings certain facilities, conveniences and necessities of life, chiefly if not simply because they belong to a different race?"

He vigorously attacked the segregationist theory that "because of certain objectionable qualities the Negro race as a whole is incapable of integration with our American way of life."

He asserted if it were true that Negro children mentally lagged a year or two behind while children of equal age, it was not reasonable to expect to correct the situation by denying the Negro children "the stimulation that would result from competition with more gifted and ambitious white fellow pupils in an integrated system."

The archbishop said enforced segregation or isolation "tends to continue and even aggravate" unwholesome habits and habits charged to the Negro race.

He suggested that "politicians and industrialists promote segregation at times with an interest in perpetuating cheap labor and questionable working conditions, apparently forgetting the fact that the cost of living respects no color line."

Turning to the prospect of intermarriage between the races if segregation is abolished, Archbishop Rummel asserted:

"Integration deprives no one of the right to choose his friends or companions, nor does it deprive or relieve parents of the responsibility to supervise and guide their children in the choice of companions or playmates.

"We have been blind long enough," he said. "We have been brainwashed enough. It's past time when the Southern union man should put certain carpetbagger leaders on notice that they will pay their just and lawful dues but they have been taxed the last time for money to be turned over to organizations which are dedicated to the destruction of the South."

Guard Chief Says North Using Racial Issue To Stymie South

Advertiser P. 6-A

BIRMINGHAM, June 12 (AP)—Maj. Gen. Walter J. Hanna today charged that northern interests are using the race issue to halt the advances of the industrial South.

Hanna scrapped a talk about the Phenix City cleanup which he led to raise the issue. He said he was changing his subject because of the seriousness of the situation the South faces.

Montgomery, Ala.

Hanna commanded National Guard troops during martial law in Phenix City, and is given much credit for the successful 1954 crackdown on onetime vice lords of the river town. He spoke here at a Chamber of Commerce luncheon.

The Birmingham manufacturer said the current strike at U.S. Steel's Tennessee Coal and Iron Division mills, idling 25,000, may have been uncalled for. He suggested it could be part of "that giant conspiracy which has levelled against the South an increasing propaganda campaign."

TCI's mills have been shut down since a walkout of 264 members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen at midnight April 27.

The strike was called when company and union were unable to agree on demands of the transportation workers for pay and fringe benefit increases. No race issue was involved.

The TCI strike already has caused layoffs in Southern industries dependent upon steel. Hanna said if industry can de deprived of TCI steel the Southern boom can be stopped.

During the last 15 years South Carolina has topped Massachusetts in textiles, said Hanna; Louisiana has outgained New York in chemicals; and Georgia is outgrowing Wisconsin in paper production. And early next year Alabama will have boosted its primary metal production by 100 per cent in the last 10 years.

Hanna said it's time for Southerners, both white and Negro, to take a look at themselves.

He said the gains of the Negro in the South during the past 15 years have been the greatest in history, and the South is prospering because the Negro is prospering.

Segregation Unchristian, Rummel Says

Post & Times Herald P. 16

Washington, D.C.

Chicago Tribune Press Service

NOTRE DAME, Ind., Aug. 17

The Most Rev. Joseph F. Rummel, Roman Catholic Archbishop of New Orleans, asserted tonight that segregation conflicts with Christian precepts.

Sat. 8-18-56

He spoke at a convention of the Christian Family Movement at the University of Notre Dame.

"When America interprets the presence in our midst of some 15 million Negroes not as a liability but as a mission of charity planned in the wisdom of divine providence for their integration with the higher and better way of life, then will we see the dawn of an era of edification that will give to the world a new vision of our country's ideals,' the Archbishop said.

He asserted that social and economic shortcomings of individual Negroes cannot be charged against their race but are the product of the segregated conditions in which they live.

The Archbishop suggested that "politicians and industrialists promote segregation at times with an interest in perpetuating cheap labor and questionable working conditions."

The speaker denied that integration would lead to increased racial intermarriage, asserting that in places where integration exists the percentage of interracial marriages has been comparatively low.

Says Abe Lincoln Set Stage For Victory In Discrimination Fight

Call P. 18 Fri. 4-27-56

Kansas City, Mo.

SALEM, Ill.—(INS)— Pulitzer Prize Winning Historian Bruce Catton believes Abraham Lincoln set the stage for a winning battle against racial discrimination which the American people cannot abandon.

Speaking Sunday, April 22, at ceremonies marking the 125th anniversary of Lincoln's arrival in New Salem, Catton explained that among the critical decisions facing Lincoln as President, the most difficult was the Emancipation Proclamation. He added:

"It was and still is the loftiest ideal any nation has ever tried to follow, an ideal which even now is under severe attack, but which the American people can never stop trying to reach."

Catton acknowledged that there will be times when "the hideous old banner of racial superiority is raised," but declared:

"The men who raise this banner are fighting a rear-guard action and they cannot win. The decision was made nearly a century ago and it can never be reversed."

Catton was one of five noted persons awarded honorary degrees at ceremonies sponsored jointly by Gov. William Stratton and Lincoln college.

Tennessee Marks Segregation Break

CLINTON, Tenn., Aug. 17 (AP)—High school opens here Monday, marking the first break in the segregation barrier for public schools in Tennessee.

Twelve Negroes are enrolled. Despite some local opposition, they will be admitted.

At nearby Oak Ridge more than 100 Negroes have been attending school peacefully with white children for a year, but Oak Ridge is considered a "Government town."

D. J. Brittain Jr., principal of the all-white high school here, made the decision to integrate his school while the Anderson County School Board still was debating the issue.

Brittain, one of the officials named in a Federal court order to remove segregation barriers in the county, said he intends to "obey the order."

Will Integration Of Races Ever Come To The South?

Commercial Appeal

Thurs. 3-1-56 P. 1

By JOHN M. FENTON
Gallup Poll Staff Representative

Memphis, Tenn.

PRINCETON, N. J., Feb. 29.—Although an overwhelming majority of Southern whites—especially in the Deep South—are opposed to integration, a good many expect the day to come when segregation will end.

But they hope that day is a long way off.

With much bitterness at having something "shoved down our throats," 55 per cent of the white Southerners admit today that the time will eventually come when whites and Negroes will be going to the same schools, eating in the same restaurants, and generally sharing the same accommodations.

On the other hand, an important and articulate minority holds that integration will never come to Dixie. This group tends to feel it is something that "the South just won't permit."

Many Years Ahead

Negroes—a majority of whom want to have mixed schools—are more optimistic about the chances of full-scale integration. They too, however, think it will involve many years before it comes.

This reporter has just returned from the South where he directed the field operations of local reporters from the institute's staff in interviewing a true cross-section of the white and Negro population.

Only about one white person in eight in the South thinks that the people in his community will accept the decision quietly without any trouble or attempts at delay. This view is most prevalent in the "border states" of Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Texas where integration is already in effect in some communities and where the percentage of Negroes in the population is relatively low.

P. 15

Other white people we talked with believe that integration will be introduced into the schools, but only after a great deal of delay and trouble. Behind their thinking is the idea that "we'll have to do it, but we'll show them we don't like it before we do."

The views of a 72-year-old architect from Spartansburg, S. C., are typical on this point. "I believe people will stall for awhile," he said, "but they eventually will have to give in. I don't feel any violence will result except possibly some small incidents."

Negroes Are Hopeful

A majority of the Negroes are hopeful of co-operation of some kind in setting up mixed schools—even though many think it will be delayed for some time.

"I think all people will co-operate and have school together," said a Negro farm housewife in Arkansas, but she added. "I do believe though there will be some trouble."

To a great many white persons, the prospect of integrating with the Negro is so remote as to be unworthy of serious thought. These people are convinced that segregation will "just be kept like it always was."

A 37-year-old farmer who lives just outside of Clarksdale, Miss., commented: "Well, maybe I'm prejudiced—I'm a Mississippi Southerner. But I think the people will continue to have separate schools indefinitely—if they have schools at all."

The possibility that the South—if forced into integration—might not "have schools at all" is one discussed frequently. One hears much talk about the introduction of a private school system or—if that is not possible—"just keeping the kids out of school altogether."

"People will just not let the children go to the public schools if it comes," said a 21-year-old secretary from Wythesville, Va., "My children will never go to school with the Negroes."

Private Schools First

"The people around here will fight this thing," stated a 32-year-old candy salesman from Chattanooga, "I'll send my children to private schools before I'll let them mix with Negroes."

Adding up the score on the question of what people will do one finds that the "bitter-enders"—those who are thinking only in terms of preventing integration—outnumber the "go along reluctantly" group—by about 2-to-1.

A stubborn determination to "just not go along" with the Supreme Court's decision is most noticeable in the Deep South—in Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina and Mississippi.

In these states, all of which have a Negro population larger than 30 per cent (and in some instances, counties where more than seven out of 10 persons are Negroes), only about one white person in five thinks there will be any kind of acceptance—willing or unwilling—of the integration decision at present. The rest talk about ways to continue segregation.

These are the states where a "hard core" of resistance is likely to be met with for many years to come.

Whereas talk of violence and bloodshed is practically negligible in other parts of the South, there are some white people in the Deep South states who think there will be riots, killings and such if the Negroes are "mixed in" with the whites.

Extreme attitudes on the question of integration are by no means confined to the general public. The same views are held by many law enforcement officials. Here, for example, is how the sheriff of a heavily Negro county in the Mississippi Delta feels about integration:

"I don't like it. First, for the simple reason that it is not right to force children into desegregation because of their color. Second, the white children in the South are farther advanced in their literary work than the colored children. Third, we are building good schools for colored children in this area; therefore, it is not necessary to mix the races.

"I believe segregation was intended," he went on, "otherwise, the laws of nature would not have made white and colored. The laws of nature cry out against mixing the races. Segregation is necessary in the South to prevent bloodshed and horror."

The sheriff admitted, however, that segregation would probably end some day, adding bitterly, "It will destroy the South in so doing."

For many Southern whites—like this sheriff—eventual integration is a bitter pill that they feel they will be forced to swallow because of "outside interests" and a North that doesn't really understand their problems.

Although it goes against a tradition and a "way of life" that they have always known, most admit that they will finally obey the Supreme Court's injunction because it is the law. As a New Orleans housewife said: "We have to accept the laws of our land, but we don't have to like them."

"Yeh, it will come someday, I guess," commented a 42-year-old construction worker from West Point, Miss., "there's just so many Negroes in the South and such power in the North. They just don't understand the situation."

For many people, it's just a case of accepting the inevitable, or as a Norfolk, Va., housewife put it: "It's either accept it or fight another civil war. I hate to think about it, but I suppose it will come."

Survey Conducted By 90 Reporters

The accompanying article is the last in a series of three reporting on the results of a special Gallup Poll study of segregation sentiments in the South.

Ninety specially selected reporters participated in the study and found widely divergent views. They interviewed both whites and Negroes in 13 Southern states.

John M. Fenton, the author of the stories, directed the survey. He also traveled extensively in the South, talking to voters.

---

lic accommodations?"

The results for whites and Negroes:

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY
Yes	55%
No	33
Don't know	12
SOUTHERN NEGROES ONLY
Yes	70%
No	15
Don't know	15

This is how the Southerner

Educators Probe Racial Tensions

Defender Chicago, Ill

Sat. 4-28-56

A Tennessee educator said last week that more and more it is becoming evident that group tension can be eradicated by creation of a democratic atmosphere in the classrooms of American schools.

The educator was Dr. William Van Til, chairman of the division of curriculum and teaching, George Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn. He was speaking at the second day's meeting of the Midwest Regional conference on human relations held at the Conrad Hilton hotel under the sponsorship of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

School teachers and administrators have a dual responsibility of extending human relations education and of selecting wisely the means by which such education becomes part of their professional work, Dr. Van Till said.

Among the methods he suggested was encouragement of contact between members of minority groups in situations which involve cooperation. He suggested that teachers provide their students with the opportunity to participate in experiences which lead to discovery of accepted attitudes in American life.

The two-day meeting closed with a panel discussion and summary and interpretation of the conference by Dr. Earl S. Johnson, professor of the social sciences at the University of Chicago.

Educators from 51 cities in 17 midwestern states attended and participated in discussions of three general subject areas: Problems of human relations in changing neighborhoods; human relations education in elementary and secondary schools; and teacher education.

Principal speakers at the first session were Dr. Willard E. Goslin, George Peabody college, who discussed "Human Relations in Education," and Dr. Dan W. Dodson, New York university, who spoke on "Human Relations Education: Implications for Schools in Changing Neighborhoods."

Participants from the Illinois area were Orville Alexander, Carbondale; J. E. Bohn, supt. of schools, Springfield; Abraham F. Citron, director, Jewish Community council, Peoria; Roy Clark, asst. supt. of public instruction, Springfield, and Sister Mary Gabriel, Sisters of St. Dominic Parochial school, Ottawa.

Other Illinois participants were Gayle N. Hufford, supt. of schools, Joliet; Mrs. Leon Lamet, Warwaw; John W. Lloyd, prof. of social sciences, Northern Ill. State college, DeKalb; C. Lewis Martin, Congress Park School, Brookfield; Elmer W. Rowley, dean, Joliet Junior college, Joliet; Michael Scarpitto, asst. supt. of schools, Joliet; and Frank Short, dept. of public instruction, State of Illinois, Springfield.

Probe Told Of Red Plot On Negroes

Herald Tribune New York

Sat. 4-7-56

'Civil War' Seen As Aim in South

NEW ORLEANS, Apr. 6 (UP).—A Senate investigator said today that the Communists invited "civil war in the South" with documents proposing the creation of a Southern Negro empire.

Ben Mandel, an investigator for th eSenate Internal Security subcommittee, also introduced pamphlets which urged Communist infiltration of such Negro organizations as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The documents were presented as the subcommittee ended a stormy two-day hearing on Communist activity here.

New Orleans Raid

The papers were seized by New Orleans police in a raid last week on the apartment of Hunter O'Dell, a Negro described as the district organizer of the Communist party here. He is sought for questioning.

Sen. James O. Eastland, D., Miss., subcommittee chairman, said as the two-day hearings concluded that they had been "informative" and "Congress now has evidence of conspiracy of the Soviet Union in the United States."

The final session was marked by a heated verbal exchange between Sen. Eastland and New York attorney Philip Wittenberg.

Lawyer Is Ejected

Sen. Eastland gave Mr. Wittenberg the opportunity to make a statement that he had never been a member of the Communist party but was acting only in his capacity as a lawyer.

"I am not and never have been a Communist," he said, "but I don't consider it a privilege to say so. In forty years before the bar I have never heard of such an incident."

Sen. Eastland ordered Mr. Wittenberg ejected from the hearing room amid loud applause from a jammed courtroom. About that time Herman Liveright, whose wife appeared before the committee here and refused to answer questions, ran up to Mr. Wittenberg. He also was taken in tow by deputies. Mr. Liveright was dismissed as program director for WDSU-TV when he remained silent before the committee in Washington recently.

Robert Morris, special subcommittee counsel, said that contempt proceedings would be brought against Mrs. Pauline Feuer, one of the seven witnesses to appear here. She refused to answer the questions but did not evoke the Fifth Amendment as did the other six.

At the same time, Sen. Eastland announced that a hearing would be held Wednesday in Washington for Mr. and Mrs. Robert Blanchard, who advised the subcommittee that they could not get here from New York in time for the hearing because Mr. Blanchard was afraid to fly. He was formerly afraid to fly. He was formerly an artist employed by WDSU-TV.

Morgan Says:

AFL-CIO News

Negro Patience Sign of Confidence

Wed. 4-21-56 P. 11

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator, sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

Washington, D. C.

NOW and again out of the South these sad days comes the sinister noise of little explosions of racial violence. Like the backfire of a car exhaust, the sound is frightening; there has been no major blow-up but anxiety mounts that there may be.

These incidents cannot be ignored or brushed aside; they must be looked at for what they are. Scrutiny reveals, among other interesting things, a fact whose significance may not have been fully grasped: That, with very minor exceptions, Negroes have not been the aggressors nor have they attempted reprisals in the same language of violence.

Morgan

They seem in the main to answer insult with dignity and it is more logical to translate that as meaning more confidence than fear, more the discipline of patience than the recklessness of sheer revenge.

The hoodlum elements emerge on the other side. Somehow this makes it more than a little embarrassing, more than a little difficult to try to affirm the doctrine of white supremacy. It is hard to detect the qualities of leadership in a ruffian heaving a rock in a riot at the University of Alabama.

It is hard to distinguish the hallmark of superiority in a hate-tortured man lunging across the footlights to maul a famous musician in the auditorium in Birmingham. It is not easy to identify the plain decency of an ordinary responsible citizen in a Texas political figure who tries to keep Negroes out of a public eating place with his fists.

★ ★ ★

RESPONSIBLE reports multiply that the White Citizens Councils are absorbing the most sinister elements, quite unrepresentative of the majority of law-abiding citizens in the South.

One of the darkest ironies of the situation is the fact that a number of individual trade unionists have been persuaded to join these councils in a scattering of communities. Presumably they have not been made aware of evidence that the councils include many business men whose desire to suppress Negro rights is matched by their strenuous efforts to suppress labor's rights to organize and bargain.

Many of them have championed the anti-union "right-to-work" laws. In South Carolina last summer, council pressure wrecked a union drive at the Manhattan Raybestos Co. plant after 75 percent of the white and Negro employes had been enlisted by the United Auto Workers.

"... Whom The Gods Would Destroy"

Daily Worker P. 4

It was an Englishman who made this observation during a recent visit to the Deep South:

Sun. 4-29-56

"What amazes us in Europe is how calm you go about doing things here."

Atlanta, Ga.

This distinguished government official was concerned with the present state of circumstances, the slowly, but constantly diminishing social and economic restrictions against Negroes. It bothered him that they were not more excited.

With only newspapers, radio and television as his previous guide, he had been misguided as to the true course of circumstances. Abroad, the opinion sometimes goes, that Negroes are rushing about in the midst of a sea of confusion, not knowing what is the next course to take in the whole matter of human rights.

Obviously this Englishman was surprised, and many more as well. It has not been the Negro who is confused and left to grab at every possible legal straw before drowning, but some of the leadership of negative forces.

The one thing in our favor has been the act of calmness, without fear and hysteria. Predictions that Negroes would rush in places in wholesale fashion as predicted by demagogic leadership has not come about. Rather, there has been this willingness to keep our heads, maintain a clear peace of mind and let others get mad. The Negro has long learned that "..... whom the Gods will destroy, they first make mad ....."

I acquired a deeper sense of this feeling as I sat a few days ago in the office of a young attorney. Although, only 25 years old, he had figured in one of the most historical legal cases of our day.

Out of school only a short while, it became his duty to place on the witness stand one of his own public officials. There were no comparison in ages, the official being much older in terms of years chronologically. It was the latter who became disturbed, emotionally, almost to the point of hysterics when the questioning began.

But this young Negro, maintaining a natural heritage of common sense and pride in what his profession represents, was calm in his proceedings. His calmness, not only won him the respect of the judge, but the respect of other whites who stood by in amazement.

This sort of picture could be told many times in terms of black people who have suffered the embarrassments, the humiliations associated with the stigma of segregation. But they always come out with victory when they let "calmness be their guide."

The life story of Mrs. Rosa Parks could be told, and should stand as a pattern for many of us to follow.

Here was a soft-spoken, religious woman, taken from one of the buses in Montgomery and led to the city jail because she refused to give her seat to a white person. In her own words, "The arresting officers did not handle me rough; they were considerate."

A lone white newspaperman went further with the story of Mrs. Parks when he told how, calmly this woman conducted herself in the court room, before less sympathetic elements, and how even her temperament, seemed to have softened the attitude of those strongly opposed to what she did.

Submitting to one's heated emotions spells defeat before one gets started. All around us today we have people, confused, heated by the irrational and illogical patterns of a kind of life linked with the past. While they lose their heads, the U. S. Supreme Court continues to drop legal bombs against bigotry, the impact of which is affecting the lives of all civilized human beings. Without question, the Court will continue in this manner. There is no other recourse. The growing quest for human freedom will dictate the action of those in supreme power.

The more articulate, the more rational elements and those having at heart the true sincere interest of the people, are going about trying to work things out in the way they should. They are doing it calmly, intelligently and without emotions. Those who continue to get mad, purely out of fear and hatred, are those ..... whom the Gods will eventually destroy."

Behind the segregation issue—I—

News

Majority of whites say 'races just should not mix'

Mon. 2-27-56

BY JOHN M. FENTON
Gallup Poll staff representative

Just how strongly does the average Southerner feel about desegregation? P.1

One needs to penetrate only a few miles into the South to become aware of the impact of the Supreme Court's decision. In the 13 Southern states today, nearly everybody is talking about the possible end of segregation.

Birmingham Ala.

In Raleigh, a service station operator said: "We aren't ready for it yet. The average Negro's standard of living and morals are below the average white person's.

It will have to be forced on the people before they will accept it."

IN BIRMINGHAM [illegible] wright reasoned: "It's a [illegible] ent race altogether. Eventually there could be intermarriage, and I don't approve of this."

Time and time again, one hears reactions similar to these as he travels through the South today.

They give some indication of the resoluteness with which the white Southerner is keeping to his convictions about the merits of continued segregation.

THIS REPORTER has just returned from a 4000 mile tour of the South, during which he spoke with many Southerners—both white and Negro.

Aided by the public opinion reporters of the Institute's Southern staff, we interviewed a representative crosssection of adults in all parts of the South—from Virginia to Texas.

Our goal was to get a true picture of how the South stands on the complex problem of integration—and more important—to probe into what lies behind the average Southerner's viewpoint—the "why" of public opinion.

ALL IN ALL, we found eight out of 10 Southern whites opposed to the Supreme Court's outlawing of segregation in the public schools.

Opinion is slightly less opposed to the recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling which outlawed segregated travel between states on buses, trains and in public waiting rooms.

There are still about three out of four Southern whites, however, who oppose such a move.

THE QUESTIONS and results:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY
Approve	16%
Disapprove	80
Undecided	4

"The Interstate Commerce Commission has ruled that racial segregation on trains, buses and in public waiting rooms must end. Do you approve or disapprove of this ruling?

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY
Approve	19%
Disapprove	76
Undecided	5

THE WIDE SPLIT in opinion that the segregation issue has brought to the American domestic scene is illustrated by the vote of people in the 35 states outside the South on the two issues—as recorded in the latest Institute survey:

SUPREME COURT'S DECISION Outside the South
Approve	71%
Disapprove	24
Undecided	5

ICC'S RULING Outside the South
Approve	67%
Disapprove	24
Undecided	9

THE DEGREE of opposition to both rulings in the South is directly related to the size of the Negro population in each of the 13 states.

In the "border states" of Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Texas, for example, where the white-Negro ratio averages eight whites to one Negro, we found nearly one white in four approving the Supreme Court's decision.

Better than one in four favors the ICC's ruling.

Even in these states, however, there is still a large majority of whites who oppose integration on both counts.

News P.13

MOVING INTO what might be termed the "mid-South states" of Florida, Virginia, Arkansas and North Carolina—where Negroes constitute, on the average, about 24 per cent of the total population—we discovered slightly greater opposition with about one white person in five favoring mixed schools and a little more than this approving on the ICC question.

It is in the five states of the Deep South—Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina and Mississippi—where the greatest opposition and bitterest resentment is found.

In these areas—where more than one-third of the population is Negro—nearly nine out of 10 whites are opposed on both questions.

ONLY ABOUT one white person in 17 in these states registers approval of the Supreme Court's decision.

Integration on trains, buses and in waiting rooms is approved by one person in 12.

What is in the mind of the white Southerner when he states firmly that he wants no integration? Is it a dislike of Negroes?

A fear of being outnumbered and overwhelmed? Or alarm over the trouble that may result if schools and waiting rooms are mixed?

TALKING TO whites practically anywhere in the South, one quickly discovers a deep-seated conviction that "the races just weren't meant to mix"—that the white man and black man exist on two entirely separate planes and that it would be wrong to try to change this.

Behind this conviction are religious reasons, cultural and traditional reasons, moral reasons, and in many cases a bid for the "separate but equal" doctrine as the only solution to the racial problem.

THERE ARE other reasons why the white person disapproves of integration.

In some instances, it is fear over the trouble or violence that mixing the races might cause.

In a few scattered cases, it is a protest against what he considers to be a violation of the State's Rights doctrine.

But the feeling that there is something inherently wrong in mixing Caucasion and Negro is, far and away, the reason cited most frequently by white people as why they oppose integration.

"IT ISN'T GOOD nor right for black and white to mix," said a 35-year-old addressograph operator from Birmingham.

"They are two entirely different races. Their habits and their speech and, most important, their morals are different. I work around Negroes and I understand them.

I respect them, but I know they must not be allowed to mix."

For a 58-year-old farmer living just outside of Verbena, Ala., the case for continued segregation has religious justifications. "We shouldn't mix," he said, "I don't think it is in accord with the teachings of the Bible for the races to mix.

When the children of Israel went into the Promised Land, God told them not to mix. I'm afraid this thing will cause war if it is forced on the people."

MANY SOUTHERENRS cannot understand why there is a need for integration when the Negroes have what the whites consider to be perfectly adequate facilities at present.

With the doctrine of "separate but equal," they justify their opposition to the Supreme Court's decision of two years ago.

"The Negroes in this section have just as good schools as the whites," commented the wife of a garage mechanic in Collinsville, Va., "There is no excuse to mix them. I was brought up to think that each race should stay to themselves."

A YOUNG SOUTHERNER from Greenwood, S. C., who works in a meat packing plant with 80 Negroes, gave me his views on the separate but equal argument with the following example:

"Say you were staying some place for the night with a colored boy, and there was only one bed.

Well, I wouldn't share the bed with the colored boy, but I would flip him a coin to see who got the bed. Now, if that ain't fair I'd just tell him to go to hell."

IN SOME CASES, the opposition to mixing races stems from an actual dislike of the Negro or his habits, which some whites say they find distasteful.

This kind of sentiment is found most frequently in the heavily Negro areas of the Deep South.

gia's Terrell County, which is 67 per cent Negro, pulled no punches in stating her views. Her feelings are typical of many white persons in areas where Negroes are concentrated.

"I just wouldn't ride the bus with a Negro, that's all. I would walk first. I have a good clean Negro maid, but dirty Negroes in crowded places are awful.

I tell you, where Negroes are, I just wouldn't go—to shows, parks, pools or anywhere else they had mixed races. I'd just stay home."

IN ANOTHER category are those whites who fear the consequences of integration—the trouble or violence that may result from mixing the races.

Generally speaking, these persons tend to feel that "the time has not yet come" for integration to be a feature of the Southern way of life.

"I don't like the idea," said a fireman's wife in Panama City, Fla., "If they mix the races, it would lead to a racial war. A lot of people are going to fight it."

THE CASE for integration—the viewpoint of a small minority of whites—is upheld, practically without exception, because it is the more "democratic" thing to do or that "a person shouldn't be discriminated against just because of his skin."

A high school teacher in Chattanooga put forth the pro-integration argument as follows: "I believe in a federal government and I thing we should abide by the "Supreme Court's rules.

If we are to have a democracy this means political and social equality."

EVEN HE, however, had some concern about the immediate effects of integration, stating, "I think the people around here will put up a fight—but they will have to give in eventually."

This, however, is the minority of viewpoint. The vast majority of Southern whites oppose integration and do so bitterly because they feel there is something inherently wrong about it.

How the Southern Negro feels about this vital issue will tne the subject of tomorrow's article on the South and segregation, to be published exclusively in The Birmingham News.—(c).

13 Dixie states polled

Few issues in recent years have stirred the feelings of voters as the segregation question has in the South. Recent explosive incidents have emphasized the intensity of sentiment in Dixie today.

To get at the reasons behind the people's widely divergent views, the American Institute of Public Opinion (Gallup Poll) has conducted an intensive study of the South.

Persons of both white and Negro races in all 13 Southern states were interviewed by 90 specially selected reporters from the institute's field staff.

This is the first in a special series of three articles by John M. Fenton on the results of this study. Mr. Fenton directed the field operations of the survey and made an extensive tour of the South himself, talking to voters.

Today's report deals with the viewpoint of the Southern whites. The second in the series will reveal the sentiment of Negroes, while the final report will cover the future of segregation in the South.

Gallup Poll—

Southern Whites Convinced 'Races Just Shouldn't Mix'

Commercial Appeal Mon. 2-27-56 P. 1 Memphis Tenn.

By JOHN M. FENTON
Gallup Poll Staff Representative

PRINCETON, N. J., Feb. 26.—Just how strongly does the average Southerner feel about desegregation?

One needs to penetrate only a few miles into the South to become aware of the impact of the Supreme Court's decision. In the 13 Southern states today, everybody is talking about the possible end of segregation.

In Raleigh, a service station operator said: "We aren't ready for it yet. The average Negro's standard of living and morals are below the average white person's. It will have to be forced on the people before they will accept it."

In Birmingham, a millwright reasoned: "It's a different nationality of people and a different race altogether. Eventually there will be intermarriage and I don't approve of this."

4,000-Mile Tour

Time and time again, one hears reactions similar to these as he travels through the South today. They give some indication of the resoluteness with which the white Southerner is keeping to his convictions about the merits of continued segregation.

This reporter has just returned from a 4,000-mile tour of the South, during which he spoke with many Southerners—both white and Negro. Aided by the public opinion reporters of the Institute's Southern staff, we interviewed a representative cross-section of adults in all parts of the South—from Virginia to Texas.

Our goal was to get a true picture of how the South stands on the complex problem of integration—and more important—to probe into what lies behind the average Southerner's viewpoint — the "why" of public opinion.

Commercial

Schools Vs. Travel

All in all, we found eight out of 10 Southern whites opposed to the Supreme Court's outlawing of segregation in the public schools.

Appeal

Opinion is slightly less opposed to the recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling which banned segregated travel between states on buses, trains and in public waiting rooms.

There are still about three out of four Southern whites, however, who oppose such a move.

The questions and results:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

B-4

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY
Approve	16%
Disapprove	80
Undecided	4

"The Interstate Commerce Commission has ruled that racial segregation on trains, buses and in public waiting rooms must end. Do you approve or disapprove of this ruling?"

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY
Approve	19%
Disapprove	76
Undecided	5

The wide split in opinion that the segregation issue has brought to the American domestic scene is illustrated by the vote of people in the 35 states outside the South on the two issues—as recorded in the latest Institute survey:

SUPREME COURT'S DECISION Outside the South
Approve	71%
Disapprove	24
Undecided	5

ICC'S RULING Outside the South
Approve	67%
Disapprove	24
Undecided	9

The degree of opposition to both rulings in the South is directly related to the size of the Negro population in each of the 13 states.

In the "Border States" of Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Texas, for example, where the white-Negro ratio averages eight whites to one Negro, we found nearly one white in four approving of the Supreme Court's decision. Better than one in four favors the ICC's ruling.

Deep South Bitter

Even in these states, however, there is still a large majority of whites who oppose integration on both counts.

Moving into Florida, Virginia, Arkansas and North Carolina—where Negroes constitute, on the average, about 24 per cent of the total population—we discovered slightly greater opposition with about one white person in five favoring mixed schools and a little more than this approving on the ICC question.

It is in the five states of the Deep South—Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina and Mississippi—where the greatest opposition and bitterest resentment is found. In these areas—where more than one-third of the population is Negro—nearly nine out of 10 whites are opposed on both questions.

Only about one white person in 17 in these states registers approval of the Supreme Court's decision. Integration on trains, buses and in waiting rooms is approved by one person in 12.

'They Just Shouldn't Mix'

Talking to whites practically anywhere in the South, one quickly discovers a deep-seated conviction that "the races just weren't meant to mix"—that the white man and the black man exist on two entirely separate planes and that it would be wrong to try to change this.

Behind this conviction are religious reasons, cultural and traditional reasons, moral reasons, and in many cases a bid for the "separate but equal" doctrine as the only solution to the racial problem.

There are other reasons why the white person disapproves of integration. In some instances, it is fear over the trouble or violence that mixing the races might cause. In a few scattered cases, it is a protest against what he considers to be a violation of the State's Rights doctrine.

But the feeling that there is something inherently wrong in mixing Caucasian and Negro is, far and away, the reason cited most frequently by white people as why they oppose integration.

"It isn't good nor right for black and white to mix," said a 35-year-old addressograph operator from Birmingham. "They are two entirely different races. Their habits and their speech and, most important, their morals are different. I work around Negroes and I understand them. I respect them, bu I know they must not be allowed to mix."

For a 58-year-old farmer living just outside of Verbena, Ala., the case for continued segregation has religious justifications. "We shouldn't mix," he said. "I don't think it is in accord with the teachings of the Bible for the races to mix. When the Children of Israel went into the Promised Land, God told them not to mix."

Many Southerners cannot understand why there is a need for integration when the Negroes have what the whites consider to be perfectly adequate facilities at present. With the doctrine of "separate but equal," they justify their opposition to the Supreme Court's decision of two years ago.

"The Negroes in this section have just as good schools as the whites," commented the wife of a garage mechanic in Collinsville, Va., "There is no excuse to mix them. I was brought up to think that each race should stay to themselves."

A young Southerner from Greenwood, S. C., who works in a meat packing plant with 80 Negroes, gave me his views on the separate but equal argument with the following example:

"Say you were staying some place for the night with a colored boy, and there was only one bed. Well, I wouldn't share the bed with the colored boy, but I would flip him a coin to see who got the bed. Now, if that ain't fair, I'd just tell him to go to hell."

In some cases, the opposition to mixing races stems from an actual dislike of the Negro or his habits, which some whites say they find distasteful. This kind of sentiment is found most frequently in the heavily Negro areas of the Deep South.

A farm housewife in Georgia's Terrell County, which is 67 per cent Negro, pulled no punches in stating her views. Her feelings are typical of many white persons in areas where Negroes are concentrated.

"I just wouldn't ride the bus with a Negro, that's all. I would walk first. I have a good clean Negro maid, but dirty Negroes in crowded places are awful. I tell you, where Negroes are, I just wouldn't go—to shows, parks, pools or anywhere else they had mixed races. I'd just stay home."

'The Time Hasn't Come'

In another category are those whites who fear the consequences of integration — the trouble or violence that may result from mixing the races. Generally speaking, these persons tend to feel that "the time has not yet come" for integration to be a feature of the Southern way of life.

"I don't like the idea," said a fireman's wife in Panama City, Fla., "If they mix the races, it would lead to a racial war. A lot of people are going to fight it."

B-8a

The case for integration—the viewpoint of a small minority of whites—is upheld, practically without exception, because it is the more "democratic" thing to do or that "a person shouldn't be discriminated against just because of his skin."

A high school teacher in Chattanooga put forth the pro-integration argument as follows: "I believe in a Federal Government and I think we should abide by the Supreme Court's rules. If we are to have a democracy this means political and social equality."

Even he, however, had some concern about the immediate effects of integration, stating, "I think the people around here will put up a fight—but they will have to give in eventually."

This, however, is the minority viewpoint. The vast majority of Southern whites oppose integration and do so bitterly because they feel there is something inherently wrong about it.

How the Southern Negro feels about this vital issue will be the subject of Tuesday's article.

RACIAL BIAS DECRIED

Times

Bishop Griffiths Speaker at Herald Tribune Breakfast

Mon. 3-5-56

Racial bias was assailed yesterday by the Most Rev. James H. Griffiths, Auxiliary Bishop of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York, as "a denial of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

N.Y.C.

The Bishop represented Cardinal Spellman at the seventh annual communion breakfast for employes of The New York Herald Tribune. Earlier, the more than 400 guests attended mass at St. Francis of Assisi Roman Catholic Church. The mass was celebrated by the Rev. Anselm Hardy of St. Bonaventure University.

New York

Others who participated in the breakfast at the New Yorker Hotel were: Ogden R. Reid, president and editor of The Herald Tribune; Luke Carroll, city editor, who served as toastmaster; and Walter Kiernan. Choral singing was provided by the Holy Name Glee Club of St. Helena's Roman Catholic Church, Parkchester.

INTEGRATION RULING HAILED AS CHRISTIAN

Times P.17 C

The Right Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, called upon the Christian Church yesterday to "demonstrate in every aspect of its life that there is "neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor slave, that all are one in Christ."

Mon. 3-5-56

In a sermon at the Church of the Epiphany, 1393 York Avenue, the Bishop declared that the Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public schools was "right" because it represented the "claim of the Kingdom of God in the affairs of men in the world."

"We must exercise charity as well as justice," he asserted, "and therefore there is Christian meaning in the Court's phrase in its implementing decision; that integration should proceed 'with all deliberate speed.'"

New York

"The word 'speed' means that we should be unwavering in purpose and intention. The word 'deliberate' suggests that in carrying out this intention we display qualities of charity so the results will not lead us to the sorry days of the Reconstruction after the Civil War, but rather to a deeper basis of community than would have been possible if this crisis had not come upon us."

Discrimination costs U.S. about $30,000,000 yearly

Afro-American P. 3 Sat. 3-3-56

NEW YORK (ANP)—William E. Vickery, New York area educational director of the National Conference of Christian and Jews, recently reported that discrimination costs the United States approximately $30,000,000 a year.

Baltimore Md.

The race relations expert told the faculty and students of Pace College that discrimination conflicts with free enterprises because it limits and debases competition and wastes human and natural resources.

38a 1956

GENERAL

India Policy

Advertiser

Of The New York Times Just Right For Dixie

By Steve Lesher

Mon. 2-20-56

It would be nice if The New York Times would apply its India Policy to the South. It makes more sense than its South Policy.

Now The Times is impetuous in its polite but urgent demands that the South surrender to Washington immediately and unconditionally, but note its restrained treatment of the "Problem In India":

"... It is hoped [in India] that [creation of fewer, and larger states that would cross language lines] would help to allay ... some of the fierce passions of group rivalry and help to prevent a repetition of the recent tragedies.

"Such a plan ... must remain a goal for some time in the future. In the meantime, political planning ... is up against a fundamental difficulty, and it will take unusual patience and unusual political skill to meet it. What is required, in effect, is a union of two political ideas that are virtually incompatible.

"The wide diversity of ethnic ... groups in India certainly suggests that a logical form of government would be a relatively loose federation with large powers residual in at least semi-autonomous units..."

STATES RIGHTS FOR INDIA

In India, then, The Times not only suggests a "go-slow" policy on these "fundamental ... ethnic" differences, but even advocates a States Rights policy. If good enough for India, why not the South of the United States?

Certainly there are fundamental differences between North and South on the issue of segregation as there are fundamental differences in worship of God between Christian and Jew. Both religions are held to be right in their own spheres by open-minded persons. Why, then, could not integration be right in the North and segregation right in the South?

LOCAL CONTROL

In that same issue of The Times appears an article entitled "Education in Review" by Benjamin Fine. The Times or Mr. Fine or both are off again to Afghanistan.

The article states: "...The [American Association of School Administrators] report points out [that] the thing that distinguishes the school system in the United States from those in other lands is local control. In England, France, Italy or any other nation in Europe, the schools are under centralized control. But here we have a vast number of separate school districts, each with its own operation and supervision of local educational systems. ...

"A visitor may say: "Your system makes it almost impossible to have uniform educational standards." Of course it does—and it is preferred for just that reason.

"As the report makes clear, the American school board has served to keep the public schools the property of the people rather than of general government, private corporations or even professional educators. No one centralized pattern to remold our society is possible..."

The Times holds this to the world as an example of our independent educational system and its values. To the whole world, that is, except the South of the United States.

INCLUDE THE SOUTH

If public schools are the property of the people rather than the government and if remolding educational society is impossible, why should not the South have the right to conduct its schools as the South sees fit? And why should the South remold its society?

Yet the same New York Times that tells India to exercise "unusual patience" with its social problems, and tells Europe that U. S. schools are "the property of the people" tells the South to integrate its races quickly and allow the Supreme Court to dictate the operations of its schools.

Constitution P. 4

Mon. 2-13-56

Atlanta Ga.

—Boldy

'Massive Resistance' Call Issued by Byrd

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25 (AP)—Sen. Byrd (D-Va.) called Saturday for "massive resistance" in the South to challenge the supreme court's order for racial integration in the public schools.

Mon. 2-25-56

Byrd made it clear in an interview he is not advocating or condoning violence in opposing enforcement of the order but said he wants Southern states to stand together in declaring the court's opinion unconstitutional.

"If we can organize the Southern states for massive resistance to this order I think that in time the rest of the country will realize that racial integration is not going to be accepted in the South," he said.

'Perfectly Legal Means'

"In interposition, the South has a perfectly legal means of appeal from the supreme court's order."

Interposition is a doctrine under which some students of constitutional government have contended the states could refuse to implement within their own confines a supreme court decision they felt did not comply with the constitution. Legislatures of some of the Southern states already have passed resolutions of this type.

While Byrd did not cast it in that light, his cell for Southern unity on the school issue apparently was akin to the "passive resistance" urged by some proponents of racial integration.

Powell Proposal

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) has urged a one-hour period of nationwide non-activity by Negroes on March 28 as a protest against the arrest of Montgomery, Ala., Negroes for boycotting segregated city buses.

Byrd's call for unified Southern support of interposition was in line with the study being given to the question by a group of 18 Southern senators who met recently under the leadership of Sen. George (D-Ga.)

The group named Sens. Russell (D-Ga.), Stennis (D-Miss.) and Ervin (D-N.C.) as a subcommittee to draft a manifesto the 18 might sign setting forth their opposition to carrying out the supreme court order.

After India and the Middle East, How About Georgia and Alabama?

He's Always Squawkin'!

P.9
Defender Sat. 2-18-56
Chicago, Ill.

Alabama Editors Are Saying

Advertiser P.4-A
Sun. 2-28-56
Montgomery Ala.

Federal Troop Twaddle

South Magazine

Such incendiary and arrogant bosses as A. Phillip Randolph, president of Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, and Michael J. Quill, Transport Workers Union chieftian, recently demanded that President Eisenhower send troops into Southern states. Another dictatorial union czar, Emil Mazey of United Auto Workers, echoed their hysteria with a demand that Mississippi be placed under federal trusteeship, presumably with troops to prod recalcitrants.

This was vicious talk from confirmed firebrands and force champions, and in view of their records was not unexpected. Now, to our dismay, we find such talk coming from the lips of men who consider themselves temperate enough to qualify for the presidency. It is incredible that such presidential hopefuls as Averell Harriman, Estes Kefauver and Adlai Stevenson should be hippodroming at length over the question of whether they would send troops to a state to enforce the Supreme Court's integration decision.

Kefauver, the Tennessee Truman, has clearly established himself as a dangerous intemperate. When he arrived in Gainesville to begin a Florida stumping tour last week, Kefauver already had endeared himself to NAACP agitators with a California declaration favoring strict enforcement of desegregation. Florida newsmen wanted to know whether he favored calling out federal militia to enforce integration. Yes, he replied, the court edict is "the law of the land" and he would favor using troops to quell disturbances resulting from forced integration.

Last week Harriman added his two cents to the chorus for federal force, shrieked: "I think the executive branch of the government should see to it that the orders and decisions of the Supreme Court are enforced . . . I don't think it's up to the federal government to talk about 10 years on that sort of thing. . . I haven't seen the activity which I think the situation demands." Thus Harriman, whose failure to curb riots, murder, and outright subversion on the strift-torn, Communist-ridden docks of New York City is notorious, implied that troops should do the enforcing.

At least Stevenson conceded that use of force "would be a great mistake"—"That is exactly what brought about the Civil War and division of the Union." But while saying last week that he thinks it is "essential" that the segregation issue be kept out of the race. Stevenson already had told NAACP leaders in California that as governor of Illinois he "twice recommended and vigorously supported fair employment practices legislation."

As a lawyer and scholar Stevenson should have declared vigorously and vehemently "No" to the force question. Harriman and Kefauver, whose radicalism is appalling, probably did not know better. In any event their positions are extremely remote from the Constitution of the United States. We invite their attention to Article Four, Section Four, of the basic law of the land:

"The United States shall guarantee to every state in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence." In brief, federal troops to quell domestic violence must be requested by the states, not dispatched at the whim of the Chief Executive.

Such talk not only discloses abysmal ignorance of constitutional government, it brands them as dangerous incendiaries. They do irreparable harm to the cause of democracy and sane, orderly government. Candidates who talk as though they surround the South with federal soldiers, bayonets fixed, are flirting with danger. That such intemperate twaddle should be seriously introduced into the presidential campaign is a dire warning of the inflammatory means some men would use to further their ambitions.

◆

Integration Pressure And Response

The Andalusia Star-News

The White Citizens Councils that are being formed in Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina and other states, expressing determination to fight integration, are something more than mere 1956 editions of the Ku Klux Klan.

While they embrace the same white supremists whose fathers and forefathers were uniformed in the Klan's white sheets, the WCC has developed policies to fit the obstacles created by the Supreme Court edict that segregation must be abolished.

Mississippi Sen. James Eastland, who spoke to an estimated crowd of 15,000 in Montgomery last week, has predicted the WCC will have enrolled memberships totaling two million Southerners within another 12 months.

This may appear overly ambitious but the activity of the councils will be accelerated in direct proportion to the pressures the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People exerts to erase the color line.

There has been considerable condemnation of mob violence. What happened at the University was mob action bordering on violence.

There were enough stone throwing, banner waving and threats of shooting to frighten the University authorities. Even the Negroes must have understood no individual, no matter how dedicated she might profess to be, could secure an education under circumstances that prevailed.

We have doubts that any court has the power to invoke the police powers or compel local officials to enforce the peace where the overwhelming white majority opposes integration.

A court may order segregation's bars erased. But a court, yes, even the U.S. Supreme Court, can hardly hope to invoke police powers to insure a peaceful community where the law enforcement officers are officials who must maintain the support and favor of the overwhelming white majority.

Business roadblock

News

Race tension seen snag to South's rise

Birm, Ala.

Wed. 3-28-56

Tension stemming from the segregation issue probably will keep many Northern businesses and industries from moving South, the Southern States Industrial Relations Conference was told today.

Boyd Campbell, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, who described himself as a Southern business man, said Northern concerns have moved South in the past to escape other forms of tension, and probably won't be willing to walk into an unfamiliar tension now.

BOYD CAMPBELL
. . . Conference speaker

Campbell is chairman of the board of the Mississippi School Supply Co., president of the Mississippi State School Book Depository, president of the Office Supply Co., and a director of the Mississippi Power and Light Co. and the Gulf, Mobile & Ohio Railroad.

"I am merely stating a fact when I say that this issue (segregation) has created a host of new tensions in major segments of the Southern states. Northern business men are thoroughly aware of this," Campbell said in a keynote address before the conference at the Tutwiler Hotel.

"We all know that some Northern concerns have moved South or have thought about moving South to escape tension and in the hopes of conducting their businesses in an orderly, fair and equitable way," he continued.

Industrial Conference
Stories, Pictures
Page 15

"I AM INCLINED to the opinion that not very many men will exchange a familiar kind of tension—no matter how irksome it may be—for an unknown kind of tension," Campbell added.

The speaker also said it is his opinion that "a not inconsiderable number of Southern union men will put the issue of state's rights far ahead of any pronouncement in favor of integration that may come down from a national labor union leader."

The speaker said outside pressure groups can only prolong the tension.

He spoke of the "vast improvement in race relationship and the progress of Southern Negroes in education, health and economic opportunity brought about by the enlightened leadership of men of good will in both races."

CAMPBELL CONTINUED:

"This progress came to a jarring halt when the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People spurred by local Negro leadership and by aggressive and intolerable methods undertook to speedily compel a condition that is contrary to the Anglo-Saxon tradition. . . .

"History does not record a single instance of compulsory integration. It will not do so in this instance."

Campbell also looked at the merger of the AFL and CIO unions from a business man's viewpoint.

"It seems to me that it should reduce labor friction and contribute to a more serene labor-management atmosphere," he said.

"Most members of the labor movement are honest, well-intentioned, patriotic citizens, and within their ranks is a vast reservoir of common sense."

Campbell said the merger brings a great responsibility to the leadership of American labor.

HE NOTED, "It is possible that as labor leadership is brought under one tent the business man will no longer be caught in the squeeze between the conflicting demands of the AFL and CIO. It may palliate the pains of the jurisdictional strike and other discomforts that stemmed from the divided labor authority," he declared.

"IN SAYING these things, I confess that I am a chronic optimist. I confess also that I am speaking from the perspective of a Mississippi cotton patch.

"But the main reason that I cannot wring my hands about this merger is my faith in the balanced judgment of the American people."

"The American people have a canny viewpoint about bigness in anything—be it business, government or labor.

"Physical bigness is all right—if the physical bigness is accompanied by the spiritual bigness of tolerance for the rights of others, fair dealing and respect for the well-being of the country as a whole."

South Held Split on Segregation; 'Rights' Group Told of Progress

Post + Times Herald Fri. 3-23-56 P. 40

Washington, D.C.

By Frank R. Kent Jr.
Staff Reporter

The South is not "monolithic" in its views on segregation, and up to a half dozen communities in Virginia may take some steps toward ending it in their schools by next fall, Frederick B. Routh of the Southern Regional Council yesterday told the Conference on Civil Rights.

Routh was one of a panel of five speakers at the eighth annual conference held by the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, now meeting at the Hotel 2400. Routh said the South could be divided into three categories of states: Kentucky, Texas and Arkansas where integration is proceeding, Virginia, Tennessee, Florida and North Carolina in a "waiting status," and Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina, as the "hard core" segregation states.

Routh said despite the approval in principle by the voters of the Gray Commission Virginia program, Virginia was not in the "hard core."

He called definitions of the controversy as a second civil war or a struggle basically between whites and Negroes as "nonsense." It basically is a contest between believers in law and order and those who would prefer anarchy, he declared.

Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.), said during the last few years color lines have been obliterated in everything pertaining to the Federal Government and its operations. In the District, Keating said, segregation in most activities is disappearing.

The Very Rev. Maurice V. Shean of the Catholic Committee of the South, said he knew of many instances that indicated a change was coming in Southern states "county by county." It is tragic, he said, that in many Southern communities people are afraid to make their views known.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the word "extremist" was being used in the controversy. President Eisenhower was an extremist, Mitchell said, in the tradition of George Washington adn Abraham Lincoln. Mitchell said the "mask of hypocrisy" on the faces of members of Congress must be stripped away.

NAACP to Petition For Loudoun Integration

Plans are under way to petition the Loudoun County School Board to integrate the county's schools.

The plans were announced by Edwin C. Brown of Alexandria, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People of Virginia.

Brown also said the NAACP has been authorized by Alexandria Negro parents, who have previously filed a petition, to file a suit in Alexandria Federal Court requiring that city's schools to integrate.

Brown said many Loudoun Negroes had asked the NAACP to petition the county to integrate. A petition is the first step in seeking integration. If the county fails to comply, the NAACP seeks authorization from the signers to file a suit and, once this is done, the case goes to court.

Florida Governor Asks Race Parley

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 22 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins today called on President Eisenhower to convene a conference of Southern governors for a discussion of racial relations.

In his message to the President, Collins said that as a result of the Supreme Court's school integration decision and of activities of extremists on both sides "we are experiencing what well may become a serious deterioration of racial relations.

Unnecessary race tension

News 3-23

THE CONVERSATION

HARRY TRUMAN

"We didn't have to have a civil war. But Buchanan, Polk and Fillimore couldn't make up their minds on a firm policy. If Andrew Jackson had been in power he would have stopped nullification before it ever got started

"My mother was unreconstructed," he said. "She never got over the Civil War. She told my brother before she came to see me in Washington:

"'If Harry asks me to sleep in Abraham Lincoln's bed, I'll sleep on the floor.'"

"But a lot of people like her who still live in our part of Missouri know that they've got to give Negro children a chance. The Negro has got to have economic equality, and you can't get economic equality without equality of education.

"Lots of progress in that direction has been made in Arkanas, Kentucky, North Carolina—even Texas and Louisiana—until Strom Thurmond and his boys came along and whipped things up. All this bitterness didn't have to happen. It could have been prevented."

SPECIAL RACIAL BOARD FAVORED

Times Picayune

New Orleans La.

WASHINGTON, March 29 (AP) —

Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R-NJ) has proposed that President Eisenhower appoint a special commission to consider how best to deal with the problems raised by the Supreme Court's decision banning segregated public schools.

"America must be united in finding the answer to this explosive problem," Smith told the Senate. He urged the appointment of a commission of "outstanding citizens, representing both sides of the controversy."

The commission's job, he said, would be to consider "unemotionally and objectively the implications of the present conflict and the practical difficulties involved in the supreme court decision."

"This would lay the foundation for a more understanding atmosphere," Smith said.

He said he had been greatly disturbed by the recent manifesto of 101 southern members of Congress calling the court's decision an abuse of judicial power and pledging all lawful measures to upset it.

Smith said he is "not unmindful of the difficulties involved in the problem" and added:

"The spirit of the manifesto is moderate and is respected by all of us, even those of us who completely disagree with its substance and purpose," Smith said.

But Smith said the issue represented to the country is "whether citizenship, which is guaranteed to all our people by the 14th amendment, can be divided so as to result in first and second class citizenship."

The challenge now, he said is "to find ways and means to establish equality of educational opportunity on a firm footing without rancor, butterness, or denial of the principle of equality."

SEGREGATION PLANS VIEWED BY ATTORNEY

Effects Of Interposition, Nullification Reviewed

PROPOSALS ARE STUDIED

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, March 29. — A distinction was drawn here Thursday between "interposition" and "nullification" by a leader in the Arkansas movement against the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

R. B. McCullouch Sr., Forrest City attorney and member of a five-man delegation which reported recently to Gov. Orval Faubus on the Virginia Interposition Plan, outlined the differences in a noon appearance he made before the Pulaski County Bar Association.

Provisions Explained

Interposition in Virginia, as Mr. McCullouch interpreted the Virginia resolution of Feb. 1, "is a means to an end." The measure adopted in Mississippi this year, he added, is the "end result" sought by the interposition movement.

Quoting from the Mississippi resolution, Mr. McCullouch emphasized that it concluded that the Supreme Court decisions were "of no lawful effect within the confines of the state of Mississippi."

In Virginia, the General Assembly has taken the position that until the question is settled "by clear constitutional amendment," the commonwealth will use every "honorable, legal and constitutional means available to resist illegal encroachments upon its sovereign powers," he said.

The nullification sounded in the Mississippi resolution, the Forrest City attorney pointed out, is directed at the 1954 Supreme Court decision declaring segregation unconstitutional.

Courts Given Aid

The interposition resolution of Virginia is "designed as an aid to the Federal district courts under the Supreme Court's 1955 decision," he added.

He noted that the Court's second opinion in the segregation cases, handed down May 31 of last year, permits some leeway to the federal district courts on The integration question.

Ike Urged To Call Race Parley

Florida Governor Asks for Action

Tallahassee, March 22 (AP) — President Eisenhower was called upon today by Governor LeRoy Collins to convene a conference of Southern governors for a frank discussion of the entire field of racial relations.

In his wire to the President, the Florida Governor said that as a result of the school-integration decision and of activities of extremists on both sides "we are experiencing what well may become a serious deterioration of racial relations."

"We are fearful the progress we have made over many years may be dissipated," he added.

Collins was authorized by a conference of State Government leaders and educators here yesterday to call upon the President, governors and attorneys general.

"We desire an opportunity to convey to you as our President our sincere impressions of these circumstances and conditions and feel that you and the Attorney General of the United States can be helpful, not only to Florida, but also to all of the Southern states, if you see and understand the problems with which we are confronted," Collins said.

"This understanding, we feel you can have, even though the United States Supreme Court has demonstrated a woeful lack of such insight."

The Florida group took its cue from a second appeal yesterday by Eisenhower at his news conference for moderation in the school-integration issue and a suggestion by Collins that the South go directly to the President with its problem.

Look, Look, You Sap

THE Alabama Journal's James K. Hutsell has, it appears, deflated another of Eastern journalism's myths.

It was Life magazine that committed the booboo of modern times in moaning over the fact that Emmett Till's father had died a hero's death fighting for democracy, only to have it revealed that the elder Till had been hanged in Italy by the U.S. Army for the wartime murder of two women and the rape of two others.

Recalling this and acting on a tip, Hutsell started checking on "Private Foster, U.S.A.," a Negro featured in an 18-page segregation report in the current Look. Private Foster, U.S.A., is Pvt. Joe Foster, from Albany, Ga. Of Foster, Look wonders:

Can a man endure a life half free, half segregated? Joe Foster has been able to. Twenty-two of his 25 years were spent in Albany, Ga., where a white man is a "gentleman," and a colored man is often just a "nigger". But in September, 1952, Joe entered another world.

That was the Army. Joe found things different, and Look shows how in pictures. But apparently the magazine didn't know how different it was for Private Foster, U.S.A. Look quotes Joe as saying, "A man just isn't a man in Albany." But is Joe bitter? No. "There's trouble here, but it's my home town and I'm proud of it," he says.

The "trouble" Joe spoke of, Hutsell discovered, was not so much social as criminal. Capt. Gordon Stokes, chief of Albany detectives, revealed that Joe is better known in his home town as "the Phantom Burglar." Capt. Stokes helped trap Joe in 1950 outside the Medical Building into which he had broken half a dozen times. The Albany Police Department still has Private Foster, U.S.A.'s signed statement admitting the break-ins. Charged with seven counts of burglary, he was sentenced (because he was a juvenile at the time) to the Boys Training School at Milledgeville. On release, he joined the Army.

The conclusion is of course valid: "A man just isn't a man in Albany." Sometimes he's a common thief.

In the future, we trust the nation's crusading picture magazines will examine their heroes more thoroughly before going to press.

Sen. Allen J. Ellender

Ellender Warns on Violence

In Radio Speech On Segregation

WASHINGTON, Mar. 17 (AP).— Sen. Allen J. Ellender, D., La., said tonight the South must avoid lawlessness and violence on the race issue if it wants to escape a "repetition of the Reconstruction regimes" that followed the Civil War.

Sen. Ellender, one of 101 signers of a "Declaration of Constitutional Principles" by Southern lawmakers denouncing the Supreme Court's school desegregation ruling, said any breakdown of governmental authority in the Southern states would "open our gates to an invasion by a new and even hungrier breed of carpet-baggers."

He made the statements in a radio broadcast for Louisiana stations.

Since the court's 1954 ruling, he said racial relations in the South have deteriorated and threaten to get worse.

No "Whipping Boys"

The declaration was necessary, he said, to show that the "people of the South, both white and Negro, are not going to be used as either whipping boys or political pawns in order to fulfill the Supreme Court's new doctrine of sociological justice."

As a result of the ruling, he said, "outside agitators who seek the subjugation of both the white and Negro races in the South are hovering like greedy vultures for the time when racial antagonisms lead to chaos."

The South, he said, has been invaded by "unprincipled, power-hungry, self-seeking, outside agitators, primarily "the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

But it is important for the South to avoid "violence, lawlessness and bloodshed," Sen. Ellender added.

"Declaration"

The "Declaration of Constitutional Principles," presented to Congress last Monday by Sen. Walter F. George, D., Ga., and Rep. Howard W. Smith, D., Va., kicked up storms of debate in the capital.

At his mid-week press conference, President Eisenhower pleaded for moderation by "ex-some of the latter tremists" on both sides in the segregation issue. But his remarks drew the fire of somevolves no derogation of either Northern Democratic liberals, he said, "If some believe who called for him to speak out that segregation connotes inferiority, then it is a connotation more firmly.

choose to place upon it, for the segregation applies both white and Negro alike."

PENITENCE ASKED FOR SEGREGATING

Times P.25-C

Bishop Donegan, in Pastoral Letter, Calls for Holy Week Atoning for the 'Sin'

Mon. 3-19-56

Acknowledgment of "our own sins of segregation in our own community" during the week before Easter was urged yesterday by the Right Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York. New York, N.Y.

Bishop Donegan made the appeal in a pastoral letter to the diocese, which he read from the pulpit of St. Bartholomew's Church, Park Avenue and Fifty-first Street. The diocese includes New York, Bronx and Richmond Counties of this city and seven upstate counties.

Denouncing the theory that segregation is a regional problem, the Bishop asserted that "it is our own problem since it concerns not only our nation, but also the whole world."

The present turmoil over the problem of integration, he said, "gives endless comfort to the enemies of our democracy." He added that our nation's statements on human liberties "must of necessity be subject to suspicion when our actions belie our words."

The Bishop noted the progress made "in this section of the country" towards improving the living and working conditions and educational opportunities for "many of our brethren who have been denied the rights and privileges which all of us believe to be the inheritance of every child of God."

Response to Divine Principle

Observing that we have done "those things which are required of us by God and humanity," he asked: "But has it not been more by legal action rather than by the application and practice of our faith?"

He noted that "our own church has affirmed" the doctrine that "'God hath made all nations of one blood to dwell on the face of the earth' and all are one in Christ."

Christians, he maintained, are confronted with but one problem: "Do our parishes maintain a degree of mutual acceptance of human beings as persons, people for whom Chrst died, absolutely irrespective of race, class or ethnic background?"

He warned that, regardless of the reply, "there is only one answer acceptable to God and that is a general and humble acknowledgment of our failure in our bearing personal witness to the love of Christ who charged us that we should love one another as He loved us."

He asked that during Holy Week "we acknowledge before God our own sins of segregation in our own community and pray daily that God will reveal to us more clearly the Biblical truth that all men are made in the image of God and are of eternal worth in His eyes, and that in Christ all men are one."

Bias, Segregation May Cost South Factories

Defender Chicago, Ill

Sat. 4-7-56

Many northern industries, which had been considering moves to the south, are re-considering in view of the racial situation, according to Sylvia Porter, syndicated economic reporter.

Miss Porter said the south stands to lose "tens of millions of dollars" in wages and taxes because manufacturers are reluctant to become embroiled in the racial conflict of the south.

She cited the case of "one of America's largest manufacturers of electrical equipment" who was set a few months ago to open a new plant in Georgia.

OPPOSE MOVE

"When the engineers and technical employees concerned were informed of the planned transfer," said Miss Porter, "a large percentage strongly objected.

"They all have families,' said my informant, 'and while they liked the area, they didnt want to move into a mess about schools, 'social segregation, etc.'

"The company — which would close down if it couldn't count on the engineers and technicians it must recruit in the North — has decided not to open any more plants below the Mason-Dixon line."

STAYS NORTH

Miss Porter related other cases, including that of a "world-famous corporation in the business machine field," which found an ideal location in for a new plant in Kentucky.

"Then it ran headlong into segregation of social facilities. The company abandoned its plan to move south, is now expanding in New York state," she said.

She stated that one executive, whose firm specializes in helping businesses find factory locations told her that at least 20 corporations, which had considered moving south, are about to abandon the idea.

SOME GOOD POINTS

She continued:

"Of course, the racial problem in the South always has been a consideration in corporation moving to the region.

"But the problem has been more than offset by the South's great advantage — climate, ample labor, lower wage levels, special tax exemptions, other incentives, cheap power.

"Since World War II, the South has gone through a profound industrial revolution.

"Now it's a question of whether the problem is serious enough to slow down the South's industrial growth.

"I am not venturing into the emotional, social, moral, political, legal aspects of the situation in the South today.

"Here, I am submitting only a hard-headed, cold-blooded report in my field of economics.

"And this report that racial tensions already are affecting the expansion plans of corporation deeply wanted by the South should be read by hard-headed businessmen in a cold-blooded way.

'MOUNTIES' SUGGESTED TO GUARD DIXIE NEGROES

Journal & Constitution Atlanta, Ga. 4-20-56

CHICAGO, April 7 (UP)—Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore) said Saturday night the government eventually may have to send federal police patterned after the Royal Canadian Mounties into the South to protect the rights of Negroes.

Neuberger said he already is studying the Canadian statutes which set up the famed red-coated force of the North Country. Sun. 4-8-56

He said such a force in this country "may prove to be the one way of safeguarding the Negroes of the Southern states in the exercise of their inalienable American rights to vote, to be equally educated, to be respected and not to be discriminated against."

Neuberger, whose remarks were contained in a speech prepared for delivery to the annual dinner of the Council Against Discrimination, is author of a book about the Mounties.

Fire Starting In The South

From: The Manchester Union Leader, Manchester, N. H

This newspaper hates and opposes segregation. Nevertheless, it predicts that the U. S. Supreme Court decision abolishing segregation of Negroes in American public schools will be unsuccessful in changing long-standing customs, as was the attempt to do away with the use of alcoholic drinks by passing a constitutional amendment. The prohibition amendment was a failure. Its main by-products were gangsterism and widespread disregard for law and order. Advocate P.4

Editors of leading newspapers in the Deep South indicate that the Supreme Court's desegregation decision has brought to a standstill the lessening of tension between the two races that had been marked in late years and that was resulting in the Negro gradually obtaining his proper place in the life of the South. The Supreme Court decision against segregation is an example of trying to do the right thing in the wrong way.

Northerners, especially those who have not lived in the South, have no realization of the fact that, rightly or wrongly, segregation has existed for so long in the South that it is a way of life for the white people. They will not stand to see it abolished because of a court ruling. Sat. 3-17-56

The impact of this issue on the nation as a whole has not been generally realized. The question of segregation will dominate the Democratic convention next summer. Jackson, Miss.

Candidate Stevenson's position on this question has pleased neither the North nor the South. Kefauver, by coming out against segregation, has pleased the Northern Democratic city bosses who depend on the Negro vote to control their areas. By his position, Stevenson has probably cost himself Southern support. Without the South, the Democratic party cannot win a national election.

Probably this means that the Democratic party will turn, for its nominee, to a dark horse who has not been forced to commit himself before his nomination on the question of segregation.

Certain Republicans recently, with questionable taste, have boasted that it was a Republican chief justice who presided over the Supreme Court when it handed down the anti-segregation decision. Chief Justice Warren, who while Republican governor of California favored socialized medicine, is an example of the shallow and superficial political and legal fraud of late years, a fraud believing in the all-powerful government and in improvement not by evolution and growth but by compulsion by law and judicial edict.

Unfortunately for those ideals of fair play for which this newspaper and many other Americans stand, Warren's Supreme Court decision has not brought happiness and enlightenment south of the Mason-Dixon line but has lit a fire of hate and discord between the white and the black in the South, the like of which has not been seen since Abraham Lincoln gave his life to put out the conflagration.

Moderation Begets Moderation

From: The Christian Science Monitor

Advocate Sat. 3-31-56

We welcome the rising chorus of appeals for moderation in dealing with the current crisis over desegregation. The eloquent pleas by President Eisenhower, Senator Clifford Case, and Representative Kenneth Keating are the latest. They call for a response of reason and common sense from both sides. And every such response should evoke reciprocal responses. For as extremism is answered by extremism, so moderation begets moderation.

Jackson, Miss.

Such appeals are the first and necessary step. But action must begin to follow words. Much can be done by better information.

P. 4

For instance, few people in the North have any accurate conception of what the situation is in the South. Some know that the Negro has made great strides; few know what sacrifices southern people have made for these gains or how much remains to be done in many areas. Few have had the experience of living where a large part of the population—sometimes a majority—have very different customs and standards plus marked racial characteristics.

Few realize that Northerners going to live in the South usually adopt southern racial attitudes-with emphasis. Or that even at home many Northerners practice their own forms of discrimination and segregation—in housing, in employment, and in education. Few Northerners understand at all the extent of good race relations in the South.

Many Southerners appear equally unaware of certain factors in the situation, including their own forms of inconsistency. Few recognize that they have some very close associations with Negroes in their homes and at their work, but draw the racial line in other places. Many appear not to know the extent to which desegregation has been achieved without overturning their civilization—in public libraries, on the Atlanta municipal golf course, in all but five state universities, in many labor unions.

Extremists on both sides would have less influence if more Southerners knew how few Northerners want to send troops to enforce social equality between the races below the Mason-Dixon line. There is also widespread misunderstanding of the Supreme Court decision. Too many Americans do not know that it left a good deal of room for adjustment to local conditions. Too many are unaware that it permits separation in schools where separation takes place naturally. Indeed, gains for moderation would come from more information about the decision.

Good people in the South are, in their frustration, calling it "vicious, unwarranted, and unconstitutional." There seems to be an assumption that the court, out of gratuitous perversity, decided to play the tyrant. The facts that three Southerners joined in the unanimous decision; that many social and legal developments led up to this interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment; that the court did not go out hunting for new powers, but performed its habitual function of deciding cases brought to it; that historically much constitutional law—including the "separate but equal" rule the South now clings to—has been developed in this way—all these facts deserve fuller consideration.

There is in this issue ground for constitutional argument, but such argument particularly should be informed and moderate. Of it is, moderation in action will be encouraged.

General

For The South, A New Fear

By SYLVIA PORTER
In The Charlotte (NC) Observer

A new fear is beginning to emerge among the intelligent, aggressively industry-minded citizens of this, the key and largest city of the Carolinas—a fear that as it spreads could, in itself, be vital in helping to avert unmerciful tragedy in the South.

Journal & Guide

Put in simple, yet superlatively significant dollars-and-cents terms, it is:

P10 Sat. 4-7-56

That the increasingly violent conflict over integration of the Negro will, if it continues, seriously set back the plans of industries all over America to expand in and move to the Southeast.

If this happens — AND IT IS ALREADY STARTING TO HAPPEN — then:

Norfolk, Va.

The strong industrial upsurge upon which the development plans of Charlotte and every other leading city in the South are based — will fall far short of expectations.

38a

The South's great transition from economic colonialism to an industrialized, alive, sophisticated society will be shamefully slowed;

* * *

General

THE NOW BRIGHT production-employment-income picture will be perceptibly darkened;

The profound industrial revolution of the South—which just in the last 15 years has slashed unemployment and dramatically raised living standards — will be interrupted.

* * *

This goes far beyond emotionalism and social customs.

This hits right at the cash register of the Southern businessman and the pocketbook of his family — and businessmen, no matter where they live, have respect for the cash register and pocketbook.

And so it could be that the awakening I have glimpsed here in Charlotte will spread and the Southern businessman will take the lead in demanding that the integration issue must be solved with dignity and decency—and in the not too distant future.

Charlotte is a beautiful, gracious—and booming—city. The whole area vibrates to the hum of new activity

In 1955 alone, 30 new industries — including a giant Douglas Aircraft plant soon to begin production of the Nike guided missile — moved in.

Since the start of World War II Charlotte's population has zoomed more than 50 per cent, but jobs in industry have climbed more than 90 per cent.

* * *

WHAT'S MORE, its leaders thrill to the prospect of mounting industrialization and diversification of industry.

As Charlotte's Mayor, Philip Van Every, said proudly when I called on him, "What you're seeing now is Charlotte in its industrial infancy."

And, added James Glenn, executive vice president of Charlotte's Chamber of Commerce, "Right now, we have four hot prospects (for additional companies). We're going to grow."

* * *

But although race relations in Charlotte are more friendly than in most other areas of the South and Charlotte is still a comparatively quiet city, informed observers admit the situation is deteriorating fast.

Of Glenn's "four hot prospects," one has cooled — in the past month. This company well may shelve, for the time being at least, its plans to move South—a first warning of what could happen.

If American industry is to continue surging toward the expending in the Southeast, it must have available an ever-increasing pool of skilled workers in the localities in which it has settled.

* * *

IF AMERICAN industry is to continue building up this whole area, it must be able to count on an urban, worldly atmosphere in which the men coming in can work at ease and their families can live without tension.

In Charlotte, the most encouraging thing I discovered was the beginning awareness of the economic force involved in this issue—as distinct from the emotional, social, political, legal forces.

It could be that the economic force will be the greatest of them all in helping the South toward a solution and thus helping it stay firmly on the road toward a brilliant destiny.

READERS' POINT OF VIEW:

Courier-Journal

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal:

Desegregation in the Deep South presents a very grave problem. It is going to take time and plenty of it before the schools can be integrated, but it can be done peacefully.

Some loud-mouthed pinko politicians, mostly from Chicago and New York, are playing with fire in yelling for federal intervention and immediate integration, and they should know they are playing with fire. The intelligent people of the South realize that integration of the schools will, under the law, have to take place and they know that it will be done in a few years in a peaceful way if the leftist politicians will only forget about the Negro voter in the large Northern cities and do the intelligent thing by stopping their rabble-rousing.

HENRY HOWARD.

Prestonsburg, Ky.

Good Old American Way

Integration apparently has three schools of thought. They may be identified as routine acceptance, gradual adoption and total rejection. The lines of demarcation are always clear but they are by no means fixed or constant.

In areas where routine acceptance prevails, the Supreme Court's formula on desegregation creates no problem. The very opposite school of thought is identified as the school of total rejection.

The chief advocates of this school are found in the four states which have resorted to the ancient and somewhat illusory doctrine of "interposition." For our purpose and conclusion at which we expect to arrive we define "interposition" as a form or expression of mass hysteria on part of the dominant group to maintain its status quo under outside pressures that are paramount. The advocates of this echelon, more often than not, have considerable difficulty in explaining that they are operating within the law and that they are not inspired by "mobocracy" or a system of pressures or direct action against those who do not conform to their thinking. Their greatest hope rests primarily on the tactics of a delaying action.

Here we have two extreme situations neither of which would seem to offer any practical solution to the problem before us. Fortunately for men and women of goodwill everywhere, there's an alternative which is presently found in the majority of the 17 states affected by the Supreme Court's formula, making well-anchored gains in the good old American way. This is gradualism. Take your pick. Therefore, we believe Governor Harriman's approach is spurious and that Mr. Stevenson's position is sound.

Hopkinsville, Ky. MCKINLEY BACOYN.

Lou. 3-3-56

Race Relation Observance

The following paragraph appeared in The Courier-Journal February 23: "Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 22: Negro religious and political leaders, including 16 ministers, were arrested on boycotting charges today in a wholesale round-up of defendants indicted by a grand jury for their mass protest against segregation on city buses."

By way of contrast, I would like to relate what happened here in the city of Louisville Sunday evening, February 19. In observance of race relation month, I, as pastor of St. John Methodist Church, 18th and Ormsby, the choir and a number of our members conducted the evening worship in the Hughlett Memorial A.M.E. Church, Zion, 2324 West Chestnut. Both choirs led the congregation in singing some of the great hymns of the church. The St. John choir rendered two very appropriate and beautiful anthems.

Following the program of worship the guest pastor delivered the sermon. After the sermon the choir of the host church rendered three special numbers. It was a great hour of fellowship, of singing and inspiration. I am sure that each one present of both races returned home feeling that it was a very profitable occasion. On March 18, the Rev. Mr. Hughlett and his people will come to St. John and conduct the evening worship for us. We are looking forward to their coming.

I am convinced that if the same spirit of goodwill and fellowship prevailed throughout our Southland as was manifested in the co-operative service at Hughlett Memorial on the evening of February 19, our racial difficulties and problems would be solved. There would be "one great fellowship of love, throughout the whole wide earth."

Louisville. KENNETH R. DILLON.

Restraint Urged About Manifesto

Courier-Journal 2-3

Fri. 3-16-56 Louisville, Ky.

Case Calls for Friends and Foes Of Segregation To Avoid Extremism

From Wire Dispatches

Washington, March 15.—The first formal Republican reply in the Senate to the Southern segregation manifesto was made today and it was in a tone of marked moderation.

In a declaration last week 19 Southern senators and 81 Southern members of the House, all Democrats save two, pledged to use "all lawful means" to overturn the Supreme Court's decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

Senator Case of New Jersey, a liberal of the Eisenhower wing of the G.O.P., called today upon the anti-segregationists as well as the prosegregationists to avoid all extremism of utterance and action.

Calls for Tolerance

"Let us each in every way open to us make clear that the extremists will not have their way, that men of good will and moderate temper can and will work out the problems involved in complying with the law if they really want to," he told his colleagues.

In the House, Representative Keating of New York, another liberal Republican, called also for understanding tolerance of the Southern viewpoint, though making it clear that he wholly supported the court.

"I agree with my esteemed friends from Southern states that we are facing challenges akin to those which plagued our nation in the sad days of reconstruction," Keating declared.

"But I am sure that on reflection none of us will wish to carry his partisanship on this matter beyond the limits of judicial reconsideration or legislative and constitutional revision.

Powell Talks of 3d Party

"And I hope the wisdom and restraint of the court's own language in these decisions will prove helpful to all of us."

Representative Powell said today he and other Negroes may consider starting a third party unless either the Republicans or the Democrats take a firmer stand for Negro rights in the South.

Suggests State Panels

Senator Sparkman (D., Ala.) suggested today that President Eisenhower call on the governors to set up bipartisan commissions to seek solutions to the integration problem.

Other Southern senators also expressed opposition in separate interviews to a study commission such as Eisenhower called for again yesterday.

Eisenhower told his news conference yesterday he had in mind a commission created by Congress and given power to issue subpoenas and take evidence.

"I think the President would be better advised to ask the governors of states where there are tensions to set up bipartisan commissions to look into this matter," Sparkman said.

"Integration and kindred problems are different in every state, and people familiar with those problems should look into them."

Sparkman and Senator Douglas (D., Ill.) said Eisenhower has authority to set up a commission of his own to conduct inquiries.

Gradualist Approach to Integration Is Urged

Associated Press Wirephoto

DR. GUY H. WELLS
Urges racial co-operation

States' Rights Principle

Times 2-22

Southerners Said to Feel They Should Manage Own Affairs

New York

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Allow me to reply briefly to the criticism by Mortimer Hays published Feb. 5 of my letter pleading for courtesy and forbearance in judging the attitude of Southerners regarding the race problem.

Mr. Hays evidently fails to realize either the nature of this problem or the gravity of the situation which may again rend this nation apart, not by war but by bitterness of feeling and disunity.

The basic issue, in reality, is not the race issue but rather the principle of the right of states to deal in their own ways with matters considered by Southerners to lie in the field of "reserved rights" under the Constitution.

The issue of States' Rights was not settled by the Civil War. It has been aggravated in recent years by the alarming tendency of the Federal Government to intrude and dictate in local affairs such as freedom of enterprise, agriculture and education.

Mon. 2-27-56

Mr. Hays upholds a doctrine which would permit a panel of nine men—all political appointees—to rule and legislate without redress on the part of the several states. This doctrine is abhorred by millions of Americans in both the North and the South, irrespective of political affiliations.

The intelligent and high-minded people of the South are thoroughly aroused over this issue. They should be permitted to work out a solution in their own way, especially as concerns the ultimate good of the colored people who, by destiny, must share in the task of building up a prosperous and happier South.

Southerners should not be dictated to by outsiders who do not have to live intimately with this painful problem. They cannot be coerced. The situation is too tense for denunciations and recriminations. Are they to be subjected to indignant intimidations and hatred? Or are they entitled to courteous consideration and generous forbearance?

PHILIP M. BROWN.

Charleston, S. C., Feb. 12, 1956.

Gainesville Daily Times

South's Majority Is Weary Of Ranting Racial Extremists

More and more moderate views on the Northern sides of the segregation issue appear in the nationwide press. Northern educators, exposed to the sincere opinions of their Southern brethren, show signs of heeding requests to "go slow" in pushing integration.

More and more the minds of people from regions outside the South recognize the foolhardiness of the NAACP in pushing a crisis to the precipice of disaster.

In the South, the wild, heedless statements of leaders who assume too much stir up bitterness and violence, but collide increasingly with moderate views. Surely there is some middle ground where the problems of desegregation can be handled intelligently. We hear calmness from many Southerners who don't like the ring of blood in the words of their elected officials.

Moderate voices, forced to restrain from shouting by the very nature of their position, are overcried by the NAACP and by the reckless voices of politicians. We do not hear the rank and file of the people talking in any such dogmatic, inflammatory terms. The people would turn to a moderate leader if he would show himself.

Adlai Stevenson on the national scene expressed a moderate viewpoint—one the South could live with. His efforts to bind the South in philosophy as well as tactics with the National Democratic Party bounced immediately against Senator Russell's endorsement of Lyndon Johnson for the presidency and after that against the Southern manifesto in Congress. The timing of these events make recent actions concerning the race question appear wholly political in intent.

The South whirls maddeningly away from center and the further it goes the more difficult it becomes to return to a rational and workable solution.

Generations of progress could be set back overnight by continued adherence to blind denouncement of a situation that can be worked out. The North is beginning to back off a little in its unreason. The South could do the same.

SEN. ELLENDER WARNS SOUTH ON VIOLENCE

New Carpetbaggers Will Follow Failure Of Law, Says Solon

WASHINGTON, March 17 (AP)—A Southern senator cautioned his people Saturday night to avoid any show of violence in resisting school integration lest they invite a return of "Reconstruction" government and rule by "carpetbaggers."

Sen. Allen Ellender (D-La) told a Louisiana radio audience in an address recorded in Washington that he and other Congressional signers of last Sunday's "manifesto" against integration are committed to resistance by "any lawful means." He added:

"What the South must avoid at all costs is violence, lawlessness, hatred and bloodshed. The outside agitators who seek the subjugation of both the white and Negro races in the South are hovering like greedy vultures for the time when racial antagonisms led to chaos, the breakdown of governmental authority, and general lawlessness.

* * *

"IF THIS condition should occur, then I fear they will not hesitate to press for the use of force. If this should occur, then all our people could look for of the Reconstruction regimes which brought the South only oppression and self-seeking exploitation."

In "our fight to maintain the basic principles of our federal, constitutional system," Ellender said, "we must not open our gates to an invasion of our states by a new and even hungrier breed of carpetbaggers."

The "declaration of Constitutional principles" signed by the Southern Congressmen, he said, "is a sober warning" to the American people that the Supreme Court "has laid the foundation for what may yet prove to be a complete destruction of our Constitutional system of checks and balances."

INTEGRATION HIT AS COMMIE PLOT

Shreveport Citizens Group Hears Gov. Griffin

SHREVEPORT, La., Feb. 23 (AP)—Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia termed efforts to integrate schools a "Communist plot to devide the people" and "nothing less than an effort to destroy the country" in a speech here Thursday night.

The Georgia governor addressed a meeting held under auspices of the Citizens Council of Shreveport.

In a prepared text, handed newsmen in advance of the speech, Griffin called the Supreme Court ruling "anarchy by the court."

Relations Set Back

"The South was making great progress unimpeded," he said, "but now the good relations between the races of this region have been set back over a hundred years."

He said the South is under no legal or moral obligation to submit to the court ruling because its edict is "in defiance of the constitution."

"It cannot be said that the people of the South have defied the court when it is the court itself which acts unconstitutionally and the states and their people refuse to recognize a ruling which is clearly an unlawful usurpation of authority by the federal judiciary."

Mixed Marriage Issue

He reviewed action taken by the Georgia Legislature, including bills authorizing implementation of a private school plan should that become necessary.

Griffin said the next threat "looming on the horizon is a further declaration by the United States Supreme Court that a state's power to prohibit mixed marriages is unconstitutional."

"The heavy percentage of colored population in the South makes it mandatory for us to practice segregation," he added. "It is in poor taste and bad judgment for states which do not have our problem to seek to tell us how we can best solve it."

"Understand" The South

THE ABLE AND influential Richmond Times-Dispatch, and other Southern journals have been calling upon Northern newspapers and National magazines to open up their columns to Southern writers, in order that the South's case against desegregation might get a better hearing.

The Times-Dispatch the other day called attention editorially to an article in Time magazine by WILLIAM FAULKNER, Mississippi born novelist, warning the North that unless that region got a better understanding of the South's determination to keep segregation in its traditional forms, "liberals" like himself, who now occupy a sort of "moderate" position would be driven into the ranks of the militant prosegregationists.

When prosegregationists (the group that will not consider yielding gradually to desegregation at any point at any time) calls upon the North to understand the South, they really are asking the North to agree with the South in all matters pertaining to the South's policy for dealing with the race question.

They are not asking for understanding; they are asking for agreement, and for cooperation in holding on to their patterns of withholding citizenship from Negroes.

* * *

Which "South" is the Times-Dispatch and others asking the North to "understand"? There are at least three. The mob-minded political South; the more conservative and decent business South, and the vast South, which is in favor of law and order and the principles of Christianity, but which is seldom heard from. For which of these Souths is the spokesmen for the political South asking "understanding"?

RACIAL INJUSTICE HELD U. S. SHAME

Its Effect on Other Peoples Decried by Jesuit Editor in Sermon at Fordham

Every "interracial failure" in the United States is "bruited around the world with the speed of light," the editor of the Jesuit weekly America said yesterday.

Preaching at the fourth annual observance of Interracial Sunday at Fordham University, the Rev. Thurston N. Davis warned that "often that light gets refracted through the strong, twisted lens of Soviet propaganda."

Thus, he observed, "we cut an ugly figure when we fail to live with our fellow citizens in justice and in charity."

"The whole world has its eyes on us," Father Davis went on. "It had its eyes on Tuscaloosa all this month.

"Our world audience will not note or long remember that Autherine Lucy's lawyer may have made charges which could not be substantiated or that the milling crowd of news photographers may have had something to do with the hysteria of the crowd of rowdies on the Alabama campus.

"They will note and remember only that at a critical moment we denied our democratic principles and resisted our own laws in a passion of race hatred.

A Senator's Inconsistency

"What must be the effect on the non-white peoples of the world when they read that our Supreme Court ruled that we proceed with all 'deliberate speed' to end the segregation of races, and then learn that a United States Senator on Feb. 10, 1956, spoke of the Court's decision as 'judicial tyranny by a nine-man oligarchy'?"

Father Davis was referring to Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi.

"The United States today," the priest continued, "finds itself bearing the immense responsibility of the leadership of the free world. It is a responsibility we did not seek, but cannot surrender. Our every action, our every failure, is now loaded with importance and significance to all the world.

"Surely the Senator must see that he cannot effectively oppose subversion one day in Washington if soon after in Montgomery, Ala., he aligns himself with those who promote it."

The mass was celebrated by the Rev. Richard Pwamang of the Diocese of Tamale, Gold Coast, Africa, with the Rev. Archibald V. McLees, Chaplain of the Interracial Council of the Brooklyn Diocese as deacon. The Rev. C. M. Visuvasam, Director of Social Action of the Archdiocese of Maduria, South India, was subdeacon.

Morning Mail

Post-Herald B'ham, Ala. Sat. 3-10-56

Warning Given To Negroes Of South

I would appreciate if you will give my version of integration in the South. I am a Negro plasterer. My grandparents were slaves to the grandest white people that ever lived, so I was told by my grandparents and father and mother.

They lived in West Alabama and moved to Birmingham where I was born 42 years ago. I attended school until I was 15 and then went to work as a helper and learned the plastering trade. I have worked all my life with the white people and have made as much or more than the average building tradesmen.

My association with the white people has been as a working man only. After my days work I went about my business and the white men went about theirs. In all my life my white friends outnumber my Negro friends. I have been helped on many occasions by my white friends and I know during the depression they helped my parents to the extent of feeding and clothing us.

The worst thing that ever happened to the Negro race was the organization of the NAACP. It is not advancing the Negro race but is creating hatred, distrust, economic pressure and loss of friendship that existed between the white and black races, especially here in the South.

The Supreme Court decision in my humble way of thinking was not to help the black man, but to help the greedy and selfish politicians, to get their vote and help them get elected.

The Northerners are always blaming the Southerners for mistreating us, but they are no friends of the Negroes, but are still trying to penalize the South as they did during Reconstruction days following the Civil War when the carpet baggers invaded the South.

The Southern Negro has advanced faster in the South in the last 30 years than in any other part of the world and it has been through the help and advantages given him by our Southern white people. The Negro that complains of mistreatment, brings it on himself and deserves it, but he is not persecuted for his act as the NAACP tries to infer.

The real Southern Negroes do not want integration. They want to be left alone. The white people are as much segregated from the Negroes as the Negro is segregated from the white. We have everything they have and every advantage they have if we are smart enough to work for it. The NAACP, Autherine Lucy, Polly Ann Hudson, Arthur Shores and others like them are tools of the Communist and if not curbed will set the Negro race back 100 years.

I love the South as my parents and grandparents did. I love the white people who have been my friends and helped me. They respect and trust me and I don't want to lose their friendship. I am not ashamed of being a Negro, but I am ashamed of what some of my race are doing.

I do not blame the Southern white people for taking the stand they have. I do not blame them for organizing to keep segregation. We and the Supreme Court will have to answer for whatever comes of it.

The press, television and radios are helping to create this fast growing tension, by so much publicity. If they would curb so much publicity I believe it would gradually die.

To my race, I hope and pray that you will awaken and realize that you are a Negro and should be proud of it. That your way of like is not threatened by our white brothers and you should not threaten his way of life by integration, regardless of what you are told by fanatics, radicals and Communists. The white Southern people are our truest friends, so let's keep him our friend.

WILL JACKSON,
Zion City.

* * *

Protest Made On TV Bills

Who are the owners, the managers, the program sponsors of television today?

Are any of them interested any more in the good things of life? I mean spiritual values or do any of them ever think of anything besides pop music, hot tunes, jazz, murder scenes, drinking parties and such things? To read, to see, to hear these things day and night on television and radio is enough to run our young people mad. Christians won't listen.

Where are the Christian people, the Christian sponsors?

I get so hungry every morning before I start off for a day's work to hear a lovely, spiritual song and the scripture preached. I long to be able to turn my TV on on Sundays any hour and see and hear the old fashioned gospel preached by a spirit-filled pastor and to see a spiritual quartet there singing the wonderful songs of the gospel.

Christian, sponsors awaken to your duty, try to give the American people something that will feed their souls instead of poisoning the minds of innocents.

MRS. M. KIRBY,
1307 4th Ter. W.

* * *

Black Widows Ask For Help

We certainly appreciate all you are doing in the way of publishing the articles sent in to you by the people in favor of doing more for the teen-agers.

I believe I can speak for all the clubs in saying that we want the public to take a part in our club projects and to back us. We only have the papers and the radios to help us get to the public.

I would like to ask the co-operation of the youth and the other people driving to be cautious and to keep the people recognizing us in the way a real rodder should act. There are about 25 gangs and about the same number of hot rod clubs.

None of the gangs have civic backing and only one club has the backing of the police force. I think it is a shame that the police doesn't try to do more for the teen-agers.

I know our club was turned down by the whole community and the police force can't do anything for us because the city doesn't want us and they can't let their police take a part because the people don't want any part of the project.

It is with the help and co-operation of the Police, Jaycees, City Council and other civic-minded organizations that will put us across to the public in our true light.

In the group of boys caught the other night, I don't believe there was a club member from any of the reputable clubs there. Why wasn't the names of the three women who were caught that night for reckless driving named and a big front page spread on them. I would like to make an appeal to the public. Tell all your friends to let the police and the newspapers know your viewpoints on the issue. Let's get behind this worthwhile project.

J. C. HARRIS,
Black Widows, B'ham.

* * *

Court Ruling Not Interference

Mr. Bart Fulton of Shelby County has a letter in "The Morning Mail on March 7, in which he says to the Southern Negro, in effect, "If you don't like the way you are treated here, you can always go somewhere else."

How would Mr. Fulton feel if I should say to him: "If you disagree with the Supreme Court ruling on school segregation, you should leave the United States and go to some other country"?

Mr. Fulton would promptly and properly tell me to go jump in the lake. The United States is his home and he has a right to protest anything he doesn't like.

The Supreme Court ruled against racial segregation because it was asked to do so by Negroes who had been born, grown up and lived in the South. That ruling does not represent outside intereference, in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Fulton has a right to disagree with that ruling. He has a right to campaign for the repeal of the Fourteenth Amendment, on which that ruling is based. But to tell those who agree with the ruling to move out of the South, he has no right whatever.

RICHARD P. GREENLEAF,
307 College-st, Boaz.

* * *

Put Red Threat Before Court

Why not put the Communist threat to overthrow the Government of the United States of America before the Supreme Court and see how they would rule on such a matter?

Would they rule that it is perfectly safe to have such underworld gangsters mix and mingle freely with freedom loving people of America?

In the race question ruling. "They strained at the gnat and swallowed a camel."

J. D. STONE,
Halevville.

O'Boyle Cites Challenge of Racial Issue

Post + Times Herald P. 1

Archbishop Urges Christians to Work For Equal Rights

Wed. 2-29-56

The Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington, cited the racial segregation issue last night as a challenge America must solve before it can call itself a "truly Christian nation."

Washington

The Archbishop, in an address at the fifth anniversary dinner of the John Carroll Society in the Mayflower Hotel, called for an "honest audit of the race problem."

D. C.

"Here is a real challenge to us as Christian laymen, to take leadership in bringing about full equality of opportunity, in fact as well as in law, to every American citizen," he said.

"Until we do this, we cannot pose as a truly Christian nation. Nor can we win the bitter war for men's minds in the world struggle, if the Communists can tell the hundreds of millions in Asia and Africa that they, rather than Christ, that all men are equal."

More than 800 members of the John Carroll Society heard Archbishop O'Boyle's comments in an address he entitled "The Christian Impact." He also discussed labor-management relations and the threat of communism to world peace.

Taking a temperate approach, Archbishop O'Boyle said the race question was simple in principle "once we acknowledge that we are all children of the same Father."

Two weeks ago, the Most Rev. Joseph Francis Rummel, Archbishop of New Orleans, denounced segregation as "morally evil and sinful" in a strongly worded pastoral letter read at all masses in the Archdiocese of New Orleans on Feb. 19.

Archbishop O'Boyle said the issue was "fundamentally a matter of how we regard our fellow man," whether "we segregate, condemn and degrade people on the basis of race . . . or acknowledge that all men are our brothers in Christ."

Post + Times Herald

Noting that racial prejudice deprives members of the colored race of a chance to advance, he said that "Negro or Chinese college graduates may be waiting on tables because they have no outlet for their trainings and talent.

P. 10

"To me, the remarkable thing is not that some members of minority groups are retarded, but rather that so many have been able to advance as far as they have," Archbishop O'Boyle said.

The Prelate said he recognized that "securing of full justice" for the Negro race "presents problems."

"Difference in culture, education and living habits, due in the main to segregation and restricted opportunities, are not easily bridged," he said. "That there are difficulties, no sensible person would deny."

The Archbishop said Christians must ask themselves if these difficulties are "an excuse for inaction, or on the contrary, a challenge to vigorous and intelligent action."

He told his listeners it seemed to him that "there are two broad lines of approach" to the race problem.

"First, each of us should ask: 'In what area, that I can influence, are Negroes discriminated against merely because of their race?'," he said.

A second approach would be to "go back into history and read what was said about our own ancestors," the Prelate urged.

"We were considered by some to be the dregs of Europe, the products of old-world slums, the unsuccessful type that could not make a living in our native lands," Archbishop O'Royle recalled.

This has been dispelled today because America was a "land of opportunity" in which "we had a chance to advance and assimilate," he said.

The Archbishop said, however, this chance came in large measure because of the accident of color." He declared that racial prejudice "bars this advance to members of the colored races."

Turing to labor-management relations, Archbishop O'Boyle said that a "strong union movement and enlightened social legislation" were safeguarding the workers in the nation today.

The Prelate said he did not wish to "enter into the question of the relative power of business and labor or to compare the sins of one with the sins of the other."

Basically, he said, labor and management were partners in production—"they prosper and decline together." He charged that there had been soo much of a "merely negative approach" to labor-managment relations. He added that there were too few persons "with the imagination and courage to press forward toward positive harmony anl friendship."

In reference to communism, Archbishop O'Boyle said that the doctrine of hatred preached by Karl Marx "became a reality under the guidance of Lenin, Stalin and Khrushchev" in Russia.

The Prelate said the Communist was a "sworn servant to a perverted faith and dedicated to the distorted principle, 'Render to man the things that are God's.'"

He charged that communism was based on the "denial of God and the deification of man" and had always been "insincere, wrong and evil."

"Any dealings with the Communists based on any other beliefs are almost doomed to failure from the start," Archbishop O'Boyle warned. He said he felt the United States was "paying a grievous price in world affairs today" because of failure to keep in mind the Soviet philosophy.

"Statesmen may at times be compelled to deal with the devil, but they cease to be statesmen when they confuse him with an angel of light," the Prelate said. "Our Government must continue to strive for peace with honor and with no sacrifice offered to the idol of expediency."

The Myth Of Mixing In The South

Times-Picayune, New Orleans

IGNORANCE is a terrible thing. In a recent Gallup Poll (the same people Harry Truman proved so wrong a few years back) appearing in one of the local dailies the pollsters allegedly found out that 8 out of 10 Southerners were opposed to the "mixing" of the races when asked their opinion on the U. S. Supreme Court declaring segregation unconstitutional in public school and recreational facilities.

The gullibility and ignorance on this question of "mixing" is almost unbelievable. In the first place the "mixing" they are talking about being opposed to is quite apparently a myth for the 5 million Negroes passing for white is uncontradictory proof that too large a number of whites have found a way to mix outside of the law. How else can you account for the fact that the "passing for white population" is steadily increasing and not decreasing? Negroes are especially amused for there are few who do not know some "white" people who have Negro blood.

In the second place they obviously have no objection to mixing if it is in a servant or menial capacity. Witness the large numbers that have Negro maids and other Negro servants taking care of their children, feeding them and waiting on them. Negro maids can sit in the front of the screens on the street cars if they have white children in their custody. They can even attend the theaters provided they are taking some white child to the movies. Apparently in their definition of "mixing" it is acceptable only in "service" or menial capacity but never as a citizen or human being. Have you never heard how the most bitter race baiters tell how they "love" their Negro help and would do anything for them except treat them as another human being or citizen in conformity with the laws of this great nation.

On the other side of the question Negroes are not as concerned with "mixing" with white people as some racial bigots propagandize. Negroes feel and know they are citizens as well as human beings entitled to use public school and public recreational facilities the same as any other citizen. They are tired of this myth of "mixing" being used to deny them the same public facilities their taxes help to pay for. They would really like to see many, many white Southerners grow up and act like they know what democracy and christianity are all about. After the way they have been treated by many white Southerners it is extremely doubtful that they would want to "mix" socially or otherwise with people they knew had so little character, feelings about being "superior" and absolutely nothing about the "Golden Rule." Actually these spewers of race hate flatter themselves in even thinking Negroes would want to mix with certain whites in any way, shape or form.

Maybe the whites who share the strong opinions about being opposed to mixing believe such poppycock because they are afraid to find out the truth about themselves, they have absolutely nothing to offer but a white face toward making this a better world for all people. Further, it's possible they couldn't bare the shock of knowing Negroes had no special interest in them.

It was no accident the other day when the Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery boycott, urged Negroes thusly: "We must have compassion and understanding for those who hate us. So many people have been taught to hate, taught from the cradle. They are not totally responsible . . . We must use the weapon of love . . ."

They need it.

Default of Leadership

Post + Times Herald

Not since 1865 has there been a greater need for strong and temperate leadership in the South than there is today. Tensions between the races have mounted to a point where an ugly explosion is an ever-present threat. As always under such circumstances, the demagogues and others who have no respect for the country's great traditions are making capital out of the fears and uncertainties in men's minds. Now the outstanding voice of Southern conservatism is raised in defiance of the Constitution. Sen. Harry F. Byrd's call for "massive resistance" to the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling deprives him of the right to call himself a conservative. A conservative is first of all a defender of law and order. Senator Byrd, who has sworn to defend the Constitution and laws of the United States at all costs, has arrayed himself with irresponsible hotheads who would take the law into their own hands. Indeed, such a statement from a man of his stature and position encourages the mob. For Senator Byrd so to forget his responsibility is a frightening thing and a warning of dangers ahead. Mon. 2-27-56

His comment that interposition is a "perfectly legal means of appeal from the Supreme Court's order" flies in the face of all the experience of history; indeed, it ignores the decision made at arms in a tragic civil war. Adlai Stevenson properly called attention in his Hartford speech on Saturday to Andrew Jackson's warning against the twin evil, nullification. He could have quoted with equal appropriateness the arguments of Jefferson and Madison. The proper legal means of appeal from a Supreme Court decision is by way of amendment of the Constitution. Moreover, as Virginia's Attorney General has ruled, an interposition resolution does not suspend enforcement of the Supreme Court ruling. By urging "massive resistance," the Virginia Senator is promoting defiance of the basic law of the land. Washington, D. C.

In some respects, the situation in the South today is ominously like the tragedy of 1860. This does not mean that the country is on the verge of civil conflict. It does mean that the counsel of moderation from recognized Southern leaders is missing in many parts of the South today much as it was missing nearly a century ago. The spotlight is held by demagogues and by those who would defy the law. Surely the exercise of courageous and sensible leadership by responsible civic and political authorities in Montgomery, Ala., would have brought about settlement of the Negro boycott of the buses. But a default of leadership there has resulted in a deepening race conflict.

Alabama's Governor Folsom belatedly called Alabama editors and publishers to a meeting to discuss steps that might be taken to improve race relations. The crying need is for bi-racial commissions to sit in almost continuous session in every Southern state. There should be state and local commissions made up of leaders from both races. They should meet with the authority of the Governors and Mayors behind them. This would help put leadership back into the hands of men who know their obligations and responsibilities, and it would assure orderly instead of violent change while at the same time strengthening the bonds of friendship.

38a 1956

Americans Must Not Be Divided

The history of this country would involve many conflicting views and obvious differences in opinion. Its free speech franchise founded on a rugged wilderness orthodox would commend it as one of the leading debating grounds in the world. There are times when clash upon clash has been heard within the social compact. Still only once it has witnessed an outright rebellion.

Such is healthy for a nation. Daily Herald P.6

Since the Supreme Court handed down its May 17th., 1954 decision outlawing segregation at the public school level, there have come reverberations almost bordering on sedition. The question was seized upon by some of the states involved and fused into political issues for the purpose of coloring campaigns. It was first set up on the state level where no candidate had an option to stand up and be counted with that moderation and open sympathy imperative in such an explosive question. Sat. 4-14-56

Leaving the state level, it has been superimposed in the national campaign for president of the United States and if needs be, in the races for U. S. Senators. Atlanta, Ga.

In the Democratic camps there are two top contenders for the nomination with erstwhile liberal records. One a mid-westerner (Illinois) and the other a Southerner, (Tennessee).

The former, Adlai Ewing Stevenson, would be classed as the middle in the roader compromise candidate, apparently willing to lose the election if needs be in order to keep the Democratic party united.

The latter, Estes Kefauver is out on a full length liberal program which the Southerners want none of.

In the midst of it all, 100 Southern Senators and Representatives issued what they have been pleased to call, a manifesto, somewhat of a legal means of presenting an opposition to the mandate of the United States Supreme Court. While history does not record ever in its long record any success for any such move, there is apparently in it the safety valve for those Senators who must run in those states where they are likely to face campaigns set up with the strategy designed to "divide the sheep from the goats."

The Republican party faces no division, they all "like Ike" and whether the stand-patters wish to carry Nixon along or not, there will be no option if he gets the OK of Ike — which is inevitable.

In reading the manifesto, there are many signs where it was watered down. It has a softening of legal phases and other trimmings in its clothing that will allow it at least to pass across the stage in the political fashion review.

In that is seen a temperament acknowledging the supremacy of the government and the according it such respect in due time as will be sufficient for the forgiveness of the prodigals when they finally come home to help feast on the fatted calf.

This nation was so devised and its governmental machinery so syncronized as to make it as unavailable for the infusing of those isms that have seen service in dividing nations.

As President Eisenhower says, Americans must not be divided. Moderation is his theme, with no compromise — but the eventual occupation of a free citizenry upon this continent designed as a government with no provisions for other than an offer of first class citizenship on these shores.

GENERAL

Sedition Law Change Sought

Post + Times Herald P.15

Thurs. 4-12-56

By Murrey Marder
Staff R

A drive was launched in the Senate yesterday to restore state powers to prosecute sedition against the United States —powers the Suprme Court has said only the Federal Government holds.

Washington

Legislation to give the states clear co-equal powers in the broader area of the whole "field of sedition and subversive activity" was proposed by Sens Styles Bridges (R-N. H.) and Edward Martin (D-Pa.).

Their action came after the governing body of the National Association of Attorneys General met here yesterday and indorsed similar law changes.

On April 2, the Supreme Court struck down the conviction of Western Pennsylvania Communist leader Steve Nelson under the Pennsylvania Sedition Act. Nelson also has been convicted under the Federal Smith Act. The high court said the Federal law supersedes state laws.

The effect of the decision was to undercut all state sedition laws that brought numerous protests from attorneys general across the country.

The Atttorneys General Association's subversive activities committee and executive committee, in that order, yesterday adopted resolutions calling for amending the Smith Act to give states co-equal authority under it.

Copies of their resolutions were sent to Congress. Members of the national association were urged, if they approved of them, to "manifest that approval to the members of their congressional delegations."

Joining in the unanimous action were association president John Ben Shepperd, attorney general of Texas, and New Hampshire Attorney General Louis C. Wyman, vice president.

Other attorneys general approving the resolution were George Fingold of Massachusetts, chairman of the Subversive Activities Committee; J. Lindsay Almond Jr., of Virginia; Joe T. Patterson of Mississippi; Graydon W. Smith of Idaho, and Grover C. Richmond Jr., of New Jersey.

Rep. Howard W. Smith (D-Va.), author of the Smith Act —who has said said he never "dreamed" it would nullify state laws—met with the association members.

Smith has sponsored a sweeping states' rights bill which ould assure states the right to in any field of legislation less Congress specifically ecludes it, or there is "posive conflict" with Federal law. he Supreme Court has ruled hat many Federal laws, by their nature, preempt fields of legislation. The Smith states' rights bill already has been endorsed by the Southern and Midwestern regional groupings of the National Association of Attorneys General.

It was backed yesterday, with some amended language, by Shepperd, Wyman, Almond, Smith and Patterson, in individual actions.

Fingold told newsmen that in the discussion of the Nelson case decision, the attorneys general placed varying interpretations on how great a technical impact the high court decision would have on state laws.

But Fingold said as "a practical matter," the decision, without a change in law, would make it almost impossible for any state to convict a Communist of advocating overthrow of the State Government, as well as the Federal Government. The Supreme Court stressed that the Smith act applies to sedition against local and state governments as well as Federal.

Virginia's Attorney General Almond said, "I'm stronger than before in the conviction that the Court read into the Smith Act an intention which Congress did not intend."

Letters to The Times

Times P. 32

New York

To House Minority Groups

Adequate Funds Urged to Enforce Laws Against Discrimination

Wed. 4-11-56

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The race problem in critical form is not limited to the South; nor is it settled in the North. In New York State the gains of recent years and the opportunity to move forward may now be lost unless the people of the state are awakened to a number of important facts. The recent failure of the New York State Legislature to appropriate adequate funds in the fight against discrimination presents a serious issue.

In New York State and other states are many Negroes who have been moving Northward for industrial jobs. Many have sent their children North for freedom and equality of opportunity. Of those who have come North in summer to help the agricultural labor shortage, an increasing percentage have remained.

Thus the state generally has known a substantial increase in the percentage of Negroes in the total population. Discriminatory practices against Negroes and against the increasing numbers of Puerto Rican people have presented new problems.

In addition to this immigration, the dislocation of families due to slum clearance and urban redevelopment has created new centers of overcrowding and minority concentration.

To the ills of slum living, prejudice and discrimination against colored peoples make integration and assimilation far more difficult.

Exclusion From Suburbs

Finally, the migration to the suburbs by middle and upper class white families creates a ring around each city with a heavy barrier against non-white families. It is this situation which threatens the achievement of genuine integration in the North.

White suburban families appear to feel the need for a social status which demands a policy of racial exclusion. Thus, with the new suburban developments, segregated housing and segregated community patterns are being established for decades to come. Within these segregated communities segregated schools, playgrounds, hospitals and churches are inevitable. With these are perpetuated the age-old attitudes of racial superiority and inferiority and the discriminations, tensions and bitterness of the past.

In the light of these facts the people of New York State must face the implications of recent decisions concerning the work of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination. Ten years ago New York led the way by passing the Ives-Quinn law creating the State Commission Against Discrimination, to assure fair employment practices. Each year the State Commission has gained wider acceptance as an agency for complaints, adjustments and conciliation and educational work for greater tolerance and better inter-group relations.

In recent years New York has increased the jurisdiction of the commission by including non-discriminatory practices in public accommodation and public and publicly assisted housing. Just this year we added housing to S. C. A. D.'s jurisdiction by outlawing discriminatory practices in F. H. A. and V. A. housing.

Funds to Enforce Law

With this increased jurisdiction it becomes clear that the State Commission should have the increased appropriation to carry on its work. The State Commission is prepared to enforce the laws against discrimination if it has enough staff.

The State Commission needs funds for economic research, field workers and the services of specialists in labor relations, housing and social tensions. It is prepared to organize local councils of leading citizens throughout the state to anticipate tensions and avoid the eruptions which have scarred communities throughout the country.

S. C. A. D. has a tremendous educational job to do. Despite this, the State Legislature has refused to grant S. C. A. D. the funds necessary to perform its increased functions and responsibilities. Now at a time when the race issue in America is so divisive, when its repercussions threaten the very foundations of our Constitution and when it is so destructive of our prestige abroad, New York State cannot afford to backslide.

All citizens share the responsibility for making New York State an example of fair play and fulfillment of the promise of equal opportunity for all.

ALGERNON D. BLACK.
Chairman, New York State Committee on Discrimination in Housing.
New York, April 9, 1956.

Political Views of de Galindez

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

I cannot permit to go unanswered the implications made in the statement published in The New York Times of April 4 from Dr. Manuel de Moya Alonzo, Dominican Secretary of State Without Portfolio, giving the impression that Dr. Jesus de Galindez, who tragically disappeared on March 12, was a Communist.

This is the consistent attack used by Latin-American dictators to obscure the real issues whenever they are attacked for violations of human rights which are as insidious as those practiced behind the Iron Curtain.

Dr. Jesus de Galindez was a Roman Catholic and a Christian Democrat. His abhorrence of dictatorship made him equally an enemy of communism as it did of the Trujillo dictatorship. That he dedicated himself in the last years to exposing the latter was due to his realization that he was in the best position to do so by virtue of his long study and intimate knowledge of the conditions there. This did not minimize his abhorrence of Communist totalitarianism.

CLIFFORD FORSTER,
Counsel for the International League for the Rights of Man.
New York, April 5, 1956.

America Can Lose Friends In Far East On Treatment Of Negro, Attorney Says

Globe Dem. 5-25-56

By Luther Carmichael

Nashville, Tenn.

Unless the cause of the Negro is advanced in America, we are going to lose all of our friends in Asia, and the various islands in the Far East, Attorney James M. Nabrit administrative assistant at Howard University warned in an address at First Baptist Church, Eighth Avenue, North, Sunday afternoon.

Attorney Nabrit addressed the J. C. Napier Bar Association in a public meeting at the Eighth Avenue church, which is pastored by the Rev. Kelly Miller Smith. A rally for the NAACP followed the address.

Today, he said, we have one great enemy, but "if we keep turning these people against us" we will have all of the peoples of that section of the world against us instead of the one, he said.

The noted attorney chided certain American sources for their claim that the Negro's health and intellectual status will be a handicap to whites in an integrated society.

"Insidius means," he said are being used to get over their points." Health and Intellectual handicaps of the Negro have been brought about by the white man who has been responsible in the first place for these conditions, among Negroes, he said.

"How can you take a child out of the slums with their deplorable conditions and expect that child to compete with a child from a home where the parents are of the highest intellectual status?"

Complete implementation of the Supreme Court's order cannot be effected until "you have all the things you need to develop." He cited the Washington scene, which has 68,000 school children, "but all of the schools are not integrated." Housing conditions, he said must be adjusted, before full implementation can be realized.

Much To Be Done

Mr. Nabrit, who has argued numerous Civil Rights cases before the United State Supreme Court, called upon the Negro to "do something" for himself, and warned that there is much to be done before full implementation of the Court's order is realized.

"We need the church and all social agencies to develop this implementation," he said.

He urged the Negro to develop within himself, and teach to his children the things which are vital to his rightful place as a citizen of our nation.

"I know of nothing greater to tell a little child than to tell him that he is going to grow up and be a man—with rights and privileges like any other man. . . we must do something ourselves"

He warned that all will not be roses in the fight for full civil rights, and cited the case of the Israelites when they were trying to get out from under the bondage of Pharaoh, whose heart had been hardened by the Lord; and the grumbling by the Israelites, themselves when the going got rough.

"Don't be alarmed if there seems to be a 'hardening of heart' on the part of the white man, and don't be alarmed if there are those among you who grumble," he urged.

Mrs. Fields Takes Life Membership

Mrs. Cora Fields, retired Nashville City School Teacher, and widow of the late pastor of the Pleasant Green Baptist Church, took out a $500 Life Membership in the NAACP in the rally following the address. A legal defense fund contribution of more than $40 was also raised during the course of the rally.

Mr. Nabrit is the eldest son of the late Dr. J. M. Nabrit, Sr., former presdent of the American Baptist Theological Seminary, and is a brother of Mrs. Cecilia Nabrit Adkins, S. S. Publishing Board accountant.

EDUCATION HELD INTEGRATION KEY

Times 5-20-56

New York

Digest Study Shows Desire for Segregation Decreases as Schooling Increases

N. Am. 5-20-56

A survey on integration published in the June issue of The Catholic Digest indicated that only 17 per cent of Southern whites favored bringing Negroes and whites closer together. In contrast, 58 per cent of Northern whites supported integration of the two races.

The survey, taken in the last six xmonths, was made for the magazine by Ben Gaffin and Associates of Chicago, an independent opinion research firm.

Groups of 500 persons in various categories and in different parts of the country were asked whether they believed it was a better idea to keep the two races apart or to bring them together.

On a country-wide basis, the poll indicated that 42 per cent of the whites wanted the races kept separate, 48 per cent wanted them brought together and 10 per cent expressed no opinion.

The Negroes voted 90 per cent in favor of integration. Only 6 per cent expressed sympathy for continued segregation and 4 per cent offered no opinion. No matter where the Negroes lived, or how much income or education they had, they voted almost always for integration.

The survey showed that the problem of integration was not one of religion, because there was almost no difference in opinion between Roman Catholics and Protestants.

A major factor, however, was education. Among Northern whites with eight grades or less of schooling, 48 per cent favored segregation. Yet only 16 per cent of Northern whites with college educations favored keeping the races apart.

Among Southern whites with eight grades or less, 87 per cent wanted segregation, while 54 per cent of Southern whites with college educations favored it.

The Catholic Digest announced that other findings of the survey in various areas of Negro-white relationships would be published in subsequent issues

Funds Asked To Fight for States' Rights

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

N. Jol. 5-15-56

A group of Georgia business, industrial and professional leaders has made an appeal to other Georgians for funds to help publicize the nationwide work of the Committee for Constitutional Government.

A telegraphic appeal for support was signed by 19 of the Georgia men. It charged that in integration, tidelands, migratory birds and state anti-sedition laws decisions the United States Supreme Court has acted as a "super Legislature" and invaded constitutional powers.

The Committee for Constitutional Government is backing the "Declaration of Principles" signed by Southern congressmen and is supporting legislation to restore states' rights and is opposing labor "bossism," the telegram said. It asked contributions ranging from $50 to $1,000 or more.

Names signed to the telegram included Robert P. Jones, Fort Adams, English Clark and M. E. Kilpatrick, all of Atlanta; Morris M. Bryan, Jefferson; H. V. Jenkins, Savannah; Landon Thomas, Augusta; Robert W. Groves and Alex A. Lawrence, Savannah; F. E. Adams and Cubbedge Snow, Macon; George Mercer Jr., Savannah; Charles J. Bloch, Macon; Quimby Melton Jr., Griffin; J. Q. Davidson, Columbus; Paul A. Redmond Jr., Rome; William B. Turner, Columbus; Howard H. Callaway, Hamilton, and Paul K. McKinney Jr., Columbus.

38a 1956

PLEASE, LET HIM SPEAK FOR HIMSELF

Call. Fri. 5-25-56 P. 18 Kansas City, Mo.

"... VIOLENCE TO NO MAN, NEITHER ACCUSE ANY FALSELY." — LUKE 3:14

Howard University president says segregation is dead

Afro-American Sat. 5-26-56 P. 17 Baltimore, Md.

ATLANTA — "The system of segregation is dead. The only thing in doubt is the day of the funeral," President Mordecai W. Johnson of Howard University declared here Sunday.

He was the principal speaker at a special 75th anniversary vespers service at Spelman College. He said that if the United States is to hold its place in world affairs, it must give up the slave system before it is too late.

Dr. Johnson first praised the vision and courage of the founders of Spelman College who saw what the South did not see—education must be provided for freed slaves.

* * *

"THEY PIONEERED a whole system of education," he said.

GENERAL

"It took them 50 years to produce college graduates, but they never doubted that they could do it," adding:

"Since 1911 the graduates of the Atlanta institutions have held their own with the best in the country."

In spite of the reaction in some quarters to the Supreme Court decision on segregation in the schools, President Johnson saw many reasons for optimism. He noted that three of the justices were southerners. He named Justice Black of Alabama as the most liberal.

* * *

THE INTEGRATION of the schools in seven former slave states and the District of Columbia, the attitude of the clergy, both Roman Catholic and Protestant, and the carrying of integration beyond the schools in some cities were all reasons for hope, in his opinion.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, pastor of Ebenezer Baptist Church delivered the invocation and the Rev. Arthur Vann Gibson, pastor of Morningside Presbyterian Church pronounced the benediction.

The scripture was read by President James P. Brawley of Clark College. President Albert E. Manley of Spelman College introduced the speaker. Music was by the Spelman College glee club.

South Rejoices Over U. S. Stand

Defender P. Sat. 5-26-56 Chicago, Ill.

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower is being used, perhaps unwittingly, by southern insurgents to advance their fight to negate the Supreme Court ruling ending racial segregation.

This was disclosed last week when Deputy U. S. Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers, advised Senate judiciary committee chairman James O. Eastland, (D)Miss., that the Eisenhower administration favors enactment of a bill attacking a supreme court decision on the prosecution of sedition cases.

DRAFTED BY BRIDGES

The bill, drafted by Sen. Styles Bridges (R) N.H., would restore the powers of the 48 states to prosecute cases of sedition and communist subversion

The bill is now pending before the committee headed by Eastland, most vocal foe of the schools decision.

Rogers declared: "Enactment of the bill would express the intent of the Congress that the states may exercise concurrent power to punish acts of sedition or advocacy of the violent overthrow of organized government committed within their respective borders."

The court decision reached the conclusion that Congress alone "intended to occupy the field of sedition (and that) no room has been left to the states to supplement it." Rogers said the bill would correct this situation.

GOVERNMENT VIEW

He said in a letter to Eastland: "It is the view of the Department of Justice that in the field of sedition and subversion, the federal and state governments can work together easily and well."

Evidence that the Dixiecrats see in this bill a precedent that might be used to upset the schools decision was expressed in Georgia last week.

Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook endorsed the Justice Department request that Congress restore state power to prosecute subversion cases, and called for similar action in regard to racial segregation.

Cook, leading exponent of states rights, has argued, in connection with U.S. Supreme Court segregations by the Justice Department, and-or the states can override a Supreme Courts decision.

Commenting on the recommendations by the Justice Department, Cook said:

"I think it is a very appropriate rebuke to the U.S. Supreme Court for its continued efforts to upsurp the reserved powers of the sovereign states."

"I suggest," Cook added, "The present administration repeat this as it applies to the segregation decisions respecting our public school system."

Cook declared:

"It is time for congress and the administration to move in and curb the usurpation of state powers by the Supreme Court."

Lawrence Thompson

Herald P. 27-K

South Is Torn by Inner Strife

Miami Fla.

IT IS a sorry state of affairs, but it looks as if there may be a Civil War among us Southerners.

We have preserved a solid front, even converting the Yankees who have come to abide among us, since we won the War Between the States by tricking Grant into a truce at Appomattox. We have been ready, at the given signal of a rebel yell, to arise once more and flood the Yankee markets with our good Confederate money.

THOMPSON

But now we have subversives within our ranks. Or at least we have two groups, and it is each side's prerogative to call the other side subversive, if not outright Communistic.

I so happen to be a colonel in the Confederate Air Force and an honorary colonel of Kappa Alpha Southern fraternity, which ought to prove that I'm on the loyal and right side.

Times 5-24-56

But now I hear that somebody has organized what they call the Confederate army and are passing out commissions right and left.

At least they passed one of them out to Al Neuharth, a Herald reporter. I say I have proof that this so-called army is subversive or worse. My proof is that they didn't ask me to join.

They gave him the rank of colonel, which wouldn't worry me if I were concerned only about rank. Anybody knows that an officer in the Air Force is promoted faster than an officer in the infantry, and I ought to be a general long before Neuharth gets out of his present class.

The thing that burns me up is that this so-called army is trying to steal for itself all the rights and privileges of the Old South. They make it look as if the army will sit around sipping mint juleps while we of the Air Force have nothing but fatback and pot likker.

Come to think of it, there's nothing wrong with those, but we want equality on everything else.

Here's the fancy words these army fellows use in awarding their commission:

"Al Neuharth is nearby appointed colonel in this cotton pickin' rebel army and he will abide by the Code of the South, paying due respects to all except damyankees;

"Entertaining our Southern Belles in Dixieland style, feeding them on corn bread and black eyed peas and serving a right nice potion of corn likker, and on Saturday nights he will take his ole hound dog, a jug of corn squeezins and join the boys for a little possum hunting;

"And while on duty, he will wear shoes and refrain from dipping snuff. After 97 years of service, he will retire to his plantation veranda to sit under the beautiful magnolias, sippin' mint juleps an eating chitlins.

"Zeb Hogjowl, commanding general."

"Nathaniel Q. Claghorn, adjutant general."

I think I have heard of a famous Southerner named Claghorn, but I'll bet there isn't even any such person as Zeb Hogjowl.

I think the whole thing is a joke and that Neuharth has been taken in. But if it is serious, that Army had better be careful. The Confederate Air Force is apt to bomb it right out of its cotton patch.

Tell It To Old Grandma

Advertiser 5-6-56

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request, name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserve the right to shorten letters ★ No poetry, please ★ Repeat: No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it.

Montgomery Ala.

Smoke Out The Northern Hypocrite

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Note the enclosed clippings about the "Teen-Age Race Riot" in Buffalo. One made the front page of the Pittsburgh Press but the others were deep in the inside pages.

Wed. 6-6-56

But nary a word of editorial comment from any of the local papers. You may be sure a similar incident in Alabama would have gotten the full treatment.

Note also that all the stories but one omitted quoting the full statement of reporter Wynn as follows: "She said gangs of Negro girls, wearing jackets with embroidered names of their gangs, roamed the ship attacking white girls, mauling them and tearing their clothes."

Newspaper readers here do not get the full story about racial strife. Even so, the rank and file of people have the same basic feelings and understanding concerning segregation as Southern people have. Were it not for the agitators, many of whom are undoubtedly with communistic leanings, the "do-gooders" who would never think of mixing socially with Negroes themselves, and the NAACP leaders, most of whom are quite clearly not Negro but light-skinned mixed white-Negro had it not been for these groups, the Lucy incident would not have happened.

Your brilliant reporting is having national effect. Keep it up and if you can enlist the aid of other Southern editors, you'll smoke out some of these Northern hypocrites. And the Supreme Court of Public Opinion will step in and save our country and way of life before it's too late. I believe a great many people here are coming to see that the real long-time objective of the agitator is inter-marriage of the races.

G. BRINSON.

339 Saratoga Dr., Pittsburgh, Pa.

◆

Custom Retards Integration Pace

Editor, The Advertiser:

Were it not for the force of habits and custom, integration would move much faster. The ancient Cyprian speaks of custom as the antiquity of error. Custom flows from the native urge of "consciousness of kind," another version of "birds of a feather flock together." Such native trends may be stretched to the nth degree. Many good and honest people stress the matter of race to the point of doing grave injustice to a cause or and individual for apparently no reason except that of color or custom. Certainly one is not responsible for his color and therefore should not have to suffer or be embarrassed for being back or white, red or brown.

There are those who find it hard to see beyond color. Prejudice makes them color conscious, outweighing love which will make one color blind. It so happens that color is but skin deep, and that, only through the outer skin, or epidermis, which may be erased through bleaching. It is natural for race and kind to seek its level or place. Those who have never known anything but segregation, and have had little or no social contacts with other peoples instinctively move towards and mingle with their own. This is done even after "signs" are removed and integration legalized and practiced. This, with the carryover and the curse of slavery, now a century passed, accounts for the many and serious tensions accompanying integration.

The concept of "separate but equal" is but a subterfuge under the strain of social customs. The theory is only an idea, and seldom a reality, for being separate is tanamount to inequality. Long time separate but woefully unequal accommodations are at present fast stepping up towards equality under the dynamic power and impact of integration. Public schools for Negroes were never so adequate as today. A $3,000,000 school was recently dedicated in the state of Maryland for Negroes. Salaries for Negro teachers usually equal those of whites.

Segregation is often modified according to the section of the country. It is more pronounced in the South than in the North—not more real but more apparent. There are more laws against segregation in the North than in the South. Redress is therefore easier in the North. The one and only place where I have been denied restaurant service was in the North, New York City to be exact. I have never entered a white restaurant in the South to be denied. I would have sued for $100, but I did not wish to capitalize upon my humiliation.

The Supreme Court's decision of May 17, 1954, was inevitable. It was born out of experience and history. This decision is just as certain to be obeyed and executed as was its creation. The length of time for fulfillment is comparatively minor, and must vary according to local habits.

The weight and power of custom may not be gauged. The old Arabian proverb placed custom alongside of the then known four elements which constitute nature (earth, air, fire, water) and added custom. And it often appears that our habits and customs are as inherent and powerful as the very elements composing our universe.

Except for the principle behind integration, stemming from the "Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man," the Negro would doubtless be less concerned over integration, especially when violence is involved. "God has made of one blood all nations that dwell on the earth" (Acts 7:26). This principle and fact will eventually make for the practiced equality of mankind. An embarrassing mark of these social trends is slowly passing out of our social picture — "For White," "For Colored." Equality and such signs are just incompatible. Our children's children may well wonder why and how such ever happened. Integration though slow must come.

CHARLES W. KELLY.

Tuskegee Institute, Ala.

Lehman Hurls Challenge

Herald P. 1

Clean Up Own Racial Backyard, North Told

Mon. 6-4-56

Miami Fla.

NEW YORK —(AP)— Sen. Herbert H. Lehman, an outspoken champion of civil rights, Sunday called on Northerners to "clean up our own backyard" while also seeking justice for Negroes in the South.

LEHMAN

In a speech to the annual meeting of the Urban League of Greater New York, the New York Democrat cited the instance of Harlem, the huge, predominantly Negro area of Manhattan.

38a

Harlem, the Democratic senator declared, is "both illustration and proof that the acute manifestations" of the civil rights problem are not confined to the South.

Herald

The Urban League, composed of both Negroes and whites, is concerned with inter-group and inter-racial relations. It lauded Lehman Sunday as "the conscience of the Senate and the nation in the fight for full equality of opportunity for all Americans."

Discussing civil rights in the North, Lehman said:

"Harlem is a community rich in tradition and culture . . . but Harlem is also a rebuke to us of the North, and a challenge to clean up our own backyard even as we press forward with our efforts to bring justice and equality to the Negroes and other oppressed minorities in the South.

"Harlem is a ghetto, Harlem is an area of poverty, congestion, sub-standard housing, and sub-standard schooling. These conditions, rather than the race or national origin of the people who reside in Harlem, are primarily responsible for the high incidence of crime and juvenile delinquency in the area.

"We need residential integration in New York City. Housing segregation is responsible for the high incidence of school segregation in our metropolis."

Says Negro "Morally Obligated To Oppose Southern Bias

Clari Herald Tribune, Ga, Mar. 12-56

BUCK HILL FALLS, Pa.—(ANP) —American Negroes want integration in education because "we are morally obligated to oppose the misguided efforts of the South to bring American leadership into disrepute by its insistence upon segregation," a prominent Negro educator said here.

Dr. Arthur D. Gray, president of Talladega College, Talladega, Ala., speaking before the Midwinter Meeting of the Congregational Churches meeting here this week said, "Negro America is unanimous in support of ntegration in education for reasons over and above self interest. We are equally concerned about the welfare of the nation. We are morally obligated to prevent the South from committing intellectual suicide."

Dr. Gray stated that "since the historic May 17, 1954, decision of the Supreme Court many Boards of Education and other public agencies have called conferences to consider what is best for the Negroes, but have invited no Negroes to state their views. This is a sad commentary upon educators who pride themselves upon getting the facts."

Because of the failure to include Negoes in consideration of school problems, Dr. Gray said, "...a plethora of views purporting to represent Negro opinion are circulated by citizens councils and other irrational groups. Some of these groups are trying to reach their educational destination by hitching the dead horse of inter-marriage to the ante-bellum buggy of segregation."

"Negroes," Dr. Gray stated, "do not want integration in education to mix with white people. They do not want integration n dining ride with white people. They do not want integratio nin dining cars to eat with white people. Nor do they want integration in hotels to sleep with white people. In all of these things Negroes want to live in dignity as citizens with no badge of inferiorty pinned on their backs because of color."

The educator commended the the South. "Beyond any question of doubt the majority of better Negro colleges in the South are church related schools. The public institutions of higher learning for Negroes are still in their intellectual swaddling clothes. The colleges now best equipped to function in an ntegrated system are among the schools of the United Negro College Fund."

Segregation and Politics

Star & Times Herald Washington, D.C.

Excited over what appears to be a racial crisis, the South should take care lest it rush headlong into a political or economic trap.

It is startling to reflect that today's racial issue is the first major controversy in American history never discussed by leaders of both sides on one rostrum or at one table. There must be a reason.

Why have leading white segregationists and colored integrationists never appeared on a television series where the people themselves could judge the good faith of the opposing leaders—and perhaps uncover any political skulduggery or needless obstruction in today's racial controversy? Are Americans, especially Southerners, victims today of a shrewd national conspiracy at high political and financial levels?

Consider the following possibilities, remembering that this letter is written by a nonpolitical Southerner concerned with no race but the human race and defending no law but the Golden Rule:

1. Republican politicians may be promoting today's racial bitterness in order to split Southern segregation Democrats away from Northern Democrats and thus guarantee a Republican victory in November. Although Eisenhower himself would never condone such methods, this writer heard the first significant attack upon Negroes in South Carolina come out of a clear sky at the Eisenhower Victory Dinner in Columbia, December, 1952. South Carolina's keynoting protest in 1955 against the Supreme Court was conspicuously signed by organizers of 1952's Citizens for Eisenhower.

2. Democratic (or Republican) enemies of Kefauver, Harriman or Stevenson may be secretly fostering Southern segregationist organizations just to elect state party delegates who will help defeat these presidential candidates at the coming national Democratic convention. Such strategists may then strive to nominate for President of the United States a Democrat of their own choosing.

3. By creating a third faction of bolting segregationists among Southern Democrats, certain unseen national planners may hope to elect a few new Congressmen, and force pledges from existing ones, to curb the power of labor leaders like Reuther, Lewis or Meany and thus shackle the strength of the recent AFL-CIO union merger.

Mon. 5-7-56

4. If the strength of both Republicans and Democrats could be split by an explosive racial issue, the 1956 presidential election itself might be thrown for final decision into the House of Representatives. Terrific pressure might then be concentrated upon pivotal Congressmen to elect a big business leader for drastic steps against communism and our own financial collapse.

Military men and business magnates, led by the head of Sears Roebuck, are said to desire a House election. Certainly our Nation may need much big business leadership to outstrip Russia in automation, atomic energy, and acquisition of critical foreign raw materials for a vastly expanded American industry.

This letter neither advocates nor opposes such conceivable aims. It speaks only for the right of the American people, especially Southerners, to know the true cause and consequences of today's internal strife.

For example, shrewd Northern industrialists and labor leaders could find no better way to check the movement of valuable industries southward than by secretly promoting a racial feud to disrupt Southern community life. Moreover, if the South actually undertakes the creation of "equal but separate" schools, parks, hospitals, etc. for two races, the resulting tax burden will cripple Southern taxpayers and frighten away incoming industries. Politics has never licked arithmetic.

Hitler duped peaceable Germans into a war for world conquest by first organizing them against the Jews on a racial issue. Let this Nation and the South beware.

Politics being what it is, how can trusting Southerners be sure that the NAACP and some white Southern segregationists may not both be rewarded, after the election, for scaring the South into the traps of new political masters and economic planners?

Bring on the television debates. Let us judge the manner and motives of leaders who resist racial rationality today.

DAVID D. CARROLL.

Bennettsville, S. C.

'EQUALITY' NEGRO AIM--DR. SHEPARD

Times-Picayune

Southern Founder's Day Ceremonies Held

Sat. 3-10-56

By JAY HALL

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

BATON ROUGE, La., March 9 —The Negro wants "equality, period—not some kinds of equality, and anyone who says less" is distorting the truth, a Founders Day audience at Southern university was told Friday.

New Orleans, La.

The speaker was Dr. Marshall Shepard, a Negro Baptist minister who is city treasurer and a member of the city council of Philadelphia, Pa.

P. 12

He said that "tremendous developments" have gradually unfolded in the nation's racial situation, adding that "the supreme court has done a lot of things we like and a lot of things we don't like."

Didn't Like Decision

"We didn't like the Dred Scott decision," he said, and then the court "improved a bit when it adopted a doctrine of separate but equal facilities . . . and in recent times the court moved on to a more Democratic and truly American decision that said the Negro is a first-class citizen, that there is no room for any second-class citizens" in the Republic. That, he said, "Is a great advancement."

He urged his race to "keep your temper and smale" in the face of uncomplimentary remarks directed at Negroes and "don't press too hard" for a complete reversal of segregation because everything is on our side now."

Those protesting equality "feel outlawed" by the supreme court desegregation ruling of May, 1954, "and don't know how to adjust themselves," Shepard said.

Understanding Will Come

Understanding will eventually come, howeve, he predicted. Shepard said "the poison of racial prejudice" has made it so that no political party dare nominate any Southern white man for the presidency of the United States, no matter how qualified. When this prejudice is wiped out, any man in the South can aspire to the presidency and have the blessing of the Negro vote both North and South, he declared.

Shepard paid tribute to the late Dr. J. S. Clark, the moving force behind the founding of the "new" Southern university 42 years ago, declaring that the university's success is due to the "sense of the prescence of God" which he associated with Clark.

His address climaxed a week-long celebration of the anniversary, marked by band concerts, parades, radio and television programs, and vespers.

Four Founders Present

Present for the event were four of the handful of founders who were credited with Southern's rebirth in 1914 when it moved from New Orleans where it had been functioning since 1880, to Scotlandville, on the northern outskirts of Baton Rouge.

The founders attending were Mrs. O. H. Clark, wife of the late Dr. J. S. Clark; J. S. Jones, the school's first dean; Mrs. E. N. Mayberry, first director of home economics, and J. B. Moore, former Southern instructor in mechanics.

Also among those present was Octavia A. "Miss Octavia" Smith, 79, New Orleans, one of Southern's first two graduates while the institution was still in New Orleans.

Telegrams Received

Congratulatory telegrams from several national and state officials, newspaper executives, and others were read. Among them were messages from Vice-President Richard M. Nixon, Gov. Robert F. Kennon, Gov.-Designate Earl K. Long, and Dr. Ralph Bunche of the United Nations.

The Long telegram said, "Louisiana is to be congratulated on having such a fine institution as Southern university, which has sents its graduates out to fill many important places in the life of our state.

"During my term as governor, I shall do everything possible to improve the educational opportunities of all our people."

Dr. Felton G. Clark, son of the founder and now the president of Southern, presided at the program. The ceremonies began with an academic procession and concluded with a recessional. The university choir sang.

Poem Is Read

A poem written by freshman student Alvin B. Aubert, Lutcher, dedicated to Friday's service, was read by the author. Invocation was given by Julius M. Thomas, principal of Northwestern High school, Zachary, La., and the telegrams were read by Miss Annie Mae Piper, a junior student.

Following the service, a pilgrimage was made to the grave of Dr. J. S. Clark.

Dr. William H. Gray, also a minister from Philadelphia, was scheduled to have made the principal address but was unable to be present.

Not By Bombs Alone

Advertiser P. 2-A

We have been warned from several sources recently against expecting World War III, if it must come, to be brief. Some have indeed predicted that with the terrible agencies of destruction in the hands of the belligerents, it would all be over in short order. The other view is that even a shattered nation would fight on among the ruins, making it necessary for ground troops to go in and finish the job.

Mon. 2-6-56

What we would be witnessing, according to this school, would be "artillery preparation" on a gigantic scale, with an entire nation as the target instead of a trench sector as in the old days. Even when a line of trenches had been blasted, almost obliterated, there were likely to be enough defenders left to make actually occupying the enemy position a tough and costly proposition. It is argued that the same will be true in the vastly bigger-scale warfare of tomorrow—that a nation will not surrender to bombardment any more than an old-fashioned line of defenses.

Montgomery, Ala.

World War I was expected to be short—when it started, in August, 1914, it was freely predicted that it would be over by Christmas. It was assumed the machineguns and other improved weapons would kill men so fast that a decision would have to come soon. These prophecies did not take into consideration that men would burrow into the ground—resulting in a war of more than four years.

Another thing that makes wars longer nowadays is the growing habit of fighting them to a finish. If the weapons are vastly more destructive, the determination to achieve complete victory and the corresponding will to resist, are much more in evidence than in earlier days.

An illustration of this change in objectives may be found by comparing our Revolutionary War with World War II.

The Revolutionary War was decisive in the field in which Americans are most interested — winning our independence. But before it was over, it developed into a world war, with France, Spain and Holland ganging up on England. The belligerents fought in Africa and India as well as in North America, and their fleets clashed in many parts of the world.

In its larger aspect, the war was another 18th Century conflict, settled by a negotiated peace, a war in which no one had any idea of dictating terms in the occupied capital of the vanquished.

It was notable for the fact that England lost control of the sea, at certain times and in certain areas. The capture of Cornwallis at Yorktown was made possible by French sea power, which blocked his escaped by water, the French fleet also landing troops that cooperated with Washington.

But England did not receive a permanent setback at sea. A year after Cornwallis surrendered, the English beat the French in a great sea fight in the West Indies. The French admiral who had helped us at Yorktown, the Comte De Grasse, was made prisoner.

The balance, on the whole, was against England, and this was reflected in the peace settlement. She acknowledged the independence of the American colonies—by far her biggest loss. She returned Florida to Spain, certain trading posts on the west coast of Africa to France, and ceded a couple of minor West Indian islands to France. The indecisive nature of the general war was indicated by the fact that France did not even insist on the return of Canada, which she had ceded to England only 20 years before.

At the end of the Revolutionary War, England was not nearly as bad off as she was oin 1940 after Dunkirk and the fall of France. She had not been invaded, or hit at home with anything comparable to the German air attacks. She simply admitted that she had the worst of it, paid off, and they called it quits.

If the wars of our time were waged in the spirit of those of the 18th Century, England would have asked for terms after Dunkirk. She would have returned the German colonies taken in World War I, perhaps throwing in one or two of her own to boot, and acquiesced in limited German territorial gains on the continent. World War II would have been a relatively short affair.

The Revolutionary War was not indeed a quick war, even though it was not fought to the bitter end—the complete overthrow of one of the belligerents. It lasted seven years—but that was in the days of sailing ships and muzzle-loading muskets, which tended to slow matters down.

In our time, we have the weapons needed for a much quicker decision, in theory at least. But our idea of what constitutes a decision is also different from what it was in the days before "unconditional surrender" constituted the terms offered the vanquished.

'DEEP SOUTH' REBUFFED

Times P. 31-C

Senator Douglas Urges Firm U. S. Policy on Integration

Mon. 2-13-56

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12 (UP) —Senator Paul H. Douglas said today that the Government should insist, but "not in a vindictive way," that the South end racial segregation in its public schools.

New York

The Illinois Democrat advocated a firm but sympathetic policy toward states in the "deep South" that he said, were trying to evade the Supreme Court's order to integrate white and Negro children.

N. Y.

Mr. Douglas, who was interviewed on the American Broadcasting Company television program "Celebrity Parade," said the real trouble was in the "deep South."

P. 30-C

He agreed with Adlai E. Stevenson, Democratic Presidential candidate, that troops should not now be sent into the South to enforce the Supreme Court's decision.

But, he added, "we shouldn't give Federal funds for school construction programs to states and communities that are in open defiance of the Supreme Court."

NO FENCES STRADDLED

Advertiser P. 1

Butler Says Demos Planning Clear-Cut Integration Stand

Sun. 5-20-56

Montgomery, Ala.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 19 (UP) — Democrats will not straddle the fence on racial integration in their 1956 campaign platform, National Chairman Paul M. Butler said today.

He said they will take a "clear and unequivocal" stand on the issue which will follow the "moderate" view of the South upholding the U.S. Supreme Court's ban on segregatin.

"We're not going to recommend that the Supreme Court decision be enforced by guns, bullets and bayonets," he told newsmen. "But we're certainly not going to straddle the fence on the necessity of all our people to recognize the decision of the Supreme Court as the law of our land.

"I think we can state that principle in our platform without any offense to the moderates in the South."

He said Democrats will not try to chart a course on the degree of enforcement of the court order because that is something for federal courts to determine.

Butler was in town for a meeting of the Indiana emocratic committee, which re-elected him to a third two-year term as the party's national committeeman.

Butler said the Democrats expect to regain a "solid south" in the fall election. Four years ago, President Eisenhower carried Texas, Tennessee, Virginia and Florida.

A 'moderate" view on the racial issue prevailed in the South in 1952, he said, and the moderates seem to have even more strength now. He said "most Southerners are moderates—it is the extremists at each end that are causing the trouble."

South No Longer Solidly Segregated, Survey Finds

Courier-Journal Sun 9-16-56

(Editor's Note: The first region-wide attempt t... how integration is progressing in the South in the wake ... Court order of May 17, 1954 has turned up some su... Here is a report on the survey, soon to be pu... for the Republic, which sponsored the study.

By BEM PRICE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP)—After turning up 1,100 examples of racial barriers dropped in all walks of life in Dixie over the past two years, a Southerner concludes: "There is no longer a solid South of segregation."

Reporting on a carefully documented survey of 17 Southern and border states where segregation has been the historic pattern, Harold C. Fleming said:

"The common notion that desegregation just can't work in the South is plainly contradicted by the findings."

The survey turned up examples, by specific location, of desegregation in schools, housing, public health and welfare, private enterprise, government, public transportation and public accommodations.

* * *

FLEMING, a native of Georgia and assistant director of the Southern regional council at Atlanta, said the survey was by no means complete and that the examples cited must be taken as merely representations.

The council is an interracial group devoted "to equal opportunity for all." Its membership is confined to Southerners.

Fleming's findings—all 1,100 of them—are to be published shortly in book form by the Fund for the Republic, which provided the money for the survey, along with a companion study on the removal of racial barriers in the 31 states outside the South.

The study, now in the hands of the printers, was made available in the aftermath of recent disturbances in the South over the admission of Negroes to public schools in Mansfield, Tex., Clinton, Tenn., Texarkana, Tex., and Sturgis and Clay, Ky.

* * *

IN ASSESSING his state-by-state survey, Fleming, a student of his region for 10 years, wrote:

"The 1,100 instances of desegregation discovered were almost evenly divided between the five 'border' states on the one hand and the 12 'Southern' states on the other. Virtually all of them took place smoothly and harmoniously.

"Obviously," he said, "a large reservoir of good will and capacity for change exists among private citizens, even in states where the official climate is harsh. There is no longer a solid South of segregation."

The survey covers the period from May 17, 1954 — date of the U.S. Supreme Court decision holding school segregation unconstitutional — to May of this year.

It is the first regionwide attempt to find out what movements toward integration have taken place in the wake of the court's opinion among all segments of Southern life.

* * *

THE SURVEY did not deal with what was expected to take place, but what has actually happened. The findings in part:

More than 350 school districts in nine of the 17 states had integrated to some degree. There were no integrated public elementary or secondary schools in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Virginia or North or South Carolina.

Negro children were attending previously all-white Catholic parochial schools in 21 Southern cities located in Arkansas, Kentucky, Maryland, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

Since 1935 some 164 accredited colleges and universities in Southern and border states and the District of Columbia have opened their doors to Negroes. Of these 164 now open to Negroes, 95 have newly desegregated at some level since May 1954.

AS OF MAY this year, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina enforced complete segregation in state-supported institutions. However, all but South Carolina had at least one private college which admitted students of both races.

In the field of public service, Maryland stood at the top of the list in the number of Negroes appointed or elected in the two years inventoried. At least 11 Maryland Negroes were named, all but one for the first time, to city and state posts.

Fleming noted here that developments in this field are not a reliable measure of the extent of Negro representation. For example, he said, in 1954 Negroes already were serving on city councils in at least 11 Southern cities and held elective or appointive office in more than 20 others.

* * *

IN PUBLIC HOUSING, Fleming found "segregation not only deeply entrenched but virtually unchallenged in the South."

Even so, this field was not without its exceptions. Negroes were living in public housing projects occupied by whites in Taylor and Crystal City, Tex.; Baltimore, Charleston, W. Va., St. Louis and Rayne, La.

As for transportation, Fleming reported that "local transit systems known to have dropped segregation were found in Texas, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Among religious groups 20 newly integrated ministerial associations — were counted — four with elected Negro officers. Fleming noted, however, "the overwhelming majority of churches continue to serve either white or Negro congregations, although at least 10 formerly white churches accepted Negro members."

* * *

AS FOR HOTELS, restaurants and theaters, Fleming observed, "desegregation in public accommodations and theaters has been confined so far mainly to cities in the border states, chiefly St. Louis and Louisville.

"Instances of new desegregated seating in motion picture theaters were found in five border-state cities, and some eating places began serving both races in a like number of communities."

Why did the council undertake the survey at this time? Fleming explained in his summary: "It is universally recognized that this is a time of trouble in the South. . . . In recent months dissension and conflict have dominated the news from the region. The danger is that Southerners themselves, to say nothing of people elsewhere, will be blinded to the constructive evidence and will surrender to fear and discouragement."

Estes' New Authority

Advertiser 9-3-6

THAT THE race mixing whirlwind should now be reaped in the states of Texas and Tennessee may become more than a little awkward for the Democrats in the presidential race since these states are those of foremost Democratic leaders.

Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 9-2-56

The Texas rioting reminds the country of Senator Lyndon Johnson, the Democratic majority leader in the Senate, and of Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn, the permanent chairman of Democratic conventions.

The spotlight glare in Tennessee is painful because of Gov. Frank Clement, the aggrandized keynoter at the Democratic Convention in Chicago, and Senator Albert Gore, a nominee for vice president and a major Democratic figure. But above all is that rare Volunteer, Estes Kefauver, Democratic nominee for vice president.

Both Clement and Kefauver are most ambitious for national political preferment. Meanwhile, however, they have to remain in office in Tennessee. What will these gentlemen now say about "implementing" the Supreme Court decision?

Estes has hitherto said repeatedly that the court decision was just, desirable and must be complied with. Will he now denounce his fellow Tennesseans for resisting the race mixing?

Will he join the Harriet Beecher Stowe press and NAACP in demanding, as was demanded at the University in the case of Student Lucy, that the Democratic keynoter, otherwise Gov. Clement, hurl National Guard troops into Clinton to "implement" the court decision?

At the very least, Estes will be able to address his fellow Americans on the subject of race mixing with a new authority. And he won't have to leave Tennessee to do it.

Why Don't Southern White People Want Integration?

Sat. 9-19-56 Norfolk, Va.

Editor, Journal and Guide:

As I write this article, I am asking a question that I have been wanting to know ever since the United States Supreme Court handed down its final decision outlawing segregation in the public schools. There must be a reason and I mean a better one than what they say. They say we are lacking in intelligence and we have a bad health condition.

They know that it is as wrong as two left shoes. To me that is a very poor excuse to get around the Supreme Court decision, just to try to prolong segregation in public schools where Negroes are paying taxes to go and yet cannot go. The health of white people is no better generally than Negroes, and they know it as well as we do.

BUT I MUST agree with them when they say that their intelligence is better than ours, and they have a right to have it. They have better schools, better books and better facilities. Well, we know that it's not that. If so, and they are as intelligent as they say they are, why do they have Negro girls to keep their children? And why do they have them to cook in their kitchens?

That is something for them to think about. If they have not thought about it, I want to tell them this one thing — there is not a single Negro that has a dirty disposition toward any of their fellowmen. I wonder is it that the history of the Negro has been hid behind closed doors for the past 50 or 75 years, and is about to come to light, or are they selfish in their minds, knowing how they have treated Negroes for so long, and they are afraid they will be treated the same. Well, they are wrong again. All the Negro wants is his rights—that is all. I CANNOT understand why white people will let anybody in this whole world come over here and do anything they want to do and get any kind of a job they want and make a good living, yet they try to hold the Negro down and he is born right here in America, and pays taxes, and helps fight to save our country.

As I close these few lines I want them to know that God above sees everything.

—R. B.

Norfolk, Va.

South No Longer Solid On Segregation of Races

Journal + Constitution
Sun. 9-16-56 P. 16-A

(Editor's Note: The first region-wide attempt to find out how integration is progressing in the South in the wake of the Supreme Court order of May 17, 1954 has turned up some surprising results. Here is a report on the survey, soon to be published by the Fund for the Republic, which sponsored the study.)

Atlanta Ga.

By BEM PRICE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP)—After turning up 1,100 examples of racial barriers dropped in all walks of life in Dixie over the past two years, a Southerner concludes: "There is no longer a solid South of segregation." P. 16-A

Reporting on a carefully documented survey of 17 Southern and border states where segregation has been the historic pattern, Harold C. Fleming said:

"The common notion that desegregation just can't work in the South is plainly contradicted by the findings."

General

The survey turned up examples, by specific location, of desegregation in schools, housing, public health and welfare, private enterprise, government, public transportation and public accommodations.

* * *

FLEMING, a native of Georgia and assistant director of the Southern regional council at Atlanta, said the survey was by no means complete and that the examples cited must be taken as merely representations.

The council is an interracial group devoted "to equal opportunity for all." Its membership is confined to Southerners.

Fleming's findings—all 1,100 of them—are to be published shortly in book form by the Fund for the Republic, which provided the money for the survey, along with a companion study on the removal of racial barriers in the 31 states outside the South.

* * *

IN ASSESSING his state-by-state survey, Fleming, a student of his region for 10 years, wrote:

"The 1,100 instances of desegregation discovered were almost evenly divided between the five 'border' states on the one hand and the 12 'Southern' states on the other. Virtually all of them took place smoothly and harmoniously.

"Obviously," he said, "a large reservoir of good will and capacity for change exists among private citizens, even in states where the official climate is harsh. There is no longer a solid South of segregation."

The survey covers the period from May 17, 1954 — date of the U.S. Supreme Court decision holding school segregation unconstitutional — to May of this year.

* * *

THE SURVEY did not deal with what was expected to take place, but what has actually happened. The findings in part:

More than 350 school districts in nine of the 17 states had integrated to some degree. There were no integrated public elementary or secondary schools in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Virginia or North or South Carolina.

Since 1935 some 164 accredited colleges and universities in Southern and border states and the District of Columbia have opened their doors to Negroes. Of these 164 now open to Negroes, 95 have newly desegregated at some level since May 1954.

* * *

AS OF MAY this year, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina enforced complete segregation in state-supported institutions. However, all but South Carolina had at least one private college which admitted students of both races.

In the field of public service, Maryland stood at the top of the list in the number of Negroes appointed or elected in the two years inventoried. At least 11 Maryland Negroes were named, all but one for the first time, to city and state posts.

Fleming noted here that developments in this field are not a reliable measure of the extent of Negro representation. For example, he said, in 1954 Negroes already were serving on city councils in at least 11 Southern cities and held elective or appointive office in more than 20 others.

* * *

IN PUBLIC HOUSING, Fleming found "segregation not only deeply entrenched but virtually unchallenged in the South."

As for transportation, Fleming reported that "local transit systems known to have dropped segregation were found in Texas, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Among religious groups 20 newly integrated ministerial associations — were counted — four with elected Negro officers.

Why did the council undertake the survey at this time? Fleming explained in his summary: "It is universally recognized that this is a time of trouble in the South. . . In recent months dissension and conflict have dominated the news from the region. The danger is that Southerners themselves, to say nothing of people elsewhere, will be blinded to the constructive evidence and will surrender to fear and discouragement."

"Soothing the South

Post + Times Herald
Wash. D.C.
Sun. 9-13-56

"Befuddling the Issue" would seem to be a neater caption of your lead editorial of Sept. 6, appraising Mr. Eisenhower's position on school desegregation. Habits and instincts impair the processes of reflection, which is primarily a revealer of consequences. Maintaining order—while very important—here is an automatic political gimmick and is not the issue.

Nor is soothing the South an appropriate purpose at this time of the leader of a bona fide "party of principles and of the future" or even of an opportunistic political bystander at a time when events demand an answer which is not an evasion. The ramparts of progress are found in the minds of men even though a change of heart is what is called for here. A refusal to say anything constructive though it might aggravate an already precarious condition at this time is a sort of political nonentity trying to coerce a reality.

The first duty of a party of the future is to perfect that democracy to which it is committed and which is as yet has so imperfectly realized. The basic ethics of such a party in a social democracy require that the evils therein be remedied and abated, for the merit of such a system is to be judged by the rationality, fair treatment and well-being which it creates. The good of the controlling group must embrace the good of the controlled.

Nor is Mr. Eisenhower "right about the importance of education and training in bringing about a change of spirit in the South on the school desegregation issue." This could be true if the south actually were "full of people of good will," for such people would have inspired and promoted long ere this the kind of education and training for both groups essential to social responsibility and to rational neighborliness, to say nothing of the belief in the participation of the subordinated and exploited in their own deliverance. Yet the successful conquest of ignorance in the South must still be anticipated; and here is where the creative leadership and broad personal popularity of Mr. Eisenhower can appropriately be employed.

Basically matter and men remain the same; but—with increasing knowledge—both can be controlled in the best interest of the human estate. The airplane, the wireless and atomic energy are familiar evidence of man's mastery of matter. In the control of human nature, man—more frequently moved by passion and ignorance rather than by reason and knowledge—has been much less striking or impressive.

Befuddling a basic issue which calls for creative leadership rather than for merely maintaining order is a striking example of our lack of desire and of our failure to control human ingenuity. An eye to basic social consequences—to say nothing of party integrity—should inspire a role of leadership that would enlighten or gently bend the will of the South in connection with the school desegregation issue.

Enlightenment through persuasion with the object of winning consent will depend upon finding a substantial common ground upon which to negotiate. Despite the fact that most of the people who live in the South are too close to the problem to be objective, because of their experience with the problem, they should best be able to provide the working hypotheses or rational proposed solutions.

Mr. Eisenhower should take the initiative in providing this substantial common ground upon which to work and a "test-tube" arrangement that will weed out the beck and call of automatic reactions and promote creative leadership on the local level that should lead to the acceptance of the basic requisites of a social democracy.

JOHN P. MURCHISON.
Washington.

Leader Says Scriptures Don't Back Segregation

Courier Journal
P. 8
Louisville Ky.
Wed. 9-5-56

By GEORGE DUGAN
© New York Times News Service

Lake Junaluska, N. C., Sept. 4.—Segregationists who seek Biblical support for their views were taken sharply to task today by a Mexican church leader.

Gonzalo Baez-Camargo, secretary for literature and literacy of the committee on co-operation in Latin America of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., told the ninth World Methodist Conference here:

"Race discrimination and segregation have no support whatever in the Scriptures."

The churchman said Christianity teaches the "essential unity of mankind" and enjoins men to deal with each other in a spirit of mutual love and forbearance.

Some religious and civic spokesmen in the South have stoutly maintained that the Bible condones white supremacy.

Baez-Camargo based his thesis on these "Biblical assertions:"

1. All men have a common creator. There is not a "single" hint in the Bible that God bestowed His likeness in different degree.

2. God is a universal God, demonstrating no partiality to any nation or race.

3. All men have a common ancestry in a "single and original couple" from whom all men descended.

4. The Christian law of love is universal and all-embracing. It makes no exception on racial or other grounds.

The findings of science, Baez-Camargo told the conference are also in accord with Christian teaching on the subject of race.

Found In All Races

In commenting on intermarriage, Baez-Camargo said there are "no desirable or undesirable races."

"There are only desirable and undesirable individuals," he observed, "and both are found in all races. To ban a whole ethnic group, then, as undesirable for marriage with other races, is to act against the commandments of the gospel of love and the dictum of science."

Turning to the church, Baez-Camargo said:

"If only the churches would decide to bring segregational practices in their own organization and life all at once to an end, and to throw themselves open to all races, the whole traditional structure of race discrimination and segregation would crumble overnight, or at least within a short period of time."

UNREST 'MORE SIGNIFICANT'

Dixie Editor, Negro Cite 'North's Race Tension

Constitution P. 6

Mon. 3-12-56 Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 11 (AP)—A Southern editor and a Northern Negro leader charged today that racial disharmony is prevalent in the North as well as the South.

Grover C. Hall Jr., editor in chief of the Montgomery Advertiser, said racial unrest in the North is even more significant because of relatively few Negroes "and they start out with equality and theoretical acceptance."

Gloster B. Current of New York, who directs the program and organizational activities of 1,600 branches of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, had this to say:

PROBLEM UNSOLVED

"In the North we struggle with the subtleties and hidden aspects of discrimination and segregation. In no community in this nation where there is a sizable Negro population can you say the problem of race relations has been completely solved."

Hall made his comments in a letter to James A. Wechsler, editor of the New York Post. Current's remarks were included in an address to bus boycott leaders at a Negro church. The Negro boycott is in protest to segregated seating on buses.

The Advertiser editor, whose late father won a Pulitzer prize for fighting the Ku Klux Klan, said a New York Post columnist told him that an official map exists showing how school districts in New York "are gerrymandered to achieve segregation."

NEW YORK STORY

Noting that reporters from all over the world covered the Montgomery Negro bus boycott story, Hall proposed that Wechsler assign the columnist, Murray Kempton, to him for a week in New York "to get something of the New York story for Alabamians."

"Since all the New York reporters are down here doing the Alabama story, I propose to help fill their vacuum in New York," Hall added.

Hall said, with few exceptions, New York papers "merely peck" at stories of racial discrimination in the North.

OUT INTO OPEN

"However, they are characteristically pietistical kibitzers or bell-mouth gluttons when it comes to race strife under the Dixie magnolias," he said.

Current said recent racial unrest in the South has brought the "dirty aspects of Jim-Crowism" and mob violence "out into the open."

"The nation does not like what it sees," Current continued, but "this is all to the good for during the present conflict a lot of soul-searching is going on, and that ultimately means something constructive will be done."

ANSWERS REQUEST

In New York, Wechsler answered Hall's proposal by assigning reported Ted Poston to do a series on "The New York Story" and offered to make it available to the Advertiser for "simultaneous publication."

Poston is the Negro reporter who recently concluded a biographical series for the Post on Autherine Lucy, Negro student expelled from the University of Alabama.

Also in New York, City School Supt. William Jansen branded Hall's "gerrymandering" information as "completely false."

GENERAL

Gospel Does Not Allow Segregation

Commercial Appeal P. 5

Jewish Converts Learned Christianity Is Meant For All

Sun. 5-13-56

By DR. EARL L. DOUGLASS

IT IS HARD for us in this day of toleration and breadth of thought to realize how determined men in the past often were to keep certain benefits for themselves, their class, or their race.

Dr. Douglass

The Christain Church has for centuries been a missionary church. It has extended the benefits of faith and urged them upon people of all races. But in the beginning it was not so. The disciples which Jesus left on the earth after His ascension into heaven all believed that Christianity was meant just for them and for others members of the Jewish nation.

The Gentile was outside the pale of God's love. He might be a little better than the four-footed animals, but God had definitely chosen the Hebrew people as His people, and the best Gentile in the world was, according to the conviction of the original apostles, lower than the lowest Jew.

Vast Forces At Work

It took a tremendous upheaval in thought and the projections of vast supernatural occurances into the affairs of the early church to awaken the original disciples to the fact that they were wrong.

Peter had had a vision as he prayed on the housetop, and in that vision God made it plain that there is no such thing as clean and unclean in the religion of Christ. The old distinctions between clean and unclean—which had served a good purpose in their day—had now been put aside. The gospel of Christ was meant for all men.

Peter, under divine direction, went from Joppa to Caesarea and there found Cornelius, a Gentile army officer, assembled with family and friends in his home, ready to receive the message Peter had to give.

As Peter preached the message of forgiveness of sins through Christ, the Holy Spirit fell on these Gentiles. The unthinkable had occurred. God had accorded His benefits even to the Gentiles. Surely a great change was taking place in human and divine affairs. Cornelius and his family and friends had been received into the Church on the same basis as Jewish converts.

Jews Were Shocked

No doubt many Jewish Christians shrugged their shoulders over this incident and declared that it had very little significance. A few Gentiles would not be able to corrupt the church.

But when certain Jewish teachers, fleeing from the persecution which arose over Stephen, went to Antioch and there presented God's offer of salvation indiscriminately to Gentiles, the church was understandably shocked. The apostles in Jerusalem hurriedly sent Barnabas, a man of understanding spirit, to Antioch to see what this was all about. To receive Gentiles into the church on the same basis as Jews appeared to be diabolical.

But if anyone could evaluate the situation, this Greek-speaking Jew, Barnabas, who was born on the Island of Cyprus, only a short distance from Antioch, would be able to do so.

Shrewd Appraisal

Barnabas looked over the situation and was thrilled by what he saw. Quite evidently God was blessing these Gentiles precisely the same as He blessed Jews. It must be apparent now that the benefits of Christ were meant for all men.

Barnabas was a Jew, and all the apostles were Jews, and Jesus Himself had been a Jew, but evidently the religion which Jesus came to proclaim was meant not just for Jews but for every human being.

Barnabas put his seal of approval on the new church in Antioch and, in order that its life might be cultivated and deepened, he went to Tarsus and sought out Saul who had been living there since his conversion some years before.

True Spiritual Foundations

"And it came to pass, that a whole year they (Barnabas and Saul) assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people." The result was a firmly established Gentile Christian church, now being taught by two outstanding Christian teachers.

In this Antioch church, we see the four things which make a Christian church valid and strong. The first is evangelism—telling the message of salvation to others. The second is righteous living, for without this all Christian pretension is a sham. The third is religious education—Barnabas and Saul taught the people diligently. The fourth basis of a sound Christian church is benevolence; for when the people at Antioch heard that there was suffering among their fellow Christians at Jerusalem, they raised a contribution and sent relief.

Church Became Model

This first Gentile Christian Church has become a model to the churches which have followed through the centuries.

It was a church with true concern for human need. It was a missionary church. It was dedicated to the divine proclamation that God extends His grace without qualification to men of faith everywhere.

Every sound Christian church from that time to this has been built on the foundations laid down by that first Jewish-Gentile Christian congregation in Antioch.

The Sunday School Lesson for May 20, 1956, is "The Church in Antioch." Acts xi, 19-30.

(Copyright by the International Council of Religious Education, Chicago, Ill.)

Treasure Trove

By RIC ROBERTS

SCHOOL, CHURCHMEN AGREE "RACE" IS MYTHICAL

Courier Mag Sec P. 7

TWENTY years ago, at Blackpool, England, Dr. Julian Huxley advised a global conclave of biologists and anthropologists that the term "race," as applied to human beings, has ceased to have any scientific meaning.

Today, two decades later, in the United States, several integrated movements are in progression, with a common aim: to regard the beauties of human diversity, without human discord. A movement which catches the eye, most definitely, is the one projected as "We Humans," under aegis of Pittsburgh (Pa.) schools, Carnegie Museum, the Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations, and the United Steelworkers of America.

General

■

Most engaging is the key declaration of the movement, to wit: "No matter who or what you are, physically or socially, we (the human species) have a common ancestry traceable to a common origin and a common Father."

Sat. 6-2-56

Since the Nordic Protestant Church, in 1786, sanctioned the "official" birth of "racial segregation," it is warming to notice the signatures of outstanding white Catholic, Protestant and Jewish clergymen, along with that of Dr. Earl A. Dimmick, the Pittsburgh school superintendent, affixed to the opening declaration of the "We Humans" booklet.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Prepared by the Carnegie Museum, "to clarify certain basic matters relative to intergroup relationships," the beautifully designed booklet, by way of preamble, among other things, asserts: ". . . As children of a common Father, it is our moral responsibility to accept one another as we are, and to love one another as we love ourselves.

■

"We do not do this by forgetting physical differences, nor by trying to obliterate them, but by accepting them as God's work. Thus, we can live together as brothers under the Fatherhood of a God who wants us always to see first His own image and likeness in each of His creatures."

■

The signatures of Father John B. McDowell, Rabbi Solomon B. Freehof, the Very Rev. Dean N. R. H. Moor precede that of Dr. Dimmick. With Dixie's racialist rioters growing ever the noisier, a church-supported urgency for clarification, understanding and logical approach is, indeed, certain to be gratefully received by a group, such as ours, whose numerical and technological disadvantages invite suppression.

■

Science has decided on dividing the human species into Mongoloid, Caucasoid and Negroid divisions. Herewith, you are asked to notice and to identify the three racial types, each wearing an American hat.

■

Dr. F. A. E. Crew, a famed geneticist, believes human diversity is traceable to interbreeding and heredity; saying, "When an animal breeder wants to keep a strain what he calls 'pure,' he uses barbed wire." Although the English-speaking peoples of South Africa and the U. S. A. have upthrust "barbed" legal barriers, to preclude intergroup unions, some Americans still roam and mate interracially.

■

There are no biological barriers among mankind. TROVE has seen splendid love matches eventuate in lasting marriages; between a dimpled co-ed, from Iceland, and the son of a Philippine diplomatic envoy; between a tiny lass, from Thailand and a smiling brown boy, from 'Bama; between a regal British lady and a chocolate Army captain, from Cleveland; between a dynamic Utah redhead, and an umber-toned New York clerk; between a suntanned sweetie, from Texas, and a divinity student, from The Hague!

■

The only barriers to human mating are taboos . . . authored in modern times only by what Sir Winston Churchill proudly, but debatably deifies as "The English-Speaking Peoples."

Since command of the environment is usually a basic need for successful interracial interludes and since a general realization of such command is at least five decades away, for non-white U. S. males, the Dixie "barbed wire" preclusions are needless. Civil rights, economic opportunity and enrollment into the American body social, as a citizen, constitute the present chief concern of men of pigmentation. Nowhere has the easing of racial bars led to noticeable intergroup matches.

More than several disappointed white women have been flabbergasted to discover, belatedly, that nine of ten men of color pride, all else above, in answering "I do" to a clergyman while formalized shoulder-to-shoulder with a lissom-sheathed little lady of milk-chocolate-toned daintiness.

Compliance With Law Will Ward Off Racial Tensions

World, Thom, Ala.

Fri. 5-18-56

NEW YORK — To achieve less strained racial relations in the Deep South, the nation as a whole must inform that region it will not "tolerate" lawlessness, even though such lawlessness "emanates from minds sick with fear," it was declared here at the First Annual Forum on Anxiety and Tension.

Speaking on the subject of racial tensions, Dr. Channing H. Tobias, NAACP board chairman, repudiated the theory advanced by some southern spokesmen that racial tensions had erupted as the reesult of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation school decision.

"In Alabama, as in Poland, there is 'peace' as long as the people whose rights are being denied have no channel through which to express their discontent and little or no opportunity to challenge the status quo," he asserted. "To interpret their silence under this totalitarian regime is to fail to realize what lies beneath the surface. The absence of violence under such conditions is not to be equated with peace and harmony."

Dr. Tobias emphasized that "it was not the Court's decision which precipitated the present crisis in the South." He maintained it was rather "the organized defiance of that ruling, which, in the ultimate, is defiance of federal authority."

"Despite the protestation of those who seek to cloak themselves in the garb of respectability, there is no 'legal' way to disobey the law," the NAACP official declared.

He contended that segregation was instituted in the South to replace slavery "as an instrument of 'white supremacy.'"

"The present hue and cry in the South is raised not so much against the leveling of physical barriers between the races as against the destruction of the symbols of a superior status," Dr. Tobias asserted. "Jim Crow bestows upon the insecure white southerner a cherished status of superiority which he does not have to prove in open competition."

Goodwill Ambassador

'Integration Is Inevitable'

Courier P. 8

By CHESTER HIGGINS

Sat. 6-2-56

DETROIT — You probably could get an argument out of some people just by implying that a cop could be an Ambassador of Goodwill.

But a cop can be such and, by golly, we know one who is!

He's big—six-five, 240 pounds stripped — Homicide Inspector Thomas R. Cochill, a greying, 41-year-old career police officer, who worked his way up from a harness bull in the 10th Precinct, to his present position, 19 years later.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

IT HAS ONLY been since he took over the reins of the Homicide bureau that a Negro team was named to that department. That this was done with the okay and cooperation of Commissioner Edward S. Piggins, is beside the point.

There had been other Negro teams working out of the bureau on detail, but none was ever appointed to it. Cochill became Inspector in July, 1955.

"There was talk in the department that a Negro team should be named and I was in agreement with it Detective Larry Bleach and Pat. Warren Taylor were named last year. (Taylor has since departed and Pat. Robert Williams has taken his place.)," Cochill said.

INSPECTOR THOS. R. COCHILL
. . . "it's inevitable"

He had some pretty pointed things to say about integration and prejudices, but prefaced his remarks by declaring these "are my own opinions" not necessarily those of the department.

"Integration," he remarked, "is inevitable . . . it's inevitable and for the ultimate good of all. But it should be brought about with the least amount of friction possible.

"No matter how much some people may be opposed, it is coming. Why, then, can't we all work together to bring about that change peacefully and orderly?"

■

CONCERNING the high incidence of Negro crime in the city, he observed:

"I haven't read this anywhere, but if I were a Negro and had the ego that I now have, I would be resentful when I couldn't get ahead simply because I was black. I would be frustrated being forced to live in segregated areas and in generally run down homes.

"And, I think, my feelings of frustration and resentment would show in precisely the same way—in crime and murder over petty and seemingly ridiculously small things that most people less restricted, would probably laugh about."

38a 1956

GENERAL

Segregation Is Not Confined To The South

Advocate Sat. 5-5-56

In the midst of the furor over desegregation in the deep South, Manhattan newspapers recently quoted a report by a municipal planning board to Borough President Hulan Jack:

Jackson, Miss.

"If our new buildings (in Harlem) are not to be the racial ghettos of the future, we must within the next five years make a start in desegregating Harlem."

This is, of course, a backhanded concession that not very much of a start has yet been made toward desegregating Harlem, where a third of a million Negroes live, some in incredible squalor, in an area rigidly and purposefully hemmed in by the white portions of the community.

P.A

This is an example of the paradox of the North—that a report attesting segregation in New York City should be addressed to a man who, in addition to being the chief executive officer of Manhattan, is also a Negro. Negroes can go far in Manhattan; more often they are locked, by social circumstances, into the dismal estate to which they were born.

38a

The same thing is generally true of the other communities of the northern United States. Occassionally a Negro will emerge from the group to achieve distinction in law, medicine, politics, sports or entertainment. But for every one who does, a hundred or a thousand remain at the foot of the ladder, or only a rung or two up. The Negro is making progress in the North. But the progress is gradual, and the chief restraint is a bias that erodes only very slowly. And the process of erosion is interrupted from time to time by ugly outbreakings of racial violence—in the East, in the Mid-east, in the Mid-west and the Far West. New York, Chicago, Minneapolis, the San Francisco Bay area — all these and many more have had their periodic eruptions of race prejudice in recent times.

So there is no clear-cut cleavage, say, along the Mason-Dixon line, between prejudice and tolerance. The differences are of degree, and some times these differences, as between North and South, are slight. For the South is making progress, in its own way. Integration, at the school level, is proceeding in Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennessee, Missouri, Oklahoma, Maryland and Delaware; Arkansas has desegregated its State University; more significantly still, Louisiana, North Carolina and Florida are all approaching with earnestness and responsibility the difficult task of compliance with the Supreme Court's decisions.

Those decisions, themselves, were more temperate than some of the curbstone interpretations rendered by zealous laymen in their wake.

They enunciated, so far as public schools are concerned, the simple American principle of equal rights.

At the same time they acknowledged that no law can be written to compel a state of mind or heart. This was the wisdom prompting the doctrine of "flexibility," or gradualness, in application of the principle.

Now, if the "attitude of the South" is gauged on the basis of the utterances of the more vocal politicians, rabble rousers and hotheads, a plausible case can be made for despair in the matter of noncompliance.

But if the "attitude of the North" is assumed to be indicated by the sporadic muggings and window smashings and race riots in these areas, one can as readily leap to the conclusion that there is no hope, anywhere, for integration.

We do not agree, certainly, with the often-voiced theory that desegregation in the South is exclusively the South's own business; injustice anywhere in the United States has inevitable impact upon the whole nation's reputation and welfare.

Still, we have little patience with some of our smug brethren in the North who point the finger of shame at the South and ignore the bigotry that exists in the next block. In fact, we sometimes wonder if there's anything wrong with the South that the muzzling of a few score Southern politicians and Northern zealots wouldn't cure.

At any rate the solution of segregation will never be found in indignant carping and angry recriminations.

The shrill arguments among those who presume to speak for "the people" on either side of the subject are waged over the mute bodies of those for whom the problem is direct and personal. The theory is noisly argued as a more or less private matter between the professional debaters, and any dim light that is shed or help that is given the people themselves is mainly accidental.

The people of the North can help most, we believe, by cleaning up their own mess—and this process might well begin with a general soul searching to discover what residues of prejudice remain there. When Harlem has been desegregated, when Negroes have been welcomed as neighbors in the pleasant suburbs of New York and Chicago, when Chinese and Filipinos have been made to feel at home in San Francisco's Sea Cliff and Pacific Heights, there will be time enough to point a finger at the South.

In the meantime we would suggest that those best qualified to handle the situation in the South are the millions of thoughtful, moderate Southerners who both perceive the inevitability of justice for all, and realize the massiveness and delicacy of the task of securing such justice in all the circumstances.

No observer has any moral right to interfere unless his interference aims intelligently at a constructive result. And the mischief that can be wrought by unintelligent interference is enormous; enough of it can conceivably set back the cause of Southern integration by a half century. For the desegregation of schools, or of trolleys, or of restaurants can mean little unless accompanied by a corresponding change within the hearts of men, women and children. The courts can point the way and undertake to punish the laggards, but the step-by-step journey is an individual, private matter. There is involved here the need for the mutual discovery of the fellowship and the shared dignity of humankind. There is no simple formula for speeding this process of discovery, but it has never been achieved by prim finger pointing or volleys of invective.

EDITOR'S NOTE: In selecting the above editorial from the current issue of Collier's Magazine, the editorial being one with which we are in general agreement we saw it as being most appropriate for republication on our Editorial page particularly its concluding paragraph; after listening to the speech of Dr. T. R. M. Howard and some of the other speakers at the meeting of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership here last Friday.

JOHN M. CUMMINGS

Inquirer P. 14

Desegregation Ruling And Party Platforms

Fri. 4-27-56

Philadelphia, Pa.

APPEARING on a recent "Meet the Press" television program, Adlai Stevenson, in response to a question, said he could see no reason why the Democratic platform to be adopted at the Chicago convention in August, should carry a plank affirming the party's support of the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in public schools and its order that integration be effected with deliberate speed.

ADLAI STEVENSON

Desegregation is now the law of the land by virtue of the Court's ruling, said the Illinois candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination. This being the case, there is no need for a declaration on this phase of the racial issue.

James Reston, a member of the panel interviewing Mr. Stevenson, wanted to know if he was suggesting the convention might ignore the question entirely. To this Mr. Stevenson replied that the Democratic Party had a strong civil rights plank in its platform of four years ago and undoubtedly would have one this year.

Moreover, he felt the party's position on the issue would be acceptable to the segregationist South and the party forces in the North which hold to a decidedly opposite view.

The assumption that there can be no reason for upholding—or criticizing—a law in a party platform, merely because it happens to be the law, must have a strange sound to many Democrats and Republicans, too.

Adlai Stevenson is old enough to remember a thing called Prohibition, which was once embedded in the Constitution and enforced, after a fashion, through the medium of enabling legislation called the Volstead Act.

Every four years, from the time of its adoption until its repeal, the 18th or Prohibition Amendment found its way into the platforms of both major parties. In the early days of the dry period a lad called Wayne B. Wheeler, head of the Anti-Saloon League, saw to it that both the Republican and Democratic planks pledged enforcement of what President Hoover once called a "noble experiment."

* * *

THE first real break with this custom of pledging enforcement and ducking all around repeal, came in 1928 when Al Smith was nominated by the Democrats at their Houston convention. As usual the Prohibition plank was one of weasel words, as was that of the Republicans, adopted at Kansas City.

But Al Smith was no believer in weasel words, nor did he believe in Prohibition. He wired the delegates from New York, stating he would not stand on the plank and if they didn't like his attitude they could nominate another candidate. No substitute was nominated. The convention adjourned and Smith went on to become the worst defeated candidate up to that time.

Yet he started something. By campaigning for repeal he broke into the Vare stronghold in Philadelphia and he won to the Democratic Party young Republicans of the type of former Mayor Joe Clark, present Mayor Richardson Dilworth, Jack Kelly and many others. And he paved the way for the Democratic repeal plank adopted at the Chicago convention of 1932, the convention which nominated Franklin Roosevelt for the first time.

Al Smith entered that convention as a candidate and an advocate of repeal. Mr. Roosevelt, then Governor of New York, thought the time to push for repeal had not yet arrived. Mr. Stevenson no doubt remembers the exciting days of that convention. He will remember how the Roosevelt drive was on the verge of collapsing. The Smith people had worked up strong repeal sentiment. Roosevelt finally went along. The deal with Hearst and Garner was made. FDR became the candidate for President; Texas Jack got second place on the ticket.

We have no Prohibition today because of the stand taken by that convention. Let Mr. Stevenson keep this in mind the next time he is tempted to suggest the Supreme Court's decision on segregation can have no place in the Democratic platform because its ruling is the law of the land.

'I want to leave this country...

Afro-American P.8

Sat. 5-19-56

WASHINGTON

"I want to leave this country because people here are two-faced, hypocritical and sinful. They smile, but there's no feeling toward another human being."

Baltimore Md.

When he made this extreme statement, there was neither scorn nor contempt on the cocoa-brown face of Howard B. Spears, 28, of St. Louis, who is trying to renounced his American citizenship and go to Russia.

Mr. Spears has been trying to do that for two years now. He has a letter from the Russian Embassy, dated June 17, 1955, saying his application for entry had been forwarded to Moscow.

* * *

HE TOLD the AFRO Monday that he came to Washington two weeks ago to speed up plans for his deportation, but had run into snags from the Passport Division of the State Department.

"I was told at the Russian Embassy that they are trying to fix it so I can leave, but the State Department jumped down their back," said Mr. Spears, a high school graduate who plays the vibraphone.

He said he was honorably discharged from the Air Force in 1947 and enlisted in the Army.

"I had a heck of an experience," Mr. Spears recalled. "I felt like a prisoner in North Carolina.

"I refused to do anything under segregation, hate and prejudice. I was court-martialed and given six months in the stockade. I got out of the Army on a bad conduct discharge."

* * *

WHEN ASKED about his family, Mr. Spears replied:

"I have parents; but there's no need to mention them since they are not involved in my efforts to leave the country. My sister is a college student in Chicago."

He said, "At the Russian Embassy, they told me I could go back to school and get all the opportunities I want. I want to study more in music."

* * *

MR. SPEARS said he studied for a year and a half at the Chicago Conservatory of Music. He state that he has "made 10 special sticks to play the vibraphone."

A sparkle showed in his eyes as he referred to the sticks. "They make the instrument sould like a string harp or piano. The tone is pretty."

Ashley Nicholas, acting chief of the passport legal division, said Mr. Spears did not ask for a passport, but wanted to renounce his citizenship and be deported.

Mr. Nicholas said his department has nothing to do with such matters. A native-born American citizen cannot be deported.

"I will continue to try for deportation," Mr. Spears said. "If I had got a dishonorable discharge, instead of one for bad conduct, it would be easy."

WHAT'S HAPPENING ON THE Desegregation Front

Journal Sat. 5-5-56 P.1

Wilmington, N.C.

DETROIT MAY GET CITIZENS' COUNCIL

DETROIT — Pro-segregaionist Citizens' Councils of Alabama are recruiting members and organizing chapters in the Detriot area, it was reported this week.

The Free Press quoted Sam Engelhardt, an Alabama state senator, who is executive secretary of the Citizens' Council of Alabama, as saying that Detroiters had written him asking for organizational literature which he sent.

"I won't tell who they are because they are scared of trouble," Engelhardt was quoted as saying.

Journal P. 4

WARING WARNS ABOUT "PRESSURE" ON SOUTH

NEW YORK—Speaking at a symposium, "Education—the Social Aspects"—at Columbia University, here Friday, Tom R. Waring, editor of the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier, warned that too much pressure on the South to integrate its schools will "wreck public education for both races."

Rep. Adam Powell (D.-NY) who was scheduled to debate Waring on the segregation issue, was unable, because of legislative duties in Washington, to be present, but his speech was read by the Rev. O. D. Dempsey, his assistant at the Abyssinian Baptist Church.

* * *

BALL GAME HALTED BY RACE PREJUDICE

BATON ROUGE, La.—A scheduled ball game was broken up here Saturday night when parish recreation officials refused to permit Lake Charles of the Class C Evangeline League, to field its team which includes two Negro players.

The parish recreation commission owns Goldsby Field where Baton Rouge's Vangy team plays its scheduled Evangeline League games.

A statement, read over the public address system, said that the Baton Rouge team had "no choice but to postpone the game." Since the league has no rules against mixed athletics, officials said that they may rule later that it was a forfeiture, not a postponement.

* * *

MONTGOMERY CO. SUIT SET BACK TO AUGUST

GREENSBORO—A suit seeking to bring about integration in the schools of Montgomery County has been continued until August 16 in U. S. Middle District Court.

Judge Johnson J. Hayes ordered the continuance on Thursday after attorneys for both sides agreed to it. The case was first filed in federal court here last July and several hearings have been held as new motions and questions were raised.

* * *

NO SETTLEMENT YET IN ALA. BUS DISPUTE

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Two meetings between representatives of the National City Bus Lines and of the city of Montgomery have failed to end the dispute over bus segregation here.

The company said that it would comply with the U. S. Supreme Court ruling banning segregation in intrastate travel, while the city has insisted that it will coninue to enforce laws requiring segregation of bus passengers.

Meanwhile, the five-month-old boycott against the bus company continues.

Division Shown On Integration

Post & Times Herald P.39

Wed. 5-16-56

The question of racial integration finds whites almost evenly divided on the subject while 90 per cent of the Negroes want to see it accomplished, a survey sponsored by the Catholic Digest reveals.

The survey was made by an independent opinion research firm for the Digest. It found that 48 per cent of the whites favored bringing the two races close together, while 42 per cent favored keeping them apart. Among Negroes, 90 per cent favored bringing the races close together and 6 per cent favored keeping them apart, according to the survey. Ten per cent of the whites and 4 per cent of the Negroes had no opinion.

Washington D.C.

The survey contacted 500 whites and 500 Negroes in the North and 500 whites and 500 Negroes in the South. Fifty-eight per cent of Northern whites favored bringing the races close together.

Thirtyt-wo per cent favored keeping them apart. Only 17 per cent of the Southern whites favored bringing them together. Seventy-four per cent opposed it.

Among Northern Negroes, 95 per cent favored bringing the races close together and 3 per cent favored keeping them apart. Eighty-seven per cent of the Southern Negroes contacted favored bringing the races close together and 8 per cent favored keeping them apart.

A Gallup Poll released May 9 found 71 per cent of those contacted favored gradual integration of the schools over a period of years.

Adlai Says Ike Has Failed In Integration Leadership

Courier-Journal P. 3
Thurs. 4-26-56 Louisville Ky.

New York, April 25 (UP)—Adlai E. Stevenson charged tonight that President Eisenhower has failed to meet his sworn responsibility by refusing to give the nation "moral leadership" toward racial desegregation.

The Democratic presidential aspirant also scored the Administration for what he called its failure to see that the constitutional guarantee of the right to vote is effective throughout the country.

Stevenson said that during the first two years of this Administration a "flood stage of hate and hysteria . . . reached its crest."

Speaks at $100 Dinner

". . . if the flood has receded," he said, "the evidence of the damage it did to the soul of America remains. There is much to be done today to repair the structure of the Bill of Rights, to restore this foundation of freedom under law."

Stevenson, in a televised speech at a $100-a-plate campaign-fund-raising dinner, vowed that if he is elected to the presidency he will work ceaselessly for civil rights for all.

"The achievement of equal rights for all American citizens is the great unfinished business before the United States," he said.

Says Leadership Lacking

"There remains," he said, "the abiding responsibility of the executive branch of the Government to do its part in meeting this most fateful internal problem and the rising tensions that have followed in its train.

"The present Administration, in my judgment, has failed to meet this responsibility. . . .

"The presidency is above all a place of moral leadership. Yet in these months of crucial importance no leadership has been provided."

Civil rights hit a low mark, Stevenson said, in the days when the Government "quaked" before Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.) and White House aides spoke of Eisenhower's "passion not to offend anybody in Congress."

"Those were the days when books were banned and even burned in American libraries abroad," Stevenson said.

SEDITION ACTS OF STATES HIT BY HIGH COURT

Daily Tribune Chicago Ill.
Tues. 4-3-56

Upsets Conviction in Nelson Case

BY PHILIP DODD

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, April 2 — The United States Supreme court in a 6 to 3 decision today ruled state governments cannot punish persons for sedition against the federal government.

The court overturned the conviction of Steve Nelson, a Communist party leader, who drew a 20 year prison sentence in 1952 for violation of the Pennsylvania state sedition law.

Today's action cast doubt on the validity of sedition laws of 42 states, including Illinois, altho Chief Justice Warren, in the majority opinion, said the decision did not affect the right of a state to prosecute for sedition against the state itself.

State Court Ruling

The Pennsylvania Supreme court had thrown out the Nelson conviction on the grounds that sedition against the United States is a field in which only Congress can legislate. Today's decision upheld that ruling.

Steve Nelson

In other actions today, the high court:

1. Rejected an appeal by the Hillsboro, O., school board from a lower federal court order directing immediate integration of the town's elementary schools. The board has set next Sept. 1 as a target date for ending racial segregation.

Takes Up Slow-Downs

2. Agreed to decide whether a labor union may engage in slowdowns and other harassing tactics during contract negotiations without violating the Taft-Hartley law "good faith" obligation. The case arose when textile union members quit work 26 times in 1952 and 1953 during negotiations with the Personal Products corporation, Chicago.

3. Denied a hearing to a white man, Robert E. Lea, convicted of murder in Louisiana. In his appeal, Lea charged Negroes were excluded from the grand jury which indicted him. He noted the supreme court had reversed the convictions of Negroes on those grounds.

Similar to Smith Act

The Pennsylvania sedition law under which Nelson was convicted is similar to the federal Smith act which makes it a crime to advocate violent overthrow of the United States government.

Nelson also has been convicted under the Smith act, drawing a five year sentence. The United States Supreme court has accepted his federal conviction for review later in this term of court.

In holding the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction in the field of sedition against the United States, Chief Justice Warren said "the dominant interest of the federal government precludes state intervention."

Conflict with Act

"Administration of state acts would conflict with the operation of the federal plan [the Smith act]," the chief justice declared.

But Chief Justice Warren said the court did not reach the question of whether double punishment for the same offense is permissible under the Constitution.

"Without compelling indication to the contrary, we will not assume that congress intended to permit the possibility of double punishment," the chief justice said.

Justices Black, Frankfurter, Douglas, Clark, and Harlan joined the chief justice in the majority opinion. The dissenters were Justice Reed, who wrote a minority opinion, and Justices Burton and Minton.

Justice Reed Dissents

In the dissenting opinion, Reed said state and national legislative bodies "have legislated within constitutional limits so as to allow the widest participation by the law enforcement officers of the respective governments."

"The individual states," Reed said, "were not told they are powerless to punish local acts of sedition, nominally directed against the United States. Courts should not interfere. We would reverse the judgment of the Supreme court of Pennsylvania."

The attorneys general of 29 states, including Illinois, Indiana, and Michigan, had filed briefs urging the Supreme court to reverse the Pennsylvania Supreme court. United States Solicitor General Simon E. Sobeloff supported the states' arguments.

During argument of the case in the Supreme court last November, counsel for Pennsylvania read a letter from Rep. Smith [D., Va.], author of the Smith act, asserting Congress never had "the faintest notion" of nullifying state laws when it passed the act.

MIGHT AFFECT ACT

Grenville Beardsley, first assistant Illinois attorney general, said the United States Supreme court decision apparently has no effect on the Illinois Broyles bills loyalty oaths, but might affect the state's 1919 sedition act.

This act makes it a crime to advocate violent overthrow of the state or federal government. Beardsley said the Supreme court ruling might affect that part of the act pertaining to the federal government.

Pleased With Work Toward Integration

Call P. 24
Fri. 5-25-56 Kansas City, Mo.

NEW YORK. — The Urban League of Greater New York has congratulated the Commission on Integration of the Board of Education for its adoption of recommendations designed to improve educational standards for Negro and Puerto Rican children it was announced (Wednesday May 16) by Edward S. Lewis executive director of the interracial agency.

Mr. Lewis said, in a telegram to Comptroller Arthur Levitt and Board of Education President Charles H. Silver, co-chairman of the commission, that the recommendations which were adopted from the Subcommission on Educational Standards and Curriculum" are the minimum necessary to insure a beginning towards correcting the terrible educational deprivations sustained by Negro and Puerto Rican children in our city's public schools."

The League expressed its expectation that the board's professional staff would "immediately set up machinery to implement these recommendations so that a significant proportion of children attending school this September may benefit."

The subcommission was headed by Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, Associate Professor of Psychology at City college. His charges of racial segregation and inequalities in the public schools of New York City at an Urban League meeting two years ago led to a board of education-requested study, made by the Public Education association, and to the setting up of the commission of integration to help achieve the "ideal" of racially integrated public schools.

The Urban League is a 46-year old interracial social agency working to achieve equal opportunities for Negroes and other minorities in employment, housing, education, health and welfare services.

The full text of the telegram signed by Mr. Lewis follows:

"The Urban League of Greater New York congratulates the Commission on Integration of the Board of Education on its adoption of the recommendations of the Subcommission on Standards and Curriculum.

"These recommendations are the minimum necessary to insure a beginning towards correcting the terrible educational deprivations sustained by Negro and Puerto Rican children in our city's public schools.

"It is our expectation that the board's professional staff will immediately set up machinery to implement these recommendations so that a significant proportion of children who attend school this September may benefit."

A Milestone in South's Fight

Sat. 3-24-56 Times-Picayune

(Editorial Comment from the Richmond Times-Dispatch)

The declaration of constitutional principles, signed by 100 Southern members of Congress (19 senators and 81 representatives), including all those from Virginia, is a powerful and impressive document.

It is not a nullificationist defiance of the US supreme court, but it sets forth in strong and unequivocal language why the South is overwhelmingly opposed to the court's ruling against segregation in the public schools.

The signers, with distinguished lawyers and forum judges among them, declare solemnly that the supreme court justices "undertook to exercise their naked judicial power and substituted their personal, political, and social ideas for the established law of the land."

The NAACP agitated ceaselessly for many years on behalf of a reversal of a long line of supreme court decisions upholding segregation in the schools, including a unanimous one handed down as recently as 1927. It is a bit difficult to understand, therefore why its general counsel — who finally obtained the 1954 reversal of this 1927 decision —should now accuse the Southern senators and congressmen who express an intention to seek a similar reversal, of encouraging lawlessness and violence. In view of the fact that the court has reversed itself dozens of times in recent decades agitation for a reversal of this objectionable decision is altogether right and proper.

The mere fact that so many respected Southern members of congress have signed this manifesto should carry weight with the supreme court and the lesser courts, and should have its impact on public opinion throughout the North and West. This is an action solemnly considered, and solemnly carried out, after due reflection. It marks a significant milestone in the efforts of the South to preserve the rights of the states to control their own affairs in the field of public education.

The Retreat Of Southern Moderates

The Sentinel Wed. 5-16-56

The Segregation Issue Is Forcing Politicians To Abandon The Middle Ground And Join The Extremists

Montgomery, Ala.

From Newsweek

FEW Southern politicians fully comprehended the depth and passion of the white South's opposition to integration until the Supreme Court's decision angered the region like nothing since enfranchisement of the Negro in Reconstruction days.

For more than a decade, old-fashioned politicians who offered little in the way of a platform but pledged allegiance to the cause of white supremacy had been fading from favor. As ranters like Rankin and Bilbo departed, their places were taken by men who, while they almost always favored segregation, talked as little as possible about it, and abhorred extremist positions.

As the extent of Southerners' opposition to integration revealed itself in the aftermath of the court's decision, these "moderate" politicians were forced to take sides. And, to survive, most of them were compelled, in many instances, to tolerate extremist views.

Ruefully, a politician who has made this hard choice asked last week: "What would you do if a pack of S.O.B.'s were out to take your job and get the butter off your bread?"

To understand why politicians are being driven to take sides, look at Hale County, Alabama. This is pleasant country—rolling hills, ancient magnolias on the grounds of old plantation houses, well-tended gardens. But the most evident thing about Hale County is fear.

Of the county's 20,832 residents, 14,641 are Negroes—70%. The whites fear that integration would inevitably lead to equal voting opportunities for Negroes.

A white man said: "Look at the figures and tell me what we could do if the Negroes had full voting rights. Why, the blacks would be in the judges' seats and running the schools. They'd stick together at the polls and elect their candidates to every office in the county."

Route Of Retreat

THAT attitude explains why politicians are shifting their ground. To understand how they are doing it, look at the successive statements of Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas, formerly a "moderate."

As a candidate for governor in 1954, Faubus said: "The problem of desegregation should be solved at the local community level."

By June 1955, Faubus had retreated slightly: "We must recognize that this . . . may ultimately pose serious social problems in many communities of the state."

By last February, planning to run for reelection this fall and with an ear to the ground, Faubus came out for an interposition resolution and legal steps to "circumvent" the Supreme Court.

Two months ago Faubus announced that if he had been in Congress he would have joined in signing the Southern manifesto denouncing the decision of the court.

Folsom's Fate

SO STRONG has become the "conservative" tide in the South that so-called liberal standard-bearers have all but disappeared. Gov. James E. Folsom of Alabama is an example. Two years ago he was swept into office by the biggest majority in Alabama history.

After the Supreme Court ruling, Alabamans began to notice that Folsom was "soft" on racism. When Adam Clayton Powell visited Montgomery, Folsom was accused of entertaining the Negro congressman in the governor's mansion. Folsom was reported to have intervened with University of Alabama authorities to get them to expel white students who had harassed Autherine Lucy, a former Negro student.

Recently Folsom ran for National Democratic Committeeman. His opponent was Charles Watson McKay Jr., a vigorously pro-segregation author of Alabama's interposition resolution, which Folsom called "hogwash." Two years ago Folsom carried 62 of the state's 67 counties. This time he carried four.

One-Plank Platform

IN THE recent Florida gubernatorial primary Leroy Collins was renominated with a 378,482 vote. Collins is popular and has been an able governor, but his political advisers are convinced he could have been beaten if he had not taken a firm stand against integration. As it was, a political unknown named Sumter Lowry, who ran on the single plank of preserving segregation, got 130,000 votes. An integrationist candidate got 5,000.

In most parts of the South, politicians are mounting the platform to proclaim: "Vote for me and I'll see that your children don't go to school with Negroes." That they are on the right track politically is attested to by shrewd and successful Southern politicians.

Herman Talmadge, candidate for the U.S. Senate from Georgia, says segregation is "more important than all other issues at the moment." Georgia's Attorney General Eugene Cook says: "No man, in my opinion, can be elected to even a minor office on the state level in any of at least five states—Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, South Carolina, and Florida—unless he commits himself in a forthright and effective manner to support our pattern of segregation . . ."

A potent force in driving politicians to support this pattern is the so-called Citizens' Councils, which now have at least 200,000 members and are growing. These councils screen candidates for their views on segregation, and they get out the vote. The head of the Citizens' Councils of Alabama, state Sen. Sam Englehardt Jr., claims these groups were responsible for 75% of the vote against Folsom. He probably is right.

Third Party?

SO FAR these pressure groups have operated only on the local and state levels. But as they grow and become better organized, they undoubtedly will try to bend the national Democratic Party to their will.

And if the Democratic Party adopts a strong civil rights platform at Chicago, as it will have to do if it is to have any hope of carrying Northern states with large labor groups and Negro populations, the Citizens' Councils will want their state delegations to bolt.

The bolters would not turn to the GOP. Southerners are constantly reminded that the Supreme Court decision was written by Chief Justice Earl Warren and that President Eisenhower was responsible for hurrying desegregation in public places in Washington.

So far no Southern leader has said he will lead a third party movement. Gov. James P. Coleman of Mississippi says his state will stay with the Democratic Party unless there is "strong provocation" at the Chicago convention.

But The Knoxville Journal recently repeated its conviction that there will be "a revived third party in the South this fall." It quoted from AFL-CIO Vice President Walter Reuther's recent speech in which he said: "The labor movement collectively ought to say . . . to the leadership of the Democratic Party . . . that in '56 you've got to make a choice—you cannot have Mr. Eastland and have us at the same time."

Eisenhower Urges South to Start Obeying Integration Law, Pleads With Nation to Avoid 'Nasty Mess'

Inquirer P. 11 Thurs. 3-22-56

WASHINGTON, March 21 (AP).—President Eisenhower declared today that "All the South" should show some progress toward racial desegregation.

"I am for moderation, but I am for progress," he told his news conference.

He raised this plea:

"Let's don't try to think of this as a tremendous fight that is going to separate Americans and get ourselves in a nasty mess.

"Let's try to think of how we can make progress."

Philadelphia

Mr. Eisenhower discussed racial matters in a half-hour of questions and answers which also produced these Presidential comments:

FARM—He thinks the bill the Senate passed Monday night is neither good nor workable. He hopes the Senate-House conference on farm legislation "may write a good bill, and one which can really be helpful to the farmer." He said the bill as it now stands "would bury farmers under surpluses that they couldn't stand, and it would break the prices still further."

DEFENSE—The Defense Department is making much progress in adopting recommendations of the Hoover Commission on Government Reorganization.

The first mention of segregation issues came with a request for word on how Mr. Eisenhower felt "about Negroes being brought to trial for refusing to ride the Montgomery (Ala.) buses."

Mr. Eisenhower said, in effect, that he was not a lawyer.

Speaking generally, he went on:

"I do believe that it is incumbent on all of the South to show some progress. That is what the Supreme Court asked for. And they turned it over to local district courts.

"I believe that we should not stagnate, but again I plead for understanding, for really sympathetic consideration of a problem that is far larger, both in its emotional and even in its physical aspects, than most of us realize."

He showed what sounded like a bit of temper when a reporter told him that there were indications of a switch by some Negro leaders from the Democratic to the Republican Party. The reporter asked if he could discuss possible reasons for this.

"Well, I have got a very good one," the President replied warmly. "I have told you a dozen times that it is anybody's judgment as to whether I am doing my job well or not doing it well, but as far as I am concerned, I am trying to do it for 166,000,000 people, not for any group.

"I don't care how you define them, how you separate them geographically or racially or religiously, I am for America, and that is what I am trying to do.

"So if they want to come in under that umbrella, I welcome them with open arms."

Ike Says South Must Act on Bias

World-Telegram & Sun P. 1 Wed. 3-21-56

By MERRIMAN SMITH,
United Press Staff Writer.

WASHINGTON, March 21.—President Eisenhower said today he thinks it is incumbent on the Southern states to make some progress toward racial integration in schools as decreed by the U.S. Supreme Court.

New York, N.Y.

Under news conference questioning, Gen. Eisenhower said he is well aware of the deep emotions involved in the South, and he advocates a pattern of moderation and progress.

The Chief Executive said he does not believe in stagnation on the racial issue in the South. But he added that he wanted to take the occasion of his meeting with reporters to plead again for understanding and patience.

Asked About Trial.

The President was asked how he felt about Negroes being brought to trial in Montgomery, Ala., for "refusal to ride the buses."

The President said first that he understood there was an Alabama state law against boycotts, but as for the over-all problem of segregation he said he wanted to refer back to his news conference statement of last week when he asked for patience and understanding.

The President paused for a moment and then said he had an added idea—he believes it is incumbent on the South to show some progress toward school integration in conformance with the opinion of the Supreme Court.

A reporter said that some Negro leaders who had supported Gen. Eisenhower were switching their political allegiance because of his "patience" policy.

Duty to All U.S.

The President shrugged his shoulders and said anybody is entitled to an opinion on how he is conducting the affairs of his office, but he felt his duty is to the total American population regardless of race, creed, color or religion.

The President said the racial question in the South should not be thought of as a tremendous fight among Americans. Such thinking, he said, would lead the country into a dreadful mess.

He said the basic law of the nation is the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court. He added that the interpretation of the Constitution changed from time to time, but that the findings of the court have to be recognized and accepted as basic law.

KEFAUVER ASKS A LIBERAL SOUTH

New York Times 4-18-56

Senator, in Florida, Dares Region to Accept Ruling on School Integration

Tues. 4-3-56

Text of the Senator's speech is printed on Page 18.

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

ORLANDO, Fla., April 2—Senator Estes Kefauver challenged his native southland today to adopt a liberal policy in the controversy over the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

The Tennessee aspirant for the Presidential nomination kicked off a four-day stumping campaign for Florida's twenty-eight votes in the Democratic National Convention. He described himself as a "twentieth century Southerner" who regarded the court's ruling as "the final word."

In a bold political tactic that surprised some of his local supporters, Senator Kefauver emphasized that the Florida Presidential primary on May 29 "will be looke dupon by many as a testing ground for sentiment in the entire southland."

"As a Southerner," he added, "I am glad to have my views and policies so tested in the crucible of a campaign right here." His speech was prepared for delivery over a television station here.

Senator Kefauver is vying with Adlai E. Stevenson, the Democratic Presidential nominee of 1952, for the support of Florida's convention delegates. Political observers believe Mr. Stevenson has an edke in the contest, but Mr. Kefauver's recent primary successes have emboldened his supporters here. Mr. Stevenson speaks in Jacksonville on Friday.

Senator Kefauver said he frequently had heard reports that he was "not acceptable" to the South as a Presidential nominee because "from the beginning of my career I have taken what some refer to as the national viewpoint."

Political Propaganda

"This is political propaganda as you and I know so well," he told his audience. "We will prove it again in this campaign as we have proved in so many campaigns in my native state of Tennessee."

He said that while "the South fondly remembers its yesterday," he was convinced that there were many "twenty century southerners" who "in planning our tomorrows are just as liberal, just as dynamic, just as vibrantly alive as anyone, anywhere in the nation."

In a series of talks during the day, the Senator fashioned a broad appeal to "proagressive, expanding South." He said the region should show that it is united to the rest of the country by economic interdependence to the point that "some shadings of difference are not nearly so marked as those who would destroy the unity of our nation would have us believe."

He rebuker those who hold that "this year the South will separate itself from the Democratic party and from the nation because of the Supreme Court decision on integration in the public schools."

Senator Kefauver said the South should keep in mind that as the result of Supreme Court rulings the region had benefited economically because of adjustments in freight rates. He noted that other sections of the country had supported the discriminatory rates to gain economic advantage over the South.

He observed that national welfare and sectional welfare were intertwined in an expanding economy and that without a final interpretive authority such as the Supreme Court there would be anarchy.

A Testing of His Views

The Senator then said that if he should be elected President, he would "do all in my power to assist the men and women of goodwill in both races" to solve the school integration problem.

The Tennessean's declaration that he regarded the Florida Presidential primary as a testing of the popularity of his liberal views in the South came as a somewhat dramatic political development in this state's current controversy over school segregation.

There are five candidates for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination which will be voted on in a first primary on May 8. In the event no one candidate wins a majority of the votes, a run-off primary will be held in conjunction with the Presidential primary on May 29.

The gubernatorial battle has centered largely on the school integration issue, and all the candidates have pledged that they will seek to retain segregated schools. The debate has generated political tension throughout the state.

Recently, Gov. LeRoy Collins urged President Eisenhower to call a conference of Southern Governors and state Attorneys General to consider the region's integration problems.

On Saturday, President Eisenhower, replying to the Governor, said he hoped Congress would name a bipartisan commission to study the problem. He added that if such a commission was not designated he would perhaps consider a conference of the kind proposed by the Governor.

Asked at a pres sconference to express his views on this matter, Senator Kefauver said that he looked favorably on either a commission or a conference. He added "anything that gives us perspective through sound discussion would be helpful."

38a 1956 GENERAL

NEGRO CLERGYMEN ADOPT RESOLUTION
AGAINST MANIFESTO

20 NEGRO MINISTERS REJECT 'GRADUALISM'

Times p.22-C

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 3—"Gradualism" in the application of anti-segregation laws was rejected today by twenty Negro clergymen from eleven states. They met here to draw up a "Negroes Declaration of Intention."

The Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Jackson of Chicago, who is president of the National Baptist Convention, said the declaration was designed to show that Negroes would support the Constitution fully and uphold obedience to the "laws of the land."

It is an answer to the "manifesto" issued recently by Southern Congressmen denouncing the Supreme Court's decision outlawing school segregation, Dr. Jackson added.

"While we recognize a need of patience that accompanies growth," the declaration said, "we intend at all times to reject that doctrine of gradualism which implies that the established laws of the land should be gradually applied and gradually obeyed in order to respect the unjust traditions of men and give free reign and honor to destructive prejudices."

Negro Clergymen Adopt Resolution Against Manifesto

Herald 4-4-56

CHICAGO, April 3 (AP)—A group of Negro clergymen from 11 states today adopted "The Negroes Declaration of Intention" rejecting the "Doctrine of Gradualism" in applying the nation's anti-segregation laws.

The declaration also pledged obedience to the "laws of the land" and asserted that anyone who disobeys these laws and teaches others to do so "is a declared enemy of this nation and is working for its overthrow."

The Rev. Joseph H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention, said the declaration is an answer to the "manifesto" issued recently by some southern Congressmen.

The manifesto denounced the Supreme Court's decision outlawing school segregation.

Manifesto Answered

Daily World P.1

Declaration Of Intention Is Adopted By Ministers

Thurs. 4-5-56

Atlanta, Ga.

CHICAGO — (INS) — Negro clergymen from 11 states rejected the doctrine of gradualism in the enforcement of anti-segregation laws and adopted "the Negro's declaration of Intention" in answer to the manifesto of 100 Southern Congressmen.

The manifesto of the Southern Congressmen denounced the U. S. Supreme Court's decision banning racial segregation in public supported schools.

The Negroes' declaration was adopted by the executive committee of the five-million-member National Baptist Convention in Chicago. The committee also voted to divert missionary funds to aid the campaign for racial integration in the South.

The Negro's declaration said in part:

"While we recognize the need for patience that accompanies growth, we intend at all times to reject that doctrine of gradualism which implies that the established laws of the land should be gradually applied and gradually obeyed, in order to respect the unjust traditions of men and to give free reign and honor to destructive prejudices .

"We intend to participate in the total cultural life of the nation, both for personal growth and development and for the further progress of the country itself."

The Rev. Joseph H. Jackson, Convention president, said copies of the declaration will be sent to President Eisenhower, Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., and members of Congress.

38a 1956

GENERAL

MANIFESTO

Segregation Manifesto Draws Fire in Congress

Herald Tues. 3-13-56 P. 14-A

Miami, Fla.

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Southern legislators presented their manifesto or integration to Congress Monday, and drew a challenge from Sen. Wayne Morse, Oregon Democrat, to offer a constitutional amendment allowing race segregation practices.

Predicting there would be few votes for such an amendment, Morse told his colleagues:

"Why, one would think that Calhoun was walking across the floor of the Senate today."

John C. Calhoun, a South Carolina senator, was a leading figure in pre-Civil War debates over slavery and states rights.

Sen. Walter F. George, Georgia Democrat, presented to the Senate the statement signed by 19 senators and 81 House members from 11 states pledging use of "all lawful means" to reverse the Supreme Court's 1954 decision outlawing race segregation in public schools.

Four more House members signed the manifesto Monday. They are Reps. Charles R. Jonas, North Carolina Republican; William Cramer, Florida Republican; and Ross Bass, Tennessee Democrat.

Rep. Howard W. Smith, Virginia Democrat, read this "manifesto" to the House. The document spells out no specific course of action but declares the court's decision was "a clear abuse of judicial power."

George told the Senate the group's action in drafting the document "has not been hastily taken."

"It has been carefully considered by its signers for four or five weeks," he said.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Democrat, told the Senate Monday the South will "fight to the end" to reverse the Supreme Court's order.

"It would be submission to cowardice if we failed to use every lawful means to protect the rights of the people," Thurmond declared.

Some Southern senators have said that if the Democratic National Convention should take a strong stand in favor of integration, a third party movement might arise in the South.

Thurmond, who led a States Rights ticket in 1948, said in an interview he knows of no such movement at this time.

But he told the Senate that "the white people of the South are the greatest minority in the nation today."

Morse jumped into battle against the stand set out in the manifesto immediately after George and Thurmond had their say. He was quickly joined by Sens. Richard Neuberger, Oregon Democrat, and Hubert Humphrey, Minnesota Democrat.

Sen. Herbert Lehman, New York Democrat, got out a statement saying he is "wholly in disagreement" with the position taken by the Southern senators, and would reply to the manifesto later.

Morse said there are forces in the nation seeking to put themselves "above the Supreme Court and the Constitution," and predicted at one point:

"An historic debate is going to have to take place in the not too distant future because the Congress is going to have to determine whether it will back up the Supreme Court."

Sen. Humphrey said Congress should back up the high court's segregation decision as the law of the land."

Humphrey said it was incorrect to argue that the Supreme Court wrote new law in its decision.

What it did, he contended, was to apply for almost the first time the 14th Amendment to human beings instead of to corporate interests.

Humphrey said that the "doctrine of interposition, fully developed, becomes nullification."

He said he was pleased to see "an appeal to law and order" in the statement of the Southern bloc.

Neuberger suggested that President Eisenhower should call a White House conference of governors, senators and congressmen from states "where the Supreme Court decision is being defied."

He said that White House conferences had been called recently on much less important matters.

Neuberger asked how this country must look to the rest of the world when a large group of congressmen join in what he termed open defiance of the decision of the highest court of the land.

Reply to Manifesto By Case of Jersey Urges Moderation

N.Y. Times 3-16-56

By WILLIAM S. WHITE

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 15—The first formal Republican reply in the Senate to the southern segregation manifesto was made today. It was in a tone of marked moderation.

In a declaration of last week nineteen southern Senators and eighty-one southern members of the House of Representatives, all Democrats except two, pledged to use "all lawful means" to overturn the Supreme Court's decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

Senator Clifford P. Case of New Jersey, a liberal Republican of the Eisenhower wing of the party, rose this afternoon in retort. All other Republicans continued their silence.

Senator Case called on the anti-segregationists as well as the pro-segregationists to avoid all extremism of utterance and action.

"Let us each in every way open to us make clear that the extremists will not have their way, that men of good will and moderate temper can and will work out the problems involved in complying with the law if they really want to," he told his colleagues.

In the House of Representatives, Kenneth B. Keating, another liberal Republican, from upstate New York, called also for understanding tolerance of the southern viewpoint, though making it clear that he wholly supported the Court.

"I agree with my esteemed friends from southern states that we are facing challenges akin to those which plagued our nation in the sad days of Reconstruction," Representative Keating declared.

"But I am sure that on reflection none of us will wish to carry his partisanship on this matter beyond the limits of judicial reconsideration or legislative and constitutional revision," he added. "And I hope the wisdom and restraint of the court's own language in these decisions will prove helpful to all of us."

Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr., Democrat of Manhattan, raised the possibility of a third party in the November elections.

For the third time he urged President Eisenhower to call a White House conference of white and Negro leaders "from the tension areas of the South to try to ameliorate the situation."

Mr. Powell asserted that many Negroes were dissatisfied both with the general Democratic record on civil rights and with what he called a lack of leadership by President Eisenhower himself.

If the President continued to decline to summon a White House conference and if Adlai E. Stevenson and other Democrats continued in their middle-road stand on segregation, Mr Powell said, he and other Negroes would meet to discuss a third party movement.

Representative Charles C. Diggs Jr., Democrat of Michigan, asked President Eisenhower and Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. to intervene in the case of Elmer O. Kimbell, acquitted Tuesday in Mississippi of the killing of a Negro. Mr. Diggs asked the President to try to establish some Federal jurisdiction in the case.

Case Regrets Manifesto Action

Senator Case told the Senate: "I wish with all my heart that Senators and members of the House had not felt impelled to issue their manifesto. That it is responsive to the present feelings of many people in the southern states I do not doubt.

Senator Clifford P. Case

That the feeling of the moment will pass, I am equally certain.

"For it is inconceivable that at this point in our history the American people should refuse to accept the determination of our Supreme Court on a question involving the interpretation of the Constitution. And it is inconceivable also that the American people can fail to recognize the essential rightness of these decisions from the standpoint of simple justice and good consience.

"Yet, despite its expressed appeal for moderation, the effect of the manifesto can only be to incite further resistance and inflame a situation already difficult.

"Obviously, the period of adjustment to the court's decree is a time for all Americans to demonstrate the fullest measure of patience and understanding. Instead, this trying period has been made immeasurably more difficult by intemperate statements by people on both sides of the argument and by extremist action."

MANIFESTO DECRIES FORCED INTEGRATION

Times Picayune

New Orleans La.

Dixie Congressmen Sign Protest Document

Sun. 3-11-56

By EDGAR POE

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, March 10 — In a historic manifesto, nearly 100 members of Congress representing 11 Southern states Saturday commended the motives of those states which have declared their intention to resist forced integration in the public schools system.

Decrying the supreme court's "encroachment on the rights reserved to the states and the people," the 19 senators and 78 House members, in an appeal to the people of other states not directly affected by the court decision, declared that they, too, might some day be victims of "judicial encroachment."

The manifesto, written by a committee in the Senate and House, called upon Southerners not to be provoked by the outside "agitators and troublemakers."

George, Smith to Read It

Sen. Walter F. George of Georgia will read the document in the Senate Monday. Rep. Howard W. Smith of Virginia, chairman of the House rules committee, will read it in the House about the same time.

Two Mississippians, Sen. John C. Stennis and Rep. William M. Colmer, served on the committee that helped draft the document. Rep. Colmer was chairman of the 14-member strategy committee in the South which included Reps. Edwin E. Willis of Louisiana and John Bell Williams of Mississippi. In addition to Stennis, the Senate drafting committee included Sen. Richard B. Russell of Georgia and Sen. Samuel J. Ervin of North Carolina.

A Southern congressman gave a copy of the manifesto to The Times-Picayune Friday afternoon with permission to use the text Sunday. He gave permission to release it after there had been a series of partial "leaks" of the statement.

Official Release Monday

However, the official release will not be made until Monday morning.

Rep. Colmer said all senators and representatives from Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia signed the statement.

The congressman said all members of the delegations from North Carolina, Texas, Tennessee and Florida did not sign it. Neither Texas senator was asked to sign it, according to an informed source.

Neither Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson, Senate majority leader, nor Sen. Price Daniel, an Eisenhower Democrat in 1952 and who is a candidate for governor, was asked to sign. Neither was House Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas asked to sign.

Two Republicans Sign

Virginia's delegation includes two Republicans who attached their signatures to the document. Rep. George S. Long of Louisiana said the entire Louisiana delegation signed the document.

The delegations of seven of the states signed the manifesto unanimously.

Several members of the Texas House delegation affixed their signatures.

'Inescapable Lesson of History'

The text of the manifesto follows:

"The unwarranted decision of the supreme court in the public school cases is now bearing the fruit always produced when men substitute naked power for established law.

"The founding fathers gave us a constitution of checks and balances because they realized the inescable lesson of history, that no man or group of men can be safely entrusted with unlimited power.

The Times Picayune

"They framed this constitution with its provisions for change by amendment in order to secure the fundamentals of government against the dangers of a temporary popular passion or the personal predilections of public office holders.

New Orleans La.

"We regard the decision of the supreme court in the school cases as a clear abuse of judicial power. It climaxes a trend in the federal judiciary undertaking to legislate, in derogation of the authority of Congress and to encroach upon the reserve rights of the states and the people. The original constitution does not mention education. Neither does the 14th Amendment, nor any other amendment. The debate preceding the submission of the 14th Amendment clearly shows that there was no intent that it should affect the systems of education maintained by the states.

Action of 1868 Cited

"The very Congress which proposed the amendment subsequently provided for segregated schools in the District of Columbia.

"When the amendment was adopted in 1868, there were 37 states of the Union. Every one of the 26 states that had any substantial racial differences among its people either approved the operation of segregated schools already in existence or subsequently established such schools by action of the same lawmaking which considered the 14th Amendment.

"As admitted by the supreme court in the public school case (Brown vs. Board of Education) the doctrine of separate but equal schools 'apparently originated in Roberts vs. City of Boston—(1849), upholding school segregation against attack as being violative of a state constitutional guarantee of equality.' This constitutional doctrine began in the North, not in the South, and it was followed not only in Massachusetts, but in Connecticut, New York, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania and other Northern states until they, exercising their rights as states, through the constitutional processes of local self - government changed their school systems.

Taft's 1927 Ruling

"In the case of Plessy vs. Ferguson in 1896, the supreme court expressly declared that under the 14th Amendment no person was denied any of his rights if the states provided separate but equal facilities. This decision has been followed in many other cases. It is notable that the supreme court, speaking through Chief Justice Taft, a former President of the United States, unanimously declared in 1927 in Lum vs. Rice that the 'separate but equal principle is' within the discretion of the state in regulating its public schools and does not conflict with the 14th Amendment.

"This interpretation restated time and again, became a part of the life of the people of many of the states and confirmed their habits, customs, traditions and way of life. It is founded on elemental humanity and common sense, for parents should not be deprived by government of the right to direct the lives and education of their own children.

"Though there has been no constitutional amendment or act of Congress changing this established legal principle, almost a century old, the supreme court of the United States with no legal basis for such action undertook to exercise their naked judicial power and substituted their personal political and social ideas for the established law of the land.

'Creating Chaos, Confusion'

"This unwarranted exercise of power by the court, contrary to the constitution, is creating chaos and confusion in the states principally affected. It is destroying the amicable relations between the white and Negro races that had been created through 90 years of patient effort by the good people of both races.

"It has planted hatred and suspicion where there has been heretofore friendship and understanding.

"Without regard to the consent of the governed, outside agitators are threatening immediate and revolutionary changes in our public school systems. If done, this is certain to destroy the system of public education in some of the states.

"With the gravest concern for the explosive and angerous condition created by this decision and inflamed by outside meddlers:

"We reaffirm our reliance on the constitution as the fundamental law of the land.

'Contrary to Established Law'

"We decry the supreme court's encroachments on rights reserved to the states and to the people, contrary to established law and to the constitution.

"We commend the motives of those states which have declared the intention to resist forced integration by any lawful means.

"We appeal to the states and people who are not directly affected by these decisions to consider the constitutional principles involved against the time when they, too, on issues vital to them may be the victims of judicial encroachment

"Even though we constitute a minority in the present Congress, we have full faith that a majority of the American people believe in the dual system of government which has enabled us to achieve our greatness and will in time demand that the reserved rights of the states and of the people be made secure against judicial usurpation.

"We pledge ourselves to use all lawful means to bring about a reversal of this decision which is contrary to the constitution and to prevent the use of force in its implementation.

"In this trying period, as we all seek to right this wrong, we appeal to our people not to be provoked by the agitators and trouble-makers invading our states and to scrupulously refrain from disorder and lawless acts."

Rome News-Tribune

Constitution

Sat. 3-17-56 P. 4

Southern Manifesto Is Appeal To Reason, Not to Prejudice

Atlanta, Ga.

When almost one-third of the membership of the Congress of the United States signs a declaration, that document should not be regarded lightly.

One hundred and one senators and representatives, representing 11 states, have signed a manifesto declaring the Supreme Court ruling on segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional.

Those 101, it is true, are from Southern states.

All except two are Democrats.

But, unquestionably, there are congressmen from other states and there are other Republicans who would be willing to sign the declaration and who subscribe to its principles.

In substance the declaration says that there has been a breakdown in the separation of powers of our government; that the Supreme Court has usurped powers not granted to it; and that the segregation decision should be overthrown by legal means.

That there is a breakdown in the separation of powers has been obvious; but it is again shown by the statements of some of those who denounced the manifesto. Some are even saying the Congress should have no voice in the matter.

The manifesto is by no means an inflammatory document.

On the contrary, it urges caution.

It points to the results of the Supreme Court decision in these words:

"This unwarranted exercise of power by the court, contrary to the Constitution, is creating chaos and confusion in the states principally affected. It is destroying the amicable relations between the white and Negro races that have been created through 90 years of patient effort by the good people of both races. It has planted hatred and suspicion where there has been heretofore friendship and understanding.

"Without regard to the consent of the governed, outside agitators are threatening immediate and revolutionary changes in our public school systems. If done, this is certain to destroy the system of public education in some of the states."

There are two main points at issue which many persons are ignoring.

First, there is the question of the constitutionality of the Supreme Court's decision itself.

Second, there is the agitation and strife which has been brought on by those who are acting hastily, or are stirring up trouble for selfish or ulterior motives.

There are many persons who believe the Supreme Court's decision was wrong, yet who would not deny full rights and equality to every race.

But the agitators refuse to recognize that fact. They confuse an honest belief with racial prejudice.

There is no appeal to racial prejudice in the Southern manifesto. On the contrary, there is an appeal for common sense and application of reason in dealing with a difficult problem; an appeal directed to persons of both races.

Southerners' Manifesto May Doom Democratic Party

Washington (ANP)—The Democratic Party this week stood on the brink of total disaster as 96 southern congressmen and senators issued a proclamation denouncing the Supreme Court for its rulings against segregation in public institutions.

Only two Republicans were among the 19 senators and 77 representatives who have formed the largest congressional protest group since before the Civil War.

The manifesto, which accuses the Supreme Court of "abuse of power," was read in the Senate by Sen. Walter F. George, (D.-Ga.), president pro tempore and chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. Rep. Howard W. Smith (D.-Va.), chairman of the House Rules Committee, read the document in the House.

Immediately, there was talk of a third party and the name of Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas, majority leader, was heard as a possible candidate.

Johnson was one of the few southern lawmakers who did not sign the manifesto. Other nonsigners included:

Estes Kefauver (D.-Tenn.), Albert Gore (D.-Tenn.), Sam Rayburn (D.-Tex.) and Harold Cooley (D.-N. C.), chairman of the House Agriculture Committee.

Repercussions have continued to mount in the nation's capital following the introduction of the manifesto.

Views expressed by others follow:

Sen. Douglas (D., Ill.) protested that the document "will have the effect of encouraging resistance to the court's order." He told the Senate that others so encouraged may "not be so meticulous about law and order."

Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.) suggested a counter-statement supporting the anti-segregation decision appears "valid and desirable."

Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson of Texas, one of the few Southern legislators not signing the manifesto, stated that "in my opinion, the solution of the problem cannot be found on the federal level . . . It's my fervent hope that wise leaders on the local levels will work to resolve these differences."

Rep. Cooley (D., N. C.) said he did not sign because he considers the manifesto a "dangerous document, calculated to aggravate the situation." He added that it "holds out the false hope that there are legal means through which the Supreme Court decision can and may be reversed."

Sen. Kefauver of Tennessee said he did not sign the manifesto because, "I just don't agree with it."

Sen. Gore, also of Tennessee, did not sign. However, he did not make a comment.

Every senator and representative from the states of Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia signed the manifesto.

Only four of 22 representatives from Texas were signers, while six of Florida's eight men put their names to the decree. Five representatives from Tennessee and four from North Carolina refushed to join the move.

Here (in part) is what the Congressmen said:

'The unwarranted decision of the Supreme Court in the public school cases is now bearing the fruit always produced when men substitute naked power for established law . . .

"We regard the decision of the Supreme Court in the school cases as a clear abuse of judicial power. It climaxes a trend in the federal judiciary . . . to encroach upon the reserve rights of the states and the people . . .

The congressmen said "this unwarranted exercise of power by the court . . . is creating chaos and confusion . . . and is destroying the amicable relations between the white and Negro races that had been created through 90 years of patient effort by the good people of both races."

They pledged themselves "to use all lawful means to bring about a reversal or this decision which is contrary to the Constitution and to prevent the use of force in its implementation." . . .

WASHINGTON

A Desegregation Solution?

News P. 22 Thurs. 3-15-56

Manifesto Brings The Issue Into Focus, And Raises Question, What Is Moderation?

Bryan, Ala.

BY ROSCOE DRUMMOND

THE MANIFESTO of the 19 Southern senators and 77 Southern congressmen, seeking to erect a wall of nullification around the Supreme Court's unanimous decision against segregation in the public schools, contributes no constructive step at any point to solving the nation's problems of racial discrimination.

But it is well that it has come. It has been in the making for many months. A year ago it was a cloud on the horizon no bigger than a man's hand. Today it is a thunderstorm of indignation, emotion, honest conviction, prejudice and frustration.

It is well that it has come because it brings blazingly into the clear the depth, magnitude and perilous gravity of the matter with which we are dealing.

This is the stuff out of which the Union could be destroyed—or rise to greater heights.

We are dealing with an issue which now, not next month or next year, but now requires the greatest degree of wisdom, justice and moderation, the highest qualities of heart and mind and true affection, one for another, that we have ever summoned in our whole history. Nothing less. It is our whole duty to summon these qualities to serve the republic now.

Let us not underrate the need for all the greatness, all the poise, all the goodness at our command.

It is almost impossible to overstate the size and somberness of the problem.

Mishandled, it is capable of splitting the nation, the people and our political parties irreparably asunder.

If the wrong words are spoken by the wrong people at the wrong time, there can be bloodshed. That is how serious it is.

We are dealing with the stuff out of which civil war has been made and can be made. It would be perilous to see this problem in lesser terms.

To see this problem in its true terms is not to solve it; to fail to see it in its true terms could be fatal.

The ingredients of moderation in attitude and action are still within our reach.

It is the extremes in attitude and action which must, at all costs, be avoided: The extreme, as advocated by some, that the most gradual application of the law must be implacably fought; and the extreme, as advocated by others, that the most precipitate application of the Supreme Court decision must be pressed by force if necessary.

No; that is the road to impasse and turmoil.

What Any Solution Of The Problem Requires

THE INGREDIENTS of any solution require a willingness to implement the Supreme Court decision moderately by those who most want to implement it rapidly, and a willingness to carry it forward moderately by those who want to resist it totally.

The ingredients of moderation must reject the use of nullification to avert the Supreme Court's authority and must reject the use of force to carry out the court's authority.

Are there sufficient moderates among those who support the cause of public school desegregation, including the Negroes themselves? The latest Gallup Poll suggests some significant facts. It shows that 47 per cent of the Southern Negroes are either opposed to or undecided about desegregation. This is an adequate basis to induce others to tone down impatient and unproductive demands for haste. The same Gallup Poll showed that 20 per cent of the Southern whites either approve—or do not disapprove—of public school desegregation.

Recently in Life magazine the most eminent and esteemed novelist of the South, William Faulkner, who holds "discrimination by race" to be "incontrovertably immoral," appealed to the North to pause, to ponder, to make haste more slowly lest they immobilize and destroy the Southern moderates themselves.

That is well and that can be acted upon if the moderates of the South will join in turning aside the other extreme of total resistance and nullification.

Once again the nation needs to summon its highest degree of wisdom, moderation and goodness.

Presidential Leadership At Its Best Called For

MODERATION WILL come into being, will come to life and power only by leadership. The only leadership equal to the need, the only national instrument of moderation and conciliation is the presidency of the United States. The times once again call for presidential leadership at its best—wise, firm, kindly, fearless.

Here is the supreme opportunity for Mr. Eisenhower to expend, when it is most needed, all the prestige and respect and regard—which are his precious possession—to exert that leadership to keep the United States united.—©

A Manifesto Based on Racial Bigotry

Inquirer - 3/14

The manifesto pledging 100 members of Congress to use "all lawful means" to overturn the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools is a remarkable document. Philadelphia Pa.

It embodies one of the sharpest attacks upon the high court ever delivered by representatives of the legislative branch. It marks a new step in the organized resistance of the South to the integration decree. And it demonstrates the division within the Democratic Party on this issue, a division that may have important political consequences.

While affirming their own devotion to the Constitution, as they interpret it, its signers point out that neither the original Constitution nor any of its amendments mention the subject of education. Therefore, we are to gather, separate schools for white and Negro children are constitutional.

The 14th Amendment does not specifically mention public schools, any more than it mentions buses, or playgrounds or railroad depots, or sidewalks. But it does say that "No State shall ever make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." And the highest court in the land has ruled that equality of citizenship applies to public education. Inq. 3-13-56

The dissenting Congressmen say they will try to maintain racial segregation by "lawful" methods. They mean, of course, methods they may regard as lawful but which the courts, when the issue comes before them, may look upon as just the reverse.

Repeal of the 14th Amendment or adoption of a new amendment forever fixing "separate but equal" school facilities upon non-white citizens would doubtless solve the problem for the Southern bigots, but they are remote possibilities.

Senator Willis A. Robertson, of Virginia, one of the signers of the manifesto, has introduced a bill declaring that a State could meet the requirements of the Constitution either by desegregating the public schools or providing separate but equal schools for whites and Negroes, and efforts may be made by the Southern bloc to move this bill along.

Interposition by individual States in an effort to block enforcement of the integration order has been set in motion in some parts of the South, but this euphonism for nullification is not expected to get very far. Virginia is planning to continue segregation by grant of public funds to pay for the tuition of white children in private schools where Negroes would be excluded. This plan, with its implied destruction of the public school system, is also headed for the courts.

Another measure of resistance that has been mentioned is a boycott of candidates for public office who are favorable to the court's ruling. This brings up the political complexion of the segregation manifesto and the issue that is bound to be made of segregation in political battles in the South.

With the exception of four Republican Congressmen, all signers of the manifesto are Democrats. They represent 11 States and in several cases comprise the complete Senate and House delegations. Nineteen Senators were among the signers, including the chairmen of nine committees.

The bitter debate which presentation of the document set off in Congress yesterday is only a prelude to what is still to come as Southern Democrats try to make local political capital out of the denial of equal rights to Negroes. The Democratic National Convention next summer is faced by perhaps its severest crisis when the Southern segregationists with their big bloc of delegates raise the banner of revolt against any moderately liberal civil rights plank in the party platform.

Meanwhile, on the same day that the Southerners issued their concerted defi of the court ruling, the Supreme Court tied down integration more forcibly than ever. Last Monday it had broadened its original order to include State-supported colleges and universities. Yesterday, it reversed a Florida Supreme Court decision permitting delay in the admission of a Negro to the University of Florida law school.

The yapping of the prejudiced continues, but the Supreme Court still stands. And so does the law.

The Manifesto and the Law

Herald Tribune

As to what may happen in Congress on civil rights or whether the Northern and Southern Democrats can find any sort of common ground in this highly political year only time can tell. Wed. 3-14-56

At least two points, however, are very plain. First, the quality of Southern resistance to the Supreme Court's 1954 decree against racial segregation in the public schools, as evinced by the manifesto delivered to Congress on Monday, is impressive. It renews the old fracture in the Democratic party, but whether this will provoke an enlarged Dixiecrat bolt such as that of 1948 depends on the leaders' skills for compromise. Second, it is worth repeating that the Southern declaration merely pledges the use of "all lawful means" to reverse the Supreme Court. This is temperate. People are entitled to dispute the correctness of the law and to try to change it if they can. Differences of opinion should be respected, but it has to be understood that all debate must accept the premise of law and order. Furthermore, the whole concept of segregation is morally wrong and repugnant to the American principles of freedom and equal rights for all.

As the debate grows, it is interesting to see how the Supreme Court is proceeding. Last week the court affirmed that the ban on segregation in public schools applied equally to all tax-supported institutions of higher learning. This was entirely logical. Indeed there are already some 2,000 Negroes attending previously all-white colleges and universities in most of the Southern states. This week the court went a little further. It ruled that the University of Florida could not stall on admitting a properly qualified Negro student to law school on the ground that more time was needed to make adjustments. Here the court properly insisted that the lenity permitted in elementary and secondary schools on the pace of desegregation could not apply to the Florida case. As it happens, the student had been waiting seven years.

The impact of these decisions is progressive. What the court is saying is that where change-over is difficult the law will take reasonable cognizance of local problems. In theory this should lead to a gradual reduction of the area of controversy. But the court quite rightly sees no reason for letting this principle of patience and forbearance apply to universities. This much is a clear gain.

MANIFESTO AND REPLY

Daily Tribune

Unfortunately, there was nothing new on the subject of segregation to be found in the manifesto signed by the 19 senators and 81 representatives in Congress from southern states. The men who drew up the declaration did little more than repeat the arguments which the Supreme court heard and rejected unanimously nearly two years ago. Wed. 3-14-56

Surely there was nothing to be gained by proclaiming what everybody knows: that the decision was and is displeasing to large numbers of people in the south. The time and effort spent in preparing the manifesto was wasted and worse than wasted. As Sen. Douglas of this state remarked with great cogency, the action of these southern spokesmen in Congress is likely to make matters worse by encouraging the lawless among their constituents and discouraging those who are seeking ways to live with the law as it has been interpreted. Chicago, Ill.

It is no answer to say that the manifesto condemns the use of force. The kind of people who form mobs will pay very little attention to the words of restraint to be found in the paper but they may very well be fired to violence by the crusading tone of the document and its assumptions that the court acted lawlessly, that segregation is wholly right, and that any holding to the contrary must be wholly wrong.

The manifesto will have the additional disadvantage of encouraging members from some of the northern states to feed the flames with angry replies. The political advantage that the signers thought they could gain by their manifesto will have its parallel in the political gain which representatives of northern cities will expect from counterblasts of rhetoric.

What the situation calls for is not rising tempers but a growing willingness to make adjustments. There is no slightest chance that in the foreseeable future the Supreme court will change its mind and no better chance that the Constitution will be amended to mollify southern opinion. The spokesmen for the south in Congress know all this and if they are real leaders of their people will try to find ways of adjusting to the needs of their time instead of rehearsing their grievances.

38a 1956

How Gradual Can You Be?

Afro-American 3/4

If the "Southern Manifesto" handed down by the Dixiecrat bloc in Congress has done nothing else, it has served to place sharply in focus the basic issue in the United States today.

That issue, simply stated, is the right of all citizens to use tax-supported institutions.

Baltimore Md.

The majority of Americans and the United States Supreme Court say we have that right.

The 101 Congressmen from 11 Southern states and officials from five die-hard states would deny colored Americans that right.

Sat. * 3-*24-56

UNQUESTIONABLY that right was conferred with the 14th Amendment which was enacted in the 1860's.

That Amendment gives equal rights to all citizens, forbids the states from taking them away and declares that all citizens shall have the same privileges and immunities.

Every Southern state which was readmitted to the Union after the Civil War had to take out of its constitution all discriminatory measures.

But the Southern states, as soon was they were admitted organized as they are doing now, to modify the Amendment both through basis of laws and state constitutions.

The result was that in 1896 they had the Supreme Court construe an equality clause in the Constitution to mean "separate but equal."

* * *

SINCE THE Plessy vs. Ferguson decision of 1896, colored Americans have sought determinedly, temperately, and within the law, to have the Supreme Court change its mind.

From 1896 to 1954 is 58 years.

In our briefs before the Supreme Court, we declared that equal rights under the Constitution are personal and should be restored immediately.

The Supreme Court refused to state that our children should immediately be admitted to the nearest school of their choice.

But it did say something else.

It said that the doctrine of "separate but equal" was no longer valid.

And it further said that the state now discriminating against colored children in education should immediately present a plan for integration.

And after that plan has been presented, it should proceed to put it into effect with "all deliberate speed" and "in good faith."

That's gradualism, isn't it?

That is moderation, isn't it?

* * *

WHAT HAS alarmed us is that after this long debate over the question of second-class citizenship which actually began in the Constitutional conventions of the 1870's, the 101 manifesto signing Congressmen are still not willing to concede that we are citizens.

They are still unwilling to admit the Supreme Court has the right and duty to interpret the Constitution when that interpretation interferes with their myth of white supremacy.

From 1896 until 1954, they never really accepted the doctrine of "separate but equal" to which they now look back with so much longing.

They embraced the "separate" all right, but with stubborn consistency rejected the "equal."

One gathers the impression that the only decision which has ever won their whole-hearted approval was that of Chief Justice Roger B. Taney in the celebrated Dred Scott case.

Mr. Taney's court held that in America a colored man has no rights which a white man under the law is bound to respect.

GENERAL MANIFESTO

That was back in March 6, 1857.

The "Southern Manifesto" shows that almost a century later their thinking hasn't changed one whit.

How gradual can you be?

Dear Old Bill, Again

Dear Old William Faulkner, the 1949 Nobel Prize novelist, who two weeks ago used Life Magazine to plead with the NAACP to ease up its pressure on a breathless Dixie, is back in the news again.

This time, in a copyrighted article appearing in The Reporter Magazine, he expresses the defiant belief that the South is armed for revolt.

Mr. Faulkner says Southerners will launch another Civil War, knowing they are going to lose it.

Upon whom would the South declare war?

Surely, there's no need for it to fight the millions of helpless colored people who are unarmed, and whose only complaint is that they are denied the rights of citizenship, including the right to vote, to use public institutions and to elemental justice.

Is it going to attack the Government of the United States?

It tried that back in 1860 and failed.

Is it going to declare war on the United State Supreme Court?

No, that would be simply another way of attacking the Federal Government.

The Supreme Court is the highest authority in the land whose specific function is to interpret the Constitution.

Its place is secure in our government.

Nobody in their senses, who sincerely believes in law and order, would think of contradicting it.

The record is clear that colored people are not fighting anyone. They simply insist that the laws of the land be enforced where basic human and constitutional rights are concerned.

We should have every reason to believe that a Nobel winner like Mr. Faulkner would be more familiar with the facts of life, and that he would be a prize winner an moderate, temperate and less inflamatory statements.

Time To Speak Out

Senators Morse, Oregon; Lehman, New York; Neuberger, Oregon; Humphrey, Minnesota and Douglas, Illinois, all Democrats were quick to let the world know that well-meaning and responsible members of the United States Senate did not subscribe to the rash attack on the Supreme Court launched by 19 Southerners Monday.

We think the time has come for all friends of law and order and for those who have the highest respect for the nation's highest tribunal to speak out.

This goes for Republicans as well as Democrats. And it goes for Representatives as well as Senators.

The founding fathers wisely established the Federal Government to consist of three branches — executive, judicial and legislative.

In matters involving national policy and the welfare of the nation, they should speak as one.

The Times Supplement

Ten veteran staff members of the New York Times, began a journey on Jan. 18 which carried them thousands of miles, into 17 of the segregation states.

Thousands of interviews and several million words later, they returned to New York on Feb. 22, to report what they found.

That report on "The Integration Issue" was carried in a special eight-page section on Tuesday, March 13,, 1956.

It is a magnificent piece of work, the kind of objective reporting no other publication but the New York Times would have been able to do.

And the conclusion that some form of compliance with the court's decision "seems inevitable in most Southern States —perhaps in all" coincides exactly with what we have contended all along.

The reporters did appear bewildered that colored persons in what the Times calls the "resisting states" — Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia—"were reluctant to speak frankly if at all."

This should not have come as a surprise.

Does the New York Times think it could go into Russia and find persons who will complain freely and openly against the Communist regime?

Of course not.

The totalitarian atmosphere is just as oppressive in Mississippi and Alabama as it is in the Soviet Union.

The punishment in Russia is to line you up before a firing squad or send you to a Siberian concentration camp.

The punishment in Mississippi is to assassinate you on the courthouse steps, throw your weighted, beaten body into a river, fire you from your job or refuse to let you have credit at the bank.

In Alabama it is to permit you to become a victim of an egg and rock-throwing mob and then expel you from school if you are bold enough to resort to the courts to obtain your constitutional rights.

The fact is the New York Times itself would not speak out as it does if by doing so it would be compelled to close up shop tomorrow.

What's Their Excuse?

Not many persons will be surprised by the acquittal in Mississippi of Elmore Kimbell, a white cotton gin operator, in the killing of Clinton Melton, a gas station attendant.

The only surprising fact was that the all-white jury required three hours and twenty minutes to reach its verdict.

The case did prove how phony was the complaint of Mississippians, smarting under the whiplash of worldwide censure about their handling of the Emmett Till case.

Two men, who later confessed the Till killing, were freed of murder in the same Sumner courtroom and escaped punishment for kidnapping the 14-year-old boy when a grand jury refused to indict them.

Sensitive Mississippians argued that it would not have ended that way, if "outsiders" had not interfered with their administration of justice.

One wonders what they are saying now?

No "outsiders" were involved in the Melton murder.

Actually, the local community was so outraged by the senseless killing, the Sumner Lions Club passed a strong resolution calling for Kimbell's conviction.

Yet the verdict was no different.

And anyone who expected anything different had to be engaged in the most wishful kind of dreaming.

Painless Drilling

With the new supersonic drill, your dentist can be through before you can holler, "Take it easy."

The diamond-tipped drill, demonstrated recently in Canada, has a 'cruising speed' of 130,000 revolutions a minute. (Those now in use operate at a turtle-paced 6,000 a minute.)

This is nothing new, we've always had 'painless dentists' — except when they, themselves, had a toothache

Racial Manifesto Called Dark Page for U. S. in History

Post & Times Herald

Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) told the Senate yesterday that the Southern manifesto "will forever be a dark page in American history."

McNamara's speech was another in a series by Civil Rights advocates and others in Congress against the manifesto, in which 101 Southern Congressmen pledged to use "every legal means" to overthrow the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

Talk continued among Northern Senators of issuing their own manifesto expressing approval of the decision.

Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore. called for a White House conference on race relations to "meet a developing crises in our democracy." He said the President had the authority to set up a commission to deal with the long-range racial problems.

President Eisenhower said yesterday he preferred that Congress authorize an investigative commission on racial relations, as he had requested in his State of the Union message. Such a commission could subpena witnesses, he said, and should be authorized as quickly as possible.

Careless With The Truth

SIGNERS of the Southern Manifesto obviously were careless with the truth when in their document they said: "This unwarranted exercise of power by the Court (meaning the U. S. Supreme Court), contrary to the Constitution, is creating "chaos and confusion" in the states principally affected. It is destroying the amicable relations between the white and Negro races that had been created through 90 years of patient effort by the good people of both races."

In the first place the confusion and chaos' referred to is being created by the Southern Legislators refusal to accept or respect the United States Supreme Court's unanimous decision making segregation in public schools and public recreational facilities unconstitutional. The Manifesto signers are the ones who have taken the hysterical leadership in urging defiance to the Highest Court in the land. Negroes have been willing to abide by the Court's ruling just as they have always done in the past. They have respected law and order and expect other law abiding citizens to do likewise. They have never murdered, committed violence or urged violence while asking to be treated as ordinary American citizens in their determined efforts for first-class citizenship. The record is quite clear on this point.

A number of Protestant and Catholic church groups, community character building organizations, rabbinical, ministerial alliances, civic and race relations groups largely composed of the good people have already indicated a desire to abide by and comply with the Supreme Court ruling. Certainly that is not evidence of confusion and chaos.

The fantastic assertion that the Supreme Court's decision is "destroying the amicable relations between the white and Negro races that had been created through 90 years of patient effort by the good people of both races" indicates the confused, chaotic state of mind of the Manifesto signers. The high court's ruling more than likely has given the good white people of the South a way to clear their conscience. The "amicable relations" referred to and built up over a period of 90 years are still amicable if they were built on the solid ground of mutual dignity and respect. Ten chances to one if they were not built on solid ground they never have been "amicable relations."

What have the Manifesto signers themselves publicly done toward creating amicable relations between white and Negroes? Nothing, absolutely nothing.

Ninety-nine per cent of them haven't the guts, character or moral courage to invite in a mixed group of their constituents to even discuss this problem of obeying or disobeying the Supreme Court or any other problem involving the 'peaceful race relations' that allegedly exist in the South.

Southern legislators as a rule have almost always catered to the God of White Supremacy. Seldom have they bothered to find out what the people, white or black thought and felt. Only the high priests of the God of White Supremacy are consulted and obeyed. Rarely and seldom have any of them ever had the moral stamina to take a stand on principle if it involved an interracial situation. All that political expediency and the God of White Supremacy will let them stand for is the same brand of racial superiority that Hitler tried to foist on the world.

Their action only serves to advertise further to the nation and to the world their moral corruptness and delinquent statemanship. It shows how far out of step they are with the principles of democracy and christian living. They can beat on their chests and proclaim all they want about the use of 'legal means' to defy the U. S. Supreme Court rulings they cannot change the fact that in the eyes of Christian thinking and democracy loving people at home and abroad they are wrong and out of line besides shaming the United States as the moral leader of the world against the menace of Communism.

38a 1956

REPUBLICANS MANIFESTO

World Jun. 3-20-56

P. 1 B'ham, Ala.

High Court Decision Is Called "Simple Justice" To Senators

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Republicans Thursday joined in the fight provoked by southern Democrats in Congress when they issued on March 12 a manifesto attacking the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

In a speech on the Senate floor, Senator Clifford P. Case, of New Jersey, said, "it is inconceivable at this point in our history that the American people should refuse to accept the determination of our Supreme Court on a question involving the interpretation of the Constitution."

He added that it was "inconceivable also that the American people can fail to recognize the essential rightness of these decisions from the standpoint of simple justice."

DECISION ANALYSIS

On the House side, Representative Kenneth B. Keating, of New York, gave a legal and scholarly analysis of the Supreme Court decision in the school segregation cases.

The debate arising from the formal reading of the manifesto in the Senate and House on March 12 had been between northern and southern Democrats, except for an acceptance of the challenge of the Southerners by Senator William Langer, Republican, of North Dakota, on March 13.

"On behalf of the Abraham Lincoln-Theodore Roosevelt-Robert La Follette, Sr.-George Norris faction of the Republican party," Langer told the Senate, "I am authorized to say that we accept the challenge issued yeserday by 19 Senators and 77 members of the House who issued a manifesto on the subject of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the segregation cases, to work out the problems involved in the public education cases."

[illegible]LY WITH LAW

[illegible]tor Case called for "men of good will and moderate temper" to complying with the law.

"Despite its expressed appeal for moderation," said Case, "the effect of the manifesto can only be to incite further resistance and inflame a situation already difficult."

Case said "the period of adjustment to the court's decree is a time for all Americans to demonstrate the fulles measure of patience and understanding.

"Instead, this trying period has been made immeasurably more difficult by intemperate statements by people on both sides of the argument and by extremist actions.

"Economic reprisals, job dismissals, work stoppages and even treats of mob violence have fed the fires of discord.

NATION UNDER LAW

"Ours is a nation under law. There is no room for violence in our land."

World P. 6

Case commended the leaders of Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma, West Virginia and the District of Columbia for their progress in school desegregation.

"Our children, wherever they live and whatever their color or race," Case said, "take the same pledge of allegiance to 'one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.'

"Implicit in this, I believe, is our pledge not just to refrain from overt defiance of the law, but to accept in good faith the working of our constitutional processes."

Case urged both Democratic and Republican Senators to give the problem "the earnest, dispassionate attention which it deserves" and "make clear that the extremists will not have their way."

Keating took issue with a statement made by a Southerner on the House floor that no reputable lawyer would defend the legality of what the Supreme Court undertook to do in the school segregation decisions.

AGREES

"I happen to agree with the decision," he said. "Furthermore, I have an abiding respect for the institution known as the Supreme Court.

"I have great admiration for Chief Justice Warren, identified in each of the opinions as the man who actually chose the words in which they are cast, and who is generally accorded credit for the manifesto statemanship that produced unanimity at every stage of the proceedings."

Keating told the House that "The very oaths of office we took on entering service in this House would prohibit advocacy of direct defiance amounting to a conflict with the Federal Constitution."

It was "surprising" and "very gratifying," Keating said, that three separate opinions and important order of the court were written by the Chief Justice for a unanimous court.

"Whatever questions or difficulties might have troubled the nine justices who comprise the court were resolved before the opinion was prepared," he said, adding:

"The result is that the court throws all is weight and prestige, with undivided force, behind this determination of what the Federal Constitution means, as applied to the rights of an important segment of our American community."

Keating called the opinions "singularly fine specimens of clear legal writing. They are terse, lucid, and to the point in a style which recalls the Olympian simplicity of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes."

Representative Stewart L. Udall, Democrat of Arizona, reminded the Southerners who signed the manifesto that "moderation is a two-way street, and a temperate course assumes acceptance of change and adjustments which will permit headway to be made toward our ultimate goal.

The manifesto, he said, cannot be classified as a moderate statement. "It makes no mention of change or of a transition period," he said. "In essence, it is a call to resistance which can only harm the cause of moderation and lend new and powerful support to the die-hards and bitter-enders who oppose any change, gradual or otherwise.'

The South and the Court

News + Observer

From The Hartford Courant

The Southern manifesto read to Congress yesterday by the respected Senator George is more a document of propaganda than of action. To be sure it breathes the spirit that split the country asunder in the Civil War, and thereafter flared up again in such extremes as the Ku Klux Klan. But the document, which bears the names of respected and sober legislators as well as those of the Senator Foghorn type, is careful to confine its opposition to "all lawful means."

Jun. 3-23-56

Raleigh, N.C.

Even so this expression of the intensely felt resentment of the South should be a warning to Northern hotheads, whose impatience matches the intransigeance of their Southern counterparts. It is a warning to take it easy. In matters that rouse passions as deep as this there comes a point when right and wrong have no meaning, and law—which is only the consensus of a society anyway—cannot be rammed down unwilling throats. The British, at the moment, are discovering precisely that in Cyprus.

The net of the manifesto is that the Supreme Court exceeded its power in its desegregation decision. Thus the declaration speaks of substituting "naked power for established law," and so on repeatedly and violently throughout. Actually, of course, the Supreme Court did no such thing.

It is true that, as Charles Evans Hughes said when he was Governor of New York, "We live under a Constitution but the Constitution is what the judges say it is." Such judicial power is unique in the world. In no other country does the highest judicial authority have the right to undo legislation by declaring it unconstitutional. And without John Marshall we might not have had that. But by now it is established far beyond the power of any section of the country to upset it. When in recent years South Africa's white supremists didn't like what their top court did, the Prime Minister legislated himself a new court. But when before the war Franklin Roosevelt was moved to try a similar experiment here he ran into a buzz saw. The buzz saw won.

Unique as the power of our top court is, it has served its Constitutional purpose remarkable well. At times the Supreme Court may be behind its generation, as during the depression years. At times it may be ahead, as now so far as the Southern objectors are concerned. Yet over the years the rarely-used decisive power of the Supreme Court is a delicate, sensitive, and responsible balancewheel of the Constitution.

Where the Southern manifesto causes concern, then, is not in its arguments. Rather it is in its fresh revelation of the burning resentment among responsible Southerners who would go so far as to defy the Supreme Court. This is something for the rest of us to note with restraint, before urging either private individuals or government to embark upon a course that can end only in catastrophe. For the appeal to force, to hurry things too swiftly, will meet resistance. That will call for an answer in the way of more and more force, until we face the prospect of using federal troops to set up some new Fort Sumter.

Actually there is no need for such headlong action. The fact is that the Supreme Court's historic decision of 1954 has broken the log jam. Desegregation is on the march. It will come no matter how deep a sense of outrage it arouses in upholders of "the Southern way of life"—a way of life that does not square with the twentieth century. We should remember that only half a dozen of the 17 states that had segregated schools are resisting. Most of them are loyally taking action to bring about the change.

Left to this normal process, and not rammed down the most unwilling throats first of all, desegregation will proceed on its inevitable course. To press too fast where resistance is strongest will strengthen only the Ku Kluxers, and the racists who wouldn't mind starting another Civil War. It will hurt rather than further the majestic process, already in motion, that will not stop until eventually no vestige of segregation is left anywhere in the land.

ROSCOE DRUMMOND

Congressional Manifesto Aims At Nullifying Supreme Court

Inquirer Sun. 3-16-56

Philadelphia Pa. WASHINGTON, March 15.

ONLY twice in our history has the Supreme Court been the target of as bold, as uncompromising, as purposeful an attack as comes from the manifesto of 19 Southern Senators and 81 Southern Congressmen seeking to nullify the court's decision on desegregation in the public schools.

The substance and intent of the manifesto have a parallel in the efforts which were made in Congress and by State courts to immobilize the court in the years preceding the Civil War. Then, as now, the court was excoriated by those who disliked its decisions.

The other analogy is more recent. In 1937 after the court's decision in the Schechter-NRA case which President Roosevelt did not like, he criticized the judiciary as being as out-of-date as the "horse and buggy." Mr. Roosevelt then threw at Congress legislation designed to make the supreme bench subordinate to the President. This was the famous—the infamous—court-packing bill which would have forced the resignation of several justices or would have permitted the President to appoint additional justices to help them make "better" decisions.

On this historic issue the Southern Senators were on the other side of the trenches. They rallied and led the crusade to rescue the Supreme Court from subordination to the executive branch of the Government.

* * *

TODAY the Southern Senators and Congressmen are rallying and leading a crusade designed to undermine the authority of the court as the ultimate adjudicator of the Constitution. This time it is they who dislike an opinion of the Supreme Court, though it be unanimous, and wish to substitute their adjudication of the Constitution for that of the court itself.

It is worth noting that the Southern manifesto does not assume to deal with the principle and propriety of racial segregation in the public schools. It focuses its argument upon the law of the land, the Constitution, and asserts that the Supreme Court's verdict is invalid and should be resisted.

Let us assume, for purposes of the argument, that the court, could well be wrong. It has reversed itself in the past; it may well reverse itself again—and on this very issue. But when citizens or States or Congressmen or Presidents are in disagreement as to the meaning of the Constitution, who is to decide—the complainants or the court?

* * *

THIS manifesto, like a lawyer's brief, cites precedent and makes legal arguments to advance its case. The files of the Supreme Court are rightly filled with lawyers' briefs, but are we to accept the lawyers' briefs in place of the verdicts of the court?

The Senators who drafted the manifesto repudiated the jurisdiction of the court on the question of racial segregation in the public schools. But they do not question, and others who feel as they do did not at the time question, the jurisdiction of the court when in 1849 it ruled on an aspect of segregation in the public schools and upheld the doctrine of "separate and equal" schools.

If the court was exercising proper jurisdiction in finding that "separate but equal" doctrine was compatible with the Fourteenth Amendment, it is exercising proper jurisdiction in reversing that finding. We may or may not approve the reversal, but it has the same sanctity of law as the previous ruling unless we are to embrace the doctrine that we need only support the court when we like what it does.

THERE is one way the Supreme Court can be legally reversed by a power outside itself. The manifesto bespeaks resistance to the Supreme Court decision "by any lawful means." That is good. The manifesto bespeaks respect for "change by amendment." That is good. Since the Supreme Court has unanimously ruled that racial segregation is incompatible with the Constitution, why shouldn't the 19 Senators and 81 Congressmen and others who wish, submit an amendment stipulating that "separate but equal schools" are compatible with the Constitution?

That way would lie orderly government. That way would lie respect for the Supreme Court which we cannot expect others to obey if we are going to reserve for ourselves the right to disobey. That way would lie "change by amendment" or rejection of change by amendment—a lawful referendum on the decision of the Supreme Court itself.

NORTH CAROLINA:

Way of the Transgressor

News-Week New York 5/28

When Southern congressmen signed their "Manifesto" attacking the Supreme Court for its decision outlawing segregation in the public schools, the names of three North Carolina representatives were missing. Last Saturday, North Carolina Democratic primary voters handed down their decision on the omission—they renominated one of the representatives and rejected two.

Mon. 6-4-56

Rep. Harold Cooley, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, who said he would not be a "rubber stamp" supporter of segregation maneuvers, was the lone victor. He defeated W.E. Debnam, a Raleigh radio announcer, in the Fourth Congressional District.

But Reps. C.B. Deane, a ten-year veteran, and Thurmond Chatham paid for their independence. Deane was whipped by A. Paul Kitchin, lawyer-member of a prominent North Carolina political family, and Chatham by Superior Court prosecutor Ralph J. Scott.

The South, it appeared, was closing ranks on the segregation issue and ready to cast out transgressors at the ballot box.

ONE BEFORE GOD

Daily World

"All Men Are Brothers," Rabbi Tells Gammon Group

Fri. 4-27-56 P. 1

Atlanta, Ga.

"All men are one before God, and therefore all men are brothers," so stated Rabbi Jacob M. Rothschild of the Temple of Israel, as he spoke for the Chapel Services at Gammon Theological Seminary, Thursday morning.

The Rabbi very clearly stated that Judaism is a religion that emphasizes deed rather than creed, for Pudism frew out of an experience of a people. He very clearly defined the principles ofthe Jewish faith which are as follows....

1. A doctrine concerning the universe..... This doctrine concerns God and man. We believe that God lives, and the universe rest on the eternal law of God and since man is a child of God, all men are brothers.

2. The existence of morality—In Judaism there exists a morality which is an ethical way of life. By the mere fact that man is able to distinguish betwen right and wrong proves that there is a power of good in the universe.

3. A requirement of rights, customs, and ceremonies.

4. A body of laws——This is the moral law of God.

5. A sacred literature—This literature is the Bible, and is used to learn of God's will, To reveal His glory, and to hallow His name through our relationship one with another.

6. The Institutions—The Temple, The Synagogue, and the Home.

7. The people—God is one, and besides Him there is no other. Rabbi Rothschild is a graduate of the University of Cincinnati and the Hebrew Rabbi College of the same city. Gammon Theological Seminary extends a cordial welcome to everyone to worship at each of its chapel services each Tuesday and Thursday mornings at ten o'clock in the Thirkield Memorial chapel, 9 McDonough Blvd. Atlanta, Ga.

Integration Issue Splits U.S. Editors

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 4-7-54 P. 1

By ROBERT G. NIXON

WASHINGTON—(INS)—U.S. Editors were sharply divided along sectional lines Friday on the controversial question of racial integration in the nation's schools.

Northern and eastern editors asserted that integration will take place under the U. S. Supreme Court decision while Southern editors insisted emphatically that the South is not ready for such a step.

These views were aired by editors attending the annual gathering here of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Most of those who voiced opinions on the highly explosive question advised caution and moderation in seeking solutions to the problem of integrating public schools.

HEAVENS WON'T FALL

Herbert Brucker, of the Hartford, Conn., Courant, said that when the nation makes the necessary adjustments to the Supreme Court ruling "the heavens won't fall."

He said: "The first obligation is to recognize that this thing has happened and that integration is coming. People in the South who oppose this thing most strenuously say 'Yes, it is going to come about.'

"We have to adjust our minds to the fact that the Negro is not an animal but is a human being. But we still have a long way to go."

Lenoir Chambers, of the Norfolk, Va., Virginian-Pilot, urged that President Eisenhower create a commission to study the integration problem which he said now appears insoluble."

Chambers said: "The present situation in the South resembles a logjam. We are in a state of collision between two forces of extremists. The result is that moderation minds of the South have been squeezed out. That is a basically unhealthy situation."

SOUTH SPEAKS

John Q. Mahaffey, of the Texarkana, Tex., Gazette and Daily News, commented: "The Southern white man is a forgotten man in this deal anyway. But we wish northern newspapers would ease up just a little bit. It seems to me northern newspapers just can't wait for us to integrate. We aren't ready for it."

Another southern editor spoke of the need for an "editorial guide."

setting forth a middle course between extremists on the racial issue. Sylvan Meyer, of the Gainesville, Ga., Times, explained:

"If you are exposed to the demagogery of as many politicians as are in the South you would realize we have a highly inflammatory problem. What we need is an underlying editorial guide to refer to from day to day.

"It should be a moderate course.

The problem of segregation must be solved on the community level."

And Coleman Harwell, of the Nashville Tennessean urged his colleagues not to "point the finger editorially to other sections of the country."

He said: "Let us each in our own areas deal with our own problems, thoughtfully and prayerfully.

It may be as dangerous to go too slow as it is to go too fast."

Comment On Southern Manifesto

Journal + Guide

The South Not A Unit

P.10 Sat. 3-24-56

From (Raleigh) News and Observer

ANY IDEA THAT the South is a single unit should be dispelled by a special section on "Report on the South: The Integration Issue," which The New York Times carried on Tuesday.

Norfolk Va.

With its usual thoroughness and objectivity, the Times dispatched 10 experienced reporters into the area most affected by the Supreme Court's 1954 ruling on public schools and kept them there for five weeks. The result is a concise and accurate report on conditions as they exist nearly two years after the decision.

For purposes of comparison, the Times divides the 17 states and the District of Columbia, all of which had segregated public schools at the time of the decision, into three categories. Those found to have integrated or to be in the process of integrating are the District of Columbia and the border states of Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma and West Virginia. Seven states — Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Louisiana, North Carolina, Tennessee and Texas — are listed as "Divided or Delaying." The third category, "Resisting," includes the following five states: Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia.

On this issue the South is not only divided by states, but there are sharp divisions within some of the states.

Whatever may have been true in the past, the South is not now a single unit, economically, socially or politically.

A Wasted Effort

Chicago Tribune

THE TIME and effort spent in preparing the manifesto was wasted and worse than wasted. As SENATOR DOUGLAS, of this State, remarked with great cogency, the action of these Southern spokesmen in Congress is likely to make matters worse by encouraging the lawless among their constituents and discouraging those who are seeking ways to live with the law as it has been interpreted.

It is no answer to say that the manifesto condemns the use of force. The kind of people who form mobs will pay very little attention to the words of restraint to be found in the paper, but they may very well be fired to violence by the crusading tone of the document and its assumptions that the court acted lawlessly, that segregation is wholly right, and that any holding to the contrary must be wholly wrong.

The manifesto will have the additional disadvantage of encouraging members from some of the Northern States to feed the flames with angry replies. The political advantage that the signers thought they could gain by their manifesto will have its parallel in the political gain which representatives of Northern cities will expect from counterblasts of rhetoric.

Reason To Be Sad

Washington Post

IT IS SAD to find members of Congress interposing their private judgment against the duly constituted authority of the Supreme Court. And it is saddest of all to find among them men of such enlightenment and character as JOHN SPARKMAN and LISTER HILL and J. W. FULBRIGHT. No doubt some of the men who supported the declaration did so as a concession to passions at home. Perhaps, since the declaration was shorn of its nullification language, the issue will now be permitted to blow over.

Let us hope so. For it is to the wisdom and statesmanship and loyalty to American institutions of such men as SENATORS SPARKMAN, HILL and FULBRIGHT that the nation must look for a rational adjustment of local customs to constitutional requirements. It is in the leadership of such men that the troubled South must find release from the scourge of demagogues and bigots whose doctrine of hatred and rebellion is fast being allowed to erode away the middle and undo the progress of many years in better race relations. The South needs its great and good men today not to pander to its prejudices but to lead it into a new freedom.

Dixie Attack On Top Court Stirs Dispute

Post-Herald Tues. 3-13-56 Birm. Ala.

No White House Manifesto Comment

WASHINGTON, March 12 (AP)—The racial integration issue set off an oratorical North-South conflict in Congress today, with the submission of the new Southern manifesto.

Most of the fireworks was in the Senate; the House met only briefly.

The debate began when Sen. George (D., Ga.) formally presented the manifesto signed by 19 senators and 77 House members from 11 states.

It says the U. S. Supreme Court decision of 1954 outlawing segregation in public schools was "a clear abuse of judicial power" and pledges the signers to do everything legally possible to overthrow it.

Sen. Morse (D., Ore.) dared the Southerners to submit a constitutional amendment allowing race segregation practices, and predicted there would be few votes for it.

Morse also declared:

"A historic debate is going to have to take place in the not too distant future because this Congress is going to have to determine whether it is going to back up the Supreme Court."

Morse said some forces were trying to put themselves "above the Supreme Court of the United States and the Constitution."

Sen. Thurmond (D., S. C.), who led the states rights movement in 1948, told the Senate the South will "fight to the end" to reverse the court ruling.

"It would be submission to cowardice if we failed to use every lawful means to protect the rights of the people," he said.

"We are free morally and legally to oppose the decision. We must fight it to the end."

Morse, and Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.), said leaders on both sides should sit down and work out the problem in a calm way.

Humphrey said he was displeased to see the Supreme Court become "the subject of passion, antagonism and bitterness."

He asked that Congress back up the court's segregation decision as "the law of the land," and said that "by holding back, you impede what is inevitable."

"This is a perplexing, confusing and bewildering day in the Senate," he said.

Sen. Neuberger (D., Ore.) said President Eisenhower should immediately call a White House conference of governors, senators and representatives from states "where the Supreme Court decision is being defied."

There the White House said there would be no presidential comment on the Southern manifesto.

George, in presenting it to the Senate, said it was not the product of hasty action. "It has been carefully considered by its signers for four or five weeks."

It was presented in hte House by Rep. Howard W. Smith (D., Va.). Smith said the court decision assumed powers the justices do not have under the Constitution.

Smith spoke of the nine justices as "temporary occupants of high office in the judicial branch."

Sen. Stennis (D., Miss.) said the court decision was unconstitutional and the signers of the manifesto had come together to do what they could about it.

"Even though now in a minority," he said, "we can exert power as to the confirmation of any new members of the court and will make a sustained drive against further judicial usurpation of power."

While the debate was going on, the court handed down another unanimous order in the segregation field. This held that state universities may not delay the admission of Negro graduate students for the time it uses to make an investigation of whether the admission should be granted.

In another action, the court put off indefinitely any decision as to whether states may ban interracial marriages. This involved a Virginia white woman and a Chinese seaman, but the state law primarily sets up a ban against Negro-White marriages. The court said the case before it was "devoid of a properly presented federal question."

Vote In Congress Shows 3 Republicans And 125 Democrats Signed For Manifesto

(The following editorial was published by the Norfolk (Va.) Journal and Guide on March 24, 1956:

WHERE ELSE CAN THE NEGRO GO BUT TO THE NAACP?

Where, indeed, does the Southern Negro have to go except to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People?

It is the only legally influential instrument that is able to get the case for the Negro's legal rights heard before the bar of justice. It is the only instrument for preventing those who would destroy these rights from doing so. It is the only means of protecting those rights.

All but 27 of the 128 members of Congress from eleven Southern States signed the Southern Manifesto against the Supreme Court. Among the twenty-seven who did not sign is Representative Harold D. Cooley, of North Carolina, who described the document as "dangerous, calculated to aggravate the situation."

Mr. Cooley also said that he believed it "holds out a false hope that there are legal means through which the Supreme Court decisions can and may be reversed." Mr. Cooley is a lawyer.

Some people wonder why, despite the sound and fury raised by reactionaries, the NAACP is growing in stature and influence among colored and white people in the South. One reason for this is that colored people in the South have no representative in government, except at times a man of Mr. Cooley's experience and judgment, will come forward and express a word of caution when the anti-Negro majority appears to be going overboard. There were a few such men in the recently adjourned session of the Virginia General Assembly.

What do Negroes in the South have to look forward to from their representatives in Congress when nineteen senators and eighty-two representatives in the House from 11 States present to Congress a joint "declaration of principles," which has for its purpose stripping Negroes of all legal or personal rights?

They chant that "outsiders" have destroyed "amicable race relations in the South." Amicable for whom? As long as Southern patterns of race relations held Negroes to an inferior "place" in the Southern economy they were satisfactory to the politicaly and economic interests which formed and maintained the patterns.

But these relations were built on sand. They were an illusion. They did not contain the ingredients of neighborliness and good-will for Negroes who sought to rise above the level of economic and saocial destitution. A show of hands had to come. It was inevitable.

If the Supreme Court decision in the public school cases should be any chance fall, there will also fall every civil rights decision rendered by the Supreme Court during the past 25 years, and every social and economic gain made thereby.

Virginia has two Republican representatives in Congress. Messrs. Broyhill and Poff—They signed the manifesto along with their Democratic colleagues. North Carolina has one Republican, Mr. Jonas, of the Charlotte district. He also signed. The lone Republican from Florida signed.

More and more Negroes in the South will join the NAACP and will throw financial support to it as these stark facts become more and more apparent.

Pass Resolutions Opposing Dead And Gone States' Rights

Southern Manifesto Group And Other Politicians Facing Tough Sledding As Time Nears For National Conventions Of Both Parties; Local "Constitutional" Group, So-called, Goes On Record Declaring 14th Amendment Invalid Causing Democrats Uneasiness

Just about the same time that a group of Nashville lawyers began what is believed to be "planned delaying action against the ultimate carrying out of all the latest edicts of the U. S. Supreme Court, the National Bar Association was launching its defense of the hight court's decision of May 17, 1954, outlawing compulsory seggregation in schools.

The local group of lawyers are sticklers for the 1896 Supreme Court decision which furnished the "separate but equal" formular for public education, and they even go so far, at this late date to declare that the passage of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution was unconstitutional. This is considered so rediculous that no fairminded lawyers hereabout believe it will get any further than the front door of congress and has not the ghost of a show to be seriously considered in the Democrat Party's National Convention to be held in Chicago in August.

And of course, not even that queer group of politicians who style themselves by the ridiculous name of "State's Rights Republicans" will even express their views above a whisper at the GOP Convention to be held in San Francisco in August.

It is a fact that the present idea of the Democrats is to go along with the behavior of politicians composing the "manifesto group" of southerners and coddle them with the hope they will not walk out of their party's convention.

However, even a majority of the Democrat delegates could be induced to come right out in the meeting and tell the recalcitrant "manifesto boys to get up and go if they insist upon carrying out their form of outlawry— that of defying the Supreme Court and of assailing the 14th Amendment.

In the meantime, Gov. Frank G. Clement who they say has been grooming himself for vice president and keynoter for the Democrats is about to be forced out of the picture because despite his ability as a rousing speaker, he would be embarrassing to his party in a conspicuous leadership role at the present time. He has failed to take a forthright stand on the desegregation issue like Senator Estes Kefauver, the only Southern Democrat believed to be a logical candidate for his party's highest honor. Senator Kefauver, who graduated in law at Yale University has a claim on Northern Democrats because of that fact.

The Tennessee senator is looked upon as a statesman who will go along with what are the findings of the nation's Negro lawyers, who point out in their intelligent "manifesto" just what is wrong with the thinking of the obstructionist lawyers like the Tennessee Organization for Constitutional government.

The National Bar Association to which practically all of the Negro lawyers belong has just issued its release citing its action defending the Supreme Court. It is as follows:

The following Resolutions were adopted at the meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Bar Association held at the Hotel New Yorker, on June 16, 1956:

RESOLUTION NO. 1

WHEREAS, a bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the Congress which would prohibit the Supreme Court from reviewing any decision which has been in effect for fifty years or more without the specific permission from the Congress; and

WHEREAS, the said bill provides that it shall be retroactive to January; 1954; and

WHEREAS, the bill is admittedly designed to "wipe out" or nullify the Supreme Court ruling against segregation in the public schools; and

WHEREAS, it is the considered opinion of this body that the decision and opinion of the Supreme Court rendered in 1896 upholding the doctrine of "separate but equal" was wrong and erroneous in the first instance, and based upon the false premises of racial inferiority; and

WHEREAS, the doctrine of "separate but equal" in the middle of the twentieth century was outmoded in our American democracy and a dangerous legal anomaly in a democratic world;

NOW, therefore, be it resolved by the Executive Committee for and on behalf of the National Bar Association as follows:

1. We condemn and denounce the aforesaid bill as a dangerous attempt to nullify a decision of the Supreme Court interpreting the Federal Constitution.

2. We likewise deplore this attempt to place curbs on the Supreme Court and other Federal Courts, designed to prevent the proper performance of their function of interpreting the Federal Constitution and laws, and settling constitutional disputes under our Federal system of government.

RESOLUTION NO. 2

WHEREAS, a bill sponsored by twelve senators would in effect forbid the Supreme Court and other Federal Courts from holding that Acts of Congress dealing with matters of national interest supersede state legislation on the same subject; and

WHEREAS, the result of such a bill would be to put in doubt many Federal Laws dealing with labor, health, safety, commerce, and many other matters that the courts have consistently ruled took precedence over State Laws in the same area; and

WHEREAS, the bill is retroactive and might apply to all past Acts of Congress that have failed expressly to state that exclusive jurisdiction was reserved to the Federal Government; and

WHEREAS, the said bill, if enacted into law, would cause unlimited confusion as to many subjects of legislation as between the Federal Government and the forty-eight states of the Union; and

WHEREAS, the passage of such a bill is contrary to and denies the supremacy of the Federal Constitution and its laws;

NOW, therefore, the Executive Committee of the National Bar Association respectfully urges the safety, morals, interstate and foreign commerce, and many other conflicts of law in respect to Federal Laws dealing with labor, health, safety, morals, interstate and foreign commerce, and many other matters including some dealt with in the Federal Constitution and its Amendments; and

(a) cause great confusion and conflicts of law in respect to Federal Laws as well as the Supreme Court and other Federal Courts as the interpreter of the Federal Constitution and laws, and as arbiter of disputes under our Federal Constitution and laws, as provided for in Article VI of the Constitution and laws of the Federal Government and the several states; and

(b) cause chaotic dislocation and maladjustments of the constitutional and other legal relations between the Federal Government and the forty-eight states; and

(c) produce a fractionalization and splitting of our nation into many local regional and sectional parts, and thus create a "throwback" to the situation of our country under the Articles of Confederation; and

(d) change and destroy the historic constitutional position of the Supreme Court and other Federal Courts as the interpreters of the Federal Constitution and laws, and arbiters of disputes between the Federal Government and the states, and among the several states.

WHEREAS, the bill negates and denies the historic ernment and states, and among would and constitutional position of the several states;

RICHARD ATKINSON, Pres.
307 E Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel. No. District 7-8000

Washington Merry-Go-Round

Advertiser P. 3-B
Sun. 3-18-56

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON

UNTOLD STORY behind the southern manifesto attacking the Supreme Court is that most southern senators signed it reluctantly. Virginia's Sen. Harry Byrd, whose cherubic face belies his political prowess, mainly inspired the document and wangled his Dixie colleagues into signing it.

Montgomery, Ala.

BYRD

Chief resistance, surprisingly, came from two outspoken conservatives — Sens. Spessard Holland of Florida and Price Daniel of Texas. They succeeded in toning down the original inflammatory language. The first draft scathingly denouncing the Supreme Court's desegregation ruling as an "illegal and unconstitutional seizure of power by the nine men composing the court."

This was reduced to the simple charge that the verdict was a "clear abuse of judicial power." Other smouldering passages that were removed included such words as "flagrant and unjustified" and "invasion of (state) sovereignty."

Holland and Daniel warned that the first draft was a declaration of anarchy. They also managed at the last minute to insert a calm paragraph acknowledging majority rule.

The manifesto idea was concocted by Byrd, who had already gone out on a limb urging "passive resistance" to the Supreme Court decree. He wanted more company on the limb, so he got busy behind the scenes.

THURMOND

Byrd easily recruited South Carolina's unrepentant Dixiecrat, Sen. Thurmond, to be his front man. Surprisingly, two southern moderates, John Stennis of Mississippi and Sam Ervin of North Carolina, eagerly joined Thurmond in drafting the first angry manifesto.

They quietly lined up what support they could, then presented the document as an accomplished fact to the rest of the Dixie senators. Southerners were faced with a tacit ultimatum that they must sign it or be branded as pro-National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. With the temper of the South what it is today, the NAACP label is political poison below the Mason-Dixie line.

Hill Signed In A Hurry

Alabama's Sen. Lister Hill, whose state is torn by racial strife, almost tripped over himself in his hurry to sign the manifesto. Another who wasted no time was Louisiana's Sen. Russell Long. Though both moderates, they are running for re-election this year.

John Sparkman of Alabama hung back. So did Smathers of Florida.

HILL

Holland and Daniel, however, led the backstage fight against the manifesto, but signed it along with the rest after watering down the language. They warned that the document, at least in its original form, challenged the constitution, itself. They also pointed out that the signers could do nothing about the Supreme Court decree, short of declaring civil war again.

Pressured by Byrd, the remaining southerners reluctantly affixed their signatures. Georgia's solemn Senator George, as dean of the Dixie bloc, unhappily acted as spokesman for the signers, though he, too, privately disapproved of such action.

Most southerners who signed the manifesto admitted privately that they were only adding fuel to an explosive situation.

Note—Only southerners who flatly refused to sign were Kefauver and Gore of Tennessee. Lyndon Johnson of Texas also did not sign. He stated that he was not asked to do so.

Defeat For Democrats

Disgruntled Democrats, who had counted their parity chickens before they hatched, are blaming their Senate leader, Lyndon Johnson, for the farm bill's defeat.

It was a case of the Republicans' 66-year-old heart patient, they say, working harder than their own 47-year-old heart patient. Eisenhower was busy on the phone lining up GOP voters for flexible supports, while Johnson was flying to Texas for rests and worrying about the natural gas fiasco. The White House even wooed away six Dixie senators from under Johnson's nose by offering them high supports on cotton.

The White House strategy was astute and shrewd. First, a delegation of White House aides went around to break down wavering senators. These aides warned that the President would have to veto a high-support bill and that Republicans would be putting him on the spot by voting for it. A presidential veto, they argued, would create worse publicity and antagonize the farmers even more.

On top of this, Ike put through personal phone calls to the unpersuaded Republicans and turned on the charm. Result was an overwhelming GOP vote for flexible supports.

Benson's trade with the cotton-bloc senators was more than enough to catch the Democrats by surprise.

What time Johnson devoted to his duties, meanwhile, was spent fighting a rear-guard action on the natural gas bill. He all but ignored the farm bill while maneuvering and manipulating to hamstring the Senate lobby investigation.

With the help of New Hampshire's potent Sen. Styles Bridges, Johnson took the lobby probe away, first from Missouri Sen. Tom Hennings, then from Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore, both anti-gas Democrats. Now it is safely in the hands of Arkansas' stern Sen.

Community Solution Urged for Integration

Star Fri. 4-6-56

By the Associated Press

Washington, D.C.

The committee which conducted the White House education conference called today for solution of racial integration problems community by community—but "within the intent of the relevant Supreme Court decisions."

P.1

In its final report on last winter's conference, submitted to President Eisenhower, the committee said:

"This committee agrees that the great social, psychological and organizational changes implicit in the recent decisions of the Supreme Court designed to abolish segregation in the public schools cannot be achieved with equal speed in every community.

"The committee also agrees that the intent of the majority of the American people is to abolish racial segregation as soon as possible."

Subject is Surprise

Inclusion of a statement on desegregation in the report came as a surprise. The subject was mentioned only incidentally in reports issued during the conference and not at all in a summary of reports of State conferences held in preparation for it. The State summary was compiled by the committee and included in its report.

The committee, headed by Neil H. McElroy, president of Proctor & Gamble Co., was not limited in preparing its own report to points raised at the State or national conferences. However, this was the only major issue on which it struck out on its own to any significant extent.

The matter came up in the committee's discussion of proper objectives for schools, which it defined as: "To help each child to become as good and capable in every way as native endowment permits."

"Two particular aspects of this goal," it said, "involve basic disagreements which the committee did not resolve satisfactorily, partly because of the limited time."

Suggests Further Study

The first question, it said, deals with the fostering of moral, ethical and spiritual values, which "inevitably raise questions about . . . religious doctrines." It recommended further study of this.

"The second difficult question, the committee continued, "concerns the relationship of the issue of segregation to the generally accepted goal of equal educational opportunity. This is an area of conflicting opinions not entirely resolved by Supreme Court action. . . . A problem which must be worked out by each community in its own way within the framework of existing legal structures and the intent of the relevant Supreme Court decisions."

"This committee notes," the report said, "that the present era of rapid social change offers special opportunities and makes special demands for understanding and tolerance of differing convictions. It is only in the achievement of this mood that there is hope for an ultimate meeting of minds."

MANIFESTO SPURS 3 PRIMARY FIGHTS

Times Mon. 4-9-56

North Carolina Congressmen in Contests Over Refusal to Sign Segregation Appeal

New York, N.Y.

Special to The New York Times.

RALEIGH, N. C., April 8 — The Southern manifesto criticizing the Supreme Court for its school segregation decision has become a major campaign issue in the districts of the three North Carolina Congressmen who refused to sign the document.

P. 18-C

The manifesto was signed last month by nineteen Senators and eighty-one Representatives from eleven Southern states. It declares the intentions of the signers to resist by all lawful means implementation of the court's desegregation ruling.

As of today, the manifesto is indeed the main issue in the three primary contests in North Carolina. However, Ralph J. Scott of Danbury, Superior Court solicitor, is not personally exploiting it in his effort to win the Democratic nomination from Representative Thurmond Chatham of the Fifth District. Mr. Scott announced his candidacy several days before the manifesto was read in Congress on March 12. On the other hand, opposition to the other two nonsigners developed only after their stand on the manifesto became known.

In the Fourth District, Representative Harold Cooley, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, is opposed by W. E. Debnam of Raleigh. Mr. Debnam, a radio commentator and author of two books on the race question, has described Mr. Cooley's stand on the manifesto as "the obvious issue."

In the Eighth District, Representative C. B. Deane is opposed by A. Paul Kitchin of Wadesboro, a lawyer and former agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Mr. Kitchin first announced he would not use Mr. Deane's stand on the manifesto as an issue. Later, Mr. Kitchin said he would "cherish the opportunity to join the * * * Southern members of Congress who have signed the manifesto."

Mr. Cooley explained that he did not sign the manifesto because he considered it "a dangerous document, calculated to aggravate the situation." But he said he was "definitely and positively" in favor of segregated schools.

The campaign has been much less personal in the Eighth District, although the issue also has been clear there. Representative Deane has explained that he did not sign the manifesto because "I have tried to reach a God-guided decision on this matter" and "it is not who is right but ultimately what is right (and) it is my opinion that one group opposing another will not bring the answer."

The issue actually has been foremost in Representative Chatham's Fifth District. This has been so even though Mr. Scott has refrained from aligning himself with any prosegregation elements and has remarked that use of the segregation issue would be detrimental to both races. However, local units of the Patriots of North Carolina, Inc., which is devoted to the maintenance of "the purity and culture of the white race," have led the fight against Mr. Chatham.

Mr. Chatham explained that he had not signed the manifesto because "I've been raised to believe the Supreme Court is the final law of the land" and that he felt the resolution would "do more harm than good" by fanning passion and prejudice. He said he "didn't like" the court's decision but "if I had it to do over, I still wouldn't sign" the manifesto.

The Democratic primary, in which nomination is tantamount to election, is on May 26. Sharp fights are being waged for nomination to three other Congressional seats, but the manifesto is not an issue in those races. Representative Carl T. Durham of the Sixth District has strong opposition from State Senator Ralph H. Scott, a brother of United States Senator W. Kerr Scott, Democrat of North Carolina; Representative F. Ertel Carlyle of the Seventh has a strong opponent in former United States Senator Alton A. Lennon of Wilmington, and in the Eleventh District a three-way contest is under way for a seat which Representative Woodrow W. Jones is relinquishing after three terms. The participants are Ralph Webb Gardner of Shelby, a son of the late Gov. O. Max Gardner; Hugh Wells, a lawyer, also of Shelby, and Basil Whitener of Gastonia, Superior Court Solicitor.

The Jim Crow Manifesto

Courier, Hd. Sat. 3-24-56

The manifesto which 100 Southern Senators and Congressmen have signed and put into the Congressional Record is essentially the same kind of documents which were being signed a hundred or more years ago to perpetuate slavery. No such document was signed, for instance, in the great debate over the off-shore oil lands.

Wilmington, Del.

The truth of the matter is simply that these Southerners do not want Negroes to be wholly free in 1956 any more than their ancestors wanted Negroes to be free in 1856. Then they wanted to keep Negroes in hattle slavery. Now the object is to keep Negroes in the slavery of segregation and discrimination. The explains the manifesto fully.

American In Japan Admits Shame of Dixie Manifesto

Defender Sat. 3-24-56 Sec. 1 P. 1 380

Chicago, Ill.

TOKYO—(INS)—The Asahi evening news reported last weekin an interview with James Michener that the famed American novelist considered southern objections to the Supreme Court ruling against racial segregation as "really very distressing and shameful."

The Asahi printed a front page interview writted by Alfred Smoular, a French correspondent, in which Michener was quoted as saying pro-segregationists provide ammunition in Asia for "anti-American propaganda."

The article said:

"I found him very disturbed. News just had come from Washington that 19 senators and 81 representatives, all from the South, had pledged to exercise every 'lawful means' to reverse the Supreme Court ruling against segregation of white and Negro races in American schools."

The writer added that Michener commented:

"It is shameful that, at this point of world history, an entire section of the nation, which is responsible for the defense of one kind of freedom, should so stubbornly ignore another.

"I am really terribly distressed by it all and when you put this in your own words, you cannot make it too dark or too strong.

"It is really very distressing and shameful."

Smoular wrote:

',Michener, who has lived so much in Asia, noted the damage this has done to the American cause in this part of the world and elsewhere and that it can be and is used to reinforce anti-American propaganda."

Michener who won the Pulitzer prize with his "Tales of the South Pacific," is author of numerous other books about Asia including "The Bridges of Toko-Ri."

He arrived in Tokyo recently on a honeymoon with his bride, an American girl of Japanese ancestry.

GOP Hopes on Congress Boosted by Bias Manifesto

Inquirer Mon. 3-19-56 P. 3

By JOHN C. O'BRIEN
Philadelphia, Pa. Inquirer Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, March 18.

REPUBLICAN leaders are more cheerful about the prospect of regaining control of the Senate, and possibly the House, since the issuance of the Southern States' manifesto calling for resistance to the Supreme Court's desegregation decision by all "legal means."

A few weeks ago, Republican strategists who were cocksure about the re-election of President Eisenhower, conceded privately that there was no certainty about the outcome of congressional contests. Despite a public show of confidence, they saw only a slim chance of reversing the two-vote margin by which the Democrats control the Senate and the 28-vote margin by which they rule the House. They even feared greater Democratic majorities in the next Congress than in this session.

But in the opinion of the GOP leaders, the Southern States' manifesto and the elevation of Sen. James O. Eastland (D., Miss.), most rabid white supremacy advocate in the Senate, to the chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee, have changed the picture.

The ascension of Eastland to the chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee, even more than the manifesto, the Republicans point out, amounted to notice to the 13,000,000 Negroes in the United States that the most vociferous foes of integration are part and parcel of the Democratic Party.

The Negroes, the GOP leaders feel certain, will not forget that if the Democrats retain control of Congress the Senate committee which deals with civil rights and confirms appointments to the Federal bench will be dominated by a man who regards the Supreme Court's desegregation decision as an "abuse of judicial power."

Negroes will realize, it is pointed out, that no appointee to the Federal bench known to favor upholding of the desegregation decision could be approved with Eastland and a majority of the Democrats on the committee coming from Southern States.

* * *

IN VIEW of this, the Republican leaders look for a return of the Negroes, particularly in the populous Northern States, to the Republican column in November. The GOP strategists believe that the Negro vote will plump for Mr. Eisenhower and for the Republican candidates for the Senate, and in predominantly Negro districts for the Republican candidates for the House.

If such a swing develops, it could affect the outcome of the Congressional contests in six or seven States—Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Missouri and New York.

Senators seeking re-election from four of these States are Republicans, three are Democrats. Until the issuance of the manifesto and the naming of Eastland to the chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee, the Republicans regarded the seats held by Sens. George Bender (Ohio), Homer Capehart (Ind.) and James H. Duff (Pa.) as shaky. The other Republican, Sen. Everett Dirksen (Ill.) was thought to be in less serious trouble, although no one can forecast the extent of the dissatisfaction of the farmers in Illinois' rural counties.

But if there is a switch of the Negro voters to the Republican column, the Republican incumbents in all four States would benefit. Cleveland and Cincinnati, the biggest cities in Ohio, have substantial Negro populations. So have Indianapolis and Chicago, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

HOUSE districts embracing city wards heavily populated by Negroes also might be swung out of the Democratic into the Republican column.

Normally, Sens. Earle C. Clements (Ky.), Thomas D. Hennings (Mo.) and Herbert H. Lehman (N. Y.) would be considered sure bets for re-election. But a Negro revolt in Louisville, St. Louis and New York City could spell disaster for the incumbents.

Clements, incidentally, is by no means certain of renomination. He is being supported by the Democratic organization in Louisville, but Gov. A. B. (Happy) Chandler is out to cut him down. No matter which faction wins, the Democratic nomination, wholly aside from the possible desertion of the Negro voters, would not have its normal value. If Clements should get the nomination, the Chandler faction could be expected to drag its feet. And if the Chandler candidate wins, the Louisville organization would lose interest.

In any event, Kentucky Republicans think their candidate, Thruston B. Morton, former Assistant Secretary of State, has a good chance to win.

Sen. Lehman may be in a better position to stave off the desertion of Negro supporters than Hennings. He has been one of the severest critics of the attitude of the Southern Democrats toward the Supreme Court decision. But if the Negro voters decide that no Democrat, not even the most friendly disposed, could be effective with the Southern Democrats pulling in the opposite direction, even Lehman could be hurt.

Southern Senators Draft Segregation Statement

Evening Star P. 10-A
Washington, D. C.

By ROBERT K. WALSH

A statement by most Southern Senators and possibly by many House members reportedly advising State resistance to school racial integration, but suggesting no specific congressional moves, awaited final touches and signatures today. 3-9-56

It was tentatively scheduled for issuance next week in a formal presentation to the Senate. Senators from nine Southern States discussed a three-member committee survey and a proposed exact wording and extent of the pronouncement for several hours statement. yesterday. Some said numerous revisions were made, mainly in language rather than basic viewpoint. The statement was whipped into a shape satisfactory to Senators who differed among themselves on how far to chart a course.

The 14 Senators—all Democrats—at the morning and late afternoon meetings in the office of Senator George of Georgia, represented Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas. Several other Southern Senators sent word that prior engagements prevented attendance.

Text Remains Secret

The text and range of the intended statement remained an official secret. Senator Russell of Georgia, chairman of the report committee chosen at a similar gathering February 7 in Senator George's office, remarked that "we might call it a manifesto." Then he added: "But I'll have to look that word up in the dictionary."

From all accounts after yesterday's discussion the statement will not attempt to tell individual States specifically what they ought to do to counteract the Supreme Court's ban on racial segregation in public schools.

The Russell committee, of which Senators Stennis of Mississippi and Ervin of North Carolina also are members, reported on moves made by several State legislatures or governors. It was understood also to have listed other steps which Congress or the States conceivably could take in challenging the Supreme Court's ruling.

Senators said after the meeting that much of the time was spent in "going over the entire ground" before determining the

Interposition in Doubt

One Senator indicated that the statement will not urge or perhaps even mention, "interposition." This is a theory that individual States have constitutional power to reject Supreme Court's decision and refuse to enforce it. There seemed little sentiment for introducing an "interposition" resolution in Congress, if only because of the danger of long and bitter debate in both branches.

It was learned that a Senate resolution introduced last January by Senator Robertson of Virginia, will not be pushed by the Southern Senators as a group. This resolution would put Congress on record as declaring that a State could meet requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment either by desegregating public schools or by providing separate but equal school facilities for the different races.

The Robertson bill is in the Senate Judiciary Committee but it has not yet been considered by that group.

That resolution, for which Senators George, Russell, Ervin and Johnston and Thurmond of South Carolina were co-sponsors, declares some of the fundamental political and constitutional philosophy which the forthcoming statement is believed likely to contain.

"Disruptive Effect"

Those include contentions that the Constitution grants to the Federal Government no power over public education; that such power rests in the States under the Tenth Amendment which reserves to the States and the people all powers not specifically conferred on the Federal Government; that Congress never "implemented" the Fourteenth Amendment to apply to public education, and that the Supreme Court had a "disruptive effect" by saying the Fourteenth Amendment does require desegregated schools.

While the statement of the Southern Senators is expected to center on the Supreme Court's decision against school segregation, members indicated it would question other decisions of the tribunal along that line. They indicated it would warn, in general, against judicial, legislative or executive trends toward increased Federal invasion of many fields constitutionally reserved to the States.

Forming Southern Bloc?

Times-Picayune Sun. 3-18-56

Might Throw Presidential Election Into House

New Orleans, La.

By DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON — The states' rights doctrine, which now has been dramatically proclaimed anew in a manifesto signed by 100 members of Congress from Southern states, could result in the formation of a bloc of electoral votes that might throw the next presidential election into the House of Representatives. P. 6

The chances of such a contingency arising are increased by the closeness of the presidential race. Thus, if seven doubtful states are not carried in 1956 by Eisenhower as they were in 1952 and if no states in the Solid South go Republican, the President might find himself with less than 266 votes in the electoral college needed to win. The Democratic nominee would likewise not have a majority because his normal strength in the South would be given over to a third group of electors.

The constitution says that, when the House of Representatives chooses a president, each state delegation inside the House casts only one vote. It is a majority of 48 votes that decides who shall be president. The South would have 12 votes—enough to block a choice unless the Republicans get a majority of House seats in 25 states —which they didn't do in 1954.

THE PROCESS of selection is confined to the three candidates receiving the highest number of electoral votes for President in the election, and there can be no new name or compromise candidate voted on. If a state delegation is tied, it casts half a vote for each.

The new Congress—the one elected next November—would be the one to choose a president and vice-president if no candidate gets a majority in the electoral college. It would have from Jan. 3 to Jan. 20 to make the selection. If a deadlock ensued in the House on the selection of the President and if the Senate was similarly deadlocked in choosing a vice-president, the speaker of the House would serve until the president or vice-president had qualified.

The third-party bloc, which cast 39 votes for states' rights electors in 1948, could conceivably add to that total and unite the Southern vote behind Sen. Lyndon Johnson of Texas or Sen. Richard Russell of Georgia, thus preventing a choice by the electoral college and throwing the issue into the House of Representatives.

PRESUMABLY the Southern bloc would want some concessions before casting its ballots for a Democrat or Republican. For obviously the Southern bloc would have the balance of power.

Already the Southern bloc has determined to hold up and, unless satisfactory to the South, refuse to confirm any judges for the federal judiciary who may be appointed to posts in the South or to the supreme court. If the judges are to be political and are to decide questions on the basis of public pressure—which is what the Southern senators think happened on the segregation question—they will feel justified in examining carefully in advance the views of any nominees for the federal courts.

The manifesto by the Southern senators reflects a basic principle that cannot be dismissed as merely sectional prejudice. It is primarily an opposition to the so-called "liberalism" of today whereby the power of the federal government has been enlarged on the theory that anything that benefits the "general welfare" is constitutional, irrespective of what was decided before as to the rights of the states.

For, apart from the merits of integration or segregation, the fact remains that, if the supreme court is going to overturn basic principles long ago decided as within the Constitution, and is to undertake to "legislate," as the Southerners characterize it, then no decision can be regarded as final. It means that what has been decided is effective only till a new judge or set of judges overturns it. This is not a system of law according to a written constitution but law according to public sentiment as the judges interpret it. Precedents and long-cherished principles of jurisprudence thus can be ignored and politics can rule the day. Minority rights would go by the boards and the country would be at the mercy of intolerant majorities.

THE SUPREME COURT in 1896 decided the question of segregation on the basis of "equal but separate" facilities. Education has always been regarded as a state problem, and the Constitution's mandate that citizens be given equal protection of the law has been construed to mean that educational facilities could be separate but must be equal. The high court upheld this view consistently until 1954. Then the supreme court broke down the precedents which said education was a state affair and claimed the right to order segregation abolished even though separate schools had previously been held to be equal in quality of education given.

Now the way is opened to federal control of parochial and private schools and hence federal control of all systems of education. This is not what the proponents of integration have advocated, but this may turn out to be one of the results of the supreme court action in years to come.

(©, 1956, N. Y. Herald Tribune Synd.)

Manifesto Bloc Assailed by Case

Herald Tribune P. 3

Fri. 3-16-56 New York, N.Y.

Senator Says It Inflames Situation; Powell Warns Democrats on Votes

By Rowland Evans Jr.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15.—Sen. Clifford Case, R., N. J., said in the Senate today that the "effect" of the manifesto issued by 100 Southern members of Congress against the Supreme Court's school integration decree "can only be to incite further resistance and inflame a situation already difficult."

Sen. Case, a Republican liberal, was the first member of his party in the Senate to raise a voice against the Southern declaration. Issued Monday, the declaration pledged "all legal means to bring about a reversal" of the 1954 desegregation decision.

No Debate on Issue

When he finished his speech, Sen. Case was congratulated by Sen. Prescott Bush, R. Conn. There was no debate on the inflammatory issue which has brought the North-South split in the Democratic party to its sharpest focus since 1948.

Speaking one day after President Eisenhower's appeal for moderation and patience in solving the perplexing and emotional issue of school integration, Sen. Case said he had no doubt that the manifesto "is responsive to the present feelings of many people in the Southern states."

But the Supreme Court is and must remain the final "determination" of any question involving an interpretation of the Constitution, he said, thus contradicting the Southerners' charge that the integration decision was "contrary to the Constitution."

Calls for Patience

The Senator called for the "fullest measure of patience and understanding" in "this trying period." He said both sides are guilty of "intemperate statements . . . and extremist actions."

Across the Capitol, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell jr., D., N. Y., posed a clear challenge that the Democratic party faces a mass defection of Negro voters next November if the Northern wing of the party fails to assert its leadership.

Rep. Powell, a Negro, said that if President Eisenhower "resumes his leadership" on civil rights issues and if the national Democratic party fails to renew the principles of former Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry Truman, he himself will vote Republican this year.

He predicted many other Negro Democrats would do the same. In 1952, an estimated 20 to 30 per cent of the 4,000,000 registered Negroes voted Republican, the balance Democratic.

Rep. Powell called a news conference to announce his third appeal to the President to take personal action in the school case. He said:

"In an hour such as this, only the Chief Executive can speak and bring the leaders of these tension areas together."

The President has repeatedly declined to call any sort of White House or other conference to deal with Southern resistance to school de-segregation. He has asked Congress to set up a bipartisan commission with power to subpoena witnesses and compel testimony. The commission, he said, should keep a close eye on integration developments.

There was little prospect the President would see any reason to change his mind, despite Rep. Powell's newest appeal.

Rep. Powell said that if the President refuses to call a race conference, and if leading Democratic Presidential candidates stick to the moderation theme on the segregation issue, he will discuss with other Negro leaders the possibility of forming a third party.

Lehman Criticizes President

Sen. Herbert H. Lehman, D., N. Y., today criticized the President, contending that he implied yesterday that those urging compliance with the high court integration ruling were "extremists."

"The whole issue is whether all the people of the United States are going to accept the ruling . . . or are going to defy the Constitution. . . ." we have no Lincoln, Democratic or Republican.

THOMAS E. HARRIS.

Southern Power In Capitol Cited On Race Issue

Star P. 2-A

Sun. 4-1-56

Washington, D.C.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Mar. 31 (AP). — Representative Roberts, Democrat of Alabama said 20 important chairmanships rest with Southern congressmen who signed the segregation manifesto, and "we can do something about it."

Mr. Roberts and several other members of Alabamba's congessional delegation had expressed their determination to maintain racial segregation by all lawful means.

The group was in Birmingham for a congressional subcommittee hearing of housing needs.

"We are going to support the Constitution but we won't be the victims of a court decision changing customs older than the republic itself," Mr. Roberts said.

He charged that the United States Supreme Court decision that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional "set race relations back more than anything that has happened in the past 50 years."

"Segregation is a matter of choice," said Senator Sparkman, Democrat of Alabama. "It's choice and not court edict. Look at Harlem in New York. They are solidly segregated and by choice alone.

"If a white man tried to move into Harlem he would be just as bitterly opposed as a Negro moving into a white section in Alabama."

The manifesto, said Senator Sparkman, "sets forth our feeling as to the unjustifiable nature of the Supreme Court ruling."

"It is an appeal to our people to be orderly and lawful, and an appeal to the people away from here to understand the situation," he added.

COLORED ELECTORATE AND GOP—Despite Rep. Adam C. Powell's demand for federal intervention on the school segregation issue, Hals expects to corral the majority of the important colored electorate, both in the North and South. After all, as Vice President Nixon noted, it was a Republican Chief Justice" who delivered the controversial decision. And no Republican signed the Capitol Hill manifesto that refused to recognize that ruling as the law of the land.

Dixie Issues Manifesto

Herald Mon. 3-12-56 P.1
Miami, Fla.

Against Desegregation

'Lawful' Opposition Pledged

Text on Page 26-A

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Nine senators and 77 representatives, all from the South, today pledged to exercise every "lawful means" to reverse the Supreme Court ruling against school segregation.

They issued a manifesto calling the court's 1954 decision an unconstitutional, chaos-creating usurpation of judicial power."

In the "Declaration of Constitutional Principles," they promised to employ whatever legal means are available "to preclude the use of force" in carrying out the antisegregation ruling.

The Southern lawmakers also said:

"In this trying period, as we seek to right this wrong, we appeal to our people not to be provoked by the agitators and troublemakers invading our states and to scrupulously refrain from disorder and lawless acts."

The manifesto, which was first started in the making by The Citadel last week, recommended the specific "lawful means" of opposing the decision and maintaining segregation in Southern schools.

Signers of the manifesto represented 11 states and nearly 20 per cent of the total membership of Congress.

Among the signers were Florida's Sens. Spessard L. Holland and George A. Smathers, and Reps. Charles E. Bennett, Robert L. F. Sikes, A. S. Herlong Jr., Paul Rogers, James A. Haley and D. R. Matthews. Florida congressmen not among the signers were Reps. Dante B. Fascell, Democrat, and William C. Cramer, Republican.

Sen. J. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Democrat, said the Southerners had conferred privately for several weeks to work out the policy statement on desegregation and the problems they contend it would precipitate.

Sen. Walter George, Georgia Democrat, and Rep. Howard Smith, Virginia Democrat, plan to present the manifesto to both houses of Congress at noon Monday.

Thurmond said the committee that prepared the final statement included Democratic Sens. Richard Russell of Georgia, J. William Fulbright of Arkansas, Price Daniel of Texas, John Stennis of Mississippi and himself.

The only three senators from states represented who did not sign the statement were Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson of Texas and Democratic Sens. Albert Gore and Estes Kefauver, both of Tennessee.

Johnson said he did not believe action by the federal government would solve "this great problem." He expressed hope "wise leaders on the local levels will work to resolve these differences."

Kefauver, who is seeking the Democratic presidential nomination, said he did not sign the manifesto because "I just don't agree with it." For that reason, he said, he did not take part in meetings of the Southern group. Gore declined to comment.

Text of Declaration By 96 Legislators On Segregation

Herald
P. 26-a Mon. 3-12-56
Miami, Fla

See Story on Page 1-A

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Here is the text of the "Declaration of Constitutional Principles" made public Sunday by 19 senators and 77 representatives from 11 Southern states:

The unwarranted decision of the Supreme Court in the public school cases is now bearing the fruit always produced when men substitute naked power for established law.

The founding fathers gave us a Constitution of checks and balances because they realized the inescapable lesson of history that no man or group of men can be safely entrusted with unlimited power. They framed this Constitution with its provisions for change by amendment in order to secure the fundamentals of government against the dangers of temporary popular passion or the personal predilections of public office holders.

We regard the decision of the Supreme Court in the school cases as a clear abuse of judicial power. It climaxes a trend in the federal judiciary undertaking to legislate, in derogation of the authority of Congress, and to encroach upon the reserved rights of the states and the people.

The original Constitution does not mention education. Neither does the 14th Amendment nor any other amendment. The debates preceding the submission of the 14th Amendment clearly show that there was no intent that it should affect the systems of education maintained by the states.

The very Congress which proposed the amendment subsequently provided for segregated schools in the District of Columbia.

★ ★ ★

WHEN the amendment was adopted in 1868, there were 37 states of the Union. Every one of the 26 states that had any substantial racial differences among its people either approved the operation of segregated schools already in existence or subsequently established such schools by action of the same law-making body which considered the 14th Amendment.

As admitted by the Supreme Court in the public school case (Brown v. Board of Education), the doctrine of separate but equal schools "apparently originated in Roberts v. City of Boston . . . (1849), upholding school segregation against attack as being violative of a state constitutional guarantee of equality."

This constitutional doctrine began in the North—not in the South, and it was followed not only in Massachusetts, but in Connecticut, New York, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania and other Northern states until they, exercising their rights as states through the constitutional processes of local self-government, changed their school systems.

In the case of Plessy v. Ferguson in 1896 the Supreme Court expressly declared that under the 14th Amendment no person was denied any of his rights if the states provided separate but equal public facilities. This decision has been followed in many other cases.

It is notable that the Supreme Court, speaking through Chief Justice Taft, a former President of the United States, unanimously declared in 1927 in Lum v. Rice that the "separate but equal" principle is ". . . within the discretion of the state in regulating its public schools and does not conflict with the 14th Amendment."

★ ★ ★

THIS interpretation, restated time and again, became a part of the life of the people of many of the states and confirmed their habits, customs, traditions and way of life. It is founded on elemental humanity and common sense, for parents should not be deprived by government of the right to direct the lives and education of their own children.

Though there has been no constitutional amendment or act of Congress changing this established legal principle almost a century old, the Supreme Court of the United States, with no legal basis for such action, undertook to exercise their naked judicial power and substituted their personal political and social ideas for the established law of the land.

This unwarranted exercise of power by the court, contrary to the Constitution, is creating chaos and confusion in the states principally affected. It is destroying the amicable relations between the white and Negro races that have been created through 90 years of patient effort by the good people of both races. It has planted hatred and suspicion where there has been heretofore friendship and understanding.

★ ★ ★

WITHOUT regard to the consent of the governed, outside agitators are threatening immediate and revolutinary changes in our public school systems. If done, this is certain to destroy the system of public education in some of the states.

With the gravest concern for the explosive and dagerous condition created by this decision and inflamed by outside meddlers:

We reaffirm our reliance on the Constitution as the fundamental law of the land.

We decry the Supreme Court's encroachments on rights reserved to the states and to the people, contrary to established law and to the Constitution.

We commend the motives of those states which have declared the intention to resist forced integration by any lawful means.

We appeal to the states and people who are not directly affected by these decisions to consider the constituional principles involved against the time when they too, on issues vital to them, may be the victims of judicial encroachment.

Even though we constitute a minority in the present Congress, we have full faith that a majority of the American people believe in the dual system of government which has enabled us to achieve our greatness and will in time demand that the reserved rights of the states and of the people be made secure against judicial usurpation.

We pledge ourselves to use all lawful means to bring about a reversal of this decision which is contrary to the Constitution and to prevent the use of force in its implementation.

In this trying period, as we all seek to right this wrong, we appeal to our people not to be provoked by the agitators and troublemakers invading our states and to scrupulously refrain from disorder and lawless acts.

SOUTH'S MANIFESTO CAUSING PROBLEMS FOR ADMINISTRATION

Commercial Appeal

Pro-Civil Rights Leaders Reportedly Told To 'Take It Easy'

P. 1

Wed. 3-14-56

MEETING IS POSTPONED

Memphis, Tenn.

Declaration Of Principles Also Poses Difficulty For Democrats — Liberals Privately Anxious

By MORRIS CUNNINGHAM

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, March 13.—A "Declaration of Constitutional Principles" by 101 Southern congressmen attacking the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision was reported Tuesday to be concerning Administration officials.

Administration leaders were reported to be urging professional civil rights groups to take it easy to avoid further agitation of the explosive racial situation.

A meeting of pro-civil rights congressmen with Deputy Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers was "indefinitely postponed." The congressmen had sought the meeting to press for civil rights legislation.

Problems For Both

The newly reiterated solidarity of Southern congressmen posed problems on both sides of the aisle in Congress, as well as to the Administration.

With both the Democratic majority and the Republican minority split on a number of issues, most legislation in this session is expected to be passed by a coalition of Eisenhower Republicans and Southern conservatives.

Thus the position of the Southerners, though restricted at the moment to civil rights, was a matter of general concern.

Liberal Democrats, while persisting publicly in their insistance upon speedy racial integration in public schools, were privately anxious over the growing threat of a third party movement in the South that could throw the November presidential election to the Republicans.

Most Southern congressmen publicly discounted the possibility of a third party but, meanwhile, there were two additional endorsements of Senator Lyndon Johnson of Texas as a Democratic presidential possibility.

Bible, Long Join

Senators Alan Bible (D., Nev.) and Russell B. Long (D., La.) joined other Southerners who have pledged their support to the Senate Democratic leader if he wants it.

Senator Johnson stuck to his statement that "I am not running for any office." And, following an afternoon session of the Senate Democratic Policy Committee, he told newsmen he "doesn't at all" anticipate a third party movement in the South this year.

The majority leader said the Dixie Manifesto was not discussed at the Senate Policy Committee meeting.

Meanwhile, signs increased that both wings of the Democratic Party are bracing themselves for a civil rights showdown at the Chicago National Convention next August.

P. 5

Touching indirectly upon the Democratic schism in a statement, pro-civil rigsts Senator Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) said:

"I hope we can find a way, through the deep emotions and long-held traditions, to the mood of friendly and understanding and reasonable discussion, in which peopleof differing views work out the essential adjustments of life without breaking the fabric of law and order.

'By Lawful Means'

"And I hope that those who urge resistance to the court's order will recognize that others of us with equal conviction and sincerity believe that the law of the land and the basic principles of our religion and our democracy, as well as the clear needs of our foreign policy, require strong support of the court's ruling."

Memphis, Tenn.

The 101 Southerners who signed the "Declaration of Constitutional Principles" commending resistence to desegregation "by lawful means" included 19 senators and 82 representatives.

Representative J. Percy Priest of Nashville continued to be the only holdout among Tennessee House Democrats. He reiterated Tuesday he will not sign the statement, though he disclosed he has received a number of protests from his constituents.

Other Tennesseans who also refused to sign are Senators Estes Kefauver and Albert Gore and the state's two Republican representatives, B. Carroll Reece and Howard Baker.

Those who have signed are Representatives Clifford Davis, Jere Cooper, Tom Murray, Ross Bass and Joe Evins.

Senator Gore, in a further elaboration on his position, reiterated his agreement with "some portions" of the statement but his disagreement with all of it, and added:

"Furthermore, and more importantly, I seriously questioned the advisability, the purpose, and the effect of its issuance.

"I see no particular good that may come of it. But, on the other hand, its immediate effect was bound to be, and already is, an insistent demand for civil rights legislation in this session of Congress."

He did not specify the legislation nor what his position will be on it.

Senator Kefauver, who declined comment Saturday on his refusal to sign, has subsequently told newsmen he does not agree with the declaration. He was in Minnesota Tuesday running for President.

Representative Bass, a belated signer, said, "I didn't sign it at first because it didn't mean anything." He said he believes in segregation but he said, "This business of making the public think this manifesto is going to keep segregation is one of the worst things I've ever heard of."

He said "the whole thing was designed to help some politicians," and repeated his charge that a principal purpose was to help re-elect Senator Walter George (D., Ga.).

TWO FROM DIXIE RAP MANIFESTO

James Pleasure

P. 15

'Dangerous Document' Is Rep. Cooley's Opinion

Wed. 3-14-56

By WILLIAM KERWIN

WASHINGTON, March 13 (INS) —Two Southern congressmen—one of them an influential House committee chairman—disavowed Tuesday the manifesto against racial integration in the public schools issued by 101 of their Dixie colleagues.

Reps. Harold D. Cooley (D-NC) and Thurmond Chatham (D-NC) both sharply questioned the wisdom of the declaration by the Southerners that they would employ all "lawful methods" to upset the supreme court school ruling.

New Orleans, La.

Cooley, who heads the powerful House agriculture committee, termed the manifesto "a dangerous document" and said it will "greatly hinder" those seeking a solution to problems created by the court order that racial segregation is unconstitutional.

Chatham said he considers the supreme court decision the law of the land, and therefore could not oppose it.

Calls Manifesto 'Dangerous'

Cooley affirmed his advocacy of segregated schools but said that some of "the rather extreme statements" contained in the manifesto will hurt the South's position.

He said: "I did not sign the manifesto or declaration of constitutional principles for the very good reason that I believe it to be a dangerous document, calculated to aggravate the situation and inflame the minds and intensify the feelings of many people in many parts of our country."

The chairman stated also that the manifesto is "calculated to bring all the courts of our country into disrepute."

In another development, Senate majority leader Lyndon B. Johnson said he is "hopeful" the Senate will vote to kill poll taxes this session despite furor over public school segregation.

Bars Taxes on Voting

The Texas Democrat indicated he would back a move to urge the Senate judiciary committee to report out a pending constitutional amendment barring taxes on voting. These levies are prevalent in some Southern states.

Meanwhile, Sen. Thomas C. Hennings (D-Mo.), said he believes that Senate judiciary chairman James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) will not try to block action on four civil rights bills also pending before the committee.

The four measures, which include anti-lynching and right to vote legislation, were favorably reported by Hennings' constitutional rights subcommittee earlier this month.

Hennings said he has asked for immediate consideration of the bills despite Eastland's support of the Southern bloc's manifesto.

Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) warned the manifesto will encourage "resistance" to the supreme court ruling, possibly by violence.

READERS' POINT OF VIEW: What Woodrow Wilson Said About Segregation

Courier-Journal P. 4

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal:

Why didn't the Courier-Journal publish the text of the Southern Manifesto? A radio news commentator said the manifesto was so sound and reasonable that the Communist publications, at home and abroad, had to dig up falsehoods in order to get any dirt for propaganda. Is that why The Courier-Journal sidestepped giving its readers a chance to see what was in it? Fri. 3-30-56

Let me quote a portion of Woodrow Wilson's statement of reconstruction in his History of the American People. Louisville, Ky.

"But, though they thus cleared away the more normal obstructions to the return of settled peace and a natural order of life at the South, the congressional leaders could not keep their hands off the race question. Mr. Sumner, in particular, was insistent that the Negroes should be given immediate federal law for their support in their assertion of their social no less than their political rights; and in February, 1875, at last had his way, which he did not live to see it. A bill passed which gave the federal courts authority, by appropriate process and penalty, to enforce the right of Negroes to accommodation in public inns, theaters, railway carriages, and schools, and to service upon juries, upon the same footing as white persons. The Act became law on the 1st of March. . . . It was the older leaders' last act for creating friction in the South. For eight years it was to fail utterly of accomplishing its object and yet to work its work of irritation, to be set aside at last by the Supreme Court (1883) as an invasion of the legal rights of the states which no portion of the Constitution, new or old, could be made to sustain."

As late as 1927, in Lum vs. Rice, a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court, speaking through Chief Justice Taft, declared that the "separate but equal" principle as regards public schools does not conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment. Did these two Presidents, one a very able Chief Justice of the Twentieth Century, indulge in "proclaiming ancient attitudes"? I am of the opinion that The Courier-Journal did its readers a dirty trick by indulging editorially in such an abuse of some of the best minds of the nation without publishing the text of the manifesto. CARLTON COUNTS.

Fullerton, Ky.

The Courier-Journal printed the full text of the Southern Manifesto on Monday, March 12. It was part of the day's main Page 1 news story of the manifesto and its sponsors, and took up almost two additional columns on Page 12.—(Editor.

Southern Declaration Sets Off Sectional Fireworks In Senate

News + Observer P. 1 Sun. 3-13-56

Raleigh, N.C.

WASHINGTON, March 12 (AP) — The racial integration issue set off an oratorical North-South conflict in Congress today, with the submission of the new Southern manifesto.

Most of the fireworks was in the Senate; the House met only briefly.

The debate began when Sen. George (D-Ga) formally presented the manifesto signed by 19 senators and 81 House members from 11 states.

Four more House members signed the manifesto today. They are Reps. Jonas (R-NC), Cramer (R-Fla), Dies (D-Tex) and Bass (D-Tenn).

Judicial Power Abuse.

It says the Supreme Court decision of 1954 outlawing segregation in public schools was "a clear abuse of judicial power" and pledges the signers to do everything legally possible to overthrow it.

Sen. Morse (D-Ore) dared the Southerners to submit a constitutional amendment allowing race segregation practices, and predicted there would be few votes for it.

Morse also declared:

"A historic debate is going to have to take place in the not too distant future because this Con-lawful means to protect the rights of the people," he said.

"We are free morally and legally to oppose the decision. We must fight it to the end."

Morse, and Sen. Humphrey (D-Minn), said leaders on both sides should sit down and work out the problem in a calm way.

Humphrey said he was displeased to see the Supreme Court become "the subject of passion, antagonism and bitterness."

He asked that Congress back up the court's segregation decision as "the law of the land," and said that "by holding back, you impede what is inevitable."

"This is a perplexing, confusing and bewildering day in the Senate," he said.

Sen. Neuberger (D-Ore) said President Eisenhower should immediately call a White House conference of governors, senators and representatives from states "where the Supreme Court decision is being defied."

The White House said there would be no presidential comment on the manifesto.

Not Hasty Action.

George, in presenting it to the Senate, said it was not the product of hasty action, "it has been carefully considered by its signers for four or five weeks."

It was presented in the House by Rep. Howard W. Smith (D-Va). Smith said the court decision assumed powers the justices do not have under the Constitution.

Smith spoke of the nine justices as "temporary occupants of high office in the judicial branch."

While the debate was going on, the court handed down another unanimous order in the segregation field. This held that state universities may not delay the admission of Negro graduate students for the time it uses to make an investigation of whether the admission should be granted.

In another action, the court put off indefinitely any decision as to whether states may ban interracial marriages. This involved a Virginia white woman and a Chinese seaman, but the state law primarily sets up a bar against Negro-white marriages. The court said the case before it was "devoid of a properly presented federal question."

Sen. Thurmond (D-SC), who led the states rights movement in 1948, told the Senate the South will "fight to the end" to reverse the court ruling.

"It would be submission to cowardice if we failed to use every gress is going to have to determine whether it is going to back up the Supreme Court."

Morse said some forces were trying to put themselves "above the Supreme Court of the United States and the Constitution."

PETER EDSON

Post-Herald

More About Southern Manifesto

Thurs. 3-22-56

WASHINGTON — Political effects of the manifesto by a hundred Southern senators and congressmen, calling for "reversal by legal means" of the Supreme Court's public school desegregation decision, are not being taken too seriously in Washington.

Close study of the manifesto has shown that it contains not even a veiled threat of defiance of the Supreme Court. It outlines no program of political action to nullify the court's decision. It does not mention "states' rights" nor "interposition." P. 12

Calmer spirits among the signers toned down the more violent language contained in an original draft. Birm., Ala.

It was prepared by a small committee of Southern senators, headed by Strom Thurmond (D., S. C.) states rights presidential candidate in '48.

What emerged, therefore, is now taken as a political campaign document issued largely for home consumption in the South.

* * *

AS A MATTER of practical politics, it is recognized all over the country that no Southern candidate for office can hope to win nomination or election if he publicly favors even gradual integration.

This is being cited as an explanation of why such liberals—on other issues—as Sen. Lister Hill (Ala.) and Reps. Brooks Hays (Ark.) and Wright Patman (Tex.) signed the manifesto.

Northern Democratic political leaders recognize that if such men were defeated they would be replaced by extreme reactionaries on the integration and almost every other issue.

This is one reason which such liberal senators as Lehman (N. Y.) and Douglas (Ill.)—to whom the Negro vote is important—have been so restrained in their comments on the manifesto.

* * *

A GRAND ROW over the civil rights issue at the Chicago Democratic national convention in August is still not ruled out. But since this convention comes only 12 weeks before the November election, it does not give much time for organizing a third party.

There is a general feeling among political leaders in Washington that the States Righters were not too happy over the results of their 1948 campaign. They are not anxious to go through another third party ordeal.

This is given as one reason why Democratic Presidential Candidate Adlai Stevenson dared to issue his statement that the Supreme Court was right and the Southern manifesto wrong on the issue of racial segregation in public schools.

This may be a direct challenge to the Southerners to put up a presidential candidate of their own, in opposition to Stevenson at the Chicago convention.

* * *

NORTHERN AND WESTERN state delegations greatly outnumber the South for a simple majority convention vote, however. And responsible spokesmen for the Democratic party organization say it is inconceivable that their 1956 convention will reject their party which must now face past platform declarations on a split over this issue. civil rights.

Northern Democratic leaders like to boast that the greatest progress toward eliminating segregation has been made during their past administrations.

They find it ironic that it is

Why Relations In South Are 'Amicable'

Call 3-4878

The manifesto issued by southern congressmen a few weeks ago accuses the U. S. Supreme Court of destroying the "amicable relations between the white and Negro races."

Kansas City, Mo.

The race relations which the Dixie solons call "amicable" are nothing less than white supremacy. There was peace, quiet and harmony so long as Negroes "kept their places" and remained meek and subservient to their "masters." There was peace and harmony so long as the Negro remained docile and did not attempt to vote. There was no friction so long as the Negro accepted without complaint the run-down two-room school building while whites had a modern, up-to-date educational plant. The relationship between white and Negro was "amicable" so long as Negroes were content to sit in the jim crow side of the railroad station, to ride in jim crow cars and to occupy the back seats of street cars.

Star 3-31-54

But as soon as the Negro grew tired of such oppression and rose up to demand his rights as a full-fledged citizen of the democracy in which they lived, the relationship was no longer "amicable."

The white southern gentleman, like the plantation master of old, was perfectly satisfied as long as the freed Negro, like the slave, kept his distance from the white man and stayed on his side of the track, unless, of course, he was cooking for his family, caring for his children or performing the duties of chauffeur and yard man.

The southern white man is rebelling against change from the southern tradition of "white man up, Negro down." His rebellion, however, is bound to be short-lived. Even some of those who signed the document admit that the South will have an "uphill" fight to reverse the U. S. Supreme Court.

The manifesto could be dismissed as "trivia" were it not for the fact that some of the most powerful men in Congress signed it. This shows how deep-rooted are the traditions of white supremacy.

Southern Manifesto Presented in Senate

World Telegram p. 3

By The United Press.

WASHINGTON, March 12.—Southerners formally laid before Congress today their pledge to use "all lawful means" to upset the Supreme Court's ban on school segregation.

New York

Sen. Walter F. George (D., Ga.) presented the "Declaration of Constitutional Principles" to the Senate on behalf of the 19 Democratic senators who signed it.

N.Y. Times 3-12-56

Rep. Howard W. Smith (D., Va.) was to read it in the House as spokesman for the 77 Dixie House members who also affixed their signatures.

Open for More

Rep. William M. Colmer (D., Miss.), a key figure in the group, said the declaration would be left open for additional signatures until tonight's deadline. He pointed out quite a few Southerners in the House still had not signed. Some, he said, simply were not reached.

Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D., N. Y.), was the first Senator to speak out against the manifest.

"I want it to be known,' 'he said, "that I am wholly in disagreement with the position taken in the proclamation against the Supreme Court decision. . . . I will have more to say on this subject at an early date."

Sen. George, reading the declaration in the Senate, prefaced it with a remark that Senators felt it was imperative because of "the increasing gravity of the situation. . . . and the peculiar stress" the Supreme Court decision produced in the South.

He said the decision "has created many difficulties unknown and unappreciated, perhaps, by many people in other sections."

'Clear Abuse.'

Signers of the manifesto, which was published last night, denounced the high court's anti-segregation ruling as a "clear abuse of judicial power" that has sown "hared and suspicion" throughout the South.

They commended states for lawful attempts to resist integration but called for all citizens to 'scrupulously refrain from disorder and lawless acts."

The statement was considerably milder than an original draft which some refused to sign. But it was one of the strongest criticisms of the high court by a group of Congressmen in recent years.

Only Sens. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) and Albert Gore (D., Tenn.) and Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (Texas), failed to sign in the upper chamber. Sen. Johnson said he was not consulted because he is the party's floor leader.

THOMAS L. STOKES

Evening Star Washington, D.C.

'Manifesto' Rocks the Democrats

Johnson, Kefauver, Rayburn Praised For Refusing to Sign South's Plea

Aug. 3-20-56

Like "the fire bell in the night" came the depressing word into the snowy wastes of Minnesota where we were following the caravans of two well-known public figures who are seeking the Democratic presidential nomination.

The word was about the "manifesto" signed by 19 Senators and 77 House members from the South attacking the Supreme Court school integration decision, backing up Southern States which have openly defied it, and pledging themselves to use "all lawful means" to reverse the decision.

Suddenly a contest for the Democratic presidential nomination seemed a somewhat futile activity. For what can that nomination be worth with the party more hopelessly split asunder than in nearly 100 years, and a substantial part of that party in defiance of the law? The schism was dramatized by the two candidates campaigning in Minnesota. Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee had refused to sign. Adlai Stevenson had condemned the manifesto.

From Democratic dissension Republicans can gain without lifting a hand — politically, that is. Are they willing to let events take their course with that political benefit inuring to them, or do they mean to seize the opportunity also to do something for the Nation in a perilous hour?

For this they would look to their President. It would help indeed if he would take the leadership, rise to the occasion and try to lift the curtain of night which is descending upon the South as the lights go out and the doors are locked. It has been suggested—among others by Adlai Stevenson—that President Eisenhower call a conference of men of goodwill from both races, from North and South, from both parties, to counsel together about means to carry out the Supreme Court decision so as to avoid violence. The conference naturally would have to accept that it must start with the assumption that the law must be carried out, but recognizing that there is latitude in the decree of the court permitting gradual processes.

The South's political leaders have failed it and the Nation miserably with a few exceptions. They wilted in the crisis. Here one must recall with high praise the three Senators who refused to sign—Lyndon Johnson of Texas, the party leader, and Senator Kefauver and his Tennessee colleague, Senator Albert Gore, as well as the party's House leader, Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas, and 26 other House members who refused to buckle to political expediency.

Outside of them, the South's political leadership has abdicated, and in two respects. First, State leaders effected the passage in several States of "interposition" resolutions saying that the State will not obey the court, which means that men of goodwill are locked out at the very outset from any attempt to make a beginning even in a small way to comply with the court's decree. In the second place, there is the manifesto by members of Congress representing the national party which declares "we commend the motives of those States which have declared the intention to resist forced integration by any lawful means."

How inspiring it would have been if just one political leader from the Old South—where the interposition movement has gained foothold — had stood up and condemned it and announced that his reelection was not important, but fulfilling the promise of democracy for equal treatment to all our citizens under the law was the only thing that is important! But none dared.

The Southerners who are groping for fair play and justice must go outside of their political leaders for guidance. There, among men of goodwill who have been working devotedly in the field of race relations, we are hearing fugitive voices raised on behalf of the law, but not enough.

What it takes, and it is not easy, is decision by an act of will that the individual is going to readjust his whole attitude that came to him by inheritance, that is literally in his blood.

We cannot look to our timorous Southern political leaders. They have failed us in our greatest crisis since 1860. We can only rely in the end on ourselves. We can no longer hide behind legal subterfuges and dodges and excuses about "going slow," that is, in changing our own attitude. For it was truly said by a great Supreme Court justice sixty years ago that "the Constitution is color blind."

Says Democratic Party May Be Doomed By Southern Manifesto

World P.1 Tues. 3-20-56

B'ham, Ala.

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The Democratic Party this week stood on the brink of total disaster as 96 southern congressmen issued a proclamation denouncing the Supreme Court for its rulings against segregation in public institutions.

Only two Republicans were among the 10 senators and 77 representatives who have formed the largest congressional protest group since before the Civil War.

HOUSE RULES

The manifesto, which accuses the Supreme Court of "abuse of power," was read in the Senate by Sen. Walter F. George, D-. Ga.) president pro tempore and chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. Rep. Howard W. Smith, (D-Va.) chairman of the House Rules Committee, read the document in the House.

Immediately, there was talk of a third party and the name of Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas, majority leader, was heard as a possible candidate.

Here (in part) is what the Congressmen said:

"The unwarranted decision of the Supreme Court in the public school cases is now bearing the fruit always produced when men substitute naked power for established law.

Johnson was one of the few southern lawmakers who did not sign the mainfesto. Other non-signers included:

Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), Albert ore (D-Tenn.) Sam Rayburn (D-Tex.) and Harold Cooley (D-N. C.) chairman of the House Agriculture Committee.

Every senator and representative from the states of Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Missisippi, South Carolina and Virginia signed the manifesto.

THE DECREE

Only four of 22 representatives from Texas were signers, while six of Florida's eight-men put their names to the decree. Five representatives from Tennessee and four from North Carolina refused to join the move.

"We regard the decision of the Supreme Court in the school cases as a clear abuse of judicial power. It climaxes a trend in the federal judiciary—to encroach upon the reserve rights of the states and the people.

SOCIAL IDEAS

"Though there has been no constitutional amendment or act of Congress changing this established legal principle (of segregated schools,) almost a century old, the Supreme Court of the United States with no legal basis for such action undertook to exercise their naked judicial power and substituted their personal political and social ideas for the established law of the land."

Alabama Editors Are Saying

Advertiser P. 2-B Sun. 3-18-56

Theoretical

The Brewton Standard

Other sections of the country, legally and in theory, have provided all these public rights to their citizens, but more often the provision has been a paper guarantee of no practical value. Sooner or later, the entire nation will be called on to redeem these paper guarantees under the Supreme Court ruling.

The South has its faults and failings, and it must rectify them as best it can. Yet, there is a grim sort of satisfaction in anticipating the anguish to come outside the South when other areas are forced to live up to the spirit, as well as the letter, of the integration laws.

Montgomery, Ala

On Newspaper

The Colbert County Reporter

After all the revolutionary changes which have taken place in the advertising world in the last ten years, the newspaper—it is now proven—remains the best medium of advertising.

The newspapers are the only advertising medium which can guarantee their circulation figure. Newspapers have submitted to various auditing bureau methods, which can easily be checked by any prospective advertiser, and their circulation is well known.

Moreover, each newspaper printed is bought by someone, and something that is bought is wanted, and therefore, read. This is true of the newspaper, but is not true of many other major advertising mediums.

The newspaper, today then, represents an even better buy, for the few cents one pays for it, than it ever has before, since the time of the invention of the printing press. The newspaper is still champion.

The Other

The Mobile Press

Many Northern white people — not necessarily those connected with NAACP —have seemed to enjoy immensely the spectacle of NAACP and its associate pressure groups ruthlessly striving to impose their will upon the South.

Perhaps word from Gloster B. Current, director of NAACP's organizational activity, that things are not as he thinks they should be in the North will cause these people to look at the racial picture in their own back yards.

It is easy for one to look across the fence into someone else's backyard and suggest changes. So often in such cases, we lose sight of what's going on in our own domains.

Manifesto

The Tuscaloosa News

Action of nearly 100 Southern members of Congress in signing a formal statement of principles on the segregation issue should remove all doubts as to the seriousness of our problems.

Many outside of the South have realized that the issue was not a simple question of legality and morality.

So, for the time it may gain to help us adjust to the inevitable changes and adjustments that will come, the action of the Southern lawmakers was excellent. But let's not misjudge it as a remedy that will completely remove this problem, and make it unnecessary for us to face up to it and all its painful adjustments.

Timely

The LaFayette Sun

This newspaper, like most of the other Southern newspapers, believes that the Supreme Court overstepped its authority in its recent ruling outlawing segregation. We further believe that the NAACP and the pious Yankees ,who practice segregation in reality while propounding integration in theory, are stirring up trouble here in the South that can never benefit the Negro.

We would, however, issue a timely warning to our readers. Watch out for the demagogue. He will probably come in the form of a politician who wants to use the issue to promote his candidacy for office, and he may come in the form of an unknown who loves to see his name in print one way or another.

Wilson's

The Monroe Journal

The University had no other alternative than to expel Student Leonard R. Wilson who apparently was expecting and welcoming his dismissal.

His recent actions show not only an absence of good manners but a complete lack of common intelligence as well.

Conduct from people with the caliber of Wilson's apparent attitudes and ideas have and will continue to add more friction and stress to the increasingly alarming segregation issue.

Senators Answer Dixie's Rebels

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Feb. 3-24-56

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D.C. (NNPA) —Senator Wayne Morse, Democrat, of Oregon, Monday challenged Southern Senators to offer a constitutional amendment to deny equal constitutional rights to colored people and see how far they will get.

It was hurled by Morse during debate on the "Declaration of Constitutional Principles," presented to the Senate by Senator Walter F. George, Democrat of Georgia. It denounced the Supreme Court for its decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

The "manifesto," signed by 19 Senators and 78 Representatives from the 11 deep-South states, called the decision in the school segregation cases "a clear abuse of judicial power."

* * *

THE SAME declaration of principles was presented in the House by Representative Howard W. Smith of Virginia.

All of the signers were Democrats, except three — Representatives Richard M. Poff and Ted T. Broyhill, of Virginia, and Charles R. Jonas of North Carolina, Republicans.

Three Southern Senators, however, did not sign the declaration. They were Lyndon B. Johnson, of Texas Senate majority leader, and Estes Kefauver and Albert Gore of Tennessee. Twenty-eight Representatives from the South also did not sign it.

Among the thirty-one nonsigners were the South's other two Republican Representatives.

AT THE outset of his speech, Morse pointed out that in the case of Marbury vs. Madison, decided in 1803, there was established the authority and jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to define for all Americans, regardless of color race or creed, the equality of rights under the Constitution.

"The supremacy of the Supreme Court in passing on constitutional questions was determined by that decision," said Morse, adding:

"A unanimous Supreme Court has handed down a decision that makes it perfectly clear that under the Constitution of the United States there cannot be discrimination between white men and black men, so far as the Constitution is concerned."

* * *

MORSE SAID he wanted to say again that "the doctrine of interposition means nothing but nullification, and it really means a determination on the part of certain forces in this country to put themselves above the Supreme Court and above the Constitution.

"If the gentlemen from the South really want to take such action, let them propose a constitutional amendment that will deny to the colored people of the country equality of rights under the Constitution, and see how far they will get with the American people."

Morse said the United States has reached a point in history "where the South once again will have to determine whether we are going to be governed by law or whether we are going to be governed or subverted by the interposition doctrine which is a doctrine of nullification."

* * *

ON THE BASIS of the arguments of the "declaration of principles," submitted by a group of Southern Senators, Morse said, "you would think that (John) Calhoun was walking and speaking on the floor of the Senate."

"As patriots," Morse suggested that Senators representing states outside of the South "need to sit down with our brethren representing the South, and see what we can do to solve, by reasoned discussion, the great problem which the Supreme Court decision has created.

"But I first want to say I think it is a correct decision, a sound decision, and a decision that was long overdue."

* * *

MORSE SAID the South has had all the time since the Civil War to make the adjustment.

"That is why I am not greatly moved by these last-hour pleas of the South," Morse said. " 'We need more time, more time, more time.' How much time is needed in order that equality of justice may apply to the blacks as well as to the whites in America?"

* * *

MORSE SAID he regretted that the declaration was filed because "such a declaration will not bring about the unanimity of action we will need in order to help solve the school problem in the South."

He added that "a unanimous Supreme Court, which includes in its membership men with the tradition of the South in their veins, has at long last declared all Americans are equal, and that the failure of justice in America must burn as brightly in the homes of blacks as in the homes of whites."

* * *

SENATOR RICHARD NEUBERGER, Democrat, of Oregon, suggested that President Eisenhower call a White House conference of governors, Senators and Representatives of the states in which the Supreme Court ruling is being defied.

The President should confront them "firmly but considerately," he said, "with the fact that the nation now is faced with a choice between anarchy and the rule of law.

"If the Constitution can be flouted in one realm," he said, "it can be in all other realms."

* * *

SENATOR STROM THURMOND, Dixiecrat, of South Carolina, is credited with pressing harder for issuance of the "manifesto" than any other member of Congress.

Groundwork for the "manifesto" was laid at a meeting in the office of Senator George on Feb. 8. He was chosen as spokesman because of his national prestige.

The 78 - year - old Senator is seeking reelection this year. His opponent may be former Gov. Herman Talmadge, a champion of white supremacy, who has been charging in Georgia rural areas that George had been soft on the segregation issue.

Southern congressional leaders said among purposes of their declaration were a demonstration of southern unity on the desegregation issue, notice to the Supreme Court that it must "tread more carefully on the Constitution," a notice to Congress that southern legislators will more carefully weigh all legislation and insist on "getting for the South as much as we give to other sections," and a warning to Presidential candidates that the South has a "firm position and intends to stick by it."

Thurmond said the final statement was put together by Senators Richard B. Russell, Georgia; J. William Fulbright, Arkansas; John C. Stennis, Mississippi, and himself.

* * *

SENATOR HERBERT H LEHMAN, Democrat, of New York, said:

"I, of course, recognize and respect the right of any member of Congress, as any other citizen of our country, to hold and express such views as he may approve.

"However, I wish no one to think that failure to make immediate reply to the proclamation issued by certain Senators and Representatives, assailing the decision of the Supreme Court outlawing segregation in public schools, indicates acceptance of the views expressed therein.

"I therefore want it known that I am wholly in disagreement with the position taken in the proclamation against the Supreme Court decision by these members of Congress who are signatories to it. I expect to have more to say on this subject at an early date."

* * *

SENATOR JOHNSON, who did not sign the document, said he had not been shown the document because the majority of the group did not want to appear to be trying to "formulate Democratic or Senate policy."

Johnson said he did not believe the solution could be found on the Federal level. He said he hoped that "wise leaders on the local level will work to resolve differences."

Senator Kefauver, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President, said: "I just don't agree with it." He added that he had not taken part in any of the meetings of the Southern group.

"I told these fellows long ago I can't see how you can secede from the Supreme Court." He added: "My position is well known. The Supreme Court had decided and that decision is the law of the land."

SEN. DOUGLAS, a former University of Chicago professor, said the Supreme Court was "established to settle disagreements over the interpretation of the basic law and the Constitution."

In the school segregation cases, he said, "the court properly recognized that when school children are segregated on the basis of race, a deep stigma is imposed" upon colored children and children of Mexican descent.

He added that "such segregation is a violation of the basic principles of Christianity, which teaches fellowship and brotherhood and which emphasizes that God hath made of one blood all the races of the earth."

* * *

SEN. DOUGLAS also declared that segregation "violates the historic American principles laid down in the Declaration of Independence that 'all men are created equal" and 'are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.' "

Pointing out that the court "recognized that the law must be applied with the consideration for the changes it will bring in the educational procedures in the various states and with a reasonable time therefore allowed for this adjustment," he said:

"I had hoped that this decision would be accepted by all of our people, and that every effort would be made in all sections of the country to apply this law constructively and in good temper.

* * *

"I AM GLAD that in most areas of the country, including many where the decision has meant major changes, the adjustment to the law has gone forward cooperatively, with good

"No doubt it is the legal right of those who disapprove the law as thus interpreted to seek by lawful means, such as a constitutional amendment, to change it.

"This stated objective of those southern representatives who have joined in the Declaration of Constitutional Principles, therefore, is wholly within their rights, and I do not criticize them for this portion of their action, although I disagree with their objective.

* * *

"BUT I DEEPLY regret the action—which will have the effect of encouraging resistance to the court's orders—to which their convictions have impelled them.

"I welcome their repeated insistence that such resistance be carried on within the framework of the law.

"But I fear its effect will be to encourage those who will not be so meticulous about law and order, to discourage those who were willing to cooperate in making the adjustments to the law in reason and friendliness, and to turn the attention of many persons backwards to the old debate before the court, rather than forward to the complex but essential job of learning to live with the law so interpreted.

* * *

"CRITICISM of the court and its decision is of course both legal and proper, although in this instance I do not agree with the criticism and instead believe that the decision was correct. But as long as the decisions of the court represent the law of the land, they should be obeyed.

"The rigid inherence to earlier legal positions does not seem to me to contribute much to the solving of this problem. I hope that we can find a way, through the deep emotions and long-held traditions, to the mood of friendly and understanding and reasonable discussion, in which people of differing views work out the essential adjustments of life without breaking the fabric of law and order.

* * *

"AND I HOPE that those who urge resistance to the court's order will recognize that others of us with equal conviction and sincerity believe that the law of the land and the basic principles of our religion and democracy, as well as the clear needs of our foreign policy, require strong support of the court's rulings.

"I hope Ameria will never go backward in its march towards equality of opportunity."

REPUBLICANS, THURSDAY joined in the fight provoked by southern Democrats in Congress.

In a speech on the Senate floor, Sen. Clifford P. Case of New Jersey said:

"It is inconceivable at this point in our history that the American people should refuse to accept the determination of our Supreme Court on a question involving the interpretation of the Constitution."

He added that it was "inconceivable also that the American people can fail to recognize the essential rightness of these decisions from the standpoint of simple justice."

* * *

ON THE HOUSE side, Rep. Kenneth B. Keating of New York gave a legal and scholarly analysis of the Supreme Court decision in the school segregation cases.

The debate arising from the formal reading of the manifseto in the Senate and House on March 12 had been between northern and southern Democrats, except for an acceptance of the challenge of the southerners by Sen. William Langer (Rep., N.D.) on March 13.

"On behalf of the Abraham Lincoln-Theodore Roosevelt - Robert La Follette Sr.-George Norris faction of the Republican Party," Langer told the Senate, "I am authorized to say that we accept that challege issued yesterday by 19 Senators and 77 members of the House who issued a manifesto on the subject of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the segregation-in-public - education cases."

Senator Case called for "men of good will and moderate temper" to work out the problems involved in complying with the law.

"Despite its expressed appeal for moderation," said Case, "the effect of the manifesto can only be to incite further resistance and inflame a situation already difficult."

* * *

REP. STEWART L. UDALL (Dem., Ariz.) reminded the southerners who signed the manifesto that "moderation is a two way street, and a temperate course assumes acceptance of change and adjustments which will permit headway to be made toward our ultimate goal.

The manifesto, he said, cannot be classified as a moderate statement. "It makes no mention of change or of a transition period," he said.

"In essence, it is a call to resistance which can only harm the cause of moderation and lend new and powerful support to the die-hards and bitter-enders who oppose any change, gradual or otherwise."

* * *

SENATOR PAT McNAMARA (Dem., Mich.) said the manifesto was "so shameful that it will forever be a dark page in American history."

The use of the Senate "to proclaim and urge defiance of the dedision of the Supreme Court in the public school cases is an act that cries out for condemnation," McNamara told the Senate, adding:

"This declaration may not be outright sedition, but it certainly is subversive in its intent to undermine the integrity of the judicial system of this nation."

* * *

WHILE FAVORING the "present system of segregated schools," Rep. Harold D. Cooley of North Carolina, said he did not sign the manifesto because "I believe it to be a dangerous document, calculated to aggravate the situation and our country.

"The document is also calculated to bring all the courts of our country into disrepute."

Another reason Cooley gave for not signing the manifesto was that he did not approve either the form or substance of the document.

"I fervently hope," he said, "that in an atmosphere of tolerance and understanding, and with patience and becoming dignity, our people will meet and solve the problems which now disturb the hearts and minds of citizens everywhere."

Another North Carolinian who did not sign the document, Rep. Charles B. Deane, Democrat, said he had tried to reach "a God-guided decision."

Deane said:

"There is a solution to all of our problems. It is not who is right but ultimately what is right. It is my opinion that one group opposing another will not bring the answer.

"Instead our religious, educational, political and lay leaders should sit down together and in absolute honesty approach the question with understanding minds, seeking what is right. We must approach this question in the remembrance that the hope of humanity may rest in how we decide.

"We must also remember our country's position in world affairs involving this global struggle with Communism for the minds and wills of men."

Washington Merry-Go-Round

Advertiser P.3-b
Sun. 3-18-56
Montgomery, Ala.

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON

UNTOLD STORY behind the southern manifesto attacking the Supreme Court is that most southern senators signed it reluctantly. Virginia's Sen. Harry Byrd, whose cherubic face belies his political prowess, mainly inspired the document and wangled his Dixie colleagues into signing it.

BYRD

Chief resistance, surprisingly, came from two outspoken conservatives — Sens. Spessard Holland of Florida and Price Daniel of Texas. They succeeded in toning down the original inflammatory language. The first draft scathingly denouncing the Supreme Court's desegregation ruling as an "illegal and unconstitutional seizure of power by the nine men composing the court."

This was reduced to the simple charge that the verdict was a 'clear abuse of judicial power." Other smouldering passages that were removed included such words as "flagrant and unjustified" and "invasion of (state) sovereignty."

Holland and Daniel warned that the first draft was a declaration of anarchy. They also managed at the last minute to insert a calm paragraph acknowledging majority rule.

The manifesto idea was concocted by Byrd, who had already gone out on a limb urging "passive resistance" to the Supreme Court decree. He wanted more company on the limb, so he got busy behind the scenes.

THURMOND

Byrd easily recruited South Carolina's unrepentant Dixiecrat, Sen. Thurmond, to be his front man. Surprisingly, two southern moderates, John Stennis of Mississippi and Sam Ervin of North Carolina, eagerly joined Thurmond in drafting the first angry manifesto.

They quietly lined up what support they could, then presented the document as an accomplished fact to the rest of the Dixie senators. Southerners were faced with a tacit ultimatum that they must sign it or be branded as pro-National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. With the temper of the South what it is today, the NAACP label is political poison below the Mason-Dixie line.

Hill Signed In A Hurry

Alabama's Sen. Lister Hill, whose state is torn by racial strife, almost tripped over himself in his hurry to sign the manifesto. Another who wasted no time was Louisiana's Sen. Russell Long. Though both moderates, they are running for re-election this year.

John Sparkman of Alabama hung back. So did Smathers of Florida.

Holland and Daniel, however, led the backstage fight against the manifesto, but signed it along with the rest after watering down the language. They warned that the document, at least in its original form, challenged the constitution, itself. They also pointed out that the signers could do nothing about the Supreme Court decree, short of declaring civil war again.

Pressured by Byrd, the remaining southerners reluctantly affixed their signatures. Georgia's solemn Senator George, as dean of the Dixie bloc, unhappily acted as spokesman for the signers, though he, too, privately disapproved of such action.

HILL

Most southerners who signed the manifesto admitted privately that they were only adding fuel to an explosive situation.

Note—Only southerners who flatly refused to sign were Kefauver and Gore of Tennessee. Lyndon Johnson of Texas also did not sign. He stated that he was not asked to do so.

Adlai for Desegregation, But 'Proceed Gradually'

Herald Miami Fla.

Cannot Upset Old Traditions Overnight, He Says; Predicts Full Equality in U.S. by 1963

Wed. 2-8-56

LOS ANGELES —(AP)— Adlai Stevenson told southern California Negro leaders Tuesday that he favors desegregation, but added:

"We have to proceed gradually in these matters. You do not upset the tradition of generations overnight."

The Democratic candidate for the presidential nomination said whatever racial progress is made depends on the spirit of men, "not troops or bayonets."

In fact, he predicted that the 100th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation — Jan. 1, 1963 — could be the date of the full flowering of the spirit of equality in the United States.

His references to "troops and bayonets" came in response to a question from a Negro clergyman, the Rev. George Cofield, as to whether Stevenson would use federal might to enforce desegregation in schools and travel.

"That would be a great mistake. It would be a revival of civil war," Stevenson said. "We must go about these things gradually. It's the spirit of men that will change things for the better; it will not be troops or bayonets."

He added:

"I hope very much the North and South can live together. That's the kind of America I believe in. I don't believe in a Balkanized America. I'll do everything to bring about unity."

He was asked "what appeasement are you making to the South without hurting the Negro people?" Stevenson replied:

"I have never found it necessary to appease anyone. I'm not running for office for the honor of it . . . I'm running because I believe I can serve the Democratic Party, the party that serves all races and creeds and segments of our people."

Asked to state his views on interposition—the policy of state intervention to circumvent the Supreme Court's school desegregation order, the candidate said:

"I don't understand interposition. It sounds like nullification to me. I cannot express an opinion of what the Supreme Court might do to test interposition . . .

"But I doubt whether interposition laws can ever work. If schools are made private schools (as some Southern states are suggesting), and the government gives them money, aren't they by their very nature then public?"

Education, Stevenson repeated, is the main instrument for improving race relations.

"It's not just a matter of enforcement," he said, stressing, "we have to be very cautious that we don't provoke ugly reactions."

Stevenson said his main concern at present in the racial field is to see that the Negro is enfranchised throughout the nation.

"The basic assumption of democracy," he said, "is that you have not only the right, but the duty to vote."

Asked whether he would recommend a committee to investigate infringement on Negroes' right to vote, he remarked: "You don't need a committee to investigate whether there's been a deprivation of the right to vote in Mississippi."

Winding up his week of California campaigning, Stevenson told 150 labor leaders at a breakfast meeting that the Taft-Hartley Act needs "substantial" revision and that "right to work" laws do not meet his test of fairness.

"Laws must be fair to all — organized labor, all workers, employers and consumers," he said.

STEVENSON FAVORS SCHOOL INTEGRATION

Commercial Appeal

'Law Of The Land,' He Says —Also Hits At Nixon

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 6.—(UP) —Democratic presidential aspirant Adlai Stevenson said Monday desegregation of public schools was "the law of the land" under the Supreme Court's ruling and had to be obeyed.

Mr. Stevenson also termed efforts attributed by Democrats to Vice President Richard M. Nixon to identify the Democratic Party with communism as "one of the most shameful episodes in American history."

Memphis

Meeting the press early on a day filled with public appearances, Mr. Stevenson declared he favored integration in public schools both because it was the law and because he had been opposed to school segregation for many years.

Jerry

Mr. Stevenson made public a telegram he had sent last week end to Franklin H. Williams, San Francisco representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Williams had asked Mr. Stevenson for a positive statement on non-discrimination.

"As governor of Illinois, I twice recommended and vigorously supported fair employment practices legislation, reorganized and strengthened the Commission on Human Relations and ordered desegregation in the Illinois National Guard," the telegram read. "Schools in East St. Louis and Alton, Ill., were desegregated during my term."

Mr. Stevenson said he did not know the constitutionality of moves to bring about more vigorous action by the Department of Justice in cases such as that of Emmett Till.

STEVENSON URGES CANDIDATES BAN INTEGRATION ISSUE

Times Mon. 2-13-56

New York,

Sees No Greater Disservice Than Exploiting Tension on Mixed Schools

N.Y.

ASKS UNITY AS AN AIM

P.1

Is Against Federal Coercion as Possibly Delaying Gains by Negroes

Text of Stevenson statement is printed on Page 14.

By LAWRENCE E. DAVIES

Special to The New York Times.

PORTLAND, Ore., Feb. 12—Adlai E. Stevenson called today for removal of the desegregation issue from the Presidential campaign.

The candidate for the Democratic nomination said he could think of no greater disservice to the country than to "exploit for political ends the tensions that have followed in the wake of the Supreme Court decision" outlawing segregation in public schools.

In a statement issued here he proposed the objective of "unity, harmony and civilized relations," not the setting of "section against section or race against race."

Mr. Stevenson asserted that punitive action by the Federal Government "may actually delay the process of integration in education."

Neither the present situation nor future prospects of Negroes would be improved, he contended, "by coercive Federal action that will arm the extremists and disarm the men of goodwill in the South who, with courage and patience, have already accomplished so much."

Progress Tied to Reason

"We must proceed, as the court has said, with all reasonable speed," he went on. "But we must recognize that it is reason alone that will determine our rate of continued progress and guard against a reversal of a trend that has made the last three decades the period of greatest advancement for our Negro citizens on all fronts."

The candidate warned that in the "five or six" states where the court decision still lacked popular support "we are faced with one of the ultimate tests of democracy and of our Federal system."

"There," he said, "we are attempting to secure and protect the declared rights of local minorities in the face of the adverse views of controlling local majorities. This condition imposes special burdens on all of us—and even heavier burdens on public officials."

Mr. Stevenson's statement followed emergence of a controversy in California a week ago while he and Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee were campaigning. They are rivals for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

Some Negro leaders in that state had expressed disappointment over Mr. Stevenson's views on methods of accomplishing the Supreme Court's objectives.

The issue had followed the former Illinois Governor to Portland, where he spoke to 700 Democrats last night. When the subject of desegregation arose at a news conference yesterday he promised a formal statement today to clear up any doubt about his stand.

Times

Mr. Stevenson noted "heartening results in the short period since the court's decision." He said that in more than half of the seventeen states that had required or permitted segregation, the process of integrating the public schools had been "completed or well begun."

P. 15-C

"True integration," Mr. Stevenson asserted, "requires more than the mere presence of children of two races in the same classroom; it requires a change in the hearts and minds of men. No child can be properly educated in a hostile atmosphere."

The 1952 Democratic standard-bearer was sounded out on other civil rights problems at the news conference at which he issued his statement on desegregation. A reporter for a Negro newspaper asked:

"Governor, the opinion prevails that you are committed to gradualism on civil rights and civil rights type of issues. Since it is the consensus that even after 100 years in Mississippi any gains have been slow or maybe minute, I was wondering—I seem to have recollections that during your 1952 campaign you had to stop in the middle of the campaign to straighten out the situation with regard to the prisons there. I am wondering if you have any idea in mind of stopping this wholesale * * *."

Here Mr. Stevenson interrupted to say several questions were involved.

He listed them as desegregation of schools; the miscarriage of justice, as for example, the failure to obtain convictions in the slaying of Emmett Till, a Chicago Negro boy, in Mississippi, and the "definite violation of civil liberties—the right to vote—by economic pressures, or duress, or violence or whatever."

Then he went on to reply:

"I don't believe you can answer all of them in the same language," Mr. Stevenson said, "and that is one of the troubles —that we try to emotionalize all of them and talk in packages. They are all entirely different subjects."

He skipped over desegregation because he was handling it in a formal statement. Then he said:

"On the subject of interference with the right to vote in the South or wherever it may be, I think it is very sad that people, whoever they are, by intimidation or violence should be deprived of what not only is the right of every American citizen but is the duty of every American citizen—the duty to vote.

"I said this in very emphatic terms in New York early in December in a speech before the merger convention of the C. I. O. and the A. F. L. [Congress of Industrial Organizations and American Federation of Labor], with special reference to the South and the interference with this franchise.

"On the third subject, the violence and the miscarriage of justice in the South: nobody can view with anything except alarm and dismay and distress any miscariage of justice anywhere. The trouble is we have a Federal system—division of jurisdiction, both criminal and civil, between the states and the Federal Government.

"In cases that relate to the states only, as, for example, the Till case—the boy who was murdered in Mississippi—we have to look to the states to enforce the law. So if you ask me do I have a program as to that, I can only say to the extent that the Federal laws should be enforced; but in the case of the murder and kidnapping, it was committed wholly within the State of Mississipi."

Mr. Stevenson left for Timberline Lodge, on the slope of Mount Hood, east of Portland, to spend

ADLAI CAUTIONS ON RACE ACTION

Times-Picayune

Opposes 'Disarming Men of Good Will in South'

Mon. 2-13-56

PORTLAND, Ore., Feb. 12 (AP) — Adlai Stevenson called today for removal of the segregation issue from the "emotional coloration of a presidential contest."

P. 1

"I can think of no greater disservice to our country," he said, "than to exploit for political ends the tensions that have followed in the wake of the Supreme Court decision."

New Orleans, La.

Stevenson, campaigning to head the Democratic ticket again, urged "all reasonable speed," as the court did, in carrying out its order against segregation in the public schools.

But, on the race prejudice problem in general, he cautioned:

"Certainly we will not improve the present condition or future prospects of any Negro citizen by coercive federal action that will arm the extremists and disarm the men of good will in the South who, with courage and patience, have already accomplished so much."

It was the third—and fullest—statement by the former Illinois governor on the touchy racial issue during his current western tour.

Deplores Alabama Action

His declarations followed complaints of some California Negro leaders a week ago that they had been unable to get even "a mild public statement" from Stevenson on civil rights. Two Negro spokesmen said Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee was winning Negro voters away from the 1952 Democratic candidate in California.

Stevenson responded in Los Angeles by emphasizing his support of desegration in Southern schools. In Portland yesterday, he deplored mob violence at the University of Alabama against the first Negro student ever admitted.

Stevenson, who spoke at a Democratic fund-raising dinner here last night, issued his latest statement before leaving for two days of rest and speech-writing at a lodge on Mt. Hood, east of Portland. He plans to fly to Seattle Tuesday to resume his campaign swing.

"Recent newspaper reports about my views on civil rights," he said, "cause me to say, first of all, that I am surprised that anything I could say on that subject would still be news.

Recalls Integration Stand

"My attitude has not changed since I first had a part in integrating Negroes in the naval service 15 years ago, and my views have been reflected in my subsequent public record.

"I believe deeply that it is the first obligation of every citizen of this republic to work for the full realization of the goals stated in our original charter—freedom and equality for all Americans."

Stevenson saw heartening results in the short time since the Supreme Court's decision. He said integration has been completed or well begun in 17 states which required or permitted separate schools for white and Negro students.

'Faced with Ultimate Test'

"In the five or six states where public opinion does not yet sustain the court's decision," he said, "we are faced with one of the ultimate tests of democracy, and of our federal system."

Stevenson said it won't help reduce race prejudice "by denying to areas afflicted with it the means of improving the educational standards of all their people." He previously objected to the Powell amendment which would make desegration a condition for federal school aid.

'No Slowing Down'

Coupling this view with his warning against "coercive federal action," he said:

"I suggest no slowing down of the effort to bring to reality the American concept of full equality for all our citizens. We must proceed, as the court has said, with all reasonable speed.

"But we must recognize that it is reason alone that will determine our rate of continued progress, and guard against a reversal of the trend that has made the last three decades the period of greatest advancement for our Negro citizens on all fronts.

"I had hoped the action of the court, and the notable record of compliance that still far outweighs the instances of overt resistance, would remove this issue from the political arena and make possible its orderly resolution without the emotional coloration of a presidential contest.

"I still consider this not only possible, but essential."

Pulse of the Public

Constitution

Adlai Spoke Sensibly and Clearly in Advising Against Use of Force on Segregation Issue

Sat. 2-11-56 P. 4

Atlanta, Ga.

Fitzgerald—I see where Adlai Stevenson is again talking sense to the American people. It's very fortunate for us all that we have a man of his caliber in days like this when most anybody will sell his soul for a dollar or a vote on election day.

In a speech in California, he told the nation that the colored people should depend less on laws and legalisms and more on the spirit with which laws are accepted and put into force. I reckon that means that they should work for what they believe they're entitled to instead of being given everything. Stevenson also says he would not attempt to cut off federal aid for schools just because they did not accept integration, and wouldn't try to use federal troops to carry out the Supreme Court's edict.

How right he is! He has a clear-thinking head on his shoulders and what makes it so out of the ordinary, he has courage to tell the people where he stands. He has not taken a stand against Negroes, but is merely stating facts and good sense. What a pity that more of our Northern states friends can't understand that our problem is not one to be dealt with and settled overnight.

Three cheers for Adlai Stevenson.

KENNETH ENGLISH.

* * *

Do Women Actually Dominate All Men?

Atlanta—Since you have been deluged with anti-libel-bill letters I feel it incumbent to send one in to "take you fellows down a peg." You had a very sweet eulogy to Henry Mencken a few days ago and was really quite paradoxical. It was that gentleman who said (American credo) that if a newspaper was honest it would go out of business within a month. And Henry should know, because he was a newspaperman.

Let's face it . . . newspapers and congressmen are both dominated by businessmen . . . And the women in turn dominate them; so there you have it.

JOE GUEST.

THOUGHTFUL.

* * *

Will Liberals Stand With Supreme Court?

Atlanta—The correspondent who termed the defiance of the Supreme Court a ridiculous arrogance is absolutely right and I wish more of our liberal citizens would take a stand against the strident voices of hysteria.

INDIGNANT.

FATHER OF MILLS BROTHERS RETIRES

Courier

P. 25

HOLLYWOOD (ANP) — John (Skipper) Mills, whose bass voice added harmony to famous Mills Brothers singing unit for twenty years, has retired at 74.

Pittsburgh Pa.

Skipper joined the quartet in 1936, following the death of his oldest son, John Mills Jr. He made five European tours since then with his sons.

Post 2-18-56

According to reports, a leg ailment is the reason Skipper decided to retire. He is reportedly under doctor's orders to rest.

La Prensa Editorial Struck Near Home

Atlanta—You have performed a public service by reprinting the "La Prensa" editorial. What it says strikes very close to home. Let us pray that the recent newspaper libel law will not initiate the destruction of freedom of the press such as took place in Argentina.

JOSEPH GOLDEN.

* * *

Sen. George's Stature As Thinker Is Cited

Louisville — The past few days has seen former Gov. Talmadge roaming over the state.

That he is eyeing the Senate seat now held by Walter E. George is no secret. What is a deep and dark mystery is what has Herman got to offer the state when it comes to the broader, more complex situations that evolve themselves on the national and international scene.

As for Sen. George, age notwithstanding, his reputation as a thinker in the field of foreign policy far outshines Dulles and the State Department.

Race Issue Out, Adlai Asserts

Daily World

Tues. 2-14-56

Atlanta, Ga.

PORTLAND, Ore. — (INS) — Adlai E. Stevenson declared Monday that he could think of "no greater disservice to our country" than to exploit for political purposes Southern racial tensions which have followed the Supreme Court de-segregation ruling.

P. 1

PUNITIVE ACTION

The Democratic presidential contender added: "and as a practical matter we must recognize that punitive action by the federal government may actually delay the process of integration in education."

Stevenson issued a formal statement which said in part:

"In the five or six states where public opinion does not yet sustain the court's decision, we are faced of the adverse views of controlling local majorities.

POLITICAL ENDS

"This condition imposes special burdens on all of us—and even heavier burdens on public officials. I can think of no greater disservice to our country than to exploit for political ends the tensions that have followed in the wake of the Supreme Court decision.

"Our purpose must be to attain unity, harmony and civilized relations, not to set section against section or race against race. And as a practical matter we must recognize that punitive action by the Federal government may actually delay the process of integration in education.

Adlai Favors Going Slow

Post-Herald

Birmingham, Ala.

3 Demo Candidates Take Stand On Barring Of Negro At U. Of A.

Mon. 2-13-56

FROM PRESS REPORTS

The young Birmingham Negro woman who was enrolled at the University of Alabama and then "excluded" from the campus is fast becoming a national issue.

The three principal candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination this year are taking stands—and not similar ones—concerning the woman, Autherine Lucy, and the University's action in barring her from classes.

P. 1

Adlai Stevenson, chief contender for the Democratic Party's nomination, Sunday reiterated his desire to have the federal government go slow on the racial integration issue in the South, but one of his probable adversaries at the party's national convention indicated he would like to throw the book at states refusing to desegregate their schools.

Averell Harriman, governor of New York, took issue with Stevenson and came out for cutting off Federal funds to all public schools that refuse to integrate.

The nub of that argument is legislation now before Congress to provide Federal money for public school construction. Rep. Adam Clayton Powell of New York City, Negro Democrat, has promised he'll try to amend the legislation to deny money to schools that do not allow mixed attendance.

Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee, also out for the Democratic nomination, has refused to say how he would vote on such an amendment. He has said that if President Eisenhower and the courts "do their duty," the amendment isn't necessary.

In Portland, Ore., Sunday, Stevenson called for removal of the segregation issue from "the emotional coloration of a presidential contest."

"I can think of no greater disservice to our country," he said, "than to exploit for political ends the tensions that have followed in the wake of the Supreme Court decision (that segregation is unconstitutional)."

He said he favored "all reasonable speed" in carrying out the court's order against segregation, and pointed out that some progress has been made toward integration in many of the 17 states which recently required or permitted schools for white and Negro students.

"In the five states where public opinion not yet sustain the court's order," Stevenson said, "we are faced with one of the ultimates of democracy, and of democratic system."

Harriman, on the other hand, declared for immediate enforcement of the desegregation order, and for prosecution by federal authorities of those who have "violated the law" by keeping Autherine Lucy from her classes at the University of Alabama.

Post-Herald

The 26-year-old Birmingham Negro was enrolled as a student at Alabama on Jan. 31, in compliance with a federal judge's order. She attended classes three days, and finally was "excluded" from the campus by order of the University trustees after demonstrations against her mounted to riot fury.

P. 13

The board of trustees' action was taken, it said, for the woman's protection and that of other students and faculty members.

Miss Lucy still is enrolled at Alabama, but is excluded from the campus.

Harriman declared he is "unhappy" that President Eisenhower took the Alabama controversy so lightly in his last press conference.

Mon. 2-13-56

"Those people ought to be brought to justice and the attorney general should be active in this case—and I haven't seen the activity which I think the situation demands," the New Yorker said.

Stevenson has mentioned 1965 as a possible target date for a gradual settlement of the school racial crisis.

Harriman thinks that is too slow: "I think the executive branch of the government should see to it that the orders and decisions of the Supreme Court are enforced.

". . . I don't think it's up to the federal government to talk about 10 years on that sort of thing."

He was asked if "we ought to wait until '65?"

"No," Harriman replied, "I do not think so at all."

Stevenson also said this weekend that he was confident the situation at Alabama will be patched up and that Autherine Lucy will be allowed to return to class.

On the quickening political scene, Alabama's Sen. John Sparkman, declared he thinks Stevenson is the strongest Democratic presidential hopeful in the South, and that he doesn't think Eisenhower will run again. He predicted a "merry fight" for the GOP nomination.

Sparkman was Stevenson's running mate in 1952.

In Washington, GOP Chairman Leonard Hall Sunday offered to give $1000 to charity if it could be proved that Vice President Richard Nixon ever called former President Harry Truman a traitor. Truman said recently Nixon called him a "traitor" in 1952 campaign speeches.

Nixon himself apparently is staying aloof from any efforts to build him up for the presidency while Eisenhower's 1956 intentions are unknown.

Although he's in a strong position to bid for the nomination if Eisenhower doesn't run, friends of Nixon say he has neither encouraged nor authorized any moves in his behalf.

Nixon will receive an award for "outstanding service to the nation" at a Republican Lincoln Day dinner in New York tonight.

Supreme Court ruling correct, Adlai says

News P. 4-9 Wed. 3-14-56

CHICAGO, March 14—(AP)—Adlai E. Stevenson says the nation must follow the course "so clearly marked out" by the Supreme Court to eliminate racial segregation in the schools.

B'ham, Ala.

"I do not agree that the Supreme Court exceeded its proper authority in its rulings on school segregation," Stevenson said yesterday. "I think rather that these rulings are correct interpretations of the constitution and the conscience of the nation."

Stevenson commented on the pledge of 97 Southern senators and representatives to press all legal means to reverse the court's order in a statement on the eve of his return today to Minnesota, where he is battling Sen. Estes Kefauver in the Democratic presidential primary.

"The fact that the list of signers of the 'declaration of constitutional principles' includes distinguished, responsible leaders of a great region of our country is a reflection of the gravity of the racial tensions that have arisen in the South," Stevenson said.

"IT IS VERY important to recognize that these Southern leaders urge that violence and extreme measures be avoided.

"It remains my own firm belief that the differences which now divide us can be resolved through legal processes, and in accord with the essential principles recognized by the Supreme Court.

"We must proceed along the course that has been so clearly marked out.

"The immediate task is to reduce the tensions that have already produced such shameful consequences. That burden rests on all of us, North and South, white and Negro, Republican and Democrat."

Estes, Adlai And The Race Issue In California

Advertiser Wed. 2-8-56

CALIFORNIA'S June 5 winner-take-all primary is beginning to shape up as a contest between Kefauver and Stevenson for the Negro vote. They can count on the South's amiability. They know it and so does the GOP.

P. 4 A

There are many thousands of Negro voters in California. Until the last few days, it seemed that Stevenson had the situation well in hand, with 80% of the California Democratic party's leaders pledged to him. Then on Feb. 5, Kefauver allowed that he was more liberal than Stevenson on the race question. His statement left the im-

The Kefauver move was generally regarded as a setback for Stevenson. And, with 68 Democratic convention votes at the California Democratic council convention with a declaration for equal rights for a federal stake, Stevenson was getting worried. economic and poltical citizens and his support of mob violence. He statute to deal with mob violence. He What had particularly nettled the spoke out against the slaying of Emmett Till in Mississippi as a "horrible murder," a truism he threw in to add to the total impression of himself as a champion of minority rights.

★

KEFAUVER won loud applause from assemblyman from the 17th District of San Francisco. Rumford said he was unhappy with Stevenson's stand on the civil rights issue. Unless Adlai strengthened his stand, Rumford said, "I'll have no alternative but to switch to Senator Kefauver."

swer to a Lincoln Day speech yesterday at Springfield, Ill., by Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Assn. for The Advancement of Colored People.

Tues. 2-14-56

"I agree with Mr. Wilkins," Stevenson continued in a statement made at this mountain lodge where he is speech writing, "that this problem can be solved by good will, good deeds and with understanding and forbearance. That is exactly what I have been saying." Wilkins used those words in his comment and called too for "determination to obey the law . . ."

Stevenson Denies Advising Negroes To Forego Rights

Advertiser P. 1-8

TIMBERLINE LODGE, Ore., Feb. 13 (AP)—Adlai Stevenson said today he was "surprised" that a Negro leader had charged him with advising Negroes not to claim their rights or to do so gradually.

Montgomery, Ala.

This, he said, "I have never suggested." But, he added, "claiming rights does not necessarily secure them. That is our problem."

Stevenson's comment was in answer to a Lincoln Day speech yesterday at Springfield, Ill., by Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Assn. for The Advancement of Colored People.

"I agree with Mr. Wilkins," Stevenson continued in a statement made at this mountain lodge where he is speech writing, "that this problem can be solved by good will, good deeds and with understanding and forbearance. That is exactly what I have been saying." Wilkins used those words in his comment and called too for "determination to obey the law . . ."

Evidence of Kefauver's appeal to Negro voters was the turnabout of the Rev. L. Sylvester Odom, pastor of an Oakland church and president of the Oakland NAACP. The Rev. Odom was seen wearing a Stevenson button when he went into a private conference with Kefauver. When he came out, he was wearing a Kefauver button. Rev. Odom said Kefauver's "basic appeal" met the NAACP's goals and objectives and he had thus switched allegiance.

Ala.

Another warning to Stevenson was sounded by William B. Rumford, Negro pression with Negro leaders that he was in favor of a stronger position in favor of federal intervention in the South than Stevenson.

aspirations of a few. Both have opposed any integration clause in the bill which, they rightly conclude, would be fatal to the bill's chances of passage.

★

IN REPLY to an NAACP questionnaire asking assurances that "civil rights issues will not be sacrificed or compromised, by you for the sake of Democratic Party unity during or after the campaign," Stevenson pointed to his record as governor of Illinois. During his term, he said, he vigorously supported FEPC (fair employment practices legislation) and had worked to end segregation in Illinois.

However, he again said that he was unwilling to go as far as many Northern politicians on statutory measures to punish Southern states who have not conformed to the Supreme Court segregation decision.

★

A COUPLE of days after Kefauver's bid for the Negro vote, Stevenson assured a Democratic Party group: "There are no half-caste Americans in my lexicon." Later, he said he supports desegregation in Southern schools because "it is the law of the land—so enunciated by the Supreme Court."

But again he opposed any integration proviso to federal aid to education:

"The important thing is education. Obsolete heritages like discrimination and segregation will yield quickest of all to the spread of education."

All of which, relatively speaking, puts Adlai alongside Ike as a moderate on the race issue; Kefauver, senator from a Confederate state, somewhere near the ADA and NAACP position.

★

WHAT we see here once again is that all the presidential candidates of both parties will compete as champions of race mixing.

They compete for the Negro vote but not the vote of the white South. Why? Because the Negro is an independent, whereas the South is going to vote Democratic because grandpap did.

STEVENSON DEPLORES SEGREGATION ISSUE

Commercial Appeal

Calls For Its Removal In Presidential Contest

PORTLAND, Ore., Feb. 12.—(AP) —Adlai Stevenson called Sunday for removal of the segregation issue from the "emotional coloration of a presidential contest." Mon. 2-13-56

"I can think of no greater disservice to our country," he said, "than to exploit for political ends the tensions that have followed in the wake of the Supreme Court decision." P. 1

Mr. Stevenson, campaigning to head the Democratic ticket again, urged "all reasonable speed," as the court did, in carrying out its order against segregation in the public schools.

But, on the race prejudice problem in general, he cautioned: Memphis

"Certainly we will not improve the present condition or future prospects of any Negro citizen by coercive Federal action that will arm the extremists and disarm the men of good will in the South who, with courage and patience, have already accomplished so much." Sun.

It was the third and fullest—statement by the former Illinois governor on the touchy racial issue during his current Western tour in quest of the Democratic presidential nomination.

His declarations followed complaints of some California Negro leaders a week ago that they had been unable to get even "a mild public statement" from Mr. Stevenson on civil rights. Two Negro spokesmen said Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee was winning Negro voters away from the 1952 Democratic candidate in California.

Griffin Hits Rights Plan; Ike Delays

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 3-29-56

The Eisenhower administration Wednesday delayed presentation to Congress of a civil rights program already meeting Southern opposition.

Sen. George in Washington branded such a program as dangerous while in Atlanta it was denounced by Gov. Griffin as a brazen attack on liberties and freedoms.

MEETINGS CANCELED

The administration canceled, without explanation, two meetings at which the proposed program was to have been explained to newsmen and a group of House members.

Justice Department officials reportedly were making changes in the language of the program which Congress had expected to receive about March 1. The delay apparently means the lawmakers won't receive the proposals until they return April 9 from their Easter recess.

Gov. Griffin said Wednesday that the people of the South are shocked at the "so-called 'civil rights' program prepared by U.S. Atty. Gen. Brownell.

"They constitute the most brazen attack on the liberties and freedoms of the people of this country ever attempted in three generations, he declared.

SEES INQUISITION

Griffin said the Brownell proposals would:

"1. Create a special antisegregation inquisition with unlimited subpoena powers to harass and intimidate American citizens everywhere.

"2. Create a special 'civil rights' Gestapo . . . with hordes of storm troopers and secret police . . . with the sinister purpose of regulating every business and every action by every individual.

"3. Authorize the NAACP to bring civil actions in federal court for money damages against anyone whom it has a fancied grievance."

The governor said that "this is the same old Fair Employment Practices Commission with all its vicious aspects concealed in modern dress."

Sen. George said it would be a "dangerous thing" for the Justice Department or the Eisenhower administration to present a civil rights program to Congress at this time and expressed hope that no action of the kind will be taken.

He withheld further comment until the program actually is submitted.

Although the senator did not elaborate on his statement, he evidently was referring to turmoil that has been raised in some Southern states over the school segregation question.

Sen. Russell was enroute from Washington to his home at Winder and could not be reached for comment.

On the House side, where a bill on the subject has been approved by a Judiciary subcommittee, Rep. E. L. (Tic) Forrester of Leesburg has been successful in blocking action. Tuesday he forced the committee to delay a report on a bill sponsored by Rep. Celler (D-NY), until the Department of Justice has presented its views.

Racial Tensions Held No Barrier

Times-Picayune Sat. 3-31-56

ATLANTA, March 30 (AP) — Reports that racial tension is making industry wary of moving South were called "preposterous" and "hogwash" here by persons who make it their business to encourage such moves.

E. A. Yates Jr., manager of the Georgia Power Co. Industrial Development Division, declared "this is just propaganda — a bunch of hogwash."

Walter Cates, executive vice president of the Georgia Chamber of Commerce, termed the reports "preposterous." Cates said he had been in the business of attracting new industry to Georgia for 14 years "and I've never heard the segregation issue used as an objection to locating a plant in the South."

Ex-Georgia chief urges united front for states' rights

News P.16 Fri. 3-30-56

BUENA VISTA, Ga., March 30 — (AP) — Herman Talmadge has called for Georgians to organize and present a united front on segregation and states rights.

The former governor, referring to the U. S. Supreme Court decision on racial segregation in public schools, told an audience of about 500 at a Marion County States Rights Council meeting yesterday that "no authority can force people to do something against their will."

Talmadge said, "Georgia people will continue to run Georgia regardless of what the Supreme Court does and says."

Speaking at the same meeting, Leonard Wilson, who was expelled recently from the University of Alabama, said politicians in Alabama who have not taken a positive stand on segregation "won't be in office much longer."

Negro Scouts To Get Pool

Constitution Sun. 5-13-56

Work will begin May 21 on the first Boy Scout swimming pool for Negroes in the Atlanta Area Council.

Thomas T. Flagler Jr., chairman of the council's camping committee, said the contract for the 30-by-70-foot pool was let Friday. The pool will be installed at Camp J. K. Orr, located about three miles north of Lovejoy.

It is to be completed in time for use on the opening day of camp, July 8.

Funds to build the pool were donated by organizations and businessmen.

O. B. Gorman, Atlanta area Scout executive, said the pool is the first one built by the Boy Scouts since the one at Camp Bert Adams in 1926.

Gift of Georgia Flags for Senators Sets Off Subversive Scare Up East

Constitution Wed. 3-21-56 P.1 Atlanta, Ga.

Two of Georgia's new state flags—intended for Georgia's two U.S. senators—gave Massachusetts state troopers a scare last week, it was disclosed here Tuesday by Frank Etheridge, Atlanta real estate man.

The flags, gifts for Senators George and Russell, were in a brief case left behind in a Springfield hotel by Etheridge, his partner, Donald K. Vanneman, and an associate. Finding the flags, which resembled Confederate banners, hotel officials called police. The officials apparently suspected the flags were associated with some subversive plot.

The Atlantans were halted on a highway and questioned 45 minutes by troopers. Explanations followed and the men were released. Etheridge said he had the flags mailed from the Springfield hotel to a hotel in Washington, D.C., where he will get them in a few days and present them to the senators.

Spencers, of Georgia, moving here

Tribune P.13 Fri. 5-4-56 Los Angeles

Los Angeles will soon be enriched by the residence of frequent Summer visitors the Spencers of Columbus, Ga., who have elected to move here this Summer.

Miss Ethel Spencer, who has long favored Los Angeles, will retire from her duties as an algebra teacher at Spencer senior high school, Coumbus, which was named for her family, and move to Los Angeles where she has already purchased a home.

She will be accompanied by her sister, Miss Annie Mae Spencer, and her brother, Dr. William H. Spencer, Jr., who will reside here permanently, too.

The Misses Spencer have spent Summers here where they have found many friends. Their decision to make Los Angeles their home, long the wish of Miss Ethel Spencer, was, the Tribune was told,, occasioned by the current racial strife in the South, which has cut across socalled 'class lines' and made it impossible to live in security and dignity in that part of the country.

The recent fatal shooting of Dr. Thomas Brewer, of Columbus, by a white merchant, in a dispute which had civil rights and Dr. Brewer's long militancy as its basis, was cited to the Tribune by informed circles as at the basis of the decision of many well-placed southerners to pull up roots and settle elsewhere.

Dr. Spencer, Jr. is a dentist by profession although in his career he has favored his avocation, journalism, writing on the staff of the Columbus World.

Decision Dodgers Hit Anti-Segregationists

Daily Herald Thurs. 5-15-56 P. 1

Georgia Educator To Be Stripped Of Title, Pension

Atlanta, Ga.

A prominent Georgia educator was stripped of an honorary title Wednesday and was threatened with losing his pension for his stand on segregation matters.

The University system board of Regents voted unanimously to take away Dr. Guy H. Wells' title of President emeritus of the Georgia State College for women.

Dr. Wells had been president of the institution for 19 years and the honorary title was bestowed on him shortly after he resigned in 1954. The Regents offered no explanation for its action.

At the same time, the state board of Education adopted a resolution calling for the discontinuation of the Educator's pension "if legally possible." Pensions are disbursed by the state teachers retirement system an organization independent of the Education Board.

Dr. Wells, executive secretary of the Georgia Council on interracial cooperation, has been engaged in a speaking tour in which he has criticized racial segregation.

In voting to cut off Dr. Wells' pension, James E. Peters, Vice chairman of the Board asked:

"Do you think it's right to pay a man a pension to go around the State lambasting State Government and our way of life?"

Of his dismissal Dr. Wells had this to say:

"I regret that my former employers and friends have taken this action against me without giving me an opportunity to be heard. The account of the Augusta meeting allegedly prepared by one Mr. C. C. Prescott and published in the Augusta Courier is completely inaccurate and distorted. Any responsible inquiry among other persons present will bear this out.

"I have made many speeches upon invitation to civic clubs over the state to discuss our racial problems. In every case I have been well received and have had expressions of appreciation from the Rotary Club and others addressed. I have advocated Negro and white leaders in local communities coming together in goodwill to resolve differences and work for agreement.

"I have nothing to retract or apologize for and I am confident that the good people of Georgia will sustain my position."

No Stand On Integration Says Group

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 5-18-56

The president of the Georgia League of Women Voters said Thursday the organization has taken no position on racial integration.

Mrs. Walter Paschall, state president, told the League Council meeting in Atlanta that "the only stand the League has taken is one in favor of preserving the public schools."

She said that taking a stand on segregation is not within the province of the League Council, adding:

"Our only reasons for studying it are in terms of whether segregation is a school problem such as finances, school transportation or other matters."

Top officers of the Atlanta branch of the women voters recently resigned when the chapter failed to approve a resolution opposing admission of Negroes to membership

Racial Curb Plan Outlined By Talmadge

Constitution P. 1 Mon. 5-21-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Herman Talmadge Sunday outlined a plan for congressional action to maintain segregation.

He said he would offer a measure to limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court if he is elected to the U.S. Senate.

Talmadge was the guest of WSB-TV Press Gallery, sponsored by The Atlanta Journal.

The former governor said the Constitution explicitly gives to Congress the power to regulate the jurisdiction of the Court.

"The Supreme Court recently knocked out the sedition laws of 42 states," Talmadge said. "This is entirely contrary of the law as I understand it, and I think there are millions of people throughout the nation who agree."

The plan to curb the court's power has a good chance for passage, Talmadge asserted.

Talmadge said he was "delighted" Sen. George decided not not to run for reelection to the Senate. He said he felt it important for a politician not to stay out of politics for long, indicating he probably intended to run against the senior Senator regardless of his plan regarding retirement.

Talmadge said, however, that he did not anticipate the senator's withdrawal from the race.

He also declared that his appointment of former State Highway Chairman Jim Gillis as his campaign chairman did not indicate a split with Gov. Marvin Griffin. Gillis resigned under pressure when Griffin became governor.

Talmadge denied that he made any effort to get Griffin elected. "If anyone asked me who I was going to vote for, I just told him Marvin Griffin," he said. He said he did not call supporters in the state on the night before the election, asking them to support Griffin.

Unanimity in support of the States Rights Councils was called a sure way for the people to avert integration in Georgia. "If we stand firm and organize militantly, it (desegregation) won't happen here," Talmadge said.

He reiterated his opposition to technical and economic foreign aid and support of military aid.

Journal City Editor Don Carter and Editorial Associate Luke Green questioned Talmadge. Editor James Saxon Childers was moderator.

To Balk Integration Ruling

Herald Tribune P. 10

Georgia Leases 9 Parks To Private Citizens

New York Thurs. 4-19-56

ATLANTA, Apr. 17 (AP)—State Parks Director Roy Chalker said today he has leased nine Georgia state parks to private citizens in a move to safeguard segregation. The leases were negotiated for twelve months under recent "private park" legislation which eliminated necessity for advertising for bids.

Mr. Chalker explained that he and Gov. Marvin Griffin signed the leases for the parks at an average price of $2,000 a year. He said he planned to lease two or three more parks.

While the transfer from public to private operations was designed primarily to try to preserve segregation, Mr. Chalker said, the move also is expected to prove economical. He predicted Georgia would save 33 to 50 per cent of its operational costs.

The Georgia Legislature recently passed a law authorizing short-term leasing of the parks as a method of avoiding Federal court integration decisions aimed at public parks. However, a Federal court in Virginia recently held that Negroes should be admitted to state-owned parks, regardless of whether the parks were operated by the state itself or by citizens leasing the parks.

George Act Laid to Segregation

Jewish Chronicle Thurs. 5-24-56

BOSTON, May 23 (AP)—The Washington representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said in a talk here prosegregation groups in Southern states have control not only of their state's representative in Congress, but also over many of the bills and treaties passed by the federal government.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP Washington bureau, said a recent example of his point was the decision of Georgia's Sen. George not to run for re-election against ex-Gov. Herman Talmadge.

Mitchell said George does not "dare" to run because to win he "would have been required to prove that he is just as much in favor of racial segregation as the meanest backwoods politician in his state." He suggested the senator was "too old and perhaps too dignified to do that kind of job."

Mitchell's remarks were in an address prepared for the annual meeting of the American Unitarian Association. He spoke under sponsorship of the Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice.

Talmadge would limit high court on racial decrees

Atlanta Ga. Journal Mon. 5-21-56

ATLANTA, May 21—(AP)—Herman Talmadge says he feels there is a good chance that Congress may pass his plan to maintain segregation by limiting the jurisdiction of the U. S. Supreme Court.

The former Georgia governor, who is campaigning for the Senate seat Sen. George (D., Ga.) is relinquishing in January, said yesterday the Constitution explicitly gives to Congress the power to regulate the jurisdiction of the court.

"The Supreme Court recently knocked out the sedition laws of 42 states. This is entirely contrary to the law as I understand it, and I think there are millions of people throughout the nation who agree."

Talmadge also said that unanimity in support of the states' rights councils was a sure way for the people of Georgia to avert integration. "If we stand firm and organize militantly, it (desegregation) won't happen here," he said.

SPEAKING BRIEFLY on other subjects he made these points:

1. He is "delighted" that Sen. George is not running for re-election.

2 He is opposed to technical and economic foreign aid but favors support of military aid.

3 He is "not completely happy" with Stevenson, Harriman or Kefauver, "but Gov. Stevenson is definitely my choice of the three."

Pro-Segregationist Pastor Draws Sparks From Johnson

Courier Pittsburgh Pa. Sat. 9-8-56

ATLANTA, Ga.—The Rev. B. Joseph Johnson, pastor, Greater Mount Calvary Baptist Church, has charged the position of a local white Methodist minister on segregation as "shocking and distressing."

He was highly critical of the recent sermon of Dr. Charles L. Allen, pastor of Grace Methodist Church.

Sec. 2

Pointing out that Dr. Allen's "mind has been disciplined in theology, sociology and philosophy," the Rev. Mr. Johnson expressed shock that he could endorse segregation in any form.

Expressing as unbelievable the position taken, the Rev. Mr. Johnson said: "I expect almost anything from a politician, but when a minister, who is supposed to be God's apostle of truth and light justifies segregation in a sermon to his people, it's time for the nation to bow its head in shame and repentance.

■

ANY ATTEMPT to justify segregation of race is a repudiation of the Christian faith," he said.

In a discussion on brotherhood the Rev. Mr. Johnson questioned how "any feeling of brotherhood can exist between races when one race is segregated, exploited, treated unfairly, and denied its full constitutional rights."

Further it was emphasized that "a church that excludes any race from its worship, excludes Christ," declared the Rev. Mr. Johnson. A church that isn't big enough for all of God's children isn't big enough for God, he said.

■

"THE SUN is too high and our people are too intelligent, for any one to try to impress them that God is partial, that Christianity is racial, and that the Bible is prejudiced," the Rev. Mr. Johnson said.

He pointed out that "every conscientious Christian and every sincere minister knows that segregation in any form is unconstitutional, undemocratic, un-Christian, unholy and ungodly—it cannot stand."

Responsibility for Negro text distribution is denied

News Birmingham Ala. Wed. 9-5-56

ATLANTA, Sept. 5—(AP)—Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook of Georgia says his office mailed out abstracts of an alleged speech concerning intimate interracial relations "without my knowledge."

Cook said yesterday he had stopped distribution "as soon as I discovered it was being sent out."

EUGENE COOK

The attorney general made the statement in a letter to the editor of The Columbus Ledger-Enquirer after the newspaper charged in an editorial Sunday that the report was "spurious" and "trashy, inflammatory" propaganda.

Cook said he "doubted its (the text's authenticity" and filed it away. "Without my knowledge one of my staff members assumed it was authentic and proceeded to distribute some of the copies along with a compilation of our state segregation laws," he said. He declined to identify the staff member.

THE MIMEOGRAPHED sheet mailed by the law department was headed: "The Ultimate Aim of The NAACP—below is an extract from a taped speech by Roosevelt Williams, a professor at Howard University (for Negroes) in Washington, D. C., delivered at a meeting of the NAACP in Jackson, Miss."

The purported extract dealt with personal relations between white persons and Negroes. The Ledger-Enquirer said it had made inquiries at Howard University and found that there is not now nor has there ever been a "Prof. Roosevelt Williams" there.

Cook said he telephoned Robert P. Patterson, executive director of the Mississippi Citizens' Council at Greenwood, Miss., and quoted Patterson as saying "we never claimed it (the speech) to be authentic" and that he got a tape recording of it "third or fourth" hand.

The attorney general said Patterson told him the speech allegedly was made at a small Negro church somewhere in South Mississippi shortly before the Arkansas election two years ago.

All Men Compromise, But in Different Ways

Constitution p. 4 Thurs. 8-30-56 Atlanta Ga.

Atlanta—It appears that letters have been pouring into The Constitution with all intent of whacking violently the two ears of Dr. Charles Allen.

From the names of the letters, I gather that most of the scribes are members of a minority race. These people are naturally upset when they see something by a writing minister that subscribes to the doctrine of segregation.

However, if these folks are realists, they should know by now that all men compromise.

Let's not jump upon Dr. Allen. If he had championed the entrance of Negroes into the Grace Methodist Church, his congregation would have tossed him out into the snowy street.

ROBERT RYAN.

Gwinnett Teacher Says Job Hinges on Segregation Vow

Constitution Sat. 9-8-56 Atlanta Ga.

A Georgia schoolteacher reported Friday that she faces loss of her job for refusing to sign a statement that she does not believe in racial integration.

She is Mrs. Colleen Marie Wiggins, 26, former Methodist missionary to Hawaii and now a seventh grade teacher at Bethesda School, near Lawrenceville in Gwinnett County. Her husband, James, is a divinity student at Emory University and is pastor of the Bethesda Methodist Church.

She said the move against her goes back to last May when she told her history class that she would not object to teaching white and Negro pupils together "if I were in a situation where there was integration."

MADE RECORDING

It was only after she had made a tape recording for the trustees of what she said to the class that her contract was renewed for this year, she related.

Then, last week, she added, County Supt. R. S. Wilbanks presented the statement for her to sign. She was told, she said, that the statement was suggested by James S. Peters of Manchester, vice chairman of the State Board of Education.

Neither Peters nor Wilbanks would comment. However, a Board of Education source said he expects the board to be petitioned at its Sept. 17 meeting to fire the teacher.

MAKES STAND

Mrs. Wiggins said she considered resigning but upon consideration decided to fight for her job.

She added that she respects the laws of the state and has not taught integration but feels that no person has a right to question her beliefs.

She said that during the discussion last May she told her pupils that in her opinion the South is not ready for integration. She also said that in answer to a question whether she would object to her little girl marrying a Negro she replied that if "she married someone she loved and respected and who was a good and honest citizen and all the other things that go along with marriage, the race would not matter, Negro or otherwise."

"But," she emphasized, "as far as saying I want my little girl to marry a Negro, I do not."

She also stressed that she was giving her personal opinions only before the class.

At that time, she said, she was teaching in the high school instead of the grammar school as at present.

BAN FOOTBALL BY NEGROES ON WHITE FIELD

Dallas Times Herald

Summerville, Ga., Nov. 29 (AP)—The football field of the white high school was ordered padlocked tonight against use by two Negro high school teams following a protest by a purported Ku Kluz Klan leader.

Phil. 11-30-56

The game, between teams from Lafayette and Summerville Negro high schools, had been arranged for tonight by the Summerville Junior Chamber of Commerce to raise funds for the white high school band.

Chicago Ills.

Charles Farrar, junior chamber president, said his group voted last night to go ahead with the game despite the protest. However, the county board of education today declined to permit use of the field. Farrar said his organization would protest action of the board and the Klan spokesman.

Talmadge Asks Tidal Wave Vote

Constitution
Aug. 9-4-56
Atlanta Ga.

Former Gov. Herman Talmadge coasted into the last fortnight of his U.S. senatorial campaign Monday night with a statewide television pledge to fight for the consitutional rights of the people.

As a senator, Talmadge said, he would work for legislation curbing the jurisidiction of the U. S. Supreme Court and establishing minimum qualifications for its justices.

He declared he would resist all attempts to destroy state sovereignty, would support free interterprise and would oppose federal interference with state and local officers.

PROBLEMS DIFFER

Talmadge spoke over the first statewide television network in Georgia history.

"I will fight to put the Supreme Court back to ruling on the law instead of trying to legislate or to amend the Constitution," he said.

Talmadge said the problems of Georgia are different from those of Pennsylvania, Hawaii and Puerto Rico— "and people on a local level are better qualified to run their own government."

FIRST OF 3 TALKS

In this first of a series of three 30-minute network telecasts between now and the Sept. 12 primary Talmadge again called for "a mighty tidal wave of ballots" to send him to the Senate.

He had made such a request in opening his campaign on July 4 at Rome. And again Monday night he said that as nearly as unanimous victory as possible is needed so "the whole nation will know that Herman Talmadge is waging Georgia's fight for constitutional government."

A vigorous crusade is necessary on the national level, he declared, "if we are to save our form of government for ourselves and for future generations."

"If you send me to Washington I will fight your battles night and day against all of the insidious efforts to impair or abrogate the constitutional rights of our people, no matter from what quarter these attacks may come."

But warning his listeners against complacency, Talmadge said, "if I am to carry your flag, I must go to the Senate with the backing and support of all the people of Georgia."

Constitution

Talmadge opened his address on a Labor Day theme, praising the "constructive attitude" of Georgia labor and declaring that labor's right to organize and bargain collectively is fundamental to the free enterprise system.

P. 6

"Hard-won but deserved gains of the working men and women must be guarded jealously and made an enduring part of the national conscience," he asserted.

In a panel discussion prior to the candidate's speech, five Georgians gave their reasons for supporting Talmadge. Hamilton Holt, Macon business executive and past president of Kiwanis International, praised Talmadge for a "sound, businesslike administration as governor."

Georgians, Sheppard said, are looking to Talmadge "to restore some good common horse sense in our dealings with other countries . . . and to represent Georgia in Washington, not Washington in Georgia."

Mrs. Fred L. Hayes, Toccoa civic leader, and Charles Cobb Jr., Atlanta engineer and president of the 1956 senior class at Georgia Tech, also spoke in Talmadge's behalf. And former State Highway Chairman Jim L. Gillis Sr., predicted Talmadge "will carry every county in the state and virtually all of the 1,700-odd militia districts."

The program originated from Station WSB-TV, Atlanta, and was carried also by WAGA-TV and WLW-A, Atlanta; WALB-TV, Albany; WRDW-TV and WJBF-TV, Augusta; WRBL-TV and WDAK-TV, Columbus; WMAZ-TV, Macon; WROM-TV, Rome; WTOC-TV and WSAV-TV, Savannah; and WCBC-TV, Charleston, S.C.

Manifesto Issued By 96 Solons

Call Ref
Srln 3-16-56

Seek 'Lawful' Means To Reverse Segregation Ruling

By JAMES LEE
Jackson City, Ms.

WASHINGTON. (INS) — Bitter debate crackled in the senate Monday over a manifesto issued by 19 southern senators and 77 representatives pledging a "lawful" battle to upset the Supreme Court ruling against racial segregation in public schools.

Veteran Sen. Walter F. George (D) Ga., touched off the verbal fireworks by reading the manifesto which blasted the 1954 high court decision as an unconstitutional "abuse of judicial power."

The manifesto was drawn up by a powerful bloc of southern senators and House members.

George said that the "increasing gravity of the situation" following the high court's ruling and the "peculiar stress in sections of the country where this decision has created many difficulties" led the lawmakers to prepare their statement.

The Georgia senator's statement brought an immediate response from several senators favoring integration and a new attack on the Supreme Court from another southerner.

Sen. Richard Neuberger (D) Ore., declared that President Eisenhower should call a White House conference of governors and members of Congress to attack the critical situation raised by opposition to the Supreme Court decision.

He said: "The nation is presented with a choice between anarchy and the rule of law . . . the President must intrude his great influence and authority."

After George read the document, Sen. Strom Thurmond (D) S. C., launched a new attack on what he termed "the dangerous" decision of the Supreme Court. He declared "we must oppose to the end every attempt to encroach on the rights of the people."

Thurmond said he rejected the theory that the Supreme Court "has control over local public schools" and said the southern manifesto marked an "historic" and "most significant" event.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D) Ore., who favors school integration, asserted that southern reaction to the court's ruling means that "an historic debate must take place" on the senate floor on the segregation issue.

Morse said that those who favor the doctrine of interposition want to put themselves "above the constitution." He declared: "If they want to do it, let them sponsor a constitutional amendment to deny rights to colored people and see how far they would get with the American people."

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D) Minn., said he hopes Congress will let the courts handle the segregation issue. He urged tolerance at this time and said that nothing would be worse than trouble between the races or for the "North and South to become divided."

He called on governors and others in public life to stand for equal treatment under the law for all and said: "If we persist in the cause of denying people equal rights, we will bring down the wrath of the world upon us."

The 19 senators and 77 House members who joined in the declaration blasted the court's ruling for planting "hatred and suspicion" in the field of racial relations.

Terming the decision ordering an end to segregated schools a "clear abuse of judicial power," the congressmen asserted it "is destroying the amicable relations between the white and Negro races . . ."

The statement accused members of the court of having exercised "naked judicial power and substituted their personal political and social ideas for the established law of the land."

The lawmakers appealed to southerners "not to be provoked by the agitators and troublemakers invading our states" and "to scrupulously refrain from disorder and lawless acts."

The 11 states represented by the signers are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, George, Louisiana, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Only three senators from the 11 states did not sign the statement —Lyndon B. Johnson (D) Texas, Albert Gore (D) Tenn., and Estes Kefauver (D) Tenn.

Johnson, senate majority leader, told newsmen he had not seen the statement and had not been asked to sign it, apparently because the group did not want the matter to become a subject of official party policy.

Kefauver said on the ABC-TV program, "College Press Conference," that he still supports the

38a 1956

GEORGIA

MR. ROY V. HARRIS
MEMBER OF THE GEORGIA STATE BOARD OF REGENTS

Carpetbaggers Are Back in South, Integration Foe Warns Negroes

Times p. 50-2

Jun. 2-19-56

SAVANNAH, Ga., Feb. 18 (UP) —One of the South's leading segregationists told Negro college students today that Northern carpetbaggers had come back to try to divide the South again with a return to the old days of bitterness.

Roy V. Harris, a member of the Georgia State Board of Regents, spoke at ceremonies dedicating two buildings at Savannah State College for Negroes.

Mr. Harris, who helped sponsor one of the buildings, was invited by the school's principal over the protests of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He said in advance he would give a pro-segregationist speech and offered to withdraw. The college president, W. K. Payne, urged him to speak anyway.

A plea by the N. A. A. C. P. for picketing of the address apparently was ignored. There was no demonstration of any kind, either outside or inside the hall, which had a capacity audience of 900. The college has a student body of 1,000.

Mr. Harris was one of the organizers of the pro-segregation States Rights Council and has led many segregation campaigns in Georgia. He was one of the council leaders who opposed Georgia Tech's Sugar Bowl football game with Pittsburgh because the Northern team included a Negro player.

In his speech today, Mr. Harris said Negroes should be "proud" of their race because they had made more progress in ninety years since the Civil War than in all the centuries before.

"We can live together as two great races, each maintaining its own pride and each its own integrity," Mr. Harris said. "So long as we do, the hope of the future will be bright. But with strife, turmoil and bloodshed, the hope of the future is dismal."

He said that attempts to lift racial barriers would lead to "bitterness, hatred and bloodshed and that the state is working hard to make education facilities equal for all, regardless of race."

Negroes freed by Union troops after the Civil War received promises that were not kept, Mr. Harris said, thus leaving the white and Negro races in the South to build their own future out of the ruins of war.

"The Yankees freed the slaves but they didn't feed them," he said. "They left them to go hungry along with the white people of the South.

"There came into the South an adventuresome people we have come to know as carpetbaggers. They came for the sole purpose of enriching themselves and taking advantage of the members of your race. * * *"

Now, he said, modern-day carpetbaggers were back "with the same old promises."

"They come seeking your aid to return to the old days of bitterness," he said. "The white people of this state will not voluntarily surrender their way of life. They will fight for its continuance and preservation."

38a 1956

GEORGIA

An Englishman In Montgomery

Advertiser P. 4-A Fri. 3-23-56

Discourses On Race Relations In Africa, Remarking How They Differ From Those In The U.S.

Montgomery, Ala.

38a

By Joe Azbell
City Editor, The Advertiser

"SOME provinces under the Union Jack have segregation as acute—if not more so—than the South's, but it is of a different nature because the white population is in such a tiny minority," Keith Kyle, British magazine correspondent, says.

AZBELL

"The reporter, who is staffing the boycott trials for The London Economist, one of the most influential journals in the world, was speaking of the Mau Mau rebellion in Kenya, conflicts between African whites and blacks, and the anti-native campaigns in the formerly British [now independent] Union of South Africa. Kyle looks like a young (he's 31) Sherlock Holmes, enunciates in a melodious tone with distinctive y'all qualities, and emits a genial radiance. He has been sitting on the front row of the circuit court for three days, bending and snapping his 6 ft. 4 frame as best he can to adjust it to the theater type seats designed for shorter men, scribbling on scraps of paper and watching attentively as a scientist would observe an inoculated guinea pig. After a fashion, Kyle is scouting about the South on a "guinea pig" errand, attempting to discover for himself the mind of the South.

SOUTH AFRICA HOPELESS

SANDY haired with big hazel eyes and a sallow complexion, Kyle patters none of the dogmas about racial mistreatment so common among visiting reporters. Probably the reason derives from many years of contact with racial turmoil over the globe. He has traveled widely, served a hitch as a captain in the private army of the Maharapjah Scindia of Gwalior in India and another hitch in the Indian Army. He has an intellectual background of a Commonwealth Fellow (Oxford graduate). Kyle came to the U.S. in 1953 as chief correspondent for The London Economist. He has been hankering for a Dixie tour ever since. Only last week he found time. Montgomery was a first stop. It is expected he will produce keen, perceptive articles on the boycott situation.

Kyle, as a Britisher, is no race relations novice. "In the British provinces is Africa, we have a tremendous racial problem which has all of the complex features of the South's problem. But the African problem is much more complex and different because in the Central African Federation (the two Rhodesias and Nyasaland) the whites are in a small minority and the natives are in an overwhelming majority," he says.

"There has been a racist conflict in the African provinces and in the Union of South Africa for a long time, three or four years. Experiments are being tried to give the natives representation in the legislature. I believe they have six members out of the 40 seats, and at least one minister in the government. This is in the Central African Federation. But in South Africa, which is not under the British, it's a hopeless case. There is a complete retreat to a paternalistic attitude and a campaign to take away all rights of the natives. It is a completely hopeless case destined to doom."

MAU MAUS

THE Englishman discussed at length the Mau Mau rebellion. It was in late 1952 and 1953 that racial tension in Kenya erupted in outbursts of violence. The main cause of discontent was the land hunger of the Kikuyu, largest tribe in Kenya.

(A portion of the American Negroes is descended from the blood stream of the Kikuyu tribe. The Kikuyu was one of the tribes raided by slavers in the 18th century for the American slave market.)

"The Mau Mau uprising was only of one tribe," Kyle says. "It was aimed more at natives than the whites in its activities. There were many, many more native victims than white victims. It was a campaign against the white minority which was in control of the government."

'BURNING SPEAR'

HERE is the background on Mau Mau: The Kikuyu had increased from 50,000 to 1,000,000 in 50 years and during this same period white settlers had taken up most of the best Kenyan farm land. The natives organized themselves into a society to fight the white rule. The secret order, Mau Mau, was voodoo in ritual, (the initiates were sworn to kill whites when commanded and were bathed in fresh goat's blood moved about their head seven times) strong in numbers with its membership of 100,000, and prepared for bloody revolution with a large stock of panga (long sugar cane knives). In 12 months, the Mau Mau killed 1,000 whites and pro-white natives, slashing their heads off or burning them alive. They swept down from bushes and hills (much like American Indians) and slaughtered their victims quickly before escaping.

Research also shows British reprisals were as violent as the native assaults.

KEITH KYLE

"Burning Spear" (Jomo Kenyatta), the leader, was sentenced to seven years at hard labor; native organizations were banned and scores of executions were ordered. The British whites broke the hump of the native secret society. But the Kikuyu were still land hungry, poor and resentful. The problem has not been settled. While the Mau Mau has been checked, the population of the Kikuyu is still large and outnumbers whites vastly.

MORE LIKE THE SOUTH

IN THE Central African Federation proper, racial segregation is the main political issue. As Kyle says, it has a strong resemblance to the South's political atmosphere. In the 1954 elections, there were two political parties that smacked of the old South. The federal party favored racial partnership though not assimilation. The confederate party wanted territorial segregation of whites and black races. "The federal party won a smashing victory," Kyle says.

The South African situation, says Kyle, is unlike anything else in the social eruptions of the world. The prime minister of South Africa uses "KKK type of talks" to advocate segregation, he says. He is named Strijdom. Government officials have fought to remove natives (half caste) voters from the poll lists and introduced bills to establish all white ballots. The mingling of white and Negro students at universities has been outlawed. There is no Autherine Lucy incident in these colleges because whites have control of the government and while there is defiance, it is met with government reprisal. [Negroes have been arrested and jailed for defying segregation laws by riding buses and trains and refusing to sit in special sections. Banners of protesting Negroes marching on government houses have proclaimed, "We want to defend democracy" and "equal rights for all." There is even a policy in South Africa that a native can not strike for higher wages or better working conditions.]

MINORITY REVERSED

THROUGHOUT his interview, Kyle stressed that the African problem is much different from the Southern problem because of the small minority of whites and the issues involved.

In the Gold Coast, for instance, he says, the government has become independent with African native leadership throughout. "This was accomplished because there were no white planters or population there," he says, "but even after becoming independent with a native government, the Gold Coast asked for British white advisers."

In all of the African provinces, a study shows there exists a peculiarly related problem to that of the South's. The Negroes have migrated to metropolitan areas in large numbers and created slums, criminal waves, and health problems of magnitude. In Africa, the segregation campaign has a strange name, "Apartheid." Church missionaries have stepped up campaigns to ease tension and to fight the racists.

The natives segregated by the white government in Africa are blood relations to most of the Negroes of this county. The Negro slaves who came in chains to this country from the west coast of Africa were from the Negritans, Fellatahs, Bantus and Gallas races. There were other tribesmen made slaves from the Makalolu, Bassutas, Kaffir, Koramantis, Senegalese, Mandingoes, Ibos, Ibondi, Ibani, Efik, Fulahs, Wysyah and Zandes tribes. The natives who escaped the slavers' chains have left descendants in Africa who have peculiarly similar problems to those who became the descendants of those who became the slaves.

AFRICAN BOSWELL AMENDMENT

KYLE said those who are receiving voting rights in Africa must qualify under a sort of Boswell Amendment plan that requires military training, education, good health and a cultural background.

What the British reporter thinks of the South's treatment of Negroes in comparison with the African treatment won't be known for some time. "I am no three-day wonder," he says, "I have not had time to study the South enough to form any opinions. I have a completely open mind and I intend to keep an open mind until the Southern tour is ended. I recognize there is a problem here much as we have and that only a complete study of its overall features could leave a person with an honest, clear view of what causes it." However, he did say he sensed uneasiness, rather than tension, here and has been pleasantly surprised by the good relationships that exist despite the boycott.

Kyle plans to spend the remainder of this week in Montgomery before going to his next Dixie destination. "There is one thing I would like to do," he tittered. "I would like to stay on a Southern plantation for a day or night. Are there any? Or is that just story book lore?".

GEORGIA LEASES NINE PARKS IN PRO-SEGREGATION ACTION

Daily Herald P. 1 Wed. 4-18-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Georgia has leased nine state parks to private individuals in a move to maintain racial segregation, parks director Roy Chalker said Tuesday.

Chalker said the leases, for periods of one year, would also affect economies in the department's operation.

Leasing of state parks was authorized by the last session of the Georgia Legislature to give them a "private" status as a possible safeguard against court suits seeking an end to segregation

Looking At The Park Leases

Daily Herald P. 6 Sat. 4-21-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Admittedly on its face a measure meant for forestalling desegregation and the getting ahead of any possible move to bring about opening up the state parks for all citizen taxpayers, a move to lease the state parks out to private interest just does not click.

The contention on the part of those sponsoring the measure and getting such a commitment through the legislature that such is an economy measure, would not be consistent with another stated motive to maintain segregation.

Surely such contenders, when they claim that more economy is impending by private operations, do not wish to leave the impression of their own inefficiency in the administration of the people's affairs.

Again, it should be remembered that the saving of a few dollars at the expense of the public weal is not the answer to efficiency in our public recreation centers in their services to the whole people. Like the police, the fire department and hospitals, no strait-jacket pattern was intended to hamper their reach into an indispensible service to the citizen taxpayers.

The parks belong to all the taxpayers. It is unfair and illogical to tamper with the people's interests without their direct consent and on the other hand such a move tends to actually invite action to recover back to public control over what the people have consigned to public operations.

A move on the part of certain interest to seek the transfer of something in which no suits is pending, just doesn't look right. That's all. Several court precedents exist to prove the futility of the leasing action.

"Private"-Public Park Rates Boosted In Ga.

Daily World Fri. 4-27-56 Atlanta, Ga. P. 1

BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

The leasee of a Georgia state park turned over to private operation as an economy measure, reported Thursday that weekly cabin rates at the park have been increased $25 a week.

Bonnel Aiken, of Blairsville, leasee of Vogel State Park, one of 12 state reaction areas turned over to private citizens, said that the rates were boosted from $35 to $60 a week.

Aiken said the higher rentals were put into effect of increased services and new equipment in the cabins such as new refrigerators and stoves.

He said only two reservations for the cabins have been cancelled because of the rate increase and added:

"We are already filled up for July and August."

Roy Chalker, state park director, expressed surprise when informed of the rate increase. He said he expected the rate to go up but not as much as $25 a week.

The officials said that there were no provisions in the lease contracts for such rate increases and added:

"It's generally understood that they (the leasees) are to maintain rates at approximately what they were."

The park was leased to Aikin for $5,000 a year.

Racial Problem in Georgia Held No Bar to Industry

Constitution Mon. 6-11-56 Atlanta, Ga. P. 10

Racial tensions have not hampered industrial growth in Georgia, two chamber of commerce officials said here Sunday.

Frank K. Shaw, industrial manager of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, and Walter T. Cates, executive vice president of the Georgia Chamber of Commerce, agreed that publicity regarding Georgia's race problems has not caused Northern manufacturers to be reluctant about setting up plants here.

TELEVISION FORUM

Speaking over the television forum, Press Gallery, Shaw said that during his work with the chamber he has been "unable to find any specific case" in which racial tension led to rejection of Georgia as an industrial site.

When manufacturers consider plant locations, their worries are primarily economic and "not social," he said.

Agreeing with Shaw, Cates said that in 14 years in his position he had "never heard racial tension used as an objection."

But he warned that "if we keep stirring it, it could become a problem." He said at present "there is not so much tension as there is conversation" over racial troubles.

INDUSTRIAL STRIDES

The racial topic arose during discussion of the great strides in Atlanta's industrialization. Firing the questions were Constitution political writer Albert Riley and business editor Jim Montgomery. The panel was moderated by managing editor William H. Fields.

Swinging the talk to recent expansion in Atlanta, the panel brought out that over 250 announcements have been made in the last year of proposed or already constructed plants in Georgia, and 32 have been built in Atlanta in the first months of 1956.

Although textile expansion has predominated in Atlanta, there now is a trend toward more development in heavy industry. Cates said last year was "probably the best year in Georgia's history."

WATER SHORTAGE

Most important problem facing Georgia in its quest for new industry is a shortage of water, the panelists said. They said the problem is country-wide, Cates adding, "I doubt if there's a paper industry in the country thats' not considering the South. . . ." Paper mills are one of the largest users of water. Cates said the only answer to the water problem "is a more intelligent use of available water resources."

The two painted an optimistic picture of labor in Georgia, stating that the lowest cost of living gives Georgia an advantage over northern states. Goods can be produced in Georgia for less than elsewhere, they said. "The essence of the difference between the north and the south is that labor here is more productive."

They also pointed out that Atlanta's big advantage to industry is as a distributive center. They said certain industries can take advantage of this factor, while smaller Georgia towns are more suitable to others. For this reason, Shaw said, Atlanta is not much a competitor with the smaller towns as is sometime believed.

38a 1956

GEORGIA

Money, Segregation and Sand Loom Big on Legislative Slate

Journal + Constitution

Sun. 1-7-56

p. 6-A

Election of Roads Chairman, Financing to Get Early Attention

Atlanta, Ga.

By the Associated Press

Appropriations, segregation and sand likely will be the liveliest topics of conversation in the 1956 Legislature which begins a 40-day session on Jan. 9.

They are the issues that could put Gov. Marvin Griffin's administration strength to its sternest tests.

But just as likely to touch off spirited debate are a number of other proposals which probably will be submitted to the lawmakers. These include recommendations of the Legislative Economy Committee, which may or may not bear an administration label.

The Legislature this year must elect two members of the State Highway Board and thus the sand issue will get an early airing.

* * *

STATE HIGHWAY Board Chairman Walter A. Blasingame of Moultrie is a candidate for re-election. He is serving the final year of the unexpired term of former Chairman Jim L. Gillis who was forced out by Griffin last January.

The Moultrie druggist, Methodist leader and former Colquitt County commissioner, has been charged in an official audit with "illegal" acts in connection with sale of sand to the Highway Department.

The audit said Mr. Blasingame took an option to buy and paid earnest money on a 332-acre tract of Colquitt County land. He transferred his interest to T. E. Rich Jr., of Moultrie, who bought the land and borrowed money from the Moultrie Banking Co., in which Mr. Blasingame is a stockholder and director, to pay for it.

After he became highway board chariman, the audit said, Mr. Blasingame signed a contract for purchase of sand from the land both as owner and as board chairman and had two checks for $10,250, payable to the Moultrie Banking Co., issued by the Highway Department as advance payment for the sand to pay off Rich's note.

* * *

BOTH GOV. GRIFFIN and Mr. Blasingame reacted angrily to release of the audit and bitterly criticized State Auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr.

Mr. Blasingame earlier had announced for re-election and claimed to have enough pledges to assure his election. Gov. Griffin said he would support him for re-election.

Also up for election is board member Roger Lawson of Hawkinsville, now serving by appointment of Gov. Griffin. Mr. Lawson succeeded Dixon Oxford of Dawson, who resigned last summer.

The Legislature is required by law to hold the election of Highway Board members in the first 10 days of the session.

Appropriation bills normally are enacted in the first year of each biennial legislative term and thus would have been the problem of the 1955 session.

* * *

BUT TAKING office in the face of financial difficulties, Gov. Griffin, who campaigned on a promise of "no new taxes of any kind whatsoever," sidestepped the money issue and continued operating under the 1953 appropriation bill.

At the same time, he had a Legislative Study Committee created to recommend tax increases, and he called a June special session to enact them.

So the 1956 session must pass the first appropriation act of Griffin's administration.

Its problem will be to carve up the approximately 272 million dollars of current annual state revenue. The governor has said he will "implore" the Legislature "not to appropriate a nickel more than revenue from current sources."

The major money demands will come from the Education and Highway departments.

The education budget now is something more than 117 millions. Under the Minimum Foundation Program for Education, an increase of at least $8,450,000 will be needed, for a total of around 126 millions.

State School Supt. M. D. Collins will ask for a hike of more than 30 millions with admittedly little hope of getting it all.

* * *

THE LEGISLATURE could actually slightly reduce the Highway Department budget. The constitution requires a highway appropriation equal to net revnue from the gasoline tax and motor vehicle tag sales in the previous fiscal year.

For the year ended last June 30, that figure was $63,174,408. But with money made available out of surplus funds by the governor, the Highway Department budget for the current year is $64,986,073.

Gov. Griffin has said he will ask the Legislature to make the minimum highway appropriation required by law.

However, higher taxes slapped on highway users by the June special session will bring in an additional $9,248,000 in this fiscal year, State Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams has estimated.

With a minimum highway appropriation, Gov. Griffin, as budget director, could give that extra money to the Highway Department or put it to other uses as he sees fit.

* * *

THE THIRD largest item of the state budget; welfare, now gets $32,141,000 a year and is requesting at least a $1,900,000 increase. Also, Welfare Director Alan Kemper has asked, and Gov. Griffin has virtually promised, a million dollars for new buildings at the Gracewood Home for Mentally Defective Children, near Augusta.

Next in line are the University System with a current 15 millions budget and the Health Department which gets $14,297,000. The University System regents have asked the governor for an additional nine millions.

The current highway death rate almost certainly will bring demands for additional State Patrol strength. Gov. Griffin is "trying to work out" some means of providing more troopers. The State Safety Department budget currently is $2,648,000.

* * *

ALSO LIKELY to be in line for an increase is the Department of Corrections, now getting something over a million dollars. Increasing prison population is creating serious overcrowding at the Reidsville prison and Gov. Griffin has been trying to ease the situation by establishing convict highway maintenance camps.

The governor has hinted broadly that other state agencies can expect little if any increases.

With racial integration already a fact on Atlanta golf courses, the Griffin administration is preparing to go to private schools if necessary to maintain segregation on that front.

The Education Commission, created to find means of circumventing the Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation, has ready for submission a series of bills. The key measure would authorize the governor to close any schools, in his discretion, and pay direct state grants to students.

* * *

IN VIEW of the fact that educators give lip service to segregation but generally abhor the idea of abolishing the public school system, the segregation bills possibly could run into some opposition.

And two Economy Committee recommendations are almost certain to stir up a storm—as they have in the past. One is for the state to carry its own insurance and the other is for investment of idle state money now on deposit in various banks and drawing no interest.

Some of the Economy Committee's suggestions on education likewise face possibly rough going. The Georgia Education Association, which wrecked a bold taxation and reorganization proposal of the State Programs Study Committee, has by resolution gone on record as flatly opposing creation of a comptroller for the Education Department as recommended by the Economy Committee.

The bill drafting unit of the Law Department reports it has been working overtime preparing proposed bills, both local and general, for members of the Legislature.

And in addition, the 1955 Legislature by resolution, cleared the way for all bills pending at the end of that session, to be revived when the 1956 session convenes.

Negro GI Fined $200 In Cafe Row

Constitution

Sat. 1-7-56

p. 5

A Negro soldier arrested, police said, after he demanded to be served in a restaurant licensed for white patrons only was fined $200 Friday in Municipal Court.

Judge James Webb stipulated that the soldier, Jesse J. Green, 23, of 147 Elm St., SW, pay a $50 fine on charges of cursing. The judge suspended payment of $50 fines on charges of drunk and disorderly conduct, assault on an officer and resisting arrest.

Atlanta, Ga.

CALLED AWOL

Green, said by military police to be absent without leave from Ft. Riley, Kan., appeared in court with a badly swollen left eye. Lt. A. C. Roberts told the court he and three other officers experienced difficulty in getting Green into a patrol wagon after taking him into custody on Butler street, SE.

Donald L. Hollowell, attorney for Green, asked how the eye was injured.

HOLDS HANDS

"I don't know," Roberts replied. "We were holding his hands. He was kicking and butting with his head like a wild bull. I guess he hit his head on the patrol wagon door."

Roberts said Green entered the restaurant at 13 Butler St., SE, and ordered food. He said the proprietor, George Evagros, told Green that he could serve white persons only and that Green demanded service and began cursing.

Green left when Evagros went to call police, Roberts said. He said the Negro was arrested a half block from the restaurant.

GI Fined After Arrest For Disturbance In Restaurant

Daily World
Sat. 1-7-56

BY GEORGE M. COLEMAN

The "unfortunate" incident, in which a 23-year-old soldier suffered an injured eye during a scuffle with white police and a civilian was deplored here yesterday as the man was fined $200 on four counts.

Attorney Donald Hollowell, who questioned officers' lack of knowledge of how the soldier suffered the injury, declared the defendant's "ire was raised" by a "provoked incident," and lamented the fact that "a man who is willing to go out and fight for the lives of all of us cant even get a sandwich."

"The pity of it," Mr. Hollowell said, "is that he asked civilly if he might be served."

He pointed out that he man was in the armed forces which do not have "the unfortunate laws we have in this state."

The soldier, Jesse J. Green, of 147 Elm St. S. W., was fined $50 per count on the following: cursing, resisting arrest, assault and battery on an officer and disturbance.

TURNED OVER TO MP'S

However, Municipal Court Judge James E. Webb suspended payment of three of the counts. Green, who was due back at his station Jan. 4, will, upon payment of his fine be turned over to military police. He was stationed at Ft. Riley, Kan.

Greene was arrested Thursday about 8 p. m. just after he rang a door bell at the colored nurses home of Grady Hospital. His arrest followed an incident at the Tern-Inn Cafeteria, 13 Butler St. N. E., next door to a Negro owned barber shop, and two doors from the Negro-attended Butler Street CME Church.

All witnesses agreed Greene had walked in and asked for a sandwich, but the white operator, who spoke with a noticeably foreign accent said: "I tell him would you please come to the nig colored entrance."

"I talk nice to him," he insisted, "like I talk to you."

Lt. A. C. Roberts, who made initial arrest said he first saw Greene about a block from the tavern and called to him, but the soldier refused to acknowledge his conversation.

The officer said Gerene refused to wait for military police or submit to questioning, and "finally I had to detain him with force."

Greene told him he didn't have time to wait," Lt. Roberts said.

The lieutenant told the court he didn't know just how Greene suffered injury to his eye, but theorized it was from the steel doors of a patrol wagon because of the way "he beat his head against the door like a mad bull."

Roberts denied he called the soldier "boy," but Mr. Hollowell told the court that "You and I know that when an officer calls a Negro on the street, nine hundred and ninety-nine times out of a thousand it's, Hey, boy."

KNIFE NOT SEEN

None of the witnesses actually saw a knife it was revealed in court, although it was admitted the soldier put his hand in his pocket. One officer told the court the white waitress had declared he had a half open knife in his hand.

The defense admitted Greene had "had a few drinks," but pointed out there was no proof he was drunk. Officers told the court they forcefully searched for the knife, even to the extent of removing his socks.

Greene told the court he grew angry when an unidentified white civilian attempted to 'jump' him in the restaurant. He said he left after he was refused service, or given a reason why.

BEATEN, DENIED TREATMENT

The soldier contended Roberts hailed him as "boy" and he refused to answer "because my name is not 'boy.' "

He told the court he was placed in the patrol wagon and "four guys hit me at once." Greene said they refused to treat him at Grady, but added he requested and received aid about 2 a. m. the following day.

The question of whether or not he was called a "boy" was never settled, but immediately upon conviction the court baliff asked, "You want to pay your fine, boy?"

Charges Face Negro Here After Restaurant Invasion

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Mi. 1-6-56 p. 16

A Negro soldier absent without leave Thursday was arrested on a series of four charges after demanding that he be served in a white restaurant, police said.

Lt. A. C. Roberts said Jesse J. Green, 23, of 147 Elm St., SW, was booked on charges of drunk and disorderly conduct-cursing, resisting arrest, assault and battery on an officer and disorderly conduct-disturbance.

The charges were made after Green pulled a knife on the restaurant operator, who had asked him to leave, Roberts said. He added Green was apprehended in front of the Grady Hospital colored clinic after he had left the restaurant at 13 Butler St., SE, and three men were required to place him under arrest.

Roberts, and Patrolmen E. A. Samples and F. W. Johnson said Green entered the restaurant and the proprietor, George Evagors, explained that his business license entitled him to serve white customers only. Officers said Evagors suggested he could fix Green food to take out and eat.

Green demanded that he be served along with other customers, officers said they were told. Officers said Green began cursing when Evagors refused and Evagors asked him to leave the building. Then, witnesses were quoted, Green pulled a knife. Evagors called for police.

Green left the restaurant before police arrived, but was apprehended a half block away. He is scheduled for trial at 2 p.m. Friday in Municipal Court.

Segregation Termed the Leading Issue As Georgia Legislature Opens Session

Times Tues. 1-10-56 p. 25

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Jan. 9—The Georgia Legislature convened for a forty-day session here today with House Speaker Marvin Moate declaring segregation was the top issue.

The Administration has prepared a number of segregation bills for introduction. Gov. Marvin Griffin is expected to outline them before a joint House-Senate session tomorrow.

Administration leaders, at a strategy meeting, decided to "go slow" on possible revival of a proposal that would declare the United States Supreme Court's segregation ruling "null and void."

Meanwhile, Attorney General Eugene Cook sent to the Assembly "for appropriate action" what he referred to as evidence compiled by his department "of the subversive influence on and in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and like organizations."

The photostatic copy amounting to some 400 pages was sent to Lielt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, presiding officer of the Senate, and Speaker Moate.

Mr. Cook charged that the N.A.A.C.P. and the "like organizations" were "agitating for the abolition of Georgia's constitutional and statutory provisions requiring segregation of the races and in so doing are fomenting strife and discord between the white and Negro races in the state."

Speaker Moate, in his opening address, said:

"In the southern part of the United States, certain [segregation] problems exist that are peculiar to our section and with which the other parts of our country have little knowledge and a complete lack of understanding.

"The southland has become the whipping boy for other sections of the nation. Our every fault is being played up for all it is worth; our every virtue has been played down."

He added that "failure to solve these segregation problems is fraught with danger we dare not even contemplate."

Segregation Forces Lose

JONESBORO, Ark., Jan. 9 (AP)—Federal Judge Albert L. Reeves made permanent today a temporary injunction ordering three pro-segregation organizations not to interfere with racially integrated schools at Hoxie, Ark.

The temporary injunction—all of which was made permanent by Judge Reeves—prohibited the pro-segregation leaders specifically from boycotting or picket-small part due to our failure to identify at a relatively young age those pupils who have more than the average talent for mathematics.

Fight Vowed By Georgians On Race Issue

Herald Montgomery, Ala.
Thurs. 1-12-56

AMERICUS, Ga., Jan. 11 (AP)—Georgia's political leaders said today they will never surrender to the U. S. Supreme Court decisions on segregation and called for a "great crusade" to let the world know that the state will run its own affairs.

Addressing the first grass roots meeting of the States Right Council of Georgia, Inc., Gov. Marvin Griffin said he "did not believe in the decisions of the Supreme Court and as long as I am governor of the state there will not be any mixing of the races in schools and colleges at any time or any place."

600 PRESENT

Former Gov. Herman Talmadge told the cheering overflow meeting of some 600 persons in this southwest Georgia city:

"The meeting here today is the beginning of a great crusade which will sweep the state and southern regions to let the world know regardless of what the Supreme Court says, does or thinks that by the grace of God Georgia will continue running its own affairs."

Referring to members of the high tribunal as "peanut politicians," Talmadge declared: "We fought overseas to keep our rights, why not at home?

Lt. Gov. S. Ernest Vandiver said "The South is the last bastion where no mixing of the races has occurred and we will keep it that way."

Vandiver said that in Chicago more police hours have been devoted to race riots than all combined in the South. The people of the North "can't live in harmony with other races and they can't tell us what to do," he said.

Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said it was time to put aside terms such as "circumvention" and use such terms as "openly defy the decisions of the Supreme Court."

The States Rights Council was organized in Atlanta Sept. 23 at the invitation of Griffin. At that time the council dedicated itself to "the preservation of constitutional government in this country" and "the maintenance of harmonious race relations in the state through preservation of the traditional establishment of segregation in both public and private areas."

38a 1956

GEORGIA EDITORS LOOK OVER THE STATE:

Journal & Constitution

Newspapers Raise Questions On Leasing of State's Parks

Sun. 4-29-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Waycross Journal-Herald

WHILE MOST GEORGIANS go along with the Griffin administration in its efforts to prevent racial integration in public parks and to effect economies in the operation of the State Parks Department, the protest of Rep. James Mackay of DeKalb County merits consideration.

Mackay said it appeared that the state was de-emphasizing its recreation program after spending considerable sums of money advertising parks and other attractions.

The DeKalb legislator pointed to the inconsistency of ballyhooing the state in national magazines, then reducing the parks and recreation program. . . .

In leasing 12 parks to private operators the state has in effect de-emphasized a program that Gov. Griffin and other candidates for governor in 1954 pledged to expand.

There are many citizens who take a dim view of the operation of public parks by individuals not beholden to the people. . . .

Columbus Ledger

WHETHER THE WELFARE of the public will suffer through leasing by the state administration of nine state parks to private operators is largely a matter of speculation at this time. . . .

Common sense tells us that a public recreation area operated for profit is not going to provide the level of service and comfort for the people that one operated by the state would. Public parks are not designed to make money. The very principles by which government assumes the responsibility for providing public recreation ignore, by necessity, the commercial motive. It's a service for which the people of America have demonstrated an enthusiastic willingness to pay. Rep. James Mackay of DeKalb County expressed the thought somewhat differently: "State parks are a public trust and it is very doubtful that this trust can be discharged by private citizens on a negotiated lease arrangement." . . .

But it is the people themselves who will finally decide on the wisdom of the action. Gov. Griffin is acting in conformity with the expressed wishes of the State Assembly and the people. The arrangement is a test of whether traditional public institutions can be competently and satisfactorily operated as private concerns. Georgia has an unusually strong interest in that question at this time.

TURNER ROCKWELL

Valdosta Daily Times

ALL GEORGIANS should be pleased at the announcement of plans to complete the Stone Mountain memorial to the Confederacy. This project has had a long and stormy career and many people had given up hope that it would ever be finished. . . .

The next step would seem to be to proceed with plans for the carvings on the face as a memorial to the Confederacy.

The new group is on record as determined that the memorial will be dignified and in keeping with the cause which it will memorialize. There must not be a cheapness or a gaudiness in any of the surroundings.

If completed properly Stone Mountan will attract visitors from all over the world and Georgians will have ample reason to be proud that such an awesome attraction is located within our borders.

Meanwhile thanks are due those who had a part in the reorganization and in the mapping out of plans for the development of the project.

Macon Telegraph

. . . GEORGIA NOW has three esteemed and highly capable members of Congress holding committee chairmanships.

Each of them upon becoming members of Congress years ago took their respective places at the foot of committees. Time and the people of Georgia, with their votes, made them chairmen.

We do not believe that the people of Georgia will wish to deprive themselves of the benefits which accrue to them through the committee chairmanship which Senator George has attained only by many years' service.

Moultrie Observer

HIGHWAY BOTTLENECKS in Georgia are disappearing. Some of the worst of them have been in the south Georgia territory, causing many motorists and truckers to skirt the fringes of Georgia in their travels to and from Florida.

South Georgia until recent years was honeycombed with narrow, rough roads and innumerable crossings which have claimed hundreds of lives. Travelers have been outspoken in their criticism of the roads, and the wonderful highways found in Florida have given accent to the condition of the south Georgia roads—both of the arterial and access varieties.

Roads recently completed, now under construction or planned for the current summer will go a long way toward eliminating the traffic bottlenecks which have existed since the motor vehicle came into its own. . . .

Thomaston Free Press

THIS NEWSPAPER, along with a couple of hundred more in Georgia, howled enough about the way Tom Linder ran the Market Bulletin, and now that it is being run more in the manner that it was intended we think something should be said about that.

Phil Campbell, the commissioner of agriculture who succeeded Tom Linder, is running the Market Bulletin for the farmers of Georgia.

It contains no editorials; no predictions that the world is coming to an end in 1975 and no writing to advance the political position of the commissioner of agriculture.

In addition, we understand that people no longer interested in receiving the Market Bulletin have been dropped from the mailing list and others may have it discontinued by writing the Department of Agriculture.

We commend Mr. Campbell on the changes made in the Market Bulletin.

GEORGIA

Cook Would Make Enforcing Integration a Capital Crime

Constitution Thurs. 4-26-56 Atlanta, Ga. p. 1

Georgia Atty. Gen. Cook said Wednesday that he will recommend enactment of a Georgia law to make it a capital offense for any public official to assist the federal judiciary in enforcing the U.S. Supreme Court's desegregation rulings.

In view of the high court's decision outlawing segregation on buses in a South Carolina case, Cook said the State of Georgia will be "defenseless" if a bus desegregation case is filed in this state.

However, Cook suggested that Gov. Griffin could maintain segregation on buses in Georgia by declaring limited martial law and calling out the state militia (National Guard) to seize and operate transit companies and bus lines.

The governor would have not only the right but the duty to take such action under the police powers vested in him to protect the public interest in the event of a threat of riot or mob violence, Cook said.

The attorney general warned that there could be violence and bloodshed in Georgia if attempts are made to enforce integration in schools or on buses.

"We have seen violence happen in Detroit and Chicago and in the State of Alabama in recent weeks," he said.

Meanwhile, Georgia's transportation segregation laws are still in effect and the Supreme Court ruling in the South Carolina case is not applicable to this state, Cook said.

But if a bus case is filed in Georgia, there is nothing the state could do in federal court but fight it by defensive pleadings and seeking delays by appeals, Cook said.

Constitution

BUS CASE

This, he said, is because in the South Carolina bus case the Supreme Court completely overturn the historic Plessy vs. Ferguson doctrine, enunciated in 1896 by the Supreme Court, that permitted separate but equal transportation facilities.

"If such action is brought in Georgia, we are defenseless," he said. "There are no factual or legal means we can take. We can't stop operation of the buses and the whole matter would depend on the operators themselves."

The state would have one recourse and that would be the governor's use of his powers to declare limited martial law and seize the buses and operate them, the attorney general said.

METTER TALK

Cook said he will outline in a speech at Metter Thursday night his proposal for a law to make it a capital offense (penalty of death or life imprisonment) for any Georgia public official or individual not in the federal employ to assist in enforcing the Supreme Court's desegregation rulings.

He said U. S. marshals now depend largely on services of county sheriffs to incarcerate persons charged with violating federal law. The federal government has only one penal institution in Georgia — the penitentiary in Atlanta.

If the Legislature were to enact the law Cook proposes, no sheriff or policeman could assist in arrest or jailing of any bus driver or any school trustee charged with contempt of a federal court in an integration case.

President Eisenhower and potential presidential candidates have said they are not in favor of using federal troops to enforce desegregation, Cook said. Enforcement would be up to the Department of Justice and the federal government would have to build jails in Georgia and hire an army of marshals, he said.

Pulse of the Public

Constitution

Why Don't Southern Journalists Find Out Real Segregation Story in North, Print It?

Wed. 3-28-56 P. 4

Atlanta Ga.

Washington, D.C.—Now that reporters of Northern papers, many of them directed by New York's west side cabal, have invaded the South and written all sorts of things about the colored people, why not send Southern journalists North to report on segregation there?

Will the Associated Press carry the many surprising stories they can have for the asking, with all the fervent relish it does those emanating from Alabama?

There are plenty of good stories to be had, too, north of the Mason-Dixon line such as:

What does the Northern citizen think of these efforts to force integration on the South? His views are apt to make Northern dailies red behind the ears.

Who is putting up the money the NAACP is spending?

Who started all this drive against Southern customs and for what reason?

Southern journalists should go North and get the real story.

CHARLES P. BEAZLEY.

* * *

Editor's Note: In justice to Southern newspapers, they have attempted to do an honest job in reporting the entire story of race relations throughout the nation.

* * *

Defense of Dr. Wells Wins Her Approval

Calvary—I would like to register approval of the way your newspaper has handled the Dr. Wells story. It is indeed a disgusting state of affairs when a noted educator cannot criticize the state administration without risking the loss of his income and well-earned honors.

I am an alumna of GSCW — I was there when Dr. Wells was president — and I am proud to have had my college education under the administration of a liberal and courageous man.

MRS. DOROTHY T. MAYFIELD.

* * *

Social Welfare Group Appreciates Publicity

Atlanta—The members of the Georgia Conference on Social Welfare at their annual business meeting on March 2 passed the following resolution:

"Be it resolved that the Georgia Conference on Social Welfare, at its 29th annual meeting, Feb. 28-March 2, 1956, in Atlanta, express appreciation to the newspapers, locally and throughout the State of Georgia, for the publicity they have given this conference."

There were over 500 who registered for the conference and many others who attended various meetings, and we feel that the excellent attendance was due, in large part, to the cooperation received from the newspapers in publicizing the meeting.

SARA R. BOYD,
Executive Secretary.

* * *

'Death Strikes Many Without Any Warning'

Atlanta—In your editorial tribute to Fred Allen, I disagree most heartily to your inappropriate political insinuation that the voter will be more dubious about the President's health in the coming election.

On the contrary, since Mr. Allen had just 24 hours earlier been given a clean bill-of-health, the voter should realize that Mr. Stevenson could just as easily drop dead in office.

Medical science has made marvelous advancement, but in the final analysis only God knows at which moment any one of us may be taken without warning.

INTERESTED.

2 Segregation Bills Defeated In Georgia

Courier-Journal Fri. 2-17-56

Atlanta, Feb. 16 (AP)—The Georgia Legislature, in a major departure from custom this session yesterday lost two bills which would have tightened the State's segregation laws. R 2

A bill to ban mixed athletic contests was killed by the House. It was tabled indefinitely.

A measure to prohibit use of State funds for mixed classes in nursing and hospital training was defeated in the Senate.

Cites Philadelphia as Example

Courier P. 2

'Negroes in North Not Really Free,' Editor Discovers

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sat. 6-16-56

38a

NEW YORK—After a personal survey of Negro segregation in the North, a white Southern-born editor reported today that the Northern Negro "often lives a life that is, in fact, more segregated than that of the Negro in the South."

Look magazine editor George Leonard, a native of Atlanta, Ga., disclosed in an article published in the new issue of Look, that "there's a big gap between the law of the North, which grants the Negro equality; and reality, which confines him to "a Negro ghetto."

Citing Philadelphia, as a case in point, Mr. Leonard found that Negroes there attend all Negro schools, are taught by Negro teachers, play and associate exclusively with Negro neighbors and are refused housing in non-Negro sections of town.

All this occurs, Mr. Leonard found, in spite of a local "Commission on Human Relations," which fights discrimination, and a Fair Employment Practices Act, which makes discrimination in employment illegal.

■

MR. LEONARD quotes an unidentified Southerner in his Look article as saying, "too many Northerners talk integration and act segregation. What's needed up here is a mirror that shows bigots. A lot of Yankees couldn't look into that mirror without seeing themselves."

"In Philadelphia, as in any Northern city," Mr. Leonard said in Look, "life for a Negro is like walking through a mine field. He may get through unscathed, but when he least expects it, his world may explode."

"Whereas, in the South, a Negro's limitations are clearly defined by law and custom, in the North he lives with only a hazy idea of where the limitations lie.

"Segregation in the North does not stop in private housing, public housing projects often go all Negro simply because there are so many Negroes requiring shelter.

"The Negro citizen outside of the South, looks into the unmasked face of Jim Crow when he tries to find a place to live. Most suburbs are closed to him. When he succeeds in buying a house in a white urban neighborhood, the white residents generally move away in panic. He is left the colored district of the village, the great center of the city."

Mr. Leonard indicates that Negroes in the North are thankful for the laws and the commissions working against segregation and discrimination.

"But they know in their hearts that they are not yet really free, and will never be free until they can put their money on the line and buy or rent a house in the neighborhood of their choice."

"We can buy a Cadillac or a Brooks Brothers suit," Negroes say with regret, "but we can't buy a home. Our money's just no good."

Senate OK Seen For Segregation Bill

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

BY THOMAS B. ROSS
For International News Service

Senate approval was predicted Tuesday for eight bills introduced to prevent racial integration in Georgia's schools and parks.

The measures were introduced just before Gov. Marvin Griffin asked for their approval in his "State of the State" message in which he said the time had come for all persons to "stand up and be counted" on the segregation issue.

Wed. 1-11-56

Sen. Howard Overby, of Gainesville, administration floor leader, said he foresees no opposition to the measures designed to translate general prohibitions against integration into special action if the U. S. Supreme Court's decree is relayed by local Georgia school boards.

38a

Overby's proposals, recommended by the Georgia Commission on Education, were accorded resounding support from Gov. Griffin. To thunderous applause from the joint House and Senate session, Griffin said.

"NO MIXING"—GRIFFIN

"There will be no mixing of the races in the public schools and college classrooms of Georgia anywhere or at any time as long as I am governor."

The Senate segregation bills went to the rules committee after first reading. Overby said they would probably not be returned to the upper chamber for action until early next week.

The measures call for:

1. Granting the governor power to close schools at his discretion when threatened with integration and to grant state funds to individual children for education in "private schools."

2. Giving local school boards authority to lease buildings for private educational purposes.

3. Allowing private school teachers to join teacher retirement system.

4. Empowering the Attorney General to enjoin local systems from any moves toward desegregation of schools.

5. Authorizing sale of public parks to sublease facilities now rented from the school building authority.

7. Prohibiting use of any public funds for mixed schools.

8. Requiring all schools to comply with fire regulations.

Gov. Griffin refrained from endorsing "interposition." This theory holds a state can declare null the action of a federal agency, such as the Supreme Court, until such time as that action is approved by three-fourths of the states.

Fulton Bill Seeks Park Sales Okay

Constitution
Tues. 1-17-56
Atlanta, Ga.

An amendment to the Atlanta charter allowing the city to dispose of parks, playgrounds, golf courses and other recreational facilities was offered Monday by the Fulton County House delegation.

P. 7

Rep. Hamilton Lokey described the bill as legislation specifically designed to let the city sell the James L. Key golf course. The course lies on the right-of-way of the proposed East-West expressway, he added.

Mayor Hartsfield said that under the present regulations, there is no provision for disposing of public recreation facilities.

A similar bill of statewide application was approved Monday in the Senate, and was expected to pass the House with little opposition. Hartsfield said the local Fulton bill may duplicate the statewide bill but it would clear up any possible ambiguity.

The bill introduced Monday authorizes the mayor and Board of Aldermen to "sell, exchange, farm out, lease, rent or in any way alien property dedicated to the use" of public recreation and "all other property connected therewith."

Legislature Passes Four Bias Measures

Daily World
Tues. 1-17-56
Atlanta, Ga.

BY THOMAS B. ROSS
For International News Service

The Georgia General Assembly moved Monday to pass four of eight segregation bills in the Senate, and a state-wide probation system in the House—all without opposition.

P. 1

The four remaining segregation bills are expected to be acted upon finally and favorably by the upper house Tuesday. Three om them were reported out of the Rules Committee Monday and a fourth, recommitted for further study, is expected to face only token opposition

This measure would allow the Attorney General to block individuals and groups from "agitating" for integration.

Sen Lawson Neel, of Thomasville, said the bill must be further studied to insure that free speech is not impinged and, "we are on constitutional grounds."

OPPONENTS

Daily World

Sen. C. Ernest McDonald, of Dalton, insisted he would abstain from voting on all the measures, and Senators Howell Hollis, of Columbus, and Owen Pace, of Savannah, claimed the language of the bill was "too vague."

But Sen. Howard Overby, of Gainesville, Administration floor leader, said:

P. 3

"The bill was recommitted only to iron out some minor technicalities. They will all pass without opposition when they return."

The measures passed Monday allow transfer of public parks to private groups, prohibit trespassing on school property closed by the governor, and permit private school teachers to join the teacher retirement plan.

The probation bill adopted by the House would give the pardons and paroles board the power to appoint probation officers in each judicial district in an attempt to place less persons in jail and more on probation through more comprehensive investigation.

Soldier fined $200 in attempt to eat in Atlanta cafe

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 1-21-56

ATLANTA (ANP) — A soldier who tried to get service in a white restaurant here was fined $200 in Municipal Court last Friday.

P. 3

Jesse J. Green, said by military police to be absent without leave from Fort Riley, Kan., appeared in court with a badly swollen left eye which resulted, police claimed, when he "hit his head" on the patrol wagon door."

Judge James Webb stipulated that the soldier pay a $50 fine on charges of cursing. The judge suspended payment of $50 fines on charges of drunk and disorderly conduct, assault on an officer and resisting arrest.

Georgia Senate Votes For Segregation Plan

Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.
Tues. 1-17-56

Atlanta, Jan. 16 — (UP) — The Georgia Senate passed and sent to the House this afternoon four of Gov. Marvin Griffin's eight bills setting up machinery for private schools to avoid racial integration and to ban integrated State recreation facilities.

Bill Would End Charters If Cities Integrate Parks

Constitution
Thurs. 1-19-56
Atlanta, Ga.

A bill requiring revocation of charters of cities which do not maintain segregated public facilities was offered in the House Wednesday.

P. 7

Apparently aimed at Atlanta's recent compliance with a Federal Court order to desegregate its golf courses, the measure was introduced by Rep. C. M. Jordan of Wheeler County.

Jordan's bill, if adopted, would not be retroactive. "I can't help where it has happened . . . but this should help cities work out problems like this," the Wheeler solon said. "They can work them out if they try," he declared.

Bishop Doubts Georgia's Racial Pattern Can Last

Constitution P. 3

SAVANNAH, Ga., Jan. 22 (AP)—The Most Rev. Francis E. Hyland, auxiliary bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Savannah-Atlanta, says he does not believe "the pattern of segregation can endure too long" in Georgia.

But, he said, the prospect of integration "is not too encouraging for the immediate future due primarily to the present political climate in Georgia."

In a written reply to a series of questions submitted to him by The Associated Press, the bishop continued:

"The trend, however, is definitely toward integration elsewhere, including some of the states of the South. Therefore, notwithstanding the activity in the State Legislature meeting in Atlanta these days, I do not believe that the pattern of segregation can endure too long in a state which is one of the most Christian and most American in the nation."

Atlanta Ga.

Mon. 1-23-56

RAPS RACISM

"The Catholic Church has always and will always condemn racism in all its varied shapes and forms, because it is utterly opposed to the Christian way of life; and the church sympathizes wholeheartedly with the Negro people of Georgia and elsewhere in their just aspirations to obtain those rights and that recognition to which they have every claim and title."

In reply to other questions the bishop said Catholic schools and orphanages in the diocese have not been integrated. "But," he said, "it is the considered judgment of the attorneys whom we have consulted that the laws of the State of Georgia requiring separate school facilities for white and Negro people do not apply to our parochial schools."

NEGRO FACILITIES

The bishop also said the four most recently established Catholic hospitals in Georgia all have facilities for Negro patients.

"Insofar as church seating is concerned, there has been no discrimination in this regard in the Catholic Churches in Georgia for some years," he said.

"We still have separate white and Negro parishes in Georgia, but they are no longer designated as such. I must resort to these designations, however, in order to answer fully your question. In my opinion we shall continue to have separate Negro parishes in Georgia for some years to come, but principally for the spiritual welfare of our Negro people.

WELCOME ALL

"I would like to add, however, that Negroes are welcome to attend our white parishes and whites are welcome to attend our Negro parishes. At the present time some Negroes attend mass and other devotions in practically all our white parishes. In some places in Georgia where there are Negro Catholics there are no separate parish or church facilities for them; the Negros not only attend but they are members of the established parishes in such places."

Asked if there have been any incidents, the bishop said, "To my knowledge there have been no incidents worthy of note."

GEORGIA EDITORS LOOK OVER THE STATE:

Journal & Constitution

Moderation Is Important In Segregation Controversy

Atlanta Ga.

Sun. 1-22-56

P. 9E

Augusta Chronicle

MANY PEOPLE in other sections who are far removed from the South, in point of distance and traditions, and whose mode of living is different, seem to have gotten the mistaken idea that Southerners are putting up a grand bluff about integration of the races, and that eventually we will accept it.

The New York Times, for instance, chides Virginians for voting to establish private schools if that becomes necessary to preserve segregation and the integrity of the races. The newspaper thinks the South is fighting a sort of rear-guard action, sniping at the "enemy," retreating slowly and grudgingly.

The Times and others can understand how Southerners' feelings are wrenched by the prospects of racial intermingling, but why can't the South accept the inevitable—integration—and make the best of it? Why try to hold back the dawn?

These people, who do not even plead ignorance, show a gross misunderstanding of the temper and the determination of the Southern people. They are accepting nothing. They have just begun to fight. . . .

Most Southerners do not feel that they are engaged in a delaying action. They are against integration. Period. Now and in the future. They are adamant and they are unyielding, and the sooner people in other sections of the country realize this the better it will be for everyone concerned. . . .

BERT STRUBY

Macon Telegraph and News

. . . THE STATES RIGHTS rally at Americus was pure, unadulterated political demagoguery of the basest sort—nothing more, nothing less.

It was calculated to whip up the emotions of the capacity crowd attending, and it did exactly that.

Not all of the speakers appearing on the program were guilty of seeking to deliberately lead those Georgia citizens into the pitfall of an inflamed attitude on the segregation issue. But some were.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, a state official sworn to uphold both State and U.S. Constitutions, vigorously advocated open defiance of the Supreme Court. ("It is time to lay aside such terms as circumvention and come out and say we are openly defying . . ." he asserted.)

Roy Harris, attempting to regain some niche in state political affairs, suggested that Georgia church members "quit paying dues in churches who call integration the Christian thing to do."

Former Gov. Herman Talmadge described members of the Supreme Court as "peanut politicians" who do not have "enough legal brains among them to make one fair lawyer in Americus today." . . .

There are those who will say that anyone who opposes the States Rights Council is in favor of integration. That, of course, is entirely false.

I sincerely believe that the pattern of segregation must be continued now in the South, and I also sincerely believe in the approach of wisdom, justice and moderation to the issue. . . .

Columbus Ledger

. . . AT LEAST in the talking stage as the Legislature met was something called "interposition." Simply, this would mean that Georgia officially would resolve to ignore the U.S. Supreme Court decision. Except as propaganda, it is hard to see just what this would accomplish. If there is to be open defiance of the laws of the land, will the legislators take up arms should the conflict stage in enforcement be reached? Put another way, interposition means nullification—which was tried by John C. Calhoun, and he almost got hanged for it. Would the legislators take up rifles against U.S. troops, or walk to the gallows? . . .

Bulloch Herald

. . . IT IS UNDERSTOOD that Gov. Griffin does not want to use the 'private school" legislation except as a last resort, knowing that if that comes it will have to be done with no reservations. There can be nothing which in any way would suggest that the schools were still public schools.

It is agreed that if the step has to be taken there will be confusion—how much confusion can only be guessed.

It is also agreed that the step will result in a great loss to the children of our state.

We hate to think upon this problem. But it is with us and must be thought out, and action taken. To think that "it will iron itself out" is to indulge in wishful thinking.

We are committed to the idea of segregated schools. Our life, our history, our traditions, all are based upon the idea and it comes hard to accept any other.

We can only hope that our leaders are right. . . .

Gainesville Morning News

WE BELIEVE that the segregation in education recommendations of Governor Griffin are, at least in their present form, ill-advised and dangerous.

They would give one man, the governor, authority to close any school or school system on his own say-so, and regardless of the feeling of local school boards and local citizens.

They would enable the governor to scrap our entire system of public schools without any guarantee that we could substitute for them segregated private schools or any form of workable, general education. . . .

Our public schools are the bulwark of democracy. They have been built up over a long period of time, with much money and hard work. They should not be sacrificed to the mercy of one man overnight.

Valdosta Daily Times

GEORGIA, along with other Southern states, is deeply concerned over the question of maintaining segregation in its public schools despite the ruling of the Supreme Court to the contrary.

A number of bills looking to this end have been introduced in the current session of the General Assembly and there is widespread belief that some way will be found to maintain segregation and at the same time give both white and Negro children the educational advantages to which they are entitled.

It is important that any program that may be worked out be carefully considered from all angles and that there be no hasty action. It is also important that the issue be approached calmly and without rancor or violence or ill will. . . .

SYLVAN MEYER

Gainesville Daily Times

. . . SINCE THE GEORGIA constitutional amendment permitting ravaging of the schools has passed, obviously its implementing legislation will pass. The amendment, as many of us pointed out at the time, was not intended to sit dormant in the books. In the same manner the laws, if passed, will be used sooner or later.

We are headed for a legal snarl of unenforceable court decisions, meaningless legislative acts and other outgrowths of reckless confusion. . . .

Pulse of the Public

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Mon. 2-13-56

The Average Negro Family Doesn't Want Integration, Extremists Are Pushing Issue

Atlanta.—In all this discussion of the segregation problem, the real "forgotten men and women" are in two categories:

The average Southern Negro constitutes one category. Those I know are most unhappy with the way things are shaping up. They do not want integration of schools because they do not think their children would be happy in such schools.

The average white citizen in the North and West and those of Northern extraction in the South are the other category. Here I do not know exactly what they want. Most of them I know did not like integration even where they had it for years. They will never get violent about it, but if given a chance to quietly vote on it, I would hesitate to forecast how they would vote.

I personally think the radicals are pushing us too hard and fast and the politicians are egging them on because in many Northern states, the Negroes come very close to holding the balance of political power and since FDR's time they have been voting solidly Democratic.

REALIST.

* * *

He Wants Full Time Crime Prevention

Atlanta—I see where Gov. Griffin has issued a proclamation setting aside Feb. 12-19 as Crime Prevention Week in Georgia. That isn't nearly long enough.

May one ask to whom it applies?

AUSTIN HERFORD.

* * *

Governor Is Accused Of Intimidating Press

Jasper—As a free thinking citizen I take this opportunity to thank you for your front page challenge to Griffin and his bunch of rubber-stamp senators and representatives. This man Griffin has succeeded so far in his effort to intimidate a free press and free speech.

Now he has pardoned his paper, the Bainbridge Post Searchlight, from the libel law.

I am sure the bill is unconstitutional and will not stand up under a court test. Griffin claims his bill is to protect the people which is absurd and untrue. The best protection for the people is a free press and free speech.

J. M. GARRETT.

* * *

Speak the Truth or Watch Nation Perish

Atlanta — Innumerable comments about the editorials "We Accept the Challenge" in both The Constitution and The Journal have been so enthusiastic that I am taking the liberty of sending a quotation from a great newspaper man to you.

William Allen White wrote: "The nation will survive, this state will prosper, the orderly business of life will go forward if only men can speak in whatever way given them to utter what their hearts hold—by voice, by posted card, by letter, or by press. Reason has never failed men, only force and oppression have made wrecks in the world."

MRS. MILDRED S. HITCH.

* * *

Attack of Politicians On FBI Is Deplored

Atlanta — Now that the United States Department of Justice has cleared the Cobb County jury selection system, it may be well to recall some of the unfair attacks that were made while the FBI was investigating the case.

I am sure many Atlantans felt the same shock and surprise I did when we read of the congressional attacks on the FBI for investigating the complaints. It is the sworn duty of the FBI to carry out all the laws entrusted to its care.

I will be proud of some of my Georgia representatives if instead of attacking the FBI for doing its duty they would try to change the laws whose enforcement they do not like.

FRANK WESTBROOK JR.

PRO-BIAS PRINCIPAL RESIGNS

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Wed 2-8-56

FT. GAINES, Ga.—(INS)— Harrison E. Lee submitted his resignation as principal of the Speight High School at Ft. Gaines because he said there was "pressure" from other Negroes in the community after he made a speech urging that they "forget integration."

The Clay County Board of Education said Mr. Lee's wife, who taught in another nearby school, also resigned and they reportedly left the community.

Mr. Lee had made a speech recently in which he urged local Negroes to "forget integration and remember we as yet have not learned how to pool our resources and build even a recreation hall for our children."

Sheriff Chester Weston said that he is investigating the report of "pressure." Lee was completing his third term as principal.

Parks Swap Bill Voted as No-Mix Aid

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 2-15-56

By CELESTINE SIBLEY

The Georgia House Tuesday passed a bill which Rep. James Mackay of DeKalb County said would allow the State Parks Department to "swap a state park for a cornfield without notice to anyone."

The bill, introduced by Floor Leader Denmark Groover, passed the House by a vote of 118 to 2. It was sent to the Senate and is expected to reach the floor Thursday.

Rep. David C. Stripling of Coweta County explained the measure as another piece of segregation legislation and a companion bill to Senate Bill 5 which authorizes the state and municipalities to lease recreation facilities to individuals. The Senate bill, however, carried an amendment requiring that such leases be advertised.

Rep. Bernard Nightingale of Glynn County pointed out that the House bill provided that the leasing of state parks need not be advertised "if the lease involved is for a period of one year or less," or if the property is exchanged.

Arising to question Stripling Nightingale said, "I'm not objecting to your bill but I think it has a provision which needs clearing up."

He quoted the section exempting from advertising "the exchange of state park property or interest therein on a dollar for dollar value basis."

Stripling said the intent of the bill was to allow the Parks Department to swap land "it might own somewhere else for an equal number of acres adjacent to the park."

"The bill repeals a safeguard signed into law a week ago," said Rep. Mackay, referring to Senate Bill 5. "It would permit a park to be swapped for a cornfield without notice to anyone."

In other actions the House passed:

1. A Uniform Support Law, which would allow solicitors general to collect fees of $50 for each petition handled in forcing parents to support minor children.

SEX OFFENDER LIST

2. A bill which would require superior court clerks to keep a separate list of sex offenders and transmit a copy to the State Crime Laboratory.

3. A lengthy measure advocated by the State Game and Fish Department to tighten and clarify game laws.

4. A one-sentence measure which provides for the "teaching of Southern history and traditions" in the public schools, subject matter to be approved by the State Board of Education.

5. A bill to study the possibility of increasing and developing prison industries.

A bill which created a State Division of Conservation, under which the Department of Mines, Mining and Geology would be combined with the Parks Department, also was passed.

WITHHOLDING TAX DIES

A Senate resolution by Sen. Everett Millican of Atlanta which included a study of the advisability of a state withholding tax was killed by the House State of Republic Committee.

The House then passed a House resolution calling for a similar study of state income tax laws. But bowing to opposition, sponsors had carefully amended out all reference to a withholding tax.

TEACHER FIRING

A bill offered by Rep. William Freeman of Monroe and Rep. William Bodenhamer of Tift to allow the State Board of Education to fire teachers and county school superintendents after a hearing failed after a lively crossfire of question-and-answer debate on the floor. Rep. Nightingale read the specific causes for which teachers and school superintendents might be discharged and raised objection to the final "and other good and sufficient causes," which he described as "a Mother Hubbard covering everything."

An amendment offered by Nightingale to cut out the ambiguous phrase failed and the bill seemed on the point of passage when Floor Leader Groover raised another question. "Is it not true," he asked, "that the State Board cannot in fact fire school superintendents now? And is it not true that this bill would allow elected county officials to be discharged by an appointed state board?"

The bill was promptly defeated but Rep. Bodenhamer served notice that he would ask that it be reconsidered Wednesday morning.

Georgia leader warns of hatred, bloodshed

News Sun. 2-19-56

SAVANNAH, Ga., Feb. 18—(AP)—A Georgia white supremacy leader today told a Negro college gathering that if integration is forced on the South, then "as surely as the sun rises and sets—there will be a long period of bitterness, hatred and bloodshed."

Birmingham,

Roy V. Harris, a member of the university system Board of Regents, compared current NAACP activities to post Civil War carpet-baggers. Continuation of such activities, he said, will not only impede educational progress but will "lead to bitterness, to hate, to strife, to turmoil and bloodshed."

Ala.

HARRIS REVIEWED the growth of Savannah State College in a speech prepared for dedication exercises at two new campus buildings. "So long as we continue to cooperate and to work together on a friendly basis," he said, "there is no limit to the things we can do in Georgia and to the educational opportunities which may be offered to our people."

The Augusta attorney, who was active last year in reorganizing and expanding the States Rights Council of Georgia, a white supremacy group, reviewed the economic and social change that evolved in the South during the post Civil War period.

CARPETBAGGERS "used the members of your race . . . as sacrificial goats," he stated, "to gain authority and ransack the South.

"As a result," he declared, "ill feeling developed between your race and mine. Bitterness, strife and the spilling of blood resulted." And when the carpetbaggers left, "they left our forefathers holding the bag."

"Finally we, by mutual consent, evolved a pattern of life in the South whereby the two races could live together in peace and harmony. . . ."

NOW "THERE COMES into our area a new group which would array race against race and section against section," . . . "They come seeking your aid to return to the old days of bitterness, strife and bloodshed," he continued. "For as surely as the sun rises and sets if the power of the federal courts is ever used to enforce the integration of the races in the South there will be a long period of bitterness, hatred and bloodshed."

SUCH A COURSE will disrupt "our future progress," he said. . . . "There can be no progress without good will . . . there can be no progress without cooperation and without peace.

". . . So, I submit to you that the way of life that has brought to us peace, understanding, progress, prosperity and happiness and which holds so many promises for the future is worthy of continuing."

"We believe in states rights. But along with rights go obligations and responsibility. We believe in the state's obligation for the proper education of our children and the state's responsibility for the peaceful and just resolution of our difficulties. We are deeply troubled by the tendency to inflamatory talk and action by men in responsible positions," he said.

Atlanta Bishop Sees Danger In Bid to Keep Segregation

Herald P. 13-A

Fri. 1-27-56

MACON, Ga.—(AP)—The bishop of the Atlanta diocese of the Episcopal Church says some of the attempts to preserve segregation in Georgia "have dangerous implications for the welfare of our people and the future of our state."

The Rt. Rev. Randolph B. Claiborne told the 49th annual meeting of members of the diocese:

Miami, Fla.

"As your bishop, noting reported suggestions by men in high political circles that members stop paying dues in churches whose ministers 'call integration the Christian thing to do,' I feel it is my duty to state plainly for all of you, first, that this church stands for separation of church and state, which means not only no control of the state by the church, but quite as surely no control of the church by the state or by politicians.

"As your bishop, noting this direct assault upon the free expression of sincere conviction by Christian leaders, I state for all of you that we, the descendants of those who came to this free land seeking freedom of religion, can do no less than point out the danger to our religious freedom of this dangerous method of procedure."

The bishop said it was up to the people of Georgia to decide whether to "put in the hands of one man the power to destroy the public school system of this state." He said he referred to the private school plan now before the Legislature.

9 Georgia Parks Are Leased To Citizens To Safeguard Segregation and Save Money

Constitution P. 1 Wed. 4-18-56

Atlanta, Ga.

Concessions At 5 Others Private, Too

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Georgia's system of state parks has become virtually a system of privately operated parks in a move to safeguard segregation.

State parks director Roy Chalker revealed Tuesday that he has leased most state parks to private citizens for a 12-month period. The leases were negotiated. Recent "private park" legislation eliminated necessity for advertising for bids.

PRESERVE SEGREGATION

While the transfer from public to private operation is designed primarily to try to preserve segregation, Chalker declared it also carries out plans for efficiency and economy. He predicted the state would save 33 to 50 per cent of its operational costs by leasing out the parks. Service to the public will not be harmed, he said.

Gov. Griffin and Chalker have signed leases with private citizens for private operation of nine state parks. They plan to lease two or three more parks, Chalker said. One park already was under lease.

Average price of the annual lease is $2,000, Chalker reported. He emphasized that the lease price is based upon earnings of each park, rather than upon the state's investments in the park. In cases in which parks have lost money for the state, the lease arrangements will provide the state with revenue, Chalker said.

CONCESSION PRIVILEGES

In addition to the leases for total operations, the state has leased to private individuals the concession rights alone in five other parks, the director stated.

Most of the lessees are former superintendents of the state parks, Chalker said. All are residents of the counties in which the parks are located.

Chalker said the public interest will be protected by the lease agreements. The leases, drawn by the attorney general's office, require the private operators to operate the parks in lawful manner, keep them clean and in good repair. (The state will continue to make major repairs.)

The private operators must keep financial records subject to state inspection. They must carry liability and workmen's compensation insurance. They cannot sublease the facilities without permission. The state can cancel the leases immediately for noncompliance.

Wed. 4-18-56

Chalker said the State Parks Department will increase its inspections of park facilities now that they are going under private operation.

The state also will maintain its fish and forestry conservation programs in each park, the director said.

Atlanta, Ga.

Chalker said the lessees are asked to maintain prices of cottages and concession sales at the level maintained by the state.

"We have told the lessees they should serve the citizens, regardless of whether the visitors spend any money," Chalker said. "A citizen should get courteous treatment at the parks even if he just wants a drink of water and a place to spread a picnic lunch."

PASS BILL

The Legislature recently passed a law authorizing short-term leasing of the parks as a method of avoiding federal court integration decisions aimed at public parks.

(However, a federal court in Virginia recently held that Negroes should be admitted to state-owned parks, regardless of whether the parks were operated by the state itself or by citizens leasing the parks.)

Earlier, the Legislative Economy Committee approved Chalker's plan to lease more facilities for the primary reason of economy and efficiency. One concession (Pine Mountain Inn) was losing money at the rate of $10,000 for the final year of its operation by the state, Chalker said. Now the state is receiving $500 a year in rental from a lease—making the state $10,500 better off financially, the director contended.

LEASE PARKS

By leasing the parks to private operators, Chalker said the parks department is cutting its own payrolls. The savings realized by lease agreements will be used to take care of long-neglected maintenance work in the parks, he said. The department will continue to use the total amount of its $375,000 annual legislative appropriation, the director stated.

While the state is leasing most of its parks in an effort to maintain segregation, it also is building and opening two new parks for Negroes. The Lincoln Park at Millen is opening for its first season. Construction is under way on the Yam Grandee park at Swainsboro.

Vogel State Park had been leased to Bonnell Aiken last year on a three-year contract. This was the only park whose total operations were under lease. Concessions only were leased in several other parks.

Childers Asks Editor Society To Delete Blast at Negroes

Constitution p. 2 Sat. 4-21-56
Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, April 20 (AP)—One Southern editor took issue today with remarks made by another concerning Negroes.

James Saxon Childers of The Atlanta Journal asked that the American Society of Newspaper Editors delete from its convention records remarks made yesterday by Harry M. Ayers of the Anniston (Ala.) Star during a discussion of the school segregation issue.

The Alabama editor had used strong and derogatory language about Negroes in arguing against integration.

His talk was cut off by the chairman, at request of an editor in the audience, after it had run far overtime. An earlier speaker also had been cut off.

Childers today told the meeting that Ayers' views do not represent the general feeling of Southern editors. He characterized the Alabama editors' remarks as "an echo of an imagined past and a distortion of present reality."

Childers said he considered the incident "most unfortunate" and he went on:

"I for one would ask that it—Ayers' speech—be obliterated from the record and all thought of it be ended."

The presiding officer, retiring ASNE President Kenneth MacDonald of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, said it would be contrary to ASNE proecedures to expunge any remarks.

Gen. Caffey Seems To Be Opposed To Desegregation

Post-Herald
Birmingham, Ala.

ATLANTA, Jan. 30 (U.P.)—Maj. Gen. Eugene Caffey, judge advocate general of the Army, appeared to put himself on the record today on the side of Southern racial segregation forces.

Tues. 1-31-56

The Army's top legal officer delivered a short address to the Georgia House of Representatives. He said he had dinner in Washington recently with Rep. John J. Flynt (D., Ga.) at which Flynt let him read a copy of speech he made to the Georgia Legislature last week.

Birmingham

"If I were going to make a speech I would hope to make one like that," Caffey said. The House applauded.

Ala.

Flynt's speech to the Legislature was a bitter attack on the federal government and the U. S. Supreme Court for recent racial integration orders. Flynt also denounced the FEPC policies.

Georgia Leases Nine State Parks No Negroes Allowed

Courier Sat. 4-28-56
Pittsburgh, Pa.
p. 13

ATLANTA — In the latest move designed to keep tax-paying Negroes out of state-owned parks, Georgia has leased nine of her parks to private individuals.

p. 3

The state claims that by leasing out its parks, segregation will be maintained and the state will save from 33 to 50 per cent of its operational costs. Despite the leasing of the parks to private persons, the state will make all major repairs and continue to maintain conservation and fishery activities.

Georgia's Negroes help to pay the freight for all of this through taxes. However, the state is building and opening two new parks for Negroes at Millen and Swainsboro.

FORCE OPPOSED IN INTEGRATION

Times Picayune
Tues. 6-26-56

Assault on Freedom of Action, Says Pastor

New Orleans, La.

ATLANTA, June 25 (AP)—Forced integration is as much an assault on freedom of action as forced silence is an assault on freedom of speech, an Atlanta Baptist pastor told his congregation Sunday.

In a sermon entitled "Is Racial Integration the Answer?" Dr. Roy D. McClain, pastor of the First Baptist church, one of the largest in the South, said "physical closeness without psychological and spiritual nearness means nothing."

He said prejudice is a two-way street and there are "sins on both sides." He listed "monopoly, self-interest and superiority" as sins of the white man. He mentioned as sins of the Negro "hatred engendered by years of travail; immorality — common-law marriage, sensuality, disease and sloth. (There is) no monopoly here by any race . . . But these are too much in evidence."

The 40-year-old pastor, a chaplain in the Pacific during World War II, said the solution of the race problem will not be found in "law or ethical presuppositions: these will not lessen the tension."

"Prohibition taught us that," he continued, "just to pass a law did not stop men from drinking. Peaceful and harmonious relations will come only when each member of each race becomes a reconciler in the spirit of Jesus.

"The new birth of real religion is the hope for whites and colored . . . It is too much to expect changed living from unchanged lives."

Discussing the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, McClain said many NAACP leaders are sincere "yet they have succeeded in tightening the tensions, deepening the rivers of racial distrust."

"If zeal is not tempered by judgment," he added, "this association will go down in history as the National Assn. for the Accursing the Colored People (SIC)."

The pastor said, "Integration when forced upon a society is not basically either democratic or Christian in concept."

A Regrettable Reprisal

Daily Mirror p. 4

Not only those in accord with the fundamentals he espouses, but every American believing in the cardinal principles upon which this government was founded, deplore the action taken by those who would strip Dr. G. H. Wells a worthy servant and administrator of a title he has ~~earned through~~ years of faithful service and a pension to which he contributed for this very time. This directly refers to the treatment accorded Dr. G. H. Wells by the State Board of Education.

Atlanta, Ga.

Hardly any one thought when the current controversy gained its spiral on this front that ony one would venture so far as to openly challenge the inherent right of a free speech in a free Republic, whose boast is the right of an individual to enjoy it.

Dr. Wells as is known is the executive secretary of the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation whose work is well and widely known. He has been that faithful and fearless apostle of genuine sanity and sincerity who has the courage to stand up and be counted when the mandate of his country is challenged.

He has been making speeches over this area to various clubs, civic and business organizations, where he has been well received and heard.

Tpi. 3-16-56

It is generally felt that the thrust of such a reprisal at stripping him of an honor and pension earned, ventures the preposterous. Valor and courage exhibited on the field of battle can never be erased.

The State Board of Education requested the State Teachers Retirement Board to discontinue "if legally possible" the pension drawn by Dr. Wells as retired president of Georgia State College for Women. The State Board of Regents had already erased the title as "president emeritus" which it gave upon his retirement.

Dr. Wells lived up to courage and that estimation responsible for his being selected to his present position.

The educator is on firm ground; his record across the years would attest that forthrightness and grounded integrity upon which he stands in this one of the crucial periods in American history. One way to show support for Dr. Well's record would be to give more moral and financial support to the Interracial Committee.

An Educator's Pension

Newsweek p. 75

Three years ago Guy H. Wells resigned as president of Georgia State College for Women. Recently, as executive secretary of the Georgia Council on Interracial Cooperation, he has been urging whites and Negroes to sit down together to iron out desegregation problems. Last week, the 63-year-old educator drew a reaction of a sort.

Mar. 3-26-56

Georgia's University System Board of Regents stripped Wells of his title of president emeritus, thus canceling his life- and hospitalization-insurance policy. Then the State Board of Education asked the Teacher Retirement Board to discontinue Wells' monthly pension of $518.93 for the rest of his life.

Gov. Marvin D. Griffin commented: "I am sure the boards did what they felt to be right. To be drawing $518.93 a month pension, Dr. Wells has been acting a little ugly." Wells said that he would fight the board's action in court if necessary: "I have nothing to retract or apologize for."

Rights figure to sue for pension

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Guy H. Wells, executive secretary of the Georgia Council on Interracial Cooperation, threatened this week to sue if his $518 monthly pension is cut off because of his segregation views.

3-24-56

The state board of education had earlier asked the teacher retirement board to see if the pension could be discontinued.

THE BOARD OF Regents, at the same time, took from him the title of president emeritus of the Georgia State College of Women.

The 63-year-old Mr. Wells said he would also ask the restoration of this title because its revocation caused the cancellation of a life insurance policy. Of the retirement pension, he said:

"That's my earned retirement that I'm going to live on. I don't think they can revoke it by law."

Forced Mixing Assault On Liberty, Pastor Says

Constitution
Atlanta, Ga. Mon. 6-25-56

By LEE KUHRMAN

Forced integration is as much an assault on freedom of action as forced silence is an assault on freedom of speech, the Rev. Dr. Roy D. McClain, pastor of First Baptist Church of Atlanta, said here Sunday.

With his morning sermon topic "Is Racial Integration the Answer?" the 40-year-old pastor who served three years in the Pacific as a chaplain in World War II, added that "physical closeness without psychological and spiritual nearness means nothing."

Taking as his text: James 1:19-20, "Beloved brethren, be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath, for the wrath of man does not work the righteousness of God," Dr. McClain said he was not speaking on the issue to be sensational or to stir up strife or to please any one, but "because it is a major issue of our day."

"Because it is a major issue it is not too big for the church," he said. "The church must face forthrightly all that appears on the human scene.

"As a member of thsi church, you have a right to know what I, your pastor, think on the subject. I do not profess to know all the answers of this complex question. This sermon is no panacea for all the ills.

"But at least we can start out right basing our thoughts and deeds on two major premises: the spirit of Jesus and the Will of God."

He said further: "The solution is not in law or ethical presuppositions. These will not lessen the tension. Prohibition taught us that just to pass a law did not stop men from drinking.

RELIGION IS HOPE

"Peaceful and harmonious relations will come only when each member of each race becomes a reconcilor in the spirit of Jesus. The new birth of real religion is the hopes for whites and colored. It it too much to expect changed living from unchanged lives."

"Declaring there is "sin on both sides," he termed the white man's sin as monopoly, self-interest, superiority, etc, and the Negro's sin as hatred, engendered by years of travail; immorality common-law marriage, sensuality, disease and sloth.

"There is no monopoly here by any race," he continued, "but these are too much in evidence.

STATES REASONS

Dr. McClain, who said he had worked six months preparing the sermon, stated as additional reasons for speaking on the subject:

"Because some politicians have used the issue to traffic in human life, often using this as a smokescreen to cover up their own lack of qualifications for office.

"Because the last 24 months have engendered more strife and hatred than the last decade of normal progress.

"Because ignorance or silence is no defense against social evil. Our safety cannot be found in the dark. Sometimes silence is golden. Other times silence is yellow."

Mon. 6-25-56

OLD PROBLEM

Dr. McClain touched on the historical perspective of the issue, pointing out it was an old problem, and that the South is not the exclusive guardian of prejudice and race problem. In this connection he mentioned the apartheid policy in South Africa and the psychological ghettoes of Chicago and Harlem.

Commenting on "Evolution or Revolution," Dr. McClain drew an analogy from nature, saying, "Society cannot force her growth, righteousness cannot be legislated any more than education can be forced.

"The magnitude of the problem is such that it cannot be solved by those who step promptly, confidently, angrily forward with ruthless remedies. Overplaying your hand is bad judgment in anything. This induces the strongest kind of resistance."

Noting the Negro's progress in the South, he said, "Ninety years of freedom have meant more phenomenal growth than any other colored people anywhere on earth..

"His progress, instead of being retarded by whites, is explained by his proximity to whites. Conversely, his forefathers are still in the bush.

"Marian Anderson made the Metropolitan Opera not because she was a Negress, but because she had a voice. Merit will triumph usually and open the right doors."

POOR WOULD SUFFER

He said also that integration on a forced basis could eventuate in wealthy whites sending their children to private schools, wealthy Negroes sending their children to private schools, and poor whites and poor Negroes taking what they can with, in some cases, the possible rise of a cruel caste system which belongs to no real democracy.

Georgia Encounters Difficulty Leasing Parks To Individuals

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Thurs. 8-2-56

ATLANTA, Aug. 1 (AP)—Georgia is encountering difficulties in leasing state parks to individuals in a move to preserve segregation.

Ten parks were leased to their former superintendents under a 1956 legislative act aimed at preserving segregation. The state also expected to save money by the leasing since most of them operated at a loss.

P. 3-A

Gov. Marvin Griffin agreed to an arrangement whereby the former park superintendents were designated as state wildlife rangers and placed on the payroll of the game and fish department at salaries ranging from $185 to $395 a month. The salaries were to compensate the lessees for unprofitable park operations and promote conservation practices on park lands.

Criticism of the state subsidy to the lessees through the salaries promptly followed from officials of the Georgia Conservation League. Fred Sturges of Macon, league president, called the action "political manipulation." Gerald R. Hunter of Cordele, league vice president, said it was unfair to pay the special rangers more money than regular rangers receive.

Griffin today ordered the special rangers removed from the game and fish department payroll. He said it had been practically impossible to find suitable lessees and the wildlife ranger salaries were thrown in as an inducement.

With the cutting off of these salaries, Griffin said, the lessees will be given a choice of surrendering their leases and resuming employment as superintendents.

Griffin pledged he would do everything possible to preserve racial segregation at the parks and continue their operation.

Nullification Bill Vetoed

Times Tues. 2-28

ATLANTA, Feb. 8 (UP)—Georgia's House of Representatives gave overwhelming aproval to Gov. Marvin Griffin's resolution declaring the Supreme Court mixed-schools edict "null, void and of no effect."

Post 2-28

The nullification resolution won a 179 to 1 vote of approval after administration floor leader Denmark Groover called it "the most important piece of legislation of the session.

Good News From Georgia!

Courier Pitts.

Roy V. Harris, that indefatigable Negrophobe and perennial campaign manager for that high priest of segregation, Herman Talmadge, has come up with a plan to have Southern politicians utilize free TV time at the forthcoming Democratic National Convention to tell the nation why the South opposes civil rights and school integration.

Mr. Harris' plan is a truly inspired one which will commend itself to Republicans and Southern Democrats, although it will be painfully alarming to the rest of the nation's Democrats.

Pittsburgh Pa

American Negroes especially will delight in whatever the Dixiecrats may say on this stolen TV time because it will underscore the psychopathic preoccupation of the unreconstructed South with the so-called Negro problem and its determination to try to force the majority of the American people to go along.

Sat. 8-4-56

Surely, the Republican National Committee and the National Citizens for Eisenhower could not have thought up a more effective method of insuring Democratic defeat in November than that of Roy V. Harris.

With characteristic selfishness and irresponsibility, Mr. Harris and his cronies are not concerned with the great national and international issues confronting their party and the country, but only with "plugging" the anti-Negro line.

To the millions of wavering liberal Democrats thinking of shifting to Eisenhower, the plan of Harris and Company will provide the final push over into the GOP ranks, thus insuring a Republican victory.

Perhaps the Republicans should send some token of their appreciation to Messrs. Harris, Talmadge, et al!

Attorney Gets 4 Days in Jail

P. 8
Courier
Pitts. 5-17-56

ATLANTA, Ga. — Reuben A. Garland, a white attorney defending a Negro, served four days in jail after being sentenced for contempt of court.

The attorney was given a sentence by Judge E. E. Andrews after he said Garland made "disrespectful" remarks during the selection of a jury in Fulton Superior Court.

Pittsburgh Pa

Garland, representing John Browner Jr., in court on a $100 robbery charge, is said to have questioned jurors on the racial question. The judge ruled a mistrial in the case.

WELLS' PENSION TO BE CONTINUED

Times-Picayune

Not Affected by Racial Views, Is Ruling

Fri. 3-23-56

ATLANTA, March 22 (AP)—Trustees of the Georgia Teachers retirement system Wednesday refused to disturb the $518 monthly pension of Dr. Guy Wells whose racial views brought him under fire of two state education agencies.

The trustees said in a resolution adopted unanimously that they are without authority to discontinue or curtail benefits of any retired member of the fund.

P. 13

A retired member retains "the inalienable right to exercise his privileges as a citizen even though his views and activities may be repugnant" to others, the trustees declared.

Wells, 63, retired three years ago as president of the Georgia State College for Women. He now is executive secretary of the Georgia Council on Interracial Relations.

The State Board of Education, which administers the common school program, last week asked the trustees to discontinue Wells' pension "if legally possible."

Almost simultaneously, the Board of Regents of the university system stripped Wells of his title of president emeritus of the Georgia women's college.

The retired educator said he had advocated bringing Negro and white community leaders together in good will to resolve differences."

Griffin vs. Javits—

News

Uproar mars race debate at Harvard

Sat. 4-14-56 P. 1

By RICHARD J. SINNOTT

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 14—(AP)—Bitter remarks directed at Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia by a Negro student threw a Harvard Law School Forum debate on segregation into an uproar Friday night.

The incident occurred during a discussion period that followed a debate between Griffin and Atty. Gen. J. K. Javits of New York State under the auspices of the Harvard school.

JAVITS

The student, who identified himself as Seyoum Haregot, an Ethiopian, said to Griffin:

"The U. S. Information Service and you tell us that you are a peaceful nation. After hearing your speech tonight I can find nothing to justify that.

"Do you think, after listening to you, I should go back to my people and say that we should go along with your side . . . When down in your part (of the country) they call us 'niggers'?"

GRIFFIN

Griffin said only: "I think you've gone a little too far."

THE STUDENT then attempted to continue, but a rising murmur from the audince upset him and he fled up an aisle of the auditorium as some 1500 law school faculty members, students and their guests, many of them women, applauded or hissed.

Scores of police were detailed throughout the auditorium during the three-hour session, but the rebuke by the student was the only disturbance. The audience previously punctuated statements by Griffin and Javits with frequent applause.

Griffin, in his debate remarks, lashed the Supreme Court's segregation decisions as a "palpable and deliberate usurpation" of states' rights.

"No court," he said, "has authority to settle the controversy. This dispute is determinable only by the people themselves, speaking through their legislative bodies."

JAVITS SAID the Supreme Court's "historic decision" 23 months ago poses "the greatest challenge the American people have faced in the battle for civil rights since the Civil War."

Many Southerners, the New York Republican said, "are deeply and honestly" convinced "that segregation is vital to the maintenance of 'racial integrity,' meaning to many Southerners decent standards of social organization."

Javits, a former New York City congressman, said he would recommend to the Eisenhower administration that it call a White House conference of the governors and attorney generals of all 48 states to consider the problems of compliance with the court's decision.

"In that way," Javits said, "the whole body of law enforcement authority on the state level would find expression and the reasonableness of what may be asked the Southern states could be determined."

GOV. GRIFFIN called the high court's decision "baseless," seeking to "transmute socialistic theory into law" and founded on what he called a "ridiculous theory" that Negro children suffer a "sense of inferiority in segregated schools.

SEGREGATION DEBATE

Advertiser

Griffin Hits Court Ruling In Speech At New England

Montgomery, Ala.

Sat. 4-14-56

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 13 (AP)—Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia, attacking the Supreme Court's segregation decisions as a "palpable and deliberate usurpation" of States' Rights, said tonight no court has authority to settle the controversy.

"This dispute," he said, "is determinable only by the people themselves speaking through their legislative bodies."

Griffin's remarks were prepared for a debate on segregation with Atty. Gen. Jacob K. Javits of New York State, under the auspices of the Harvard Law School forum.

Javits, in his prepared remarks, said the Supreme Court's "Historic Decision" 23 months ago poses "The greatest challenge the American people have faced in the battle for civil rights since the Civil War."

DEEPLY CONVINCED

He conceded that many Southerners are deeply and honestly convinced "That segregation is vital to the maintenance of 'racial integrity,' meaning to many Southerners decent standards of social organization."

Both the Georgia Democrat and the New York State Republican, in their preliminary statements, discussed the issues dispassionately with only hints of the depth of feeling on either side.

The fourth scheduled a discussion period after the formal addresses, with questions from the audience in Rindge Tech High School Auditorium, seating 1,500.

Gov. Griffin, attacking the Supreme Court's decision as "baseless," seeking to "transmute socialistic theory into law" and founded on what he called a "ridiculous theory" that Negro children suffer a "sense of inferiority" in segregated schools, declared the court "usurped the reserved powers of the states."

STATE DUTY

In such a case, he said, "it is the duty of the state in flagrant cases to interpose its powers between its people and the effort of the court to assert an unlawful dominion over them." The right of interposition, he said, has been asserted many times over the years by both Northern and Southern states.

Among states that have employed the doctrine he named Kentucky, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Massachuetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont, South Carolina, Wisconsin and Iowa.

The governor maintained that when the Supreme Court "oversteps its authority" its decisions "cannot bind the state from whose people all its powers are derived."

The Southern states' position, Griffin said, is "that no government, no governmental department, no court or other tribunal has the right to dispose of the fundamental liberties of man."

Among these God-given rights and freedoms "beyond the power of government or any court, no matter how supreme," he said, are "the rights possessed by every man to have a home and rear a family, to choose his own associates, to rear his children according to his belief. . . ."

Javits, a former congressman from New York City, said he would recommend to the Eisen-

Georgia Governor Claims No Court Has Power To Settle Segregation Issue

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.

Sat. 4-14-56

Hits 'Usurpation Of State's Rights'

Cambridge, Mass., April 13 (AP)—Governor Marvin Griffin of Georgia, attacking the Supreme Court's segregation decision as a "palpable and deliberate usurpation" of state's rights, said tonight no court has authority to settle the controversy.

"This dispute," he said, "is determinable only by the people themselves, speaking through their legislative bodies."

Griffin's remarks were prepared for a debate on segregation with Republican Attorney General Jacob K. Javits of New York State, under the auspices of the Harvard Law School Forum.

Javits, in his prepared remarks, said the Supreme Court's "historic decision" 23 months ago poses "the greatest challenge the American people have faced in the battle for civil rights since the Civil War."

He conceded that many Southerners are "deeply and honestly" convinced "that segregation is vital to the maintenance of 'racial integrity,' meaning to many Southerners decent standards of social organization."

Griffin, a Democrat, declared the Supreme Court's decision sought to "transmute socialistic theory into law" and is founded on a "ridiculous theory" that Negro children suffer a "sense of inferiority" in segregated schools.

hower Administration that it call a White House conference of the governors and attorneys general of all 48 states to consider the problems of compliance with the court's decision.

"In that way, the whole body of law-enforcement authority on the State level would find expression," he said, "and the reasonableness of what may be asked the Southern states could be determined."

It was expected that there would have been some sort of demonstration at the forum, but with the exception of the slight tension caused by the law student from Ethiopia, the meeting was very placid.

* * *

DURING THE question period, all questions but one were pointed at the governor; and the one that caused a slight tremor throughout the audience, asked by the Ethiopian was:

"The United States Information Service and you tell us that you are a peaceful nation," he said. "After hearing your speech, I can find nothing to justify that we should join your country (as opposed to the Communist bloc)."

Governor Griffin replied with a Georgian paraphrase of Voltaire: "Well, we've got a paper down in Georgia that has on the front page, 'We don't have to like what you say, but we'll fight for your right to say it.' "

* * *

HAREGOT CAME back with: "Do you think that I should go back to my people, after what you have said tonight, and say that we should go along on your side when down in your part (of the country) you call us 'black N----s?' "

A great hush fell on the crowd at that time, and it was only broken by the well known and familiar Bronx hisses. Mr. Haregot then left the microphone, as the governor commented: "I think that you've gone too far."

* * *

MR. HAREGOT said that the above as published in most papers was incorrect. The law student told the AFRO that what he asked the governor was "What would you advise us to do when we go home?"

The governor's reply, Mr. Haregot recalled, was that "There are many industrious

Georgia Governor rapped at forum

Afro-American P. 6

Sat. 4-28-56

Baltimore, Md.

By CONRAD CLARK

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Seyoum Haregot, a second-year law student at Harvard University from Ethiopia, changed a quiet tenseless forum on the integration issue, when he questioned Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia on his segregation stand, here on Friday night.

The governor, who appeared with former Representative Jacob K. Javits of New York, that state's present attorney general, in Rindge Technical High School's auditorium before a crowd of 1,500 Harvard students, defended his state's stand of the right to declare null and void the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation.

Negroes in the South who are contented."

To this he (Haregot) asked "Those are people you in your part of the country call 'good n-----?' "

That is when the governor declared, "I think you've gone too far."

Mr. Haregot said the question broke the tenseness in the audience and "brought them into reality." He said the "hissing" which came after the question came about because many in the audience felt he was monopolizing the questioning and wanted to ask a few themselves.

He denied press accounts that he left the auditorium, stating that what he did was simply to return to his seat from the microphone where he had to go to ask the question.

The issue of interracial marriage was raised by Roger Lawson, attorney and a member of the Georgia governor's staff.

He asked Mr. Javits whether he didn't think the school segregation decision opened the way for the court to declare the southern states' laws prohibiting such unions unconstitutional.

* * *

MR. JAVITS replied that he did not think so, and further remarked: "I recognize that there is a deep fear of that in the South, but we in the North deeply feel that experience has demonstrated that the fear is unfounded."

Governor Griffin for almost an hour outlined the Southern segregationists viewpoint and said that "The Supreme Court had no authority to declare segregated schools unconstitutional. The attempted usurpation of Congress' power by the court is palpable and flagrant," he said

Continuing, he said, "Under these circumstances it is the right of the state, as Georgia has done, to declare that the court has overstepped its authority, that these decisions are null and void . . ."

Mr. Javits replied that the Constitution, as Griffin seemed to interpret it, may have existed prior to the passage of the 14th Amendmnt, guaranteeing 'equal protection of the laws.'

The attorney general also called the governor's arguments "an arudite analysis of an old Southern position on this issue," and said that the segregation decisions in the 14th Amendment are based on:

* * *

"IT WAS ENACTED (the 14th Amendment) after a bloody war had established that we are a nation, not a loose grouping of states."

Earlier in his talk, Mr. Javits told his audience that the Supreme Court's decision poses "the greatest challenge the American people have faced in the battle for civil rights since the Civil War."

Before concluding his talk, Mr. Javits said that he would recommend to the Eisenhower Administration that it call a White House Conference of the governors and attorneys general of all 48 states to consider the problems of compliance with the court's decision.

* * *

"IN THAT way," Mr. Javits said, "the whole body of law enforcement authority on the state level would find expression, and the reasonableness of what may be asked of the southern states could then be determined."

If congress does not approve the bipartisan civil rights commission recommended this week by the administration, the President should appoint a bipartisan commission to exercise the same authority, Mr. Javits added.

"Such a presidential commission," he went on to state, "would lack subpoena power, but this can well be made up for by the prestige of the presidency itself."

Griffin Tells How To Keep Segregation; Let Him Keep Funds

Daily World
Tues. 4-11-56

SAVANNAH, Ga.—(INS)— Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin said Monday that retaining financial control in the hands of the Chief Executive may be one of the state's major weapons in attempting to preserve racial segregation.

Griffin, addressing the annual convention of County Commissioners in Savannah, observed there have been critics who would take from the Governor his broad powers over the state's spending. He added:

"I say to you that the Governor's power over the budget, limited and restricted by the State Constitution and by-laws promulgated thereunder may well be in the future the only buffer standing between segregated schools in our state and mixed schools."

Atlanta, Ga.

The governor said there has been no waste in government during his administration and stated:

"We are living within our income. We have a healthy surplus in the treasury."

Gov. Griffin also took note of critics who branded the last legislature "rubber stamps." He told the politically strong county commissioners:

"I urge you to return to your counties and to send to Atlanta a General Assembly composed of members who will stand fast with me in defense of our ideals and traditions."

The governor also replied to recent newspaper charges that the highway department is lagging behind in its work, jeopardizing federal aid funds. He said:

"I have checked those reports and find them untrue."

He said the highway department will let contracts for about $28 million in federal aid projects during the calendar year and will be ready for an expected $40-million program in the following year.

Gov. Griffin Is Right About Third Party

Constitution P. 4
Tues, 4-18-56

Gov. Marvin Griffin merits the commendation of all citizens of the state, including those who oppose him, for his forthright statement there will be no third party move by the State of Georgia.

The governor clearly states the case. Basically, it is that any third party movement is "futile."

Atlanta, Ga.

He is correct. A third party movement is not even a protest. In 1948 there were two extra parties, that of the Dixiecrats and of Henry Wallace's Progressives. These two, plus the Republicans, were not enough to defeat Harry Truman. The Dixiecrat movement was created for that specific purpose. It succeeded only in appearing ridiculous.

In 1952 the same forces and the same mentality moved over to the Republican Party. It was a witless act, quite in keeping with that of 1860 when only the fact of the Democratic Party split enabled Abraham Lincoln to be elected.

As Gov. Griffin has said, both parties are committed to civil rights programs and to implementation of the Supreme Court's decision. But the Democratic Party offers the better chance of working out the problem in a manner which considers the human and sociological factors involved.

The Democrats as a party would have been in a stronger position in trying to handle this agonized crisis had it not been for the blindly wilful ones who went off into the third party movement in 1948 and then deserted to the Republicans in 1952.

Gov. Griffin has not retreated at all in his opposition to the court's decree.

But he has seen that a third party movement is meaningless, even as a protest. This country's present form of government will survive only as long as we are a two-party nation. Should the multi-party condition arrive, as in France and Italy, then will our system of representative government break down.

Segregation Is Endorsed By Dr. Allen

Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Mon. 8-20-56

By KAY McLEOD

Separation of the races was upheld Sunday by Dr. Charles L. Allen, who said that he does not believe that the Bible calls for integration.

Dr. Allen told his congregation at the Grace Methodist Church that the problem of human relations is not confined to the South. He said that it is a universal problem dating back hundreds and hundreds of years involving all races.

Dr. Allen said that when he was approached by one Negro who wished to join Grace church, he said, "Joining our church won't accomplish anything. There are 200 Negro churches in Atlanta that need you.

"You in your church, we in ours, will be worshiping the same God. You will be better off and so will we."

Dr. Allen told his congregation, "If that's un-Christian, that's still the way I feel."

While stating his belief in segregation or "separation" of the races, Dr. Allen said that he considers the Negro race a "fine race with many wonderful and marvelous qualities."

He also said that he believes that no race can be "forever kept under the yolk of bondage." He emphasized that a feeling of brotherhood between all men should exist.

Seeking to clarify the part a peace-maker betwen nations and races must play, Dr. Allen said that there is a great difference betwen the peace-maker and the peaceable person. The peace-maker, said the minister, uses his "God-given fighting instinct" to battle those things which seek to destroy humanity, while the peaceable person merely accepts things as they are.

Constitution

Dr. Allen cited three types of peace that are "not blessed": (1) an enforced peace, which he defined as the "peace of the graveyard"; (2) a peace of sheer exhaustion with both sides still bearing animosity and continually "snarling at each other," and (3) a peace of indifference.

P. 14

In reference to peace between nations, Dr. Allen said that the United States cannot assume the attitude of the pacifist, but must "go to war against ignorance, want and privation" in all parts of the world.

Mon. 8-20-56

Bringing this fight to a local level, Dr. Allen said that his people should "go to war" against these same conditions which exist "within three blocks of this church."

Dr. Allen said that a true peace between nations and races can only be achieved when each person is at peace within himself, overcoming those conflicts which pit "the inner self against the outer self, a forward-minded body against a backward mind and man's lower nature against his higher nature."

He said that these conflicts, which are "as old as Adam and Eve and as modern as tomorrow's newspaper," can be overcome by "first making peace with the Heavenly Father."

Bomb Georgia Interracial Camp

Courier, Waycross, Georgia
7-28-56

Americus, Ga., July 24—A bomb was thrown into an interracial Youth Camp here Monday night, which has been stopped by court action from operating a non-segregated camp.

The blast shattered a roadside fruit and produce stand operated by the camp.

Investigators said today they were without tangible clues as to who tossed a high explosive into the sheet metal building of Koinonia Farms.

The blast went off just after 10 p.m., four hours after the place had closed for the day. Nobody was hurt. The walls of the 20-by-30-foot structure were buckled, the roof lifted, glass splintered and two large food freezers smashed.

Damage was placed at about $3,000.

Georgia Race Situation 'Comfortable,' Cook Says

Journal + Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said Saturday Negroes in Georgia are realizing they have "nothing to gain, and all to lose" by pressing for integrated public schools.

But he commented in the same speech that it would be a "serious mistake" for Georgia public officials to relax their efforts to keep schools segregated as they are.

Sun. 9-30-56

Mr. Cook was speaking at the Georgia Fraternal Congress, in annual convention in Atlanta.

He said Georgia's race situation is "relatively comfortable," largely because Negroes have been told the public school system will be abolished if they agitate for integration.

P. 7-A

* * *

HE SAID "strong pronouncements" to this effort by Gov. Griffin and former Gov. Talmadge had had a "salutary effect" on the few Negroes who want integration.

Mr. Cook said formal demands for integration had been filed with some local school authorities by Negroes last year and against this year, but he said these had not been pressed.

For the third time since the Supreme Court decision was rendered, he said, Georgia opened its schools this year "on a segregated basis, in an orderly manner, and without the probability of a court desegregation decision."

Mr. Cook was the principal speaker at the banquet concluding the convention of the Fraternal Congress.

* * *

ANOTHER scheduled guest was 5th District Rep. James C. Davis, the man who currently is heading up a congressional investigation of integration in the Washington, D.C., schools.

The Fraternal Congress elected H. C. Fabian, of Atlanta, as its new president. The organization is composed of representatives of 11 fraternal orders.

Mr. Fabian is the state district manager of the Woodmen of the World Life Insurance Society.

Other officers are L. D. Burns, Preferred Life Assurance Society, first vice president; Miss Myrtie Stephenson, Supreme Forest Woodmen Circle, secretary-treasurer; M. M. Richardson, Travelers Protective Assn., chaplain, and P. T. McGuire, United Commercial Travelers, sergeant at arms.

Discrimination Is Charged In Bank Bid at Savannah

Constitution Atlanta Ga.

Fri. 10-12-56 P. 5

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11 (AP)—An examiner for the Federal Home Loan Bank Board was told Thursday that Savannah, Ga., Negroes are unable to obtain GI or FHA loans for home building unless they pay higher interest rates than usual.

Ezra Johnson, Savannah Negro real estate dealer, made the charge at a hearing on an application he and others submitted for authority to set up a new federal savings and loan association in Savannah.

Johnson said large down payments, higher interest rates and shorter loan periods than usual prevented many Savannah Negroes from buying homes.

His application earlier had been turned down by the board but he asked for a hearing and the board ordered one before an examiner. Testimony given the examiner will be turned over to the board for consideration.

Opposing the application were witnesses representing the Carver Savings Bank, a Negro institution, and the First Federal Savings and Loan Assn., both of Savannah. Opposition also came in letters from the Atlantic Savings & Trust Co., Georgia State Savings Bank, Chatham Savings Bank and the Southern Savings & Loan Co.

J. D. McLamb, president of First Federal, said his firm made no distinction between Negro and white borrowers and had been in the market for GI loans that ran for a 20-year period. He placed the total of first mortgages held by his bank at $13,579,000. Of this amount $5,647,000 is in conventional loans; $6,313,000 in GI loans $1,517,000 in FHA loans and $101,000 in straight construction loans.

McLamb said the loan records were not "segregated" and he was unable to say what percentage of the loans was made to Negroes.

McLamb expressed doubt that Johnson and his associates could raise $400,000 to establish a new firm but Johnson said the amount would be supplied.

L. B. Toomer, Negro president of Carver, told the examiner there were seven Negro bank failures in Savannah during his early business career and "we've been trying to rebuild confidence" since 1927. He said he did not recall turning down loans for Johnson or John W. Lyons of Savannah, who also testified in behalf of the application. He added that his firm has $90,000 available at present for home loans.

A petition supporting the Johnson application also bore the names of Dr. J. W. Wilson, Alphonso E. Fields, Adam K. Rivers, Edgar C. Blackshear, Dr. S. M. McDew Jr., and Dr. H. M. Collier Jr.

Speaking at state C of C meeting here—

Talmadge fires broadside at Supreme Court ruling

News Wed. 11-14-56 P. 39

B'ham, Ala.

BY IRVING BEIMAN
News staff writer

Withering criticism of the segregation-blasting U. S. Supreme Court was left here last night by U. S. Sen.-elect Herman Talmadge of Georgia.

The senator-elect was principal speaker at the annual dinner meeting of the Alabama State Chamber of Commerce in the Tutwiler Hotel. His subject was "Our Great Heritage."

It dealt with state's rights and costitutional government, a topic on which Mr. Talmadge has spoken long and frequently in months past,

Its theme was that the 10th amendment to the Constitution reserves certain rights to the states. He said he favors passage of an act by Congress "restoring" the 10th amendment to the Constitution. He said the Supreme Court's 1954 decision outlawing segregated schools infringed on the rights reserved to the states by the 10th amendment.

He declared the present high court justices "probably will continue to strike down" segregation principles wherever and whenever they are brought before the Supreme Court, such as happened yesterday, he said, in the case of the court outlawing the Montgomery ordinance requiring racial segregation on buses.

Then he said:

"It is extremely unfortunate that the majority of our present judges on the Supreme Court were not appointed for what they knew but for what they would do."

As an after-thought, the senator-elect from Georgia then added: "I believe in on-the-job training, but I don't think the Supreme Court is the place to get such training."

The senator-elect said Article III of the Constitution gives Congress authority to spell out the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Section 2 of Article III says, "In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a state shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

AT A PRESS CONFERENCE prior to his address, the senator-elect smoked a cigar, sat in an easy chair in his suite in the Tutwiler, and answered questions from newspaper men. He was in shirtsleeves and wore red suspenders, a charcoal black tie and black trousers.

He suggested that a solution of the segregation dilemma facing the South might be "courage on the part of the people on the local and state level, and courage on the part of those in Congress."

He said the South is not fighting the battle for constitutional government alone, that other groups are coming to its aid over the nation, that "if we can carry our message to the people we can become the majority."

He spoke in behalf of the Citizens Council over the South, saying "we have the States' Rights organization in Georgia, composed of some of the finest people. . . . I'm a charter member."

Asked what he would recommend if the next Congress attempts to pass new civil rights legislation, he said the South would "probably have to resort to the filibuster."

"We're going through a second reconstruction period," he said.

As for the effect of the "uproar over segregation" on industry coming or not coming to the South, he said: "I don't think it has had any effect in Georgia or any Southern states. Industry is moving and will keep moving into the South."

Roland L. Adams of York was reelected president of the State Chamber yesterday. He is president of the Bank of York.

Vice presidents elected were Earl M. McGowin, vice president of the W. T. Smith Lumber Co., Chapman; J. M. Griser, president of the Alabama Dry Docks and Shipbuilding Co., Mobile; Jack W. Warner, executive vice president of the Gulf States Paper Corp, Tuscaloosa.

W. C. Bowman, chairman of the board of directors of the First National Bank, Montgomery, was reelected treasurer of the State Chamber, and John M. Ward was reelected executive vice president of the organization.

A third of the State Chamber's 38-member board of directors is chosen annually for three-year terms.

Named to the board for the first time this year to fill vacancies with terms expiring in 1958 were D. B. Hosmer, Anniston, and Ernest F. Ladd Jr., Mobile. James A. Vann Jr., Birmingham, was elected for the first time to a three-year term expiring in 1959.

Other directors, all reelected for terms expiring in 1959, include W. C. Bowman, Montgomery; Thomas W. Martin, Birmingham; Frank P. Samford, Birmingham; Basil Horsfield, Listerhill; A. D. Elliott, Huntsville; Harry B. Lackey, Birmingham; Harry H. Pritchett, Tuscaloosa; Cecil G. Duffee, Dadeville; Earl McGowin, Chapman; Stanhope E. Elmore, Montgomery; James H. Faulkner, Bay Minette; Walter C. Morris, Dothan.

Desegregate Tax Digests, Fulton Legislators Asked

Constitution Thurs. 11-15-56
Atlanta, Ga. P. 19

By RICHARD ASHWORTH

A spokesman for an Atlanta Negro voters organization asked Fulton County legislators Wednesday to work for repeal of a state law requiring separate tax digests for the listing of property of white and Negro citizens.

Repeal of this law, claimed Cassandra Maxwell during a public hearing before the county Legislature delegation, would allow streamlining of tax receiving and collecting procedures and would end what she termed "discrimination" against Negro taxpayers.

Citizens also appeared during the second "grass roots" legislative hearing to ask for laws to protect residential property rights in zoning matters, allow the county to resume doing public works inside municipalities, change laws on office-holding by city councilmen, provide more mental health personnel and other matters.

COLOR VARIATION

As spokesman for the West Side Voters League, she also claimed in regard to the use of separate tax digests that all Negro property is listed on paper that varies in color from that of paper used for the property of whites. This, she said, also results in higher property assessments for colored citizens.

She said the organization asked for similar steps in 1954, including elimination of separate collection lines for Negroes. Only change made, she said, was elimination of the separate collecting lines.

Standish Thompson, who will take over Jan. 1 as the county tax commissioner, denied that race entered into assessment of property.

Regarding use of differently colored paper for Negro tax returns and separate lines for Negro returns, Thompson said his office is following the ruling of State Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook in regard to the state law requiring separation of white and Negro tax digests. Different colors of paper are used merely for identification, he added.

ZONING PLEA

Other legislation asked for by citizens included:

1. Cascade avenue, SW citizens involved in a dispute over location of a mortuary in that area asked that "some teeth" be put into zoning laws to protect the rights of property owners in residential areas.

Mayor Pro-Tem Hugh C. Conley of College Park, also appearing for the cities of East Point and Hapeville, asked that the county again be allowed to use its labor and machinery inside small sities for public works

3. Conley also requested changes in the state law which prohibits councilmen and aldermen in cities under 71,000 in population from resigning their posts to seek other city jobs. This law should be amended to make the population limit apply to cties under 14,000, he asserted.

4. B. T. Harvey, Negro, appealed for wider use of Negroes in educational consultant and supervisory jobs.

ON WARD BASIS

5. Rod Harris, a Negro who ran for city alderman in 1953, asked for changes in the law requiring aldermen to run on a city-wide basis. He suggested one of the two aldermen from each ward run on a ward basis, the other city-wide.

6. Charles S. Dudley, representing the Georgia and Atlanta Associations for Mental Health, said remedial legislation was needed to provide more qualified personnel at mental institutions.

7. John Steinchen, Georgia Tech student, asked for a general bill which would allow any community to set up planning and zoning boards. Most cities have such boards established through special laws, he explained.

8. A. E. Adams, retired county employe, asked legislation to put employes who retired under old pension laws with low compensation more on a level with present pensions. Adams, who had 42 years service, said he receives a pension of $150 whereas present employes with his service retire on $235 monthly.

9. William H. Sachs, a chemistry professor, asked for a law making it a misdemeanor to make available to minors literature classified by the State Literature Commis sionas saleable only to adults.

Griffin Vows No Retreat on Segregation

Constitution Thurs. 11-15-56
Atlanta, Ga. P. 1

Despite the new Supreme Court bus desegregation ruling "there will be no breach in the pattern of segregation in Georgia as long as I am governor," Gov. Griffin asserted Wednesday.

"No matter what any court may rule, the Constitution of the United States and the crystallized public sentiment of an overwhelming majority of the people is still 'the law of the land'," he declared.

Griffin blamed past Democratic presidents and Senates for the compositon of the Supreme Court.

ELECTION ISSUE

He insisted that preservation of segregation must be an issue in all future elections.

"We must insist that our representatives and senators in Congress speak up vigorously and often when our way of life here in the South is threatened.

"We have taken this punishment lying down long enough. It is time for all our leaders to stand up and be counted as active participants in this fight," Griffin said.

"If the voters of our region make up their minds in every election—city, county and state—to elect men who will stand fast and uphold law and order, we will win through in this fight," Griffin said.

HERITAGE DESTRUCTION

The governor called the court ruling "another evidence of the erosion of the Constitution and destruction of the heritage of this country by political judges."

At Montgomery, Ala., where state and city laws were specifically knocked down by the high court, the manager of the Montgomery Bus Co. said drivers would continue to enforce segregated seating until a state injunction requiring it is dissolved.

Buses continued segregated in most Southern states, with the exception of Virginia, Arkansas and Kentucky.

Teacher Beats Ouster Action By Resigning

Advertiser P. 5-a
Mon. 11-19-56
Montgomery, Ala.

ATLANTA, Nov. 18 (AP)—A pregnant former Georgia school teacher who had been assailed on charges that she was sympathetic to racial integration appeared yesterday to be safe from an official move to revoke her certificate.

James S. Peters of Manchester, vice chairman of the state board of education, joined George P. Whitman Jr. of College Park, chairman, and Gov. Marvin Griffin in calling for an end of the action against Mrs. Colleen Marie Wiggins.

The board had summoned Mrs. Wiggins to appear before it at its next meeting and defend her certificate from revocation. It earlier had sought to force the Gwinnett County School Board to take some action against her while she was a teacher at Bethesda School.

BOARD REFUSED

The county board refused but Mrs. Wiggins, as the birth of her baby drew nearer, resigned.

Peters explained that he wasn't present at the board meeting which voted that the 26-year-old teacher be officially cited for certificate revocation on charges of favoring integration. He said that if he had been he would have sided with Whitman that it was "a moot question in view of Mrs. Wiggins' resignation and the fact of her pregnancy at the present time."

MIXED CLASS

Some Gwinnett County residents complained that Mrs. Wiggins, a former missionary and the wife of a ministerial student, advocated mixing the races in the classroom. She denied that she did, contending that all she said was that if integration were in force she would not object to teaching a mixed class.

She had no comment on the latest action and statements concerning her. The governor yesterday had asked the state board to drop its proceedings against her. With both the chairman and vice chairman siding with him, it appeared likely that it would.

Georgia Draws Ire of Chamber Of Commerce for Negro Ban

Oklahoma City Okla.

SUMMERVILLE, Ga. (ANP)—The race - conscious Ku Klux Klan and Attorney General Eugene Cook of Georgia suffered a lashing last week as both were assailed by the Summerville Junior Chamber of Commerce for banning a high school football game between Negro teams in a white stadium.

The Junior Chamber of Commerce, a white group which sponsored the game, denounced the Klan action in protesting the game and Cook's opinion that it would be in violation of Georgia's segregation laws.

Dispatch Fri. 11-7-56

The contest was to be held last Thursday at Summerville high school and the proceeds were to go to the white school band.

Charles Farrar, president of the Jaycees, said the game will be played at a later date.

Teacher Quits In Race Row

Inquirer

ATLANTA — (ANP—Mrs. Colwhite teacher in the Gwinnett County school system accused of being sympathetic to racial integration in Georgia schools, resigned her teaching post at Bethesda school last year.

The former missionary and wife of a ministerial student had been accused, by some county residents, of advocating racial mixing in classrooms. She denied this, saying her remark was that if integration were in force, she would "not object to teaching a mixed class."

Educator to Fight Pension Loss for Racial Stand

Post P. 31

ATLANTA, March 15 (AP) Court action was promised today by Dr. Guy H. Wells if his monthly pension is cut off because of his views on segregation.

The State Board of Education asked the Teacher Retirement Board yesterday to see if Wells' pension could be discontinued.

At the same time the Board of Regents of the University system took from Wells the title of president emeritus of the Georgia State College for Women.

Wells, 63, said today he would ask that the title be restored. He said that by relieving him of the title the Regents can avoid a life and hospitalization insurance policy he obtained years.

Wells is now executive secretary of the Georgia Council on Interracial Cooperation and has been making speeches recently on racial cooperation.

Associated Press

GUY H. WELLS

... cooperative arrangement between GSCW and its faculty.

Wells said he paid about $450 a year into the teacher retirement fund for about 10 years, for about $4500. His pension is figured on the number of years he has been a teacher and educator—about 40 in all. He was president of GSCW for 19

DR. WELLS TO KEEP PENSION, AFTER REQUEST

Daily World Thurs. 3-22-56 Atlanta Ga.

Action by the State Board of Education aimed at discontinuing the pension of Dr. Guy H. Wells, former president of Georgia State College for Women, because of his racial views backfired Wednesday when the proposal was flatly rejected by the administrators of the Teachers' Retirement System.

Irked by Dr. Well's segregation views, the State Board of Education last week adopted a resolution calling for the discontinuation of the $518 per month pension of the eminent Georgia educator "if legally possible." P. 1

The board of trustees of the fund unanimously approved a resolution saying trustees are without authority to halt the pension of any retired teacher. The resolution directed the executive secretary of the system to forward copies of it to all active and retired members.

Daily World

The motion that the resolution be approved was made by State Auditor B. E. Thrasher, a member of the retirement board, and it was seconded by Dr. Mark Smith, superintenent of Bibb County Schools. Dr. Smith pointed out that the action would reassure the thousands of Georgia teachers who come under the retirement system.

Dr. Guy Wells Now, Who Will Be Next?

Constitution Mon. 3-19-56

Atlanta—I wish to voice my protest about the action taken against Dr. Wells of the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation by the State Board of Regents and the contemplated action of depriving him of his pension. P. 4

Atlanta, Ga.

I do not know Dr. Wells nor the organization for which he speaks but it is shocking to think that such a clearcut violation of constitutional rights could occur in the United States of America . . . even in Georgia.

JUDITH C. NEIMAN.

Retirement Board Refuses To End Wells' Pension, Cites Free Speech

Constitution P. 1 Thurs. 3-22-56 Atlanta, Ga.

The State Teacher Retirement Board refused Wednesday to take away a $518-a-month pension from Dr. Guy Wells, retired president of Georgia State College for Women.

In so doing, the retirement board flatly rejected a request by the State Department of Education that Dr. Wells' pension be canceled because of his expressions of views on racial relations.

The retirement board, in a unanimous resolution, said it is without authority to stop or curtail benefits payable to a retired member or his beneficiary.

The resolution upheld Dr. Wells' "vested right" to his pension and his right to freedom of speech.

Dr. Wells said of the resolution: "I am happy over the action of the retirement board."

Dr. Wells is secretary of the Georgia Council of Interracial

By ALBERT RILEY

Cooperation. His honorary title as president emeritus of GSCW was removed last week by the Board of Regents of the University System.

The retirement board's resolution Wednesday said the request to cancel Dr. Wells' pension raised "a question of terrific impact" on the future rights, welfare and security of 1,821 retired teachers and 30,529 members of the retirement system. The question, it said, also applied to state employes' retirement and to peace officers' and firemen's pension funds.

Noting that the retirement system involves contractual agreements with members, the resolution said courts over the United States have held that a person entitled to retirement benefits "has acquired a vested right to those benefits under his contract."

The resolution also held that when a member retires, the employer-employe relationship ceases to exist and the retired member continues to have the right to exercise his constitutionally guaranteed privileges of citizenship, including freedom of speech.

State auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr. moved adoption of the resolution and was seconded by Dr. Mark Smith of Macon. Comptroller General Zack Cravey voted for the resolution although he said he was "in discord" with Dr. Wells' views as he had read them in the press.

Dr. Wells Asks Hearing On Integration Views

Constitution Thurs. 3-15-56 Atlanta Ga. P. 1

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Dr. Guy Wells, secretary of the Georgia Council on Interracial Cooperation, said late Wednesday that Georgia's two school boards should be willing to hear him before eliminating his honorary title and trying to kill his pension.

The state Board of Education earlier Wednesday requested the State Teachers Retirement Board to discontinue, "if legally possible," the pension drawn by Wells as retired president of Georgia State College for Women.

The state Board of Regents, meeting simultaneously, had erased the honorary title of "president emeritus" which it gave Wells when he retired in 1954.

"INFORMATION INACCURATE"

Wells declared the information on which the two boards based their actions was "completely inaccurate and distorted."

The actions stemmed from an article published in the Augusta Courier, edited by Roy Harris, member of the Board of Regents.

The article lashed at Wells for speeches which, Harris said, advocated forced mingling of the races.

"I regret that my former employers and friends have taken this action against me without giving me an opportunity to be heard," Dr. Wells said. "The account of the Augusta meeting (Wells spoke at Paine College), allegedly prepared by one Mr. C. C. Prescott and published in the Augusta Courier, is completely inaccurate and distorted. Any responsible inquiry among other persons present will bear this out.

CIVIC CLUBS

"I have made many speeches upon invitation to civic clubs over the state to discuss our racial problems. In every case I have been well received, and I have had expressions of appreciation from the Rotary clubs and others addressed. I have advocated Negro and white leaders in local communities coming together in goodwill to resolve differences and work for agreement.

"I have nothing to retract or apologize for, and I am confident that the good people of Georgia will sustain my position," Wells said.

Constitution P. 21

REAL REWARD

Then Dr. Wells said:

"A man is not rewarded for his titles, medals or degrees, but for the stars he earns in the service of his country. I think what happens to Guy Wells, his titles, or his earned state teacher's retirement, is not the important thing.

"Neither desegregation or integration, which most good men know will come in time, but freedom of speech and thought is the fundamental issue. If this attack on me will advance and help keep these rights for Georgians, the sacrifice will not be too great a price."

Noting that both actions were taken with little or no discussion, Wells said he thought the boards should be willing to give him a hearing so he "can make proper explanation if they haven't gotten the facts."

GRIFFIN VIEW

Gov. Griffin, commenting on the board's actions, said: "I am sure the boards did what they felt to be right. To be drawing $518.90 a month pension, Dr. Wells has been acting a little ugly." He referred to the Courier report quoting Wells as ridiculing the governor and Legislature.

The governor charged that Dr. Wells "does advocate integration."

The school board's recommendation that Wells' pension be eliminated, if legally possible, will be presented to the Teacher Retirement Board March 21, secretary said.

SPARKS CHIEF

The retirement board is headed by Dr. George Sparks, president of Georgia State College of Business Administration, and includes these members: Dr. Mark Smith, superintendent of schools at Macon; Miss Mary Ella Camp, Newnan teacher; James Budd of the C&S Bank here; Comptroller-General Zack Cravey; state auditor B. T. Thrasher Jr., and Frank Hughes, incoming secretary of the Georgia Education Assn.

One official expressed belief the Teacher Retirement Board would have to ask an opinion from Atty.

Gen. Cook.

There was no discussion when the regents removed Wells' honorary title. Regents chairman Robert O. Arnold told newsmen that some regents didn't like the idea of the former college president making speeches "for integration."

'LAMBASTING GOVERNMENT'

At the State Board of Education meeting, vice chairman James Peters asked whether it was "right to pay a man a pension to go around the state lambasting the state government and our way of life."

Dr. Wells was connected with Georgia schools and colleges for 40 years before his retirement.

He headed the women's college at Milledgeville 19 years. He is a former district governor of Georgia Rotary. He spent a year in Germany with Gen. Lucius Clay, establishing an educational program, and later spent a year in Libya as a consultant in education.

When he took the post of executive secretary of the Georgia Council on Interracial Relations in 1954, he had the recommendations of regents chairman Arnold, former regents chairman Hughes Spalding, Dr. Louie D. Newton, Methodist Bishop Arthur Moore, Dr. Rufus Clement and others.

Letter Called Humiliating

'Be Humble' Advice To Negroes Blasted

Courier Sat. 2-11-56 P.6

Pittsburgh, Pa.

ALBANY, Ga.—In a letter that disgusted and humiliated most Negro readers, Harrison G. Lee of Fort Gaines, Ga., blasts the action of Negroes in the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott and implores them to be humble to the white man.

Mr. Lee expressed his views in a letter to the Albany, Ga. Herald under the title, "Some Advice for Negroes."

Strangely enough Mr. Lee, himself, is a Negro.

Even more significant and equally as alarming is the fact that Mr. Lee, represents the acme of Negro leadership, being principal of Speight High School in Fort Gaines.

* * *

EXCERPTS from Mr. Lee's letter follow:

". . . Mentioning . . . the Montgomery boycott of the buses there by Negroes, may I say that those Negroes should call off such boycott and talk to the persons in charge there in the city and let them work out whatever problems they need worked out. I think they are making fools of themselves trying to win a battle the way they are.

"I am not at all times as humble as maybe I should be, yet may I say that humbleness is still the best method to get people to believe in what you have to say or do."

Mr. Lee states further that whatever progress the Negro has made has been made with the assistance of white people.

"Don't they (Negroes) know that even if they pooled all of their money and resources that they can only progress with the aid of the white man because of his know-how and cultural background which tend to give him some of the very qualities of a progressing society such as the one we now live in . . .?"

Mr. Lee tells Negroes, "Change your approach and stop trying to force the very hand that fed you for so many years, and if you ask me, the very hand that is still feeding you."

Quits Georgia Post Under Fire

Anti-Integration Principal Resigns

Courier Sat. 2-18-56 P.6

Pittsburgh, Pa.

FORT GAINES, Ga.—Speight High School was reportedly without a principal last week after the alleged departure from town of Prof. Harrison E. Lee.

The Clay County Board of Education reportedly had Lee's official notice of resignation and that of his wife, a teacher at nearby Bluffton School.

Lee reportedly departed because of threats upon himself, his wife and family which followed newspaper publication of a speech he delivered in Morgan and Georgetown, Ga.

* * *

THE PUBLISHED address delivered by Lee allegedly called on Negroes to "forget integration and remember that we yet have not learned how to pool our resources and build even a recreation hall for our children."

Fort Gaines Negro citizens petitioned the Board of Education calling for Lee's resignation which they termed would be in the best interest of the community.

Racial Issue Stirs Governor's Parley

Eagle Thurs. 6-28-56 P. 1

Tulsa, Okla.

Northern Leaders Say Democrats Must Endorse High Court Decision on Schools

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.— (ANP)— The 18th annual governors' conference opened here Sunday with a heated debate between Northern and Southern governors over the civil rights sissue.

Almost without exception, the Northern governors said the Democrats must, as a minimum, endorse the Supreme Court decision on school desegregation.

But their southern colleagues, headed by Gov. Bell Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina, called the Yankee proposal "a lotta malarkey."

The atmosphere became steamed up when Gov. Averell Harriman of New York, announced candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, and Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan demanded a strong civil rights plank in the Democratic national platform.

Williams Speaks Out

Gov. Williams, whose state organization has called for immediate enforcement of the Supreme Court opinion in school segregation, said the high court had used "weasel words" in proposing implementation at "deliberate speed."

He added, however, that he felt the party platform this year should be specific in supporting the court action. He denied he was trying to drive anyone out of the party and doubted any walkouts by southern Democrats.

While the miltiants toned down their civil rights demands, Timmerman took up the attack.

The Southern Carolina governor said he wasn't sure where the south will go. He insisted he isn't promoting a third party, although many southerners are scouting the idea.

All But Three Act

He said that all but three of the southern senators, congressmen governors, state chairmen and national committeemen have replied favorably to a letter he wrote proposing they meet in advance of Chicago to put up a "united southern front."

"We want to let the national party know we're serious," he said.

Timmerman said chairman of 10 southern states are expected to meet in Atlanta within a short time for an "exploratory" conference.

Timmersman said he has never voted Republican and never will.

Hope to Save Party

"We hope to save the national party," he added, by staying in it. Whether the southerners stay or not depends on the type of civil rights platform agreed on at the Chicago convention.

Timmerman said a good many people in the south would be "dissatisfied" if a platform plan along the lines suggested by Harriman and Williams were adopted. He vowed he would do all in his power to stop approval of such a plank.

The South Carolinian denied he was trying to do, he said, was to get the national convention to adopt a "constitutional" plank on civil rights and pick a candidate acceptable to the south so southern Democrats could remain in the party.

If the time ever comes when the people of the south break with the Democratic party," said Timmerman, "they are not going into the Republican party."

Reference to Ike Made

He added: "Most people in the south need expect no consideration from the Republican party. I do not think Eisenhower will carry any state in the south."

Timmerman had no answer for the fact that Gov. Raymond Gary of Oklahoma is heading a Harriman committee and Governors Luther H. Hodges of North Carolina and Leroy Hodges of Florida, Stevenson.

The South Carolinian said he has the support of five governors, but declined to name them.

Eagle

HARRIMAN FAVORS ZEAL IN BIAS FIGHT

New York

His Praise of New Committee of Commerce Group Backs Abrams Against Heck

Sat. Sept 8-56

Zealots were defended yesterday by Governor Harriman, who identified himself as one.

The Governor's defense was made at a luncheon of the Commerce and Industry Association of New York at the Bankers Club. The luncheon marked the formation of a business man's committee to combat racial and religious discrimination in employment.

The committee was formed by the association in cooperation with the State Commission Against Discrimination. Charles Abrams, chairman of the commission, presided at the luncheon. Mr. Abrams recently was criticized by Assembly Speaker Oswald D. Heck as being a zealot.

B. A. Zorn, chairman of the association's industrial relations committee, spoke before the Governor. Mr. Zorn, without mentioning Mr. Heck by name, recalled the "zealot" reference by declaring that Mr. Abrams had "his feet on the ground—he is not a wild man."

Governor Harriman addressed the fifty business executives and personnel managers as "fellow zealots." He told them that when he was a busines man he had been a zealot and that he was still one in the things he believed in.

"Let us be proud of what we are doing," the Governor declared.

Holding that 't'he overriding problem of the day is Communist aggression led by the Kremlin," he said, the Communists used racial discrimination as a weapon in their attacks on this country.

New Group Seen as Example

The Governor said the agreement between the State Commission and the Commerce and Industry Association to combat discriminatory employment practices "sets an example for the country and the world of how we strengthen our society by cooperative effort." He continued:

"One of the underlying reasons why freedom has continued to flourish in our country is the nature of the free economy under which we function. This system demands for its most effective operation the employment of men on the basis of skill rather than skull and talent rather than pigment."

The new anti-discrimination committee was formed to carry out a program that includes promoting non-discrimination in hiring and up-grading of labor; conferring with personnel representatives for the encouragement of employment policies in keeping with the State Commission's requirements, and joining employers, labor unions and Governmental agencies in eliminating "blocks to the employment of people without regard to creed, color or national origin."

Judge Hastie hits timid teachers

Afro American P. 8

Sat. 6-16-56

BALTIMORE

"Members of minority groups struggling for status must, of all people, be most insistent that educators be encouraged to criticize and challenge our past practices and behavior, and not be repressed. . . .We can not afford to have timid and frightened people in our classrooms today."

Baltimore

Judge William H. Hastie of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, spoke these words, last Monday afternoon, as Morgan State College held its 89th Commencement exercises and awarded degrees to 253 students in Hughes Stadium.

In addressing the students, Judge Hastie attacked what he termed "repressions" on teachers and what they teach.

He advocated the presentation of contrasting viewpoints as a method of causing students to realize that they are free to draw their own conclusions in a democratic society.

* * *

JUDGE HASTIE was presented an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws with similar honors going to the following:

Dr. Ambrose Caliver, chief of the Adult Education Section, United States Office of Education; Dr. Norbert R. Davidson, gynecologist and obstetrician of New Orleans, and Mrs. Lillie M. Jackson, civic worker and president of the Baltimore NAACP

Speaking on "Free Schools for a Free People," Judge Hastie declared:

"We often talk about 'free schools,' meaning that tuition is free.

"But free tuition isn't worth very much unless the school itself is a place where all important controversial subjects can be freely discussed, where honest statement and argument of unpopular views is encouraged, if only to test such views in the open forum, where intellectual vigor and integrity are prized, but intellectual conformity is not viewed as a virtue in itself.

"I am sorry to say that 20th century America has experienced all too much 'unfree education' which in its repressions defeats the basic purpose of educating free men and women to play their part in free society.

* * *

AFTER CITING his own experiences when as a high school student during World War I he wanted to study German but found the language banned in the schools of many states, and the outcry against the teaching of evolution, Judge Hastie said.

"I can think of other examples of repression in education, but I have never seen anything like the consciousness of pressure and restriction which teachers seem to reflect and express today.

"Apparently, all too many teachers feel that they are compelled to pursue a safe course in all they say or do.

* * *

"THEY HAVE been made to feel that in the classroom and out they must make themselves colorless and wholly uncontroversial by avoiding anything which might be construed as indicating in any way critical or unorthodox views about any important aspect of the political, economic, or social organization of our community.

"When some school boards and superintendents are even refusing to allow distinguished scholars and outstanding thinkers to address student gatherings, because these eminent people are 'controversial,' it is not surprising that teachers become timid.

"I am sure that educators as a group know that rational criticism is one of their responsibilities to society, and a hallmark of loyalty to the American creed. They know that zeal for constructive change is the very essence of both education and Americanism."

* * *

JUDGE HASTIE recommended that teachers freely express unpopular opinions and convictions and fully explain the premises from which they are derived.

"The only legitimate qualification of all this is that the teacher not draw his own conclusions from sources other than his own free and unbiased search for the truth.

"This is not a course of action for timid or frightened people. But we cannot afford to have timid and frightened people in our classrooms today. Heaven knows it is easy enough to make students go to sleep.

"And teachers under constraint to play it absolutely safe in everything they say and do can only succeed in making certain that their students fall asleep."

* * *

TO THE graduates, Judge Hastie said:

No society is improved or preserved by spectators. Neither democracy nor any other way of life will prevail through its cheering section. But if we have something approaching total participation by the American people, each of us in some small way within personal reach, in making ours a more effective and rewarding democracy, we can be supremely confident.

"For we will be just as busy and much more effective building our way of life than others can possibly be trying to tear it down.

"To me there is no other answer, none simpler, and none more complex, to the riddle of winning the future for our conception of the good life."

* * *

TAKING ADVANTAGE of the sunny afternoon, alumni, friends and relatives of the graduates thronged onto the campus hours before the scheduled start of the exercises.

When the first strains of "Pomp and Circumstance" signaled the entrance of members of the academic procession, the pastels and more vivid shades worn by feminine members of the audience turned the south side of the stadium into a colorful and contrasting backdrop for the robes of the marchers.

The more than 3,000 spectators soon filled the south stands and overflowed around the rim of the huge oval, with late comers standing or leaning against the stone railing.

Following the invocation the Morgan band and choir led the audience in the singing of "God of Our Fathers," which preceded the introduction of Judge Hastie by Morgan president Martin Jenkins.

Sustained applause greeted presentation of Judge Hastie, known to most of the audience as one of the nation's most brilliant leaders in the fight for civil rights and racial equality during the years preceding World War II.

The audience listened intently and silently throughout his 30-minute address and then responded with even greater applause, rivaled only by that given the candidates for degrees when they were presented in two groups, according to the degrees earned.

* * *

IN CONFERRING the honorary degree upon Judge Hastie, Morgan State College President, Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, cited the jurist for "your devoted service" (which) . . . has helped spread the reality of justice, equality and fair play to all your fellow citizens."

The citation further read: "The evolution of your life has been, and is, both a testimony to your character and unwavering diligence, as it is also a testimony to the promise that is America—a promise which you have helped to create."

Dr. Caliver was honored for having "played an important role in the development of education not only in this nation but throughout the world."

The citation to Dr. Davidson, a 1928 Morgan alumnus, declared that through his work in medicine and in "promoting programs of civic betterment" . . . . "you have thus exemplified in your life the ideals of your Alma Mater."

* * *

DESCRIBED AS a "fighter," Mrs. Jackson's citation read in part: "You have contended for the moral and legal rights of colored citizens of this state and of this nation — the right to education, the rights to housing, the right to recreation, the right to work, the right to justice, the right to human dignity and respect. Not just equal rights but the same rights as other American citizens!

"You have fought not with animosity, not with hatred, but with charity and with full confidence in the validity of the Christian ethic and in the essential rightness of the democratic way of life.

"And in this fight you have made a significant contribution to the welfare of your race and, in a larger sense, of your country."

Dr. Carl J. Murphy, chairman of the Board of Trustees, presented the diplomas to the graduates.

DURING THE exercises, State Senator Harry A. Cole (D.-4th) class of 1943, received the first annual 'Alumnus of the Year Award" for 'distinction in politics.'

Frank J. Ellis, president of the Alumni Association, inducted graduates into the group.

Music during the exercises was provided by the college band and choir.

The Rev. Henry Offer of St. Francis Xavier Church, said the invocation, and the Rev. Nathaniel H. Wicks, pastor of Morning Star Baptist Church, said the benediction.

* * *

COL. CAMPBELL C. Johnson, assistant director of the Selective Service System, awarded Army commissions to the following graduates during the exercises:

Commissioned Second Lieutenants U.S. Army, Regular Army

*Billups, William H., Jr., Medical Service Corps
*Bradby, Harold N., Jr., Artillery
*Covington, George V., Infantry
*Morris, Joseph L., Infantry
*Onley, John A., Chemical Corps
*Smith, William F., Infantry
*Stokes, Theodore K., Signal Corps

United States Army Reserve

*Brewington, John, Medical Service Corps
Bowser, Leon J., Medical Service Corps
*Carter, Donald W., Chemical Corps
Coe, Livous B., Jr., Ordnance Corps
Dorsey, James A., Medical Service Corps
Dupree, Collen C., Medical Service Corps
Hall, Joseph S., Infantry
Hunt, Oscar L., Medical Service Corps
Jenkins, Irvin E., Medical Service Corps
Johnson, Robert E., Infantry
Kave, Kenneth E., Medical Service Corps
*Key, Spenser A. Armor McKinney, George K., Medical Service Corps
Ormond, William V., Chemical Corps
*Powell, Donald N., Medical Service Corps
Pritchett, Clyde A., Army Security
Purnell, Walter C., Signal Corps
*Robert, Wilmoth F. Artillery
Ross, Thomas A., Artillery
*Sands, Douglas B., Artillery
Stevenson, Joseph H., Jr., Medical Service Corps
Taylor, Cyril O., Infantry
Williams, Malcolm B., Army Security
Wilson, Ann J., Army Medical Special Corps
*Distinguished Military Student

* * *

THE FOLLOWING other awards to graduates were announced during the exercises:

Medals and Cash Prizes

Department of Art

Art Purchase Awards — Olga Fay Thomas, John Sidney White

Art Department Awards—Reva Goodwin Lewie, Olga Fay Thomas

Department of Biology

John E. Robinson Prize—Theodore Kenneth Stokes

Department of Chemistry

George T. Stansbury Prize — Elijah Saunders

Department of Economics

Edna G. Thrower Prize — Florence Garnell Gibson

Department of Education

W. Ashbie Hawkins Prize—Lucalle Victoria Cephas

Department of English

1. Baldwin and Hughes oratorical Medals — Henry Williams Sands and James Ivy

Secret Integration Meeting by Mayors

Courier
Sat. 2-7-56 P. 6

By JIM REID

MIAMI—A top secret meeting with racial integration heading the agenda was held by city officials of eight Florida cities here.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Officials refused to comment on the meeting except to say mutual municipal problems were discussed, but Mayor Francis Morrison of Daytona Beach admitted the recent Supreme Court ruling banning segregation at municipal facilities such as beaches and playgrounds was the "$64,000 question" of the get-together.

Morrison said any conclusion reached by the executives would be carried back to their communities by the Mayors and released in "detailed reports."

The group included Mayor Guy Bennett and City Attorney Floyd Campbell of Cocoa; Ward Baxter, city manager of Sarasota; Neil E. MacMillan, city attorney, and Mayor W. J. Snow of Delray Beach; Town Attorney Don Meadows of Cocoa Beach; City Attorney Zell H. Altman of Lake Worth; Mayor Raymond Padgett, Commissioner George Russo and City Attorney Errol Willis of Fort Pierce, and Mayor Porter Reynolds of Fort Lauderdale.

Drops Confederate Flags On Chicago 'All In Fun'

Call. P. 1 Sat. 3-9-56

Kansas City, Mo.

CHICAGO. —(INS)— The stars and bars of Confederate flags showered down on Chicago Friday in a friendly gesture by a plane-hopping disc jockey from Mississippi.

Allen English, 27-year-old radio disc jockey, flew all the way from Oxford, Miss., to make the bombardment with 20,000 rebel flags.

English's air lift followed a flight through Dixie skies engineered by a Chicago disc pockey, Al Benson, who showered down copies of the United States constitution during recent racial disputes.

But English insisted he came as "a southerner with a sense of humor." Wearing a Kentucky colonel getup with a broad-brimmed black hat, black coat with tails and a black string bow tie, he stepped from his plane at Meigs field and said:

"I don't intend this gesture as an insult to anybody, and I don't want a quarrel. I am simply not qualified to discuss the deep implications of this racial controversy.

"Nobody down home got mad at Benson for his visit. I hope nobody up here gets mad at me. If one flight was ridiculous, so was the other."

His single-engine spartan executive plane, painted red, white and blue was piloted by his friend, George Martin of Sikeston, Mo.

Newsmen greeted English with the Stars and Stripes. He laughed and said:

"Thank you so much. That's my flag too. Hey, this is more fun than anything."

English and his pilot skipped lunch and said they wanted to get back home by evening. The disc jockey said:

"Well, if I want to go back to Mississippi, I guess I'd better say, "Long Live the Confederacy."

English tried to make his flag-bombarding flight earlier last week but was forced down by bad weather.

Chicago Cafe Faces Suit On Serving

Advocate P. 1 Sat. 3-17-56

Jackson, Miss.

Chicago, March 12 — A suit charging a Chicago restauranteur with discrimination practices was filed here last week on behalf of Marguerite Cartwright, brilliant Hunter College professor and newspaper columnist, and Roland Schilen, Chicago secretary of the Adult Education Division of the Ford Foundation.

Named defendant in the suit is Johnny Annis, proprietor of a Loop restaurant at Wabash and Congress streets. Atty. Jesse Mann represented the plaintiffs.

Miss Cartwright, in Chicago for eight speaking engagements during Brotherhood Week, charges that waitress refused to serve her because of her race.

Schilen, who is white, also was denied service because he accompanied Miss Cartwright in the restaurant, the suit alleges.

The incident occurred shortly after Miss Cartwright had addressed Brotherhood Day audiences at the University of Chicago and Roosevelt University. She and Schilen had stopped in the restaurant to eat lunch, prior to filling another speaking engagement in the Chicago area.

Students Sign Racial Conduct Code

Herald Tribune P. 1 Sat.

PEORIA, Ill. — (AP) — Students at a high school where racial friction burst into a free-for-all fight four weeks ago have written a code of conduct for themselves.

One hundred of Manual Training High School's 1,000 students rose at a special school assembly to sign the code, worked out by a half dozen student leaders.

Miami, Fla.

It will be posted on corridor bulletin boards next week for the remainder of the students to sign.

Wash. 4-9-56

Principal A. Gray Adamson said the pledge was the idea of the students themselves. The faculty encouraged it. It is the first time students at any school in this centiral Illinois city of 112,000 have at- of all Manualites are vital to the general welfare and good reputation of our school . . . It is our duty to our high school to honor it, to respect it and defend it against ideals which are contrary to its general welfare and good reputation. . .

"I will refuse to support all persons and actions which tend to bring dishonor upon my school and will refuse to circulate stories of such persons and actions."

tempted to work out their own code of conduct.

There are 800 white and 200 Negro students at Manual, located in an older section of the city. The disturbances last month pitted white students against Negroes in two ma fist fights and one near-rio that was broken up by police.

The tension was caused by the refusal of a white student who works part-time as a movie theater usher to let a group of Negro students sneak into the theater without paying. Both factions shook hands and promised to forget their differences after parents, the principal and a Negro police matron addressed them at a school assembly.

The pledge the students are circulating now says in part:

"We, the undersigned students . . . believe that the integrity, loyalty and cooperation

Boycotted Melons Jam Chicago Traffic

Defender Sat. 7-28-56

An overzealous policeman, a merchant with 39,000 pounds of watermelons and an insistent photographer constituted the ingredients that sent several squad cars screaming to 5058 State st. in Chicago in answer to a riot call last week.

It all began with the peaceful unloading of the watermelons which had just arrived from Macon, Ga., in front of Your Certified supermarket at the State st. address.

Passing the scene, Tony Rhoden, Defender photographer, noted that the melons had been stacked four feet high along a 60-foot stretch of sidewalk.

LUSCIOUS BONANZA

By the time he found a parking place and returned, one of the two owners of the melons, Budd and Percy Bennett, was in earnest conversation with an unidentified police officer.

The officer, Rhoden reported, ordered him not to make any pictures and the two engaged in a heated exchange. Meanwhile, a crowd began to gather and a traffic jam developed as passing motorists slowed down at the sight of the watermelon bonanza.

But as they talked the watermelon mountain kept on growing and the officer called for reinforcements.

Several squad cars and motorcycles responded attracting more people — about 300 at the peak — and further delaying traffic.

Once unscrambled, the story appeared to be as follows:

The Bennett brothers sent a trailer to a farm near Macon, Ga., after hearing that the melons of Negro farmers were being bypassed and left to rot in the fields by white buyers who charged the money would be used to fight segregation.

SERGEANT INTERVENES

The melons, about 2,000 in the first shipment, arrived before the Bennetts had been able to contact Ald. Campbell to get a permit to stack them on the sidewalk.

Budd Bennett was pleading for time to arrange a place to stack the melons. Why the policeman objected to photographs was never made quite clear.

The officer's threats to arrest both Rhoden and the Bennetts were cancelled by a police sergeant who appeared with the reinforcements.

Budd Bennett made a quick trip to Wabash ave. police station and returned with the sad news that all the melons would have to be reloaded on the truck and moved to a vacant lot at 5034 S. State, where they are now on sale.

Rhoden meanwhile got his pictures and reported the story to the paper.

PS: Another shipment of melons arrived the next day.

Defender Sat 7-28-56 Chicago, Ill. P. 1 38 a 2d

2,000 Watermelons Cause 'Near Riot' On Chicago's Busy Southside

Request Police Walk Riot Beach

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 7-21-56

Alderman Leon M. Despres (5th) has requested that policemen be kept at the 55th Street promontory where on June 24 a band of five white youths created a disturbance during which they attacked several persons and hurled racial and religious insults.

In a letter to Park District Superintendent George Donoghue, Despres said:

P. 3

"I know that you are as disturbed as I am about Sunday's outbreak of religious and racial violence . . and the consequent injuries to several persons. For many years the promontory has been wholly free from such disturbances.

"I have spoken to eight separate persons who were victims or witnesses and who came to (my) office in great concern. Apparently the patrolman regularly assigned to the promontory was elsewhere on special duty."

Despres urged that policemen be kept on duty there at all times so that the "assailants, if they return, may be apprehended if they are identified."

Two Jews and one Negro were injured in the melee on June 24. The youths appeared on the beach and begin shouting, "We hate Jews and niggers."

One elderly Jewish man and two Negroes who protested were injured by the youths, who fled the scene before police arrived.

INDIAN EDUCATION

A program of adult education, now getting underway in five tribal areas, will be extended to others as funds permit and interest of the Indians themselves indicate. The new program is now underway in the following Indian tribal groups: Seminoles, of Florida; Rosebud Sioux, of South Dakota; Papago, of Arizona; Turtle Mountain Chippewas, of North Dakota, and Shoshone Bannock, Idaho.

INDIAN TRIBES' OIL PAY HITS RECORD HIGH

Lease Income Reaches 41 Million Dollars

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, Sept. 30 — Income received by Indian tribes and individual Indians from oil and gas leasing or their lands reached the record total of more than $41,000,000 in the fiscal year that ended June 30, Interior Secretary Seaton announced recently.

This compares with an income of about $28,000,000 in 1955 and approximately $13,000,000 in 1951.

Nearly $36,000,000 of the 1956 total was accounted for by 10 tribal groups. The great majority of tribes, as usual, received little or no oil and gas income.

Three factors are chiefly responsible for the 1956 upsurge: [1] the intense renewal of interest in leasing on the Osage reservation in Oklahoma; [2] the stepped up search for oil and gas on Navajo lands around the "four corners" area of Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, and Colorado; and [3] the potential expansion of gas development on Indian lands in the San Juan basin of the southwest.

Other Eight Listed

In addition to the Navajo and Osage tribes, the other eight groups receiving substantial oil and gas income in 1956 included those on the Jicarilla reservation, New Mexico; the Ute mountain and southern Ute reservations, Colorado; the Fort Peck, Blackfeet, and Crow reservations, Montana; the Wind River reservation, Wyoming, and the Uintah-Ouray reservation, Utah.

About $33,600,000 of the total Indian oil and gas income was received by tribal organizations and the balance of approximately $7,300,000 by individual Indian landowners. Nearly $21,000,000 of the total income was in the form of bonuses paid for leases. Over $15,400,000 represented royalties on production and about $4,000,000 was annual rental from the leaseholders.

4,000 Leases Approved

Nearly 4,000 oil and gas leases on Indian lands were approved during the year, bringing the total in force on June 30 up to 17,627 embracing a total area of roughly 5,400,000 acres. On June 30, there were nearly 13,000 producing oil wells and 555 producing gas wells on these lands.

Income received by Indians from other minerals in fiscal 1956 amounted to nearly $2,900,000. Much of this was a result of interest in uranium leasing on the Navajo reservation and the Spokane reservation of Washington.

In addition, there was a small but steady production from lead and zinc mining leases on the Quapaw reservation, Oklahoma, and from phosphate leases on the Fort Hall reservation. Idaho.

Indians Say Forty Million Dollars Owed Them for Lands U. S. Government Got from Forefathers

"All we want is to be like everyone else," Lyzeme Savage, 57, president of six Chippewa tribes representing 16,000 Indians in Minesota, said here Monday, when he and tribal representatives from six Chippewa communities and two Sioux tribes conferred with Glenn L. Emmons, United States commissioner of Indian Affairs.

"If the government paid us the 40 million dollars we're owed for our land there wouldn't be any problem," Savage said. "We'd all take our places in communities like every other citizen."

Suit Against U.S.

The Chippewa tribes have filed suit against the federal government for money they feel is owed them for their land, Savage said. The suit is now before the supreme court, he said.

Savage said the U. S. government's refusal to pay is an "example of bad faith by the white men."

William Morrell, 70, tribal secretary for 900 Chippewas at Leech Lake, Minn., said the Indians are trying to develop the natural resources in Minnesota but are held down by outmoded regulations.

Buck Regulations

"We always have to buck regulations which were formed years ago to keep us down," Morrell said.

"If they'd give us the rights we've been fighting for the last 60 years we wouldn't have to depend on the government for livelihood. We have to ask for money every year."

Morrell said that in 1857 "our forefathers ceded land to the United States for $1.25 an acre."

"They were paid only a fraction of what they were promised," Morrell said. "If we get the 40 million dollars we're asking we won't want any more from the goernment."

INDIANS' HEGIRA SHOWS RESULTS

Most Who Quit Reservation Under Relocation Program Benefit in Big Cities

Reservation Indians, who often grow up outside the realm of modern appliances, have had a chance to "go modern" since 1952. The Indian relocation program began that year.

Nearly 15,000 took the opportunity. About one-third returned to the reservation.

The reconversion starts when the Indian enters the trader's store and finds on the counter a small mimeographed folder inviting him to year-round employment in one of six great cities.

He is likely next to find himself in the reservation's relocation office, where he will be shown snapshots of Indians building planes in some far off happy hunting grounds, their wives standing beside television sets and eletric refrigerators.

Controversial Issue

A five-member team of the Association on American Indian Affairs, an organization devoted to Indian welfare, issued last week the results of a four-month survey of the Federal relocation program. On the whole it found the controversial program beneficial. The Field Foundation shared in the survey expenses.

"The relocation branch of the Bureau of Indian Affairs is staffed by humane, singularly unbureaucratic people," the survey observed.

"They are a corps of workers who believe, with or without justification, that what they do puts food on the Indian's table and clothes on his back, and they think nothing of working ten hours a day and on weekends to do it."

The survey noted, however, that the Indian's new refrigerator and television set were likely to be in the same room, next to the divan and dining table. It asked whether the program should not seek to "limit Indian hope rather than fire Indian aspiration."

Criticism has been advanced that the program is not a method of assisting individual Indians to a better life but a conspiracy to disperse their tribal communities.

Generous Help Offered

The report replied that relocation was voluntary, and that the program provided generous financial help that made it possible for as many as desired to do so to relocate.

When an Indian visits a relocation office a staff member "shows him job and wage reports from the relocation cities, tells him that the City Relocation Office will help him with money for up to four weeks and with guidance for six months to a year."

Before the relocation date, the report noted, the Indian "may have renounced refrigerators and television and gone off once more on migratory work, or, fired by a dream the relocation officer did not suspect, he may have found it intolerable to wait one more day and may have packed his family into an old car" and headed for Chicago.

If he waits for an officially sanctioned departure, relocation personnel will hustle him to ministers to regularize his marriage, pack his bags, buy him an alarm clock so he may get to work on time and provide disposable diapers for use along the way.

The Bewildering City

In the bewildering city another relocation officer tells the man how to use the checking account in which his subsistence money will be deposited, and how to operate a dial telephone. She drives the family to its temporary residence and advises it to eat in a cheap, clean restaurant.

It is the officer's responsibility to see that the Indian father gets and holds an eight-hour job, that his pregnant wife knows how to take a bus ten blocks to the clinic, that his school-age children are not permitted to be truants and that five relatives do not suddenly move into his one-room apartment.

Economically, the undereducated, culturally isolated reservation Indians are at the bottom. Socially, the order is reversed.

"The Indians have romantic myth and the American guilt-feeling on their side," the report stressed. "They may live anywhere they can afford to live and may appear in Sioux war bonnets on municipal occasions and receive pleasant pampering without condescension."

Wage Situation

If the Indian has a developed skill and a well-defined ambition—and few do—opportunity can readily be found for him. It is not difficult to place him at the prevailing wage in a given industry.

"Wages are commensurate with those paid non-Indians for the same work," the report said. "What is not commensurate is the size of the family to be supported on the wages," usually four to thirteen members.

Whatever is wrong with the Indian in relocation is more fundamentally wrong with the tribal reservation, the report concluded. What is wrong with the reservation is not the fault of the Indian, it added.

"The relocation program is being carried out in a total Indian situation in which huge pressures of the malign type are being exerted on the Indian people," it declared.

"They can survive and prosper within and grace our country. This, however, they will not be able to do unless Congress, the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the whole American people generously decide to rewrite the imminent sad ending to the history of the American Indians."

38a 1956

AMERICAN INDIANS

High Court to Get Claim of Sioux

Post Times Herald
Fri. 11-30-56

By Karl E. Meyer
Staff Reporter

Gen. Custer and Sitting Bull may be a dim part of history to most of us, but to one Washingtonian they are as vivid and real as today's headlines.

He is Ralph Hoyt Case, who at 77 is now reaching the final round in his 34-year court battle to win $118 million for his clients, 35,000 Sioux Indians.

Washington, D.C.

As counsel to the tribe, Case said yesterday he would ask the Supreme Court to review and settle one of history's longest legal battles and biggest claims suits. P. 10-B

He is appealing a unanimous opinion of the Court of Claims, which ruled on Nov. 7 that the Sioux had been amply compensated for 7.8 million acres of gold-rich Black Hills land, taken from the tribe in 1877.

Case, son of a frontier sheriff and himself born on a Sioux reservation, said the tribe refuses to give up despite reversal after reversal in the lower courts.

"The Sioux are the toughest and most stiff-necked tribe that the United States ever encountered," he said, "and when they've been wronged they'll never surrender, until the last brave is dead."

Case and the tribe argue that an 1868 treaty with the Sioux was violated when whites —led by Gen. George Custer— discovered in 1874 there was gold in the South Dakota Black Hills. The gold lodes included the fabulous Homestead strike.

After Congress took the territory away from the tribe, it took the Sioux until 1920 to get permission to sue for at least $118 million, believed to be the largest claim ever filed against the Government.

The tribe's first attorney was Charles Evans Hughes, who had to break his contract when he was appointed Secretary of State in 1921. Then after, a tribal meeting, Case was picked —partly because Indians knew and trusted his father years before.

Today, only one of the six Indians who appointed Case is still living. In three decades, Case said, three Government lawyers who worked half a career on the dispute have died before it reached its final appeal.

The first big blow against the tribe came in 1937 ,when the Court of Claims ruled that it lacked jurisdiction, To support its case, the Government filed a 4385-page report, costing $107,000. Case's original brief, running to 400 pages, was published as a book.

With the passage of the Indian Claims Commission Act in 1946, Case was back in court under the new law. But the Indian Claims Commission ruled against the tribe, and the Court of Claims supported the ruling.

Both courts held that Congress had the right to abrogate treaties and that the tribe had received $57 million in compensatory benefits from the Government.

But Case, who will receive no pay unless he wins, is not disheartened. Despite his age and ill health, he is as sure of victory as the independent and defiant tribe he works for. He says:

"Justice, decency and history are all on our side."

RALPH H. CASE
. . . counsel for Sioux

File $500,000 Race Ban Suits in Indiana

Call Fri. 12-14-56

Kansas City, Mo.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — (ANP) — Five Superior court suits, seeking $100,000 damages each, were filed here last week by nine persons charging they were discriminated against and refused admittance to a ballroom where Louis Armstrong was playing because of their race.

Named as defendant in the suits was the Indiana Roof Ballroom, which is under management of Mrs. Alice Hedricks.

The plaintiffs charge that Louis Armstrong was playing a one-night engagement at the ballroom last June 17 and that the affair was to be open to the general public.

They contend that when Negroes presented their tickets for admittance, they were informed by the management that the dance was open only to members of the Ballroom who held membership cards.

At the time of the dance during intermission, bandleader Louis Armstrong was informed by reporters of the situation. He was asked if he would have gone on with the engagement had he known in advance about the situation.

"Yes, I would have played," he said.

However, upon later being interviewed in New York by Associated Press reporters be denied the statement.

U.S. Indians Want To Head Parade For 'White Father'

Washington Post
Monday, Dec.
Fri. 12-14-56

ANADARKO, Okla., Dec. 13 (AP)— American Indians want to head the parade when the "Great White Father" is inaugurated next month.

38a T.5.C

Robert Goomi, president of the American Indian Assn., here, wired the Inaugural Committee in Washington urging that Indians head the parade since they were the "first inhabitants of the United States and the place of the American Indian in history has been minimized."

He said that if the Indians couldn't be put at the head of the parade, they at least should be put in a prominent position to "honor the Great White Father of all Americans."

Jim Crow Dropped Easily In Indianapolis

Journal & Guide P. 9

Integration Is Success In North's "Dixie City"

Sat. 5-19-56

Norfolk, Va.

(In 1949, five years before the U. S. Supreme Court issued its historic ruling banning public school segregation by race the Indiana Legislature outlawed the practice throughout the state. In Indianapolis, often called the "most southern city of the North," Negroes constituted 15 per cent of the population. Here is a first-hand report of what happened in Indianapolis, based on interviews with school officials and others concerned with the problem.)

By HORTENSE MYERS

INDIANAPOLIS—(INS)—The "most southern city of the North" began the racial desegregation of its public elementary and high schools in September, 1950, amid predictions of violence and no little anxiety.

Now, six school years later, this is the situation in Indianapolis:

Fifty-four of 84 elementary schools and seven of eight high schools have become interracial.

THE NUMBER of colored teachers in the city system ha increased from 347 to 445.

White instructors are teaching in some of the remaining all-Negro schools, and colored teachers are on the faculties of some of the all-white schools.

A colored man is serving on the city's school board for the first time in its 135-year history.

Children do not seem "color conscious."

AS FOR violence: there have been some scattered fights between white and colored pupils but never on a large scale. As one principal commented:

"Lots of things that are interpreted as racial conflict are nothing more than quarrels among children, who just happen to be black and white.

Pupils, teachers, school administrators, sociologists and civic leaders all agreed that racial integration in Indianapolis proceeded far more smoothly than the most optimistic had hoped.

* * *

BUT THEY also agreed that whatever success the city has had "didn't just happen but resulted from many years of groundwork."

The latest Indianapolis census showed 64,020 Negroes among the total population of 426,945, or about 15 per cent.

The some 15,000 colored public school students at present make up 21.57 per cent of the elementary school population and 18.18 per cent of the high school enrollment.

AT ONE time, Indianapolis had unsegregated schools, but as the influx of both colored people and southern - born whites increased after World War I, the color line was drawn — not only in schools but in housing.

During this period, Indiana became a stronghold of the anti-Negro, anti-Catholic, anti-Semitic Ku Klux Klan. The power of the Klan was broken in the late 1920's with revelation of corruption that led to both the state house and the city hall.

* * *

BUT THE PATTERN of segregation lingered on. The development of colored neighborhoods during the time between the two wars is responsible for the present existence of 21 all-white and 10 all-Negro schools in Indianapolis.

For as Dr. H. L. Shibler, superintendent of the city's public schools system explained it: The school district boundaries are being observed; non-integrated schools follow the pattern of segregated housing.

* * *

WHILE INTEGRATION, or desegregation, has been affected smoothly in the classroom, it never has extended to social events, such as high school dances. In school cafeterias, the tendency has been for colored to eat with colored and whites with whites.

One of the city's Negro leaders said he believed the "awareness of greater horizons for Negros has not seeped from the administrative to the teaching level."

HE ALSO SAID that persons counseling colored pupils tend to steer them into jobs traditionally open to members of their race, and added:

"They have not accepted this business of recognizing individual ability regardless of race or religion."

WHEN NEGROES ARRIVE

Advertiser P. 1

Racial Disturbance Closes Swimming Pool In Indiana

Montgomery, Ala.

Mon. 6-11-56

MUNCIE, Ind., June 10 (AP) — Gates to a municipal swimming pool were locked today because of a racial disturbance, and authorities said they had no idea when they would be opened.

Police Chief Jack Young and Harold Collins, city parks superintendent, acted jointly to close Tuhey Pool after the appearance of Negroes there yesterday for the first time precipitated a two-hour disturbance.

Collins said a "large group" of white youths jeered at four Negroes. He said there was no violence, but the police kept close watch during the two-hour period.

WHEN NEGROES ARRIVE

Advertiser P. 1

Racial Disturbance Closes Swimming Pool In Indiana

Montgomery, Ala.

Mon. 6-11-56

MUNCIE, Ind., June 10 (AP) — Gates to a municipal swimming pool were locked today because of a racial disturbance, and authorities said they had no idea when they would be opened.

Police Chief Jack Young and Harold Collins, city parks superintendent, acted jointly to close Tuhey Pool after the appearance of Negroes there yesterday for the first time precipitated a two-hour disturbance.

Collins said a "large group" of white youths jeered at four Negroes. He said there was no violence, but the police kept close watch during the two-hour period.

Negroes never before had used Tuhey Pool, said Collins, "but it definitely hasn't been closed to anyone." He said it would remain on that basis when it did reopen.

The other municipal pool in this east-central Indiana city of about 60,000 has been used by both Negroes and whites for several years, Collins said.

The Negroes were identified as Roy C. Buley, executive secretary of a YMCA here, and three youths he had brought with him.

RUMMEL CONTINUES SEGREGATION ATTACK

Commercial Appeal P. 11

Against Christian Charity, Prelate Declares

Memphis Tenn.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Aug. 17. — (UP) — Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel of New Orleans charged Friday night that racial segregation violates Christian charity and natural law.

8-18-56

The Roman Catholic prelate, who has stirred up controversy in New Orleans for his racial stand, attacked segregation as a bar to the betterment of the nation's Negroes.

Archbishop Rummel, speaking before the national convention of the Christian Family Movement at Notre Dame University, urged desegregation as the cure for any mental backwardness, moral laxity or lack of initiative attributed to individual Negroes.

"Who will deny," he asked, "that the hardships, the humiliations, the setbacks, the retardation in civic, economic and cultural programs which racial segregation imposes either by law or by custom are not violations of Christian charity and even of basic natural law?"

From the book- THE INSIDE STORY
By- ROBERT J. DONOVAN

EISENHOWER IN THE WHITE HOUSE

Star P. 6A
Tues. 5-1-56
Washington D.C.

Desegregation Drive Gets Into High Gear

By ROBERT J. DONOVAN

II

Not much was done about the racial problem in the rush of affairs in the early months of the Eisenhower administration.

Since then a vast amount has been done—in the main quietly in order not to stir people up. As recently as March 9 an entire cabinet session was devoted to the South and to civil rights.

On June 4, 1953, about three months after President Eisenhower took office, a front-page headline in The Washington Evening Star caught his eye. It was:

HOBBY NOTE FLOUTS SEGREGATION ORDER, POWELL CHARGES

No other newspaper story at the time ever caused such commotion in the White House so quickly. The Star story shocked the President, and his vehement reaction shocked his staff, and things began to happen in a hurry.

The story was based on an open telegram which had been sent to Mr. Eisenhower by Representative Adam Clayton Powell, jr., a Negro who represents a district in Harlem. The telegram began:

"The hour has arrived for you to decisively assert your integrity. You cannot continue to stand between two opposite moral poles."

Policy "Countermanded"

The essence was that Mrs. Hobby had "virtually countermanded" the President's policy on nonsegregation in schools for children on Army posts, which are paid for by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Sherman Adams got on the telephone to Mrs. Hobby and found out that while Mr. Powell may have overstated it, he had a case. Procrastination, indecision and lack of enthusiasm no doubt was retarding desegregation of a number of Federal hospitals, schools and Navy yards. Mr. Adams was seriously concerned about straightening it out before it became a political affair. He called in Max Rabb. Mr. Rabb decided to go to see Mr. Powell.

"Adam," he said, addressing the Congressman by his first name, "I'm disappointed in you."

"Okay, Max, You Win."

Here, he told him, were two men—Mr. Powell and Mr. Eisenhower. Think, he exclaimed, what two such men working together could do for the underdog! But instead of that, he lamented, what had Mr. Powell done but blow things sky-high.

This is the second of a series of articles based on Mr. Donovan's book, "Eisenhower—The Inside Story," a behind-the-scenes account of the administration to be published in June by Harper & Brothers.

"Okay, Max, you win," Mr. Powell said. "What do you want me to do?"

Mr. Rabb replied that he wanted Mr. Powell to give the White House a chance to deal with the complaints, and not in an atmosphere of recrimination. Mr. Rabb promised that Mr. Eisenhower would write Mr. Powell a conciliatory letter, and this was done. It said in part: "We have not taken and we shall not take a single backward step. There must be no second-class citizens in this country." Mr. Powell replied in friendly fashion.

The problem was tackled with conscientiousness and vigor. Mr. Rabb was given responsibility for it, and one of his first acts was to deal with the charges in Mr. Powell's telegram that segregation was continuing at the Navy yards at Charleston and Norfolk.

Ingenuity Used

Only a couple of days elapsed before Robert B. Anderson, Secretary of the Navy, called Mr. Rabb and said that the Navy could put an end to segregation at both yards. The ingenuity with which it was done pleased the President. For example, on a week end when not many sailors were around, the "Colored" and "White" signs over drinking fountains suddenly disappeared and were not replaced.

In buildings where similar signs were inscribed over entrances to lavatories the signs themselves were not obliterated. That would have been too obvious. Instead, entire corridors were repainted and the signs never restored. Desegregation of the mess halls was more difficult, but gradually it was accomplished.

Mr. Anderson's quiet and tactful approach set a pattern. By now desegregation has spread through all branches of Government, and in sensitive areas of the South where trouble was feared but did not materialize. The process has reached a point where—though this has not been announced—not even an airport can now be built with Federal aid without employment of desegregated working forces.

Orders That D. C. Be Model

After the Supreme Court ruling of May 17, 1954, holding racial segregation in the public schools unconstitutional, the President gave orders that the District of Columbia should be made a model. Desegregation is now in effect in the Capital not only in the schools but in many other fields, and it was accomplished without overt trouble.

Max Rabb says it took 84 operational directives, orders and agreements in Washington. These were in a variety of areas ranging from recreational facilities, restaurants, movies to the fire department, which was one of the most difficut of all.

The Cabinet meeting of last March 9 dealt with developments in the South, where the Autherine Lucy case and the Montgomery bus boycott were inflammatory issues. J. Edgar Hoover, FBI director, gave the Cabinet an extensive briefing. He gave the background of the stresses and strains which had arisen to cause trouble.

Mr. Hoover discussed the rise of the White Citizens' Councils and other organizations, which he said numbered over 200. He also mentioned figures on the increase in firearms. In one area checked by the F. B. I., there was a 400 per cent increase in the shipment of firearms. In another town, he said, the sales of firearms in the past six months exceeded the sales in the previous six months by fourfold.

Communists Try to Profit

In discussing the Communist role in the tension areas of the South, Mr. Hoover said they had been effective in some places in causing trouble, and in others they have not. Everywhere they were trying to exacerbate the racial conflict. Their effort to colonize the Southern textile industry was showing results, he said.

While the Communists had tried to infiltrate the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Mr. Hoover continued, they had not succeeded as far as the leadership was concerned. The NAACP leadership was fighting them vigorously.

After Mr. Hoover finished, the President picked up items for discussion. For one thing, he commented on how the roots of bitterness in the South go back to Reconstruction days. He said the conflict between two ways of life in the South—segregation and desegregation—could be changed by education, understanding and a realistic approach.

Copyright 1956
N. Y. Herald Tribune Inc.

Tomorrow: Relations between the President and the late Senator Taft.

38a 1956

From the book- THE INSIDE STORY
By-Robert J. Donovan

Eisenhower In the White House

Herald Tribune 5/1
New York Tues. 5-1-56

By Robert J. Donovan

How the Administration Pressed Desegregation; Cabinet Hears Hoover on South's Race Strife

This is the second of a series of articles based on Robert J. Donovan's book, "Eisenhower—The Inside Story," a behind-the-scenes account of the Adminstration to be published in June by Harper & Brothers.

Not much was done about the racial problem in the rush of affairs in the early months of the Eisenhower administration.

Since then a vast amount has been done—for the main quietly in order not to stir people up. As recently as March 9 an entire Cabinet session was devoted to the South and to civil rights.

On June 4, 1953, about three months after President Eisenhower took office, a front-page headline in "The Washington Evening Star" caught his eye. It was:

HOBBY NOTE FLOUTS
SEGREGATION ORDER,
POWELL CHARGES

No other newspaper story at the time ever caused such commotion in the White House so quickly. "The Star" story shocked the President, and his vehement reaction shocked his staff, and things began to happen in a hurry.

The story was based on an open telegram which had been sent to Eisenhower by Representative Adam Clayton Powell jr., a Negro who represents a district in Harlem. The telegram began:

"The hour has arrived for you to decisively assert your integrity. You cannot continue to stand between two opposite moral poles."

The essence was that Mrs. Hobby and others had "virtually countermanded" the President's policy on non-segregation in schools for children on Army posts, which are paid for by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Adams Verifies Powell Has Case

Sherman Adams got on the telephone to Mrs. Hobby and found out that while Powell may have overstated it, he had a case. Procrastination, indecision and lack of enthusiasm no doubt were retarding desegregation of a number of Federal hospitals, schools and Navy yards. Adams was seriously concerned about straightening it out before it became a political affair. He called in Max Rabb. Rabb decided to go to see Powell.

Associated Press

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell jr.

"Adam," he said, addressing the Congressman by his first name, "I'm disappointed in you."

Here, he told him, were two men—Powell and Eisenhower. Think, he exclaimed, what two such men working together could do for the underdog! But instead of that, he lamented, what had Powell done but blow things sky-high.

"Okay, Max, you win," Powell said. "What do you want me to do?"

Rabb replied that he wanted Powell to give the White House a chance to deal with the complaints, and not in an atmosphere of recrimination. Rabb promised that Eisenhower would write Powell a conciliatory letter, and this was done. It said in part: "We have not taken and we shall not take a single backward step. There must be no second-class citizens in this country." Powell replied in friendly fashion.

The problem was tackled with conscientiousness and vigor. Rabb was given responsibility for it, and one of his first acts was to deal with the charges in Powell's telegram that segregation was continuing at the Navy yards at Charleston and Norfolk.

Herald Tribune
New York
Tues. 5-1-56

Only a couple of days elapsed before Robert B. Anderson, Secretary of the Navy, called Rabb and said that the Navy could put an end to segregation at both yards. The ingenuity with which it was done pleased the President. For example, on a week end when not many sailors were around, the COLORED and WHITE signs over drinking fountains suddenly disappeared and were not replaced. In buildings where similar signs were inscribed over entrances to lavatories the signs themselves were not obliterated. That would have been too obvious. Instead entire corridors were repainted and the signs never restored. Desegregation of the mess halls was more difficult, but gradually it was accomplished.

Anderson Sets A Pattern For Desegregation

Herald Tribune
New York
Tues. 5-1-56

Anderson's quiet and tactful approach set a pattern. By now desegregation has spread through all branches of government, and in sensitive areas of the South where trouble was feared but did not materialize. The process has reached a point where—though this has not been announced—not even an airport can now be built with Federal aid without employment of desegregated working forces.

After the Supreme Court ruling of May 17, 1954, holding racial segregation in the public schools unconstitutional, the President gave orders that the District of Columbia should be made a model. Desegregation is now in effect in the capital not only in the schools but in many other fields, and it was accomplished without overt trouble.

Max Rabb says it took eighty-four operational directives, orders and agreements in Washington. These were in a variety of areas ranging from recreational facilities, restaurants, movies to the fire department, which was one of the most difficult of all.

The Cabinet meeting of last March 9 dealt with developments in the South, where the Autherine Lucy case and the Montgomery bus boycott were inflammatory issues. J. Edgar Hoover, F. B. I. director, gave the Cabinet an extensive briefing. He gave the background of the stresses and strains which had arisen to cause trouble.

Hoover discussed the rise of the White Citizens' Councils and other organizations, which he said numbered over 200. He also mentioned figures on the increase in firearms. In one area checked by the F. B. I., there was a 400 per cent increase in the shipment of firearms. In another town, he said, the sales of firearms in the past six months exceeded the sales in the previous six months by fourfold.

Communists Try to Profit By Racial Tension

In discussing the Communist role in the tension areas of the South, Hoover said they had been effective in some places in causing trouble, and in others they have not. Everywhere they were trying to exacerbate the racial conflict. Their effort to colonize the Southern textile industry was showing results, he said.

While the Communists had tried to infiltrate the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Hoover continued, they had not succeeded as far as the leadership was concerned. The N. A. A. C. P. leadership was fighting them vigorously.

After Hoover finished, the President picked up items for discussion. For one thing, he commented on how the roots of bitterness in the South go back to Reconstruction days. He said the conflict between two ways of life in the South—segregation and desegregation—could be changed by education, understanding and a realistic approach.

© 1956, N.Y. Herald Tribune Inc.

(The third of this series, appearing tomorrow, tells of the relations between the President and the late Senator Taft.)

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

June 6, 1953

Herald Tribune
New York
Tues. 5-1-56

Dear Congressman Powell:

I have your telegram and I want you to know that I appreciate your kind expression of confidence that I will carry out every pledge I have made with regard to segregation. I shall continue to devote my earnest efforts to advance both the spirit as well as the fact of equality. I believe that the fight to achieve tangible results will be increasingly successful.

In your communication you have indicated that there is some evidence that the policy I am pursuing against the impairment of equality through segregation has been obstructed in some agencies of the government. I have made inquiries of the officials to whom you refer and learn that they are pursuing the purpose of eliminating segregation in federally controlled and supported institutions.

We have not taken and we shall not take a single backward step. There must be no second class citizens in this country.

As you are so well aware, this problem cannot be solved wholly with either laws or directives. The spirit of these objectives cannot be achieved as a result of the action of any one person, no matter with how much authority and forthrightness he acts. To achieve our purpose we must plan and work together to win the victories one by one, and not to be content until we have gained our goal.

Sincerely,

Dwight D. Eisenhower

The Honorable Adam Clayton Powell
The House of Representatives
Washington, D. C.

Herald Tribune—United Press

Copy of letter President Eisenhower wrote to Rep. Powell in 1953 on the issue of segregation.

Herald Tribune—Warman

Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel of the N.A.A.C.P., which was lauded by the F. B. I. for resisting Communist infiltration.

Leader Scores Racial Discrimination In Speech

Daily World
Sun. 1-8-56

LOUISVILLE, KY. —Addressing the Public Meeting of the convention at Zion Baptist Church last Wednesday, December 28th before a crowd of one thousand citizens of the city, Dr. Iggers told those present that while there has been tremendous progress in race relations in this country in the last decade and a half, the end of legal segregation must not be confused with the thorough integration of Negroes in American life. "Apathy of the Negro," stated the educator, "in regards to his rights may lead to a situation where the Negro, while permitted to sit in the front of the bus and to send his children to the nearest school, will still be subordinated in regards to housing, economic and education opportunities for generations to come—even if he may enjoy a slightly larger share of American prosperity than in the past."

Atlanta Ga

Iggers stressed the inter-relation of the defense of our traditional American Civil Liberties with the struggle for Negro equality. He discussed at length the case of Carl Braden, white Louisville news reporter, who was convicted to a fifteen year term under a Kentucky sedition statute after having bought a house in a white neighborhood for a Negro family. "The point is," Iggers said, "that none accused Braden of bungling the house or of actively conspiring to overthrow the government, but that under a vaguely worded law he was convicted of holding certain unpopular opinions." The college professor further asserted: "If heretical opinions are the basis of legal prosecution, then all of us who see flaws in the status quo are threatened with imprisonment."

Finally, Iggers called on the fraternity to support the NAACP, to challenge segregation practices, to establish closer cultural ties with the white community, and to provide scholarships to train students for areas of employment not traditionally open to them."

BUSINEESS AND SOCIAL ACTIVITIES

Aside from the regular business of the Conclave which included discussions of the fraternity's Bigger and Better Business, Education and Social Action Programs, committee reports, Graduate and Undergraduate Panels, special project reports and other Conclave business, the agenda included social activities of many kinds for the delegates, visiting brothers and Sigma wives.

Standiford Integration Brings Suits Dismissal

Courier-Journal & L. 13
Louisville, Ky
Sun. 5-24-56

A suit by 11 Negroes charging discrimination in eating and drinking facilities at Standiford Field was dismissed yesterday by Federal Judge Henry L. Brooks.

The judge said segregation does not exist in the restaurant and snack bar at Lee Terminal. Therefore, he said, there is no legal controversy on which to base a suit.

One of the plaintiffs, Louisville attorney Charles W. Anderson, Jr., agreed that Negroes now have no trouble getting service on food and drinks at the airport.

Judge Brooks' dismissal order sustained motions for a summary judgment filed by the City-County Air Board, Director of Airports Foster V. Jones, and Dobbs Houses, operator of the Lee Terminal resturant and snack bar.

Decided To Drop Suit

The judge noted the plaintiffs had filed no answer to this motion.

Anderson indicated the plaintiffs had decided to let the suit drop. "The matter's been corrected," he said. "There's no need to litigate the matter further."

Judge Brooks referred to a lease signed May 1, 1955, by the Air Board and Dobbs Houses. It states that there shall be no racial discrimination in the Dobbs House facilities at Lee Terminal.

Brooks found that there was no basis for a declaration of rights or an injunction against discrimination. He also denied the total of $110,000 in damages asked and found no cause for action under federal civil-rights laws.

Plaintiffs Are Listed

Plaintiffs in the suit, filed last September 14, were Mrs. Frankie M. Freeman, St. Louis attorney; Willard Brown, Charlestown, W. Va., attorney; Clark McCluckeen and Russell Cowen, Chicago; W. W. Carter and E. R. Clemons, Philadelphia, and these Louisvillians:

Dr. Grace M. James, 1715 W. Ormsby; Charles W. Anderson and Toto Anderson, by their father, Charles W. Anderson, Jr., 1025 S. Western Parkway; Frank L. Stanley, editor of The Louisville Defender, and attorney James A. Crumlin, 630 Finzer.

Defendants, besides the Air Board, Jones, and Dobbs Houses, were the City of Louisville, Jefferson County Fiscal Court, American Airlines, and Eastern Air Lines. The last four were dismissed previously as defendants.

Each Named An Instance

Each of the plaintiffs complained of one instance of being denied service at the restaurant or snack bar between February 14, 1954, and April 22, 1955. They said they were refused solely because they were Negroes.

Dobbs Houses said it used to ask Negroes who entered the small snack bar to go to the dining room for service. It no longer does this, it said.

The firm said Crumlin was refused service in the dining room because it was full. It denied the other instances of alleged discrimination.

Whites Protest, Bus Company Dismisses Negro Drivers

Daily Worker
Sun. 9-9-56

NICHOLASVILLE, Ky. —(ANP)— Three Negro bus drivers lost their jobs here last week after about 100 white segregationists protested their driving buses that carried white students to and from school.

The Jessamine school board decided to take the action and hire white drivers last Monday after the complaints had been registered.

A meeting was held the following night, at which the board rescinded its action in employing Negro drivers. The board had just recently hired the three Negro drivers.

Complaints were reportedly restricted to employment of drivers and not to limited integration planned this year in the school system.

Sturgis father loses job, but wins friends, receives help by mai

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 10-13-56

NEW YORK — Following his dismissal from his job as car-washer at a Sturgis, Ky. garage, the family of James Everett Gordon has been swamped with letters containing checks and money orders to offset the absence of his customary $55 per week earnings.

Mr. Gordon is the father of the two Gordon children who, with their mother, defied hostile mobs that barred the children's entrance to the all-white Clay consolidated school this fall.

Economic pressures had been exerted against the garage owner (who is also the mayor of Sturgis), forcing the dismissal of Mr. Gordon who is unable to find work in the farming-mining area. He had held the garage job for seven years.

NEGRO LOSES JOB OVER INTEGRATION

Times

Children Attended School at Clay, Ky., Three Days—Case Now in Courts

P. 53 38a

By BENJAMIN FINE
Special to The New York Times.

WHEATCROFT, Ky., Sept. 29 —For the last seven years James Everett Gordon, 37 years old has worked as an automobile washer in a garage at near-by Sturgis. He earned $55 a week. Today he is unemployed.

The Gordons own a small wooden house in this village of 600 population, three miles from Clay. For three days, from Sept. 12 to 15, their two children, James Henry, 10, and Theresa, 8, attended the Clay Consolidated School—the first Negroes to do so.

Sun. 9-30-56

This upset the town of Clay, population 1,400, more than anything that has happened in its nearly century of existence. The Gordons were threatened with physical violence. Gov. A. B. Chandler ordered 500 National Guardsmen and sixty State Troopers to keep the school open.

Fof three mornings, Maj. Gen. John Jacob Bethurum Williams, State Adjutant General, escorted Mrs. Gordon and her two children to the school. Then the School Board ordered Mrs. Gordon to send her children to an all-Negro school in near-by Providence. The case is now before the Federal District Court.

The Gordons knew that by sending the children to the Clay School they were endangering their livelihood. They knew that pressure would be brought to bear by the strong White Citizens Council in the area.

But more than a week went by and nothing happened. Then on Tuesday, when he reported to work as usual, Mr. Gordon was told that there was no place in the garage for him. The garage is owned by J. B. Holeman Mayor of Sturgis.

May Go to Evansville

"I don't know what I can do," Mr. Gordon said, "there's no one around here that will hire me. I guess I'll have to go to Evansville. Maybe I can find a job in a garage there. I used to drive trucks, too."

Evansville, Ind., is fifty miles from Wheatcroft.

Sturgis was the scene of a

hetic Readers

Sat, 11-20-56 Chicago, Ill. P.2

ordon Family

James Gordon last week as she watched scores of letters containing checks, money orders, and dollar bills, pour into her home after newspapers here carried the story of her integration fight in Kentucky and her husband's dismissal from his job.

Her husband, James, was fired from his job as a mechanic by his employer, the mayor of Sturgie, Ky., when he attempted to enroll his two childdren in the all-white Clay Consolidated school. The whole town rose up in arms and it took more than 500 national guardsmen to keep order in the little town of 1,400 population.

The Gordons live in Wheatcroft, Ky., a suburb of Clay. For three days Mrs. Gordon brought her two children, James, jr., 10, and Theresa, 8, to the school under the armed escort of the militia. Then the school board ordered the children sent to the all-Negro Rosenwald School in Providence.

Several days later the troops left and Gordon was found without a job. The Mayor had fired him. No one in Clay, Sturgis, or the neighboring areas would hire him. He applied for work at the two local coal mines, but received polite refusals.

But since newspapers carried the story of the Gordon plight, Mrs. Gordon said in a telephone interview that the mail has been coming in at a growing rate. She said scores of letters have been received, mostly from New York.

"I'm just so thankfu," she said. "People I have never met have been so nice to me. It looks as though God has not forgotten us. My husband is happy. He's still looking for work. I hope he can find something soon. But neither of us are discouraged now. People are so kind I can hardly talk."

Mrs. Gordon said that she had received more than 200 letters, with more coming in daily.

"I've been kept so busy answering them. I plan to answer every one of the letters. It's wonderful to have so many friends, isn't it?"

segregation battle. When eight Negro children enrolled in the white high school there they were ordered by the School Board to leave. Their case, too, has been taken to the courts.

Mr. Gordon is not sorry he took the lead in challenging segregation at Clay.

"I'm a Christian man," he said. "I obey the laws of the land in the best way I know how. I think I did the right thing for my children. Maybe it will help other children, too."

Mrs. Gordon wants to stay and see the fight through.

"I wouldn't want to leave this house," she said. "It would be impossible to move. Where would we go?

"But it looks as if some people want to get rid of us real bad. I know we're in a tight spot. I don't know where it will end. We pray every day and night for strength and guidance from the Lord."

Two years ago the Gordons bought a ramshackle house that is now their home. Mr. Gordon spent his evenings and weekends repairing it. Handy with tools, he patched the roof, painted the house and repaired the water pipes.

"It's a nice place now," he said. "I'd hate to give it up."

"Can't Move Now"

Mrs. Gordon said, "We can't move now. We want to see our case through."

"Besides," she added, "we're expecting another child in February."

Somehow or other, Mrs. Gordon s convinced, they will manage to get by, even if it means her husband will have to travel 100 miles a day or more to get to work.

"I don't feel mad at anyone," she said. "It wouldn't have been good business for the garage to keep my husband. Maybe they had some pressure put on them, too. They could lose business, I know. And my husband was caught in the middle."

Then she added: "But I don't know why they couldn't stick by my husband. Sometimes I don't understand at all. I only tried to do what was right for my children. They deserve a good school. I don't see what we did wrong. Now my husband is the one to suffer. I feel so sorry for him. It's not good for a man to lose his job and see his family go hungry."

"Don't you worry," Mr. Gordon said. "I'll find a job. I've worked all my life around cars. I know I can do good work. I never had any trouble all the time I worked at Sturgis or any other place."

The Sturgis garage employs eight white men and another Negro.

"The white men didn't talk to me much after all this happened," Mr. Gordon said. "They didn't like what I did in bringing my children to a white school. But several of them, when no one was around, were nice to me. No one said he wouldn't work with me."

Tomorrow morning Mr. Gordon will leave Wheatcroft in his 1949 Chevrolet to find a job, any kind of job. But western Kentucky, he is afraid, will turn the other way when he gives his name. He hopes to find something in Indiana.

Boss fires Clay school pupils dad

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat, 10-13-56

By LOUIS E. LOMAX

CLAY, Ky. — James Gordon Sr., father of James Jr. and Theresa Gordon, who won the heart of the nation by their heroic efforts to attend the previously all-white Clay Consolidated schools, has been fired from his job. P.120

The firing supports dispatches filed by this reporter during the integration row at Clay. Mr. Gordon was employed as a mechanic by the Holman garage in Sturgis, owned by J. L. Holman, mayor of Sturgis.

During the integration dispute, this reporter learned that Mr. Gordon's job had been threatened because of the school dispute, but both Mr. Gordon and Mayor Holman refused to confirm the report.

Mr. Gordon did express a willingness to discuss the matter with the FBI, but the agents did not question him.

The NAACP advised the FBI that Mr. Gordon's job had been threatened and the agency was given the name and location of a person in Sturgis who would arrange for them to see him and get a statement. The contact was not made.

MR. GORDON, a superb mechanic, was lured back to the job at Holman's garage after he had quit a year ago and began working on a job in Evansville, Ind., after Mr. Holman promised him a salary increase and better working conditions if he would return.

Mr. Holman, as mayor of Sturgis, took vigorous exception to the presence of members of the National Guard and led a fight to have them withdrawn. Gov. A. B. (Happy) Chandler would not follow the mayor's urging.

This is another in a series of incidents where the FBI failed to make an investigation that could have shed light on a clear cut case of civil rights abridgement.

Several complaints have been filed out of Mississippi in which colored people have alleged their civil rights have been abridged. None has been brought to prosecution by the FBI.

THE GORDON children, James Henry, 10, and Theresa, 8, attended classes at the school three days before ordered to enroll at an all-colored school Mrs. Gordon took them to school each day protected by an escort.

The case is now before a Federal District Court as is the Sturgis integration case.

Mr. Gordon says he plans to again seek employment at Evanston, about 50 miles away, and commute the 100-mile round trip daily.

"I WOULDN'T LEAVE this house," said Mrs. Gordon. "It would be impossible to move," asking: "Where would we go?"

She further pointed out that "we can't leave now. We want to see our case through. Besides we're expecting another baby soon."

Neither Mr. Gordon nor his wife expressed hard feelings over Mr. Gordon's being fired, both stating they had done what they felt was right.

Mrs. Gordon did say, however, that she didn't see why "they (the garage owner and employees) couldn't stick by her husband.

38a 1956

KENTUCKY

Negroes Situated Here As In Northern States

Courier-Journal P. 4

Fri. 11-2-56

Concentration In Few Areas Unlike South; Number Decreases In State, Grows In City

Louisville Ky.

Louisville follows "the pattern of Northern cities, rather than cities in the South," in its "residential segregation of Negro population."

38a Ky

The comparison was drawn by Dr. Robert I. Kutak, University of Louisville sociologist, in a 37-page report on "Interracial Problems and The Church."

The report, describing racial conditions in Louisville and Kentucky, was prepared for an Interracial Leadership Conference November 15 and 16 at Trinity Temple Methodist Church.

Negroes Live In Few Areas

In presenting data showing that Louisville's Negro population is concentrated in a few areas. Dr. Kutak said this was contrary to the case in most Southern cities, where the Negro population is scattered throughtout the city.

The Kutak report stated that in the past 100 years the Negro population of Kentucky has decreased from about one in five persons to one in 14. The decrease is largely because of Negro migration to Northern cities, especially those immediately north of Kentucky.

"Today about 93 out of every 100 Kentuckians are white," the report said. "The percentage of the population in Kentucky which is Negro conforms to that in the three states north of the Ohio River, rather than to states in the Deep South."

While Kentucky's Negro population decreased 12,110 between 1940 and 1950, the number of Negroes in Louisville increased 10,499, the report said.

In 1950, 83 out of 100 Louisvillians were native whites, one was foreign-born, and 16 were Negroes.

Birth Rate Rises

A sharp rise in the Negro birth rate in recent years and a slight lowering of the Negro death rate has meant that in 1955 "in Jefferson County as a whole, the Negro population was increasing at a rate of 20.1 per thousand, white population at a rate of 18.1 per thousand."

The major problem for Negroes in Louisville, Dr. Kutak said, is housing. He quoted data showing that the Negro population is concentrated in areas of low social and economic status.

Several conditions are held responsible.

"Two thirds of the Negroes are renters, compared with fewer than half of the white population. The median income of Negroes is about $1,000 less than that of whites. They cannot afford to pay high rents," the report said.

Money Scarce for Negroes

For this reason, too, the Negro cannot afford to pay the cost of an adequate home, land sites are not always available, and mortgage money is scarce, the report said.

But programs in public housing and urban renewal "make the Negro housing picture not hopeless," Dr. Kutak commented. He cited the proposed new Southwick public housing project for Negroes.

Discussing Negro employment, the sociologist contends "that discriminatory practices (in hiring) do prevail in Louisville is shown by tables indicating nonwhites, both male and female, are concentrated in the less skilled and less well-paid occupations."

One out of five white males was at the top of the occupation scale in 1950, but among nonwhites only one out of 19. In that year, the largest group of white females—45.8 per cent—was employed in white collar positions, but the largest group of Negro females—43.2—worked as domestic servants.

Between 1940 and 1950. however, the number of nonwhite women employed as operators or service workers other than domestics has increased sharply, according to the report.

Negro death rates have declined in the last 25 years, Dr. Kutak reported, but in 1955 the Negro rate was still 50 per cent higher than the rate of deaths among whites.

The number of Negro deaths due to tuberculosis is three times higher than for whites, the sociologist said. He noted that "tuberculosis is a disease associated with poverty."

Homicide Rate Higher

The homicide death rate among Negroes in 1951 was 56.3 per thousand, compared with 3.2 among whites.

Dr. Kutak blames the severe shortage of doctors for much of the Negro health problem.

"In Jefferson County in 1950 there were 779 white doctors, and only 14 Negro doctors, or one white doctor for 542 white white persons, and one Negro doctor for 4,482 persons," he noted.

On school desegregation, the report described as a problem "the fact that Negro students are more retarded than are white students.

Whites Also Retarded

However, this retardation is due, not to the fact that the students are Negro, but that most Negroes live in areas of low socio-economic status. White students who live in these areas are also retarded."

The report added: "It is important to point out that the end of the official policy of segregation will not necessarily end segregation in the schools. As long as residential segregation remains, most schools will be either predominantly white or predominantly Negro."

Discussing the outlawing of segregation in public parks and pools, Dr. Kutah said ". . . as long as discriminatory practices create residential segregation, most public recreational facilities will continue to be segregated."

Church Role Cited

Turning to the churches' role in race relations, the report noted that "nearly two thirds of the Negro population belongs to a church, a percentage somewhat higher than among whites. . . ."

The report concluded:

"By September of 1956, segregation was ended in all areas in which government functions. . . . It is important to realize, however, that many discriminatory practices are based on custom and tradition, that they exist in the hearts and minds of people. . . .

"The church deals with the inner life o fits people. . . . It can help eliminate the inconsistency between democratic ideals and discriminatory practices. . . . It can practice as well as preach the brotherhood of men."

SOME SEGREGATION STILL EXISTS

White, Negro Leaders At Louisville Combined Forces To Help Ease Pathway For Integration

By BEM PRICE

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 25 (AP)—Everybody, it seems, was surprised by the peaceful integration of the public schools here this fall except Louisvillians.

"As far as we were concerned," says Norman Isaacs, managing editor of the Louisville Times, "we were just adding to the school reporter's beat."

Louisville and surrounding Jefferson County went about integrating its white and Negro schools against a background of racial violence over the same issue in Clay and Sturgis, Ky., Clinton, Tenn., and Mansfield and Texarkana, Tex.

But long ago two strong newspapers, some extraordinary mayors and a rare set of civic leaders, white and Negro, had foreseen the current racial crisis and had acted to anticipate it.

NOT COMPLETE

This is not to say that the process of integration is complete here. There still is segregation in the theaters, hotels and restaurants, though the barriers are breaking in the last two.

There are two striking facets to the Louisville story:

1. The moves to improve the Negroes' lot were led on the white side almost exclusively by people who call themselves Southerners and who are descendants of Confederates.

2. The Negro apparently has never felt any need to agitate, and thus there has been no hardening of racial prejudices in te community.

Although it would be difficult to document, there is reason to believe too that the careful development of a rich cultural life in the fields of art, music and literature, easily available to all, has created an aura of tolerance in Louisville.

"Whether it has or not," says Clarence (Skip) Graham, head of the city's library system, "I would like to think so."

PLACID TOWN

Until the mid-1930s Louisville was a placid town, proud of its blooded horses, beautiful women and bourbon whisky.

It was a town in which about 98 per cent of the population was native born.

It was a place where people could erect a statue to Abraham Lincoln and one to Confderate dead—and honor both. Generally, though, on race relations Louisville faced South.

Then two things happened. The Ohio River flooded, and Mark Foster Etheridge came to town.

In the wake of the disastrous 1937 flood Louisville seemed to take on a new and more aggressive look. The necessity for cooperation in rebuilding the stricken city bred a strong sense of civic duty which still flourishes.

Etheridge, a native of Meridian, Miss., now publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Louisville Times, arrived in 1936. He brought with him, as he said in an interview, "a strong procivil rights bias inherited from my father."

Etheridge recalls that he wrote his first Louisville editorial on the need to help the Negro in 1937. "The initial reaction," he said dryly, "was unfavorable."

Yet today, a great many prominent citizens in Louisville ascriba to Etheridge the major role in creating a climate of opinion which could lead to the gradual integration of the Negro into Louisville's civic life.

FOR FAIR SHAKE

The newspapers' stand for a fair shake for Negroes was sharpened by the advent of World War II and the bloody struggle against Hitler's fascism and doctrines of racial superiority

Graham recalled that he first became aware of the race problem in 1942.

"I can remember going to an interracial meeting," he said, "where a Negro soldier got up and said he couldn't go into the post exchange at Ft. Knox—but that he could look through the window and see German prisoners buying cokes."

The war had another effect. As white youths went into the armed services their places in the labor market were filled by Negroes

About this time another milestone event occurred. Wilson Wyatt was elected mayor.

Wyatt, who served as mayor from 1942 to 1946 (Louisville's mayors cannot succeed themselves), not only saw the necessity for postwar planning, but he also foresaw the crisis which would rise later in connection with the Negro.

While other cities were in the mumbling stage, Wyatt in late 1942 had a commission at work planning for Louisville's future. He appointed 60 Negroes to help with the planning.

Wyatt took another far reaching step in 1943 wen he appointed a Negro to te public library's board of trustees.

Graham believes these two actions by Wyatt, coupled with the fact that public transportation in Louisville had not been segregated, marked the beginning of the breakthrough on the color front in Louisville.

Even before these appointments, however, two able men, one white and one Negro, had met in the State Legislature and developed a mutual respect.

The Negro was Charles W. Anderson Jr. The white man was Charles Rowland Peaslee Farnsley. An affable, restless lawyer, sometimes called eccentric, Farnsley was to become mayor of Louisville.

Anderson was elected to the Legislature in 1935—the first Negro Republican ever elected from Louisville. When he journeyed to Frankfort to take his legislative seat, Farnsley was the only one who would sit beside him.

Re-elected six times, Anderson gradually earned legislative and public respect. He had the rare experience of seeing some 1,000 white teachers pour into Frankfort to lobby on behalf of a measure he had introduced which permitted school teachers to marry.

As a Negro leader and lawyer Anderson worked closely with Farnsley after the latter became mayor. Louisville has been singularly free of lawsuits over civil rights.

"I have adopted a policy," said Anderson, "of trying to avoid litigation if I can. My pattern has been to reason things out without a lot of fanfare."

As mayors go, Farnsley was totally unorthodox. He appointed an assistant to keep track of the mere mechanics of city operation. He applied himself to thinking out the town's long-range problems, and when he believed he was right he went ahead regardless of political peril.

Supported by the two newspapers, Farnsley pursued a deliberate policy of desegregation. During his administration the main public library, public golf courses and the graduate schools of the University of Louisville were opened to Negroes. A Negro undergraduate school, part of the university remained for the time, however.

WITHOUT TURMOIL

When asked how he was able to accomplish these things without racial turmoil, Farnsley said, "This may sound like a politician talking, but I think the peoples' morale is good The people here don't feel put upon and mistreated. Under those circumstances it is easier to be tolerant."

From Wyatt down through the present mayor, Andrew Broaddus, progress toward total desegregation has been steady.

The University of Louisville became completely desegrated in 1952. Negro firemen were assigned to previously all-white stations. Public nursing schools were opened to Negroes. So were parks, swimming pools and the local amphitheater.

Another major factor in creating racial tolerance in Louisville has been the Catholic church.

For years the church has held racially mixed meetings. Through the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Felix Pitt, it sought repeal of the day law forbidding the teaching of racially mixed classes in public schools.

Father Pitt, whose family moved to Kentucky in 1800, is head of the Catholic school board here. The Catholic schools were desegregated in 1955.

An indication of white-Negro goodwill here is what happened when the University of Louisville and the city's Negro college were merged.

Dr. Philip Davidson, university president, was asked why the Negro school was closed.

"We are interested," he said, "only in providing the best education possible. We closed the Negro college because it was costing too much money and had too low a caliber of instruction."

When the Supreme Court struck down compulsory public school segregation, Louisville's city fathers promptly announced they accepted the decision as the law of the land.

Almost as soon as the court's decision was read, Louisville embarked on an intensive, two-year program of education for integration, using teachers, parent-teachers associations and other opinion making groups to pave the way.

The real test of whether the community was ready for integration came when summer schools were integrated last summer. There wasn't a peep out of anybody, at least none worth noting.

Finally, last Sept. 4, the Jefferson County schools opened on an integrated basis. The city schools followed suit Sept. 10.

Integration under the Louisville plan was not compulsory. If parents objected to their children attending mixed schools they were permitted to apply for transfer so their children could attend predominantly white or Negro schools.

As things now stand, only 20 of the city's 73 public schools serve one race, and that is chiefly because the surrounding neighborhoods are either exclusively white or Negro.

Throughout the gradual integration process, Louisville's leading white businessmen generally supported the elected officials and the newspapers.

U. S. Negro Descended From Civilized World Says Life

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 8-31-56

In the first of a proposed series of five articles dealing with the history of the patterns of segregation in the southern part of the United States, the September 3rd issue of Life Magazine makes it clear that the forebears of the American Negro were not members of "primitive societies."

Investigating the Ashantis, from many American slaves were descended, the Life research teams found that as early as 170 years ago (at the height of the slave trade,) these people had "a complex government structure—a well defined system of taxation, courts of law and an army—and a well developed priesthood."

The Ashanti civilization "differed greatly from the European of the American ideal, but it was not for that reason inferior," the Life historians conclude.

During the period of the slave trade some twenty million Negroes were captured to be sold. Millions of them died in the dark holds of the slave ships and were dumped into the sea like so much carrion. Of those who survived, about two million were landed in what is now the United States. Another twelve million were carried to Latin America. Fully a third of the human cargo who were placed aboard the slave ships in chains on the African coast, never reached the New World alive.

The African slave was "not a weakling or a cull," says the Life article, "but a warrior who had been taken in battle, or an outspoken man who had somehow offended his tribal superiors."

The magazine says that it will show all sides of the issue "hoping to provide the opportunity for understanding a vexing, complex issue whose manner of settlement can shape the nations life for generations to come."

Negroes Victim Of Squeeze, Magazine Survey Reveals

Daily World Fri. 9-21-56 Atlanta, Ga.

NEW YORK — The U. S. Negro is caught in an economic trap which has dominated his life and had major effect on national population patterns for half a century. The Southern Negro's fifty-year struggle to get out from under the deadly cycle of poor land, competition from poor whites, and poor education is told in the current (September 24) issue of Life magazine. P. 6

The article points out that since 1900 there have been two major Negro migrations—large numbers moved, within the South, from farm to city. The reasons for the moves have been primarily economic.

"The social unpleasantness of segregation have no doubt influenced many to leave the South, but the majority have moved in search of better livelihood," Life says.

PRESSURE OF POOR FARMLAND

Rural Negroes have always lived on bad farmland in the South from which it has become increasingly difficult to make a living. In 1954 the median cash income of Negro farm families in the South was $742, whereas that of white farm families was $1516. But when the Negro leaves his poor farmland and moves to a Southern city he encounters massive competition from rural whites who have also moved off the land in search of factory jobs.

"Employers will not hire a Negro for any job if there is a white man available for the same," Life says. "Even if discrimination in employment based solely on color were set aside, the Negro still could not compete with the white. Functional illiterates (the term for adults with less than fifth-grade education) are three times more common among young Southern Negroes than among young Southern whites. Moreover, such schooling as the Negro does receive generally is far inferior to that received by whites."

DIFFICULT IN NORTH TOO

Failing to find a satisfactory job in a Southern city, the Negro moves North. There he finds it easier to get a job, but the job is still usually on the common-labor level. Northern employers do not have the South's great pool of underemployed white farm labor to draw upon, and in the past 15 years have had great need for the unskilled and semi-skilled labor which the Negro can supply.

"But the proportion of Negroes who reach the top of the ladder in the North is scarcely higher than that in the South. In comparison to the total of 8.5 per cent of Negroes who rise to become 'managers, officials, proprietors, craftsmen and foremen' in the South the figure in the North is 10 per cent," the Life article says.

ONE-TENTH OF U. S.

The Negro population has constituted one-tenth of the overall U. S. population since 1900. In 1900, however, 85 per cent of all U. S. Negroes lived in the South, and of these, three-fourths lived in rural areas. Today only 63 per cent of all U. S. Negroes live in the South and of these, only half live in rural areas.

In 1900 Negroes exceeded 40 per cent of the population in six Southern states. Now they exceed 40 per cent in only one state—Mississippi (44 per cent). The ratio of Negroes to whites has decreased in all Southern states, and is increasing today only in certain Northern states, such as New York and Illinois, which receive heavy migration from the South. Of the six million Negroes who live in the North today 2.8 million were born in the South.

Story of Segregation in U.S. Today Began Centuries Ago, States Life Magazine

Bystander Thurs. 9-6-56
Des Moines Iowa P. 1

New York,—The story of segregation in the U. S. in 1956 begins three centuries ago in Africa. Out of that continent, in chains, came the ancestors of nearly all the 16 million Negroes who live in the U. S. today.

How slavery developed in Africa and reached out to the New World to become a major source of economic and moral concern to America by the time of the Civil War is the subject of the first in a major LIFE Magazine series on "the background of segregation." Subsequent articles in the five-part series will examine the developing picture of Negro-White relations and the patterns of living in segregated society.

Through paintings and photographs the current (September 3) issue of LIFE explores the growth of slavery and looks at the cultural life and physical environment which were the background of the Negro slaves coming to this country.

Only Two Million

During the entire period of the slave trade, some 20 million Negroes were made captive. Many of them died before reaching the New World. Altogether perhaps two million were landed alive in what is now the U. S. and another 12 million in Latin America.

Throughout the slave trade, African chiefs and kings eagerly supplied the market. The kingdoms of Dahomey, Benin and Ashanti were primary sources.

"The African kings obtained their captives largely through wars which they instituted for the purpose, but used other means as well. They enslaved members of their own tribes for various offenses, including debt, and frequently kidnapped their neighbors. The average slave as a rult was not a weakling or a cull, but a warrior who had been taken in battle or an outspoken man who had somehow offended his tribal superiors."

Slavery Normal

When the first European explorers pushed down the West Coast of Africa in the 15th and 16th centuries, they found slavery widely established in a huge region stretching for 4,000 miles along the seaboard. Slavery was, and for many years had been, a normal condition for native life.

The first Europeans to engage in the slave trade were the Portuguese and Spanish, who as early as 1517 were carrying slaves to work in the colonies in the Caribbean. By 1700 the trade had become hugely profitable. Other nations entered the field —the English, the Dutch and the French. Beginning about 1720, Americans heavily entered the trade. By 1786 the trade had reached its maximum, the bulk of it carried in American and English ships.

Not Primitive People

In its study of African tribal life during the slavery era LIFE shows the Ashanti people who today still display some aspects of the native culture existing 170 years ago during

The Ashanti had a non-literate but not properly "primitive" society. There was a complex government structure headed by a king, beneath whom there were paramount chiefs and subchiefs down to the heads of individual compounds. There was a well-defined system of taxation; there were courts of law and an army. Pologamy was practiced among the Ashanti by those who could afford it. Religion was polytheistic and had a highly developed priesthood. The principal occupation was farming and the principal crop yams, which grow which differed greatly from the European or American ideal but was not for that reason inferior. The description of them as 'naked savages,' often used by slave traders trying to justify themselves, yas not true," LIFE says.

Yankee slave traders sometimes argued that, since the slaves were already slaves at the time of purchase, their lot would be improved by transportation to the more "civilized" New World. But, according to LIFE, the reverse was actually true. African slaves had many rights—they could marry, possess property, own slaves themselves and even become heirs to their masters.

Scope of Series

In an introduction to the segregation background series LIFE indicates its articles will follow the evolution of segregation from its origins to its manifestations among "separate but equal" citizens of the modern South. The magazine says that while the focus is necessarily on the South, "where segregation under the sanction of local law is creating the immediate problem," the northern aspect of segreagtion, extralegal but still powerful as a social force, will be considered in a subsequent series.

The magazine says it will show "all sides of the issue," hoping to provide "the opportunity for understanding a vexing, complex issue whose manner of settlement can shape the nation's life for generations to come."

"Although the ground that is to be covered in the series is not wholly new to Americans, it is unfamiliar as a subject of moderate and unprejudiced consideration," LIFE says. "At home, the issue of segregation occupies the most careful attention of abundantly in the forest clearings. Handicrafts, particularly weaving, were well developed among the Ashanti.

"The Ashanti had a civilization the major political parties. Abroad it commands the grave, often perplexed attention of the free world and a gloating, know-nothing attention from Communists. The problem is too enmeshed in American history, too laden with emotion and the heritage of emotions, to make easy settlement possible. But precisely for this reason, understanding is the more necessary."

After 100 Years: a Dearth of Aframerican Immortals

Courier Magazine p.2

Has Our Tradition Waned in 'Dying' West?

By Ric Roberts

Pittsburgh, Pa.

WHEN Dr. Ralph J. Bunche received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1950 (the final year of the fifth decade of this century) the shadowy skies of racialism still hovered over Washington, D. C.; so the next chapter of the Bunche saga naturally lapsed as the brilliant international draftsman spurned a Department of State Under-Secretaryship, grabbed his family and, post-haste, scurried to New York City, N. Y. Ever since, his singular gifts have been buried within the labyrinthine intricacies of United Nations.

4-14-56

The deprecation was dramatically in evidence, some weeks ago, when, for the first time in 100 years, a mid-decade roll call was sounded without at least one American of African ancestry listed among "The 100 Most Important People on Earth."

DR. BUNCHE
. . . slight eclipse

Decade by decade, since 1950, our candidates would have included Richard Allen, Frederick Douglass, Booker T. Washington, W. E. B. DuBois, Paul Laurence Dunbar, Robert Rillieux. Col. Charles Young, Edward Everett Just, George W. Carver and Ralph J. Bunche, respectively. Today, halfway through the sixth decade of the twentieth century, we find thirty white Americans listed among the "100 Most Important People" by LOOK magazine, without a solitary reference to any person of African ancestry.

Of course, no epoch is intelligible to its contemporary beings, but must be seen in the distance as a whole, like a magnificent mountain. Hence, Look's choices, like the choices of wise men of previous years, may not be entitled to nomination for enduring fame; the next decade may make of some of them a ridiculed absurdity.

Remember, ten years ago, Chiang Kai-shek and Josef Stalin were insuperable components of a similar listing, selected by the same magazine.

All of the foregoing leads to a graver observation: the world population of living men whose deeds seem to have the best chance to live in history, at this hour, is thinner than it has palpably been, in the West, since the successors of Charles Martel peaked in Charlemagne, 1150 years ago!

Just a few years ago, Thomas Edison, Sigmund Freud, Albert Einstein, Henry Ford, Luther Burbank, Louis Brandeis,

TREASURE TROVE

Alexander Graham Bell, Booker T. Washington, Mohandas Gandhi, Leo Tolstoy, Pierre and Madame Curie and George Washington Carver were among us: thirteen souls whose legendary contributions to the establishment of civilization will survive the centuries.

Today, turning our heads in search for their successors, among the living, we modestly suggest the names of Dr. Jonas Salk, 40; Denmark's Niels Bohr, 69; China's Liu Sho-chi, 57; India's Jawaharlal Nehru; England's Winston Churchill (who will blur Ike's role), and Harry S. Truman!

The retreat of man and the advance of the terror of his own nuclear discoveries, since Enrico Fermi's 1938 experiments, seem to indicate that the historical coroner is on safe ground to continue asserting that Western civilization has already passed its peak; that the imperishable treasures laid on the altar of civilization, by the West, between the years 1775 and 1914, will never be duplicated by humankind, even unto the most remote and "last" human generation.

Does dimunition of totals of the obviously great indicate that the West is in slow descent or is this merely the pause between the titanic strokes of propul-

DR. SALK
. . . pied piper

MR. TRUMAN
. . . undying fame

sion that lead to an eventual superhuman species, living in a superworld?

Greatness has deserted us, minority-wise, as well as nationally and globally. Thrice before, in the ebb and flow of Western Civilization, the coroner left vivid the ever-increasing tones of shadowy skies and night. Are Negroes to be identified with the lapse or will they bring the stranded galleons back to port: as the enslaved Israelites did, in the eighth century, B. C.; as the underdog Christians did, in A. D. 313; as the underdog Pilgrims did, in 1819?

Look Magazine's Articles Reveal Frightful Policies

Globe p. 1 pic. 4-13-56

Nashville, Tenn.

In Addition, How Mississippi Has Caused Young Business Man To Flee With Family To Chicago After Losing His Business Worth $25,000, Gets An Airing; Fear Of Negroes Getting Right To Vote Brings Reprisals; Unusual Reaction In School Fight Disclosed

The South is portrayed as a child in a maturing world but is actually maturing, in one of the articles published by LOOK Magazine of April 3. The series of articles are captioned "The South vs the Supreme Court." Most of the articles picture the South doing better than ever before in handling its race question and reveals that the section has been greatly helped in its advance toward "nationalism" as a result of its advance from a one-crop status to an area of diversified industries.

But a powerful minority in the South that blatantly is resisting the Supreme Court ruling on segregation in schools, it is indicated, may halt the coming of industries into the South. This is because the Northern industrialists seeking to escape the restrictions which radical labor barons are inflicting on Northern industry, will not likely continue coming South, if they find there is a big increase in racial trouble.

One article refers to the "legal tricks to circumvent the law," but says these will fail and the South will eventually have to abide by the Supreme Court, but at present there are indications that the situation may get worse before it gets better, largely because of the intemperance of some of the South's leaders, especially Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi.

The opening paragraph of one of the articles is as follows:

"A crisis faces the nation today that is a crisis of law, as civilixed people have and of people who live under law, as cvilized people have to live. The law, as the U. S. Supreme Court has twice laid it down, is clear. Just as clear as is defiance of the law by millions of Southern citizens for whom Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi speaks. The crisis is created by this defiance.

Reference is made to the states that have gone far in taking steps to defy the authority of the Federal Government. They are Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia which have passed stand-by laws intended to stop maintaining public schools. Virginia is proposing a Constitutional amendment to effect nullification of the Supreme Court edict or use the harder-handed bread and butter pressure of the deeper South.

The article after revealing how such states as Alabama, Georgia Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina are fixing officially to disobey the law on segregation and insist upon States' Rights, asks this question:

Nashville Ten.

"How can they do it? How can they hope to counter Article VI, Clause 2 which says: "This Constitution and the laws of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land . . . anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary, notwithstanding?"

It is revealed that the effective pressure of imposing threats to deprive Negroes of their jobs and forcing signers of petitions favorable to the NAACP are now being used. Colored persons who have once signed petitions for desegregation of schools are being forced to withdraw their signatures.

MOST DRASTIC ACTION

One of the most drastic actions already taken to deprive a colored person of his job and his business has been that visited upon James Evers, now in Chicago who lived in Philadelphia, Miss. The 33 year old Evers is a brother of Medger Evers, Mississippi field secretary of the NAACP. The press says the following about young Evers' plight.

"Three years ago, Evers was a prosperous young business man. He owned an undertaking establishment, a hotel, two cafes and the town's only taxi line for Negroes. NOW ALL THAT IS GONE, and Evers is in Chicago, saying he wants a job. He was forced to flee from Mississippi with his wife and three small girls. All this, because Evers, a radio jockey on radio station WOC in his home town, urged Negroes in Mississippi to try to vote.

Evers had his taxi licenses revoked: the lease on his cafeteria was concelled: advertisers on his radio show quit patronizing it: and the sponsors were forced to give up the show: guests in Ever's hotel were warned that the building might be blown up.

BURIAL SOCIETY BROKEN UP

Negroes who were members of his burial society were told to give up their policies or else they would lose their jobs. Mrs. Evers, while driving in one of her husband's hearses was struck from the side by a car driven by a white man, who admitted he was guilty. The matter would have ended there but pressure was brought on the white man and he had to file suit against Evers. The white man got judgmentfor $500.

Next, one of Evers' cars struck a vehicle driven by a white woman. When the police chief arrived on the scene the woman said the Evers' car was standing still when it was struck. But the chief and the town's mayor would have none of these confessions. Evers was fined $84 for reckless driving and the mayor then and there declared no Negro in Mississippi was fit to vote.

Evers found it impossible to borrow $4,000 to save his business valued at more than $25,000. The FBI reported it could not find enough evidence to "warrant any action." And the NAACP has said it has been unable to get action in the case.

In Chicago, Rev. A. Lincoln James is trying to find Evers a job. Evers himself says: "All I want is a job—any kind of job. He is a graduate of of Alabama A&M College" All. this was information credited to the Chicago Defender.

It proves what the articles in LOOK says—that it is FEAR that motivates the harsh treatment colored people are getting in the Deep South. Persons far away from the scene can understand, therefore, why Negroes in this area find it futile to "stand up for their rights" like Negroes in civilized sections of the country. But it proves, also, that sooner than is expected, Uncle Sam must take action or abandon any pretense of being a "great democracy," worthy of emulation by other nations of the world.

And so, we shall see what we shall see.

Look Magazine Editor States His Opinion

Call Fri. 6-15-56 Kansas City, Mo.

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — After a personal survey of Negro segregation in the North, a white Southern-born editor reported that the Northern Negro "often lives a life that is, in fact, more segregated than that of the Negro in the South."

Look Magazine editor George Leonard, a native of Atlanta, Ga., disclosed in an article published in the new issue of Look, that "there's a big gap between the law of the North, which grants the Negro equality; and reality, which confines him to a "Negro ghetto."

Citing Philadelphia, as a case in point, Leonard found that Negroes there attend all Negro schools, are taught by Negro teachers, play and associate exclusively with Negro neighbors and are refused housing in non-Negro sections of town. All this occurs, Mr. Leonard found, in spite of a local "Commission on Human Relations," which fights discrimination, and a Fair Employment Practices Act, which makes discrimination in employment illegal.

Leonard quotes an unidentified Southerner in his Look article as saying, "too many Northerners talk integration and act segregation. What's needed up here is a mirror that shows bigots. A lot of Yankees couldn't look into that mirror without seeing themselves."

"In Philadelphia, as in any Northern city," Leonard said in Look, "life for a Negro is like walking through a mine field. He may get through unscathed, but when he least expects it, his world may explode."

"Whereas, in the South, a Negro's limitations are clearly defined by law and custom, in the North he lives with only a hazy idea of where the limitations lie."

"Segregation in the North does not stop in private housing," Leonard continued. "Public housing projects often go all Negro simply because there are so many Negroes requiring shelter."

"The Negro citizen outside of the South," Leonard said, "looks into the unmasked face of Jim Crow when he tries to find a place to live. Most suburbs are closed to him. When he succeeds in buying a house in a white urban neighborhood, the white residents generally move away in panic. He is left the colored district of the village, the great center of the city."

Leonard indicates that Negroes in the North are thankful for the laws and the commissions working against segregation and discrimination. "But they know in their hearts that they are not yet really free, and will never be free until they can put their money on the line and buy or rent a house in the neighborhood of their choice."

"We can buy a Cadillac or a Brooks Brothers suit," Negroes say with regret, "but we can't buy a home. Our money's just no good."

Says Negroes In North Also Discriminated Against

World Fri. 6-15-56 Tulsa, Okla. P.4

NEW YORK — (ANP) — After a personal survey of Negro segregation in the North, a white Southern-born editor reported today that the Northern Negro "often lives a life that is, in fact, more segregated than that of the Negro in the South."

Look Magazine editor George Leonard, a native of Atlanta, Ga., disclosed in an article published in the new issue of Look, that "there is a big gap between the law of the North, which grants the Negro equality; and reality, which confines him to a "Negro ghetto."

Citing Philadelphia, as a case in point, Leonard found that Negroes there attend all Negro schools, are taught by Negro teachers, play and associate exclusively with Negro neighbors and are refused housing in non-Negro sections of town. All this occurs, Mr. Leonard found, in spite of a local "Commission on Human Relations," which fights discrimination, and a Fair Employment Practices Act, which makes discrimination in employment illegal.

Leonard quotes an unidentified Southerner in his Look article as saying, "too many Northerners talk integration and act segregation. — What's needed up here is a mirror that shows bigots. A lot of Yankees couldn't look into that mirror without seeing themselves."

"In Philadelphia, as in any Northern city," Leonard said in Look, "life for a Negro is like walking through a mine field. He may get through unscathed, but when he least expects it, his world may explode."

"Whereas, in the South, a Negro's limitations are clearly defined by law and custom, in the North he lives with only a hazy idea of where the limitations lie."

"Segreagtion in the North does not stop in private housing," Leonard continued. "Public housing projects often go all Negro simply because there are so many Negroes requiring shelter."

"The Negro citizen outside of the South," Leonard said, "looks into the unmasked face of Jim Crow when he tries to find a place to live. Most suburbs are closed to him. When he succeeds in buying a house in a white urban neighborhood, the white residents generally move away in panic. He is left the colored district of the village, the great center of the city."

Leonard indicates that Negroes in the North are thankful for the laws and the commissions working against segregation and discrimination. "But they know in their hearts that they are not yet really free, and will never be free until they can put their money on the line and buy or rent a house in the neighborhood of their choice."

"We can buy a Cadillac or a Brooks Brothers suit," Negroes say with regret, "but we can't buy a home. Our money's just no good."

Leonard indicates that Negroes in the North are thankful for the laws and the commissions working against segregation and discrimination. "But they know in their hearts that they are not yet really free, and will never be free until they can put their money on the line and buy or rent a house in the neighborhood of their choice."

"We can buy a Cadillac or a Brooks Brothers suit," Negroes say with regret, "but we can't buy a home. Our money's just no good."

Look Magazine Publishes What It Has Found Out

Globe P.1 Fri. 6-22-56 Nashville, Tenn.

But Hold On There Before Making Up Your Mind On The Burning Issue; The Publication Confesses It Got Its Editor Right Down In Dixie; George Leonard Went Searching And Found Plenty Jim Crow Practices; Says They Have Ghettos Up There (As If You Didn't Know It Already)

New York, June 11—After a personal survey of Negro segregation in the North, a white Southern-born editor reported today that the Northern Negro "often lives a life that is, in fact, more segregated than that of the Negro in the South."

Look Magazine editor George Leonard, a native of Atlanta, Ga., disclosed in an article published in the new issue of Look, that "there's a big gap between the law of the North, which grants the Negro equality; and reality, which confines him to "a Negro ghetto."

Citing Philadelphia, as a case in point, Mr. Leonard found that Negroes there attend all Negro schools, are taught by Negro teachers, play and associate exclusively with Negro neighbors and are refused housing in non-Negro sections of town. All this occurs, Mr. Leonard found, in spite of a local "Commission on Human Relations," which fights discrimination, and a Fair Employment Practices act, which makes discrimination in employment illegal.

Mr. Leonard quotes an unidentified Southerner in his Look article as saying, "too many Northerners talk integration and act segregation. What's needed up here is a mirror that shows bigots. A lot of Yankees couldn't look into that mirror without seeing themselves."

"In Philadelphia, as in any Northern City," Mr. Leonard said in Look "life for a Negro is like walking through a mine field. He may get through unscratched, but when he least expects it, his world may explode."

"Whereas, in the South, a Negro's limitations are clearly defined by law and custom, in the North he lives with only a hazy idea of where the limitations lie."

Globe

"Segregation in the North does not stop in private housing," Mr. Leonard continued. "Public housing projects often go all Negro simply because there are so many Negroes requiring shelter."

P.4

"The Negro citizen outside of the South," Mr. Leonard said, "looks into the unmasked face of Jim Crow when he tries to find a place to live. Most suburbs are closed to him. When he succeeds in buying a house in a white urban neighborhood, the white residents generally move away in panic. He is left the colored district of the village, the great centers of the city."

Mr. Leonard indicates that Negroes in the North are thankful for the laws and the commissions working against segregation and discrimination. "But they know in their hearts that they are not yet really free, and will never be free until they can put their money on the line and buy or rent a house in the neighborhood of their choice."

"We can buy a Cadillac or a Brooks Brother suit," Negroes say with regret, "but we can't buy a home. Our money's just no good."

LOOK MAGAZINE

SEGREGATED IN THE NORTH

You've read about segregation in the South. Now LOOK Magazine brings you the full story of segregation in the NORTH. See, through LOOK's brilliant photographs, how a typical Negro family in the North faces racial prejudice in every day living.

Sat. 6-16-56
Today—get

LOOK

Louisiana Outlaws All Race Mixing

Defender 7/1
Chicago Ill.
Sat. 7-14-56

BATON ROUGE, La. — Sports circles in Louisiana were faced this week with the likely prospect of complete isolation as reliable sources predicted that Gov. Earl K. Long would give his approval to a bill banning all interracial competition in the state, professional and amateur.

The bill passed unanimously by the Louisiana house and senate, would outlaw mixing of the races at "dances, social functions, entertainments, athletic training, games, sports or contests, or such other activities involving personal and social contacts."

Seriously affected by the bill would be the athletic teams of Louisiana State university, the annual Sugar Bowl game and the Shreveport (La.) team of the class AA Texas league.

Under the proposed measure, LSU could not carry out its plans to play football games against schools in the Big 10, many of which use Negro players. Nor could teams with Negro players engage in the post-season Sugar Bowl event.

Major league baseball teams, which have been playing exhibition games in Louisiana each spring, would be forced to by-pass the state.

A last-minute amendment to the bill would make it effective Oct. 15, thus giving the Shreveport baseball team opportunity to finish its schedule for the current season.

But presumably Shreveport would have no Texas league opponents next year since most of the other teams in the league — Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth — have Negro players. Shreveport also uses Negro players, who would not be allowed to return after this season.

The ban on racial mixing in sports is clear-cut, but already questions have been raised over how the bill would affect integration in education, especially in Catholic schools.

Tentative plans for integration of parochial schools in the state have met with bitter opposition from the legislature. In Louisiana, predominantly Catholic, most of the funds for parochial schools are provided by the state.

Defender

Further confusion on this point is raised by the fact that the bill does not apply to religious functions and would bring about the need for court interpretation of whether parochial schools would classify as a "religious function."

Although professional interracial boxing matches have not been promoted in the state, amateurs have trained and boxed in bi-racial matches. Under provisions of the bill, such practices would be outlawed.

Sat. 7-14-56

No one would venture an opinion concerning the measure's effect on Negro students at Louisiana State, where several hundred graduate students are currently attending classes. Some of the Negro students live in dormitories, and might be forced to find off-campus housing.

The bill requires the use of separate seating, drinking water and sanitary facilities at any event which is attended by Negroes and whites.

There is much public sentiment against the bill in Louisiana, and Gov. Long has been beseiged by telegrams urging him to veto the measure.

Even should the bill be enacted into law, there is every indication that a determined fight will be waged to have it declared unconstitutional.

Sports Racial Bill Is Signed By Gov. Long

Herald Tribune
New York
Tues. 7-17-56

BATON ROUGE, July 16 (AP). —Gos. Earl Long today signed a bill banning inter-racial athletic contests and social activities in Louisiana. The bill takes effect Oct. 15.

Long said, "The comment I've had over the state has run about 4 to 1 in favor of the bill. I'm going along with the majority that I've heard from.

The new law will prohibit "dancing, social functions, entertainments, athletic training, games, sports or contests and other such activities involving personal and social contacts in which the participants or contestants are members of the white and Negro races."

The Sugar Bowl and the Texas League joined forces during the week in urging Long to veto the bill. Both said it would hurt their programs. A Negro player, fullback Bobby Grier, of Pittsburgh, took part in this year's Sugar Bowl football game against Georgia Tech. Several Sugar Bowl basketball tournaments teams had Negro players.

One Louisiana team, Shreveport, is a member of the Class AA Texas League. Although Shreveport has no Negro players, most of the other teams do use Negroes.

Louisiana Bars Move To Lift Race Sports Law

Daily Herald
Atlanta, Ga.
Sat. 7-14-56

BATON ROUGE, La., — (INS)— The Louisiana House of Representative killed a move today to exempt the annual Sugar Bowl festivities in New Orleans from a new law prohibiting interracial activities and it was predicted by the man who led the Sugar Bowl fight that the great football classic "was doomed."

The proposed exemption was introduced by rep. George Tussier of New Orleans who said that without the amendment the mid-winter sports carnival could not continue to operate.

* * *

Shortly after the exemption was introduced, Rep. Wellborn Jack, of Shreveport, moved that the entire subject matter be tabled, declaring "My Children are not going to School with Negroes."

Tussier objected to Jack's motion, saying that the bill would "maintain segregation."

Jack answered:

"I make this motion under my way of life. I demand a rollcall vote and history will record how each legislator stands."

The final vote was 64-16 in favor of killing the bill. Sugar Bowl officials made an exerted attempt to win approval of the clause making it possible for Negroes and whites to participate in the same sport functions in New Orleans only. They pointed out that the major broadcasting companies could not obtain a sponsor for the Sugar Bowl coming up because of the bill and said the revenue loss from a national broadcast would make it impossible to maintain even a strictly southern major attraction.

Mixed Athletic Contests Banned

Democracy Slugged Again By Louisiana Legislature

Weekly
New Orleans, La.
Sat. 7-7-56

Baton Rouge, La.- (Special to The Weekly)- Jim Crow with the Pelican State law-makers in his corner, floored democracy, when a Senate Committee voted unanimous approval of a bill outlawing athletic contests in Louisiana between Negroes and Whites, here Monday morning.

The Louisiana House passed the bill earlier 71-0.

The bill which was introduced by Rep. Lawrence Gibbs of Monroe, prohibits all "interracial dancing , social functions, entertainment, sports and other activities" and make mandatory separate seating for white and Negro fans.

The bill does not become effective until October 15, 1956.

The bill will knock out Louisiana State University's plans to go ahead with football games against any Big Ten Schools which have Negro players.

The measure will affect the Sugar Bowl games and seating arrangements in New Orleans and would hit Shreveport, La., which has a team in the Texas baseball League which uses Negro players.

The October date when the bill goes into effect will permit the Shreveport team to complete the season.

Sen. Ted Hickey of New Orleans said this was the only segregation measure of the session he had been asked to oppose.

Weekly 7/7

According to Hickey, "New Orleans will be hit hard by this bill."

Sat. 7-7-56

The Sugar Bowl ended segregation seating for the New Year's day football game at New Orleans in 1955 when Mississippi met Navy and last Jan. 1, Pittsburgh played the first Negro (Bobby Crier) in the Sugar Bowl History against Georgia Tech.

The bill prevents Negro and white boxes from working out together, a practicw which is common in New Orleans.

The measure was a slap in the face to the LSU Board of Supervisors. Three times, the Board has refused to insert a "color clause" in its contracts to prohibit playing Negro athletes.

Now that LSU will not be permitted to play against Negroes at home, it is almost certain that the Tigers could not meet them on the road.

Therefore, it is expected that LSU will not participate in the NCAA national events such as the basketball tournament and track meets and will not permit any Tiger Athlete to vie in Olympic competition.

Reliable sources here hinted that Gov. Earl K. Long may veto the measure when it is presented to him. It was also reported that the various groups affected by the measure, plan to roll up their sleeves, pitch in and see what legal action can be taken against the bill.

With the fans boycotting baseball teams in New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Lake Charles and Lafayette due to the fact the four clubs do not have Negro players on their rosters, the boycott fever is high and is expected to spread with the passing of the bill. Therefore, a sharp decline in Negro attendance at sport events is being geared.

Race Leaders Sleep!

Courier P.2

Louisiana May Nullify Civil Rights Lawsuits

Sat. 9-15-56 Pittsburgh, Pa. P.2

38a

By JOHN E. ROUSSEAU

NEW ORLEANS—White Citizens' Councils kept a jump ahead of Louisiana's lethargic Negro political leaders by beginning an "educational" program and urging white voters to support two proposed amendments in the November election which would keep Negroes in a second-class citizenship status. Literature sent WCC members quoted a plea by Dixiecrat leader Leander H. Perez for support of Amendments 47 and 48.

Amendment 47, explained in the Courier last week, would create legal delays amounting to 205 days before a person denied vote registration could seek a remedy in the state court. This court's decision would be final and would not be subject to an appeal.

Amendment 48 would make many commissions, boards, bodies and municipal corporations "special agencies of the state of Louisiana" and thus make the state a party in any court action taken against any agency.

■

INCLUDED AS "special agencies" are the State Parks Commission, the Recreation and Park Commission for East Baton Rouge; all receation districts; any municipal corporation, parish or subdivision of the state in matters respecting the operation or maintenance of parks and other recreational facilities or in connection with any rule or regulation applicable thereto.

Others included are the State Board of Education, the Board of Supervisors of Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, the parish school boards of each of the parishes in the state, the school boards of Monroe, Lake Charles and Bogalusa; the state superintendent of public education in his capacity as well as in the capacity of ex-officio secretary of the State Board of Education, and also the State Board of Education.

Then, Amendment 48 provides, "The consent of the state of Louisiana to suits or legal proceedings against any of the above listed special agencies, (however heretofore given) is hereby expressly withdrawn and no suit or proceeding shall be permitted except as provided in this section.

■

"THIS WITHDRAWAL of consent to suits and legal proceedings shall apply not only to suits and legal proceedings filed in the future but also to any pending suits or legal procedure."

Thus, under Amendment 48, the state of Louisiana would withdraw its consent to suits against school boards, recreational commissions and other groups which generally operate under programs of racial segregation and discrimination.

While this attempt to abrogate the rights of Louisiana minorities is a clear violation of Article I of the United States Constitution which provides no law shall be made to prohibit the petitioning of the government for redress of grievances, not one single Negro political leader has pointed out to his constituents the evils and injustices of Amendments 47 and 48.

Sugar Bowl Bid to Ease Bias Law Rejected by Louisiana Legislature

Times Sat. 9-1-56 P.6-C

Amendment Would Have Permitted New Orleans Festival to Have Unsegregated Seating and Teams With Negroes

New York

BATON ROUGE, La., Aug. 31 (UP)—Louisiana legislators today killed a proposal that would have allowed unsegregated athletic contests in New Orleans. In doing so they rejected a plea by a former football star who said that the action would doom the Sugar Bowl sports festival.

The plea was made by Representative Georgi Tessier of New Orleans, who played football for Tulane University. He introduced a bill that would have eased some of the restrictions imposed by a law approved at the 1956 session of the Legislature. The law prohibits athletic contests involving members of different races.

Mr. Tessier was a guard on the Tulane teams of 1932-33-34. He played for Tulane in the Sugar Bowl game on Jan. 1, 1935.

"Without this additional provision," Mr. Tessier told the legislators, "the Sugar Bowl as it exists today is doomed to death. We are not asking you to repeal the racial ban except for New Orleans. We ask only to add a section permitting the Sugar Bowl to continue. We ask only for permission to live."

Mr. Tessier was backed in sponsoring the proposal at the request of the Sugar Bowl by Representatives Nicholas J. Lapara and Lucien T. Vivien Jr., also of New Orleans.

Under Mr. Tessier's proposal, which was killed when House members voted 67 to 15 to table it, inter-racial athletics would have been permitted in cities of more than 300,000 population. It would have affected only New Orleans, where the Sugar Bowl and Tulane and Loyola Universities are located.

The proposal would have maintained segregated seating everywhere in stadiums and auditoriums except for specific blocks of seats sold out-of-state by visiting teams to Sugar Bowl events.

The law that Mr. Tessier sought to amend goes into effect Oct. 15.

Paul Deblanc, president of the Sugar Bowl, had no comment after the bill was killed. He had been at the legislature trying to get support for the measure.

When Mr. Tessier introduced the bill, Representative Wellborn Jack of Shreveport, jumped to his feet and said the bill would cause unrest and bad feeling between the races.

"We passed this segregation bill 100 per cent," he said. "I want to kill it without engendering bad feeling. I make my motion under my way of life to table the entire subject matter. That is my motion and I ask the people to vote on it and it will be recorded in history how they voted."

Robert Angelle, speaker of the House, ruled Mr. Jack's tabling motion out of order without a suspension of rules. However, Mr. Jack easily won a suspension to permit his motion despite Mr. Tessier's objections.

The Sugar Bowl had asked Gov. Earl Long to give them a chance at a special session to have sections of the law reconsidered. Governor Long agreed, but said he was keeping hands off and would do whatever the legislature wanted.

Notre Dame, Dayton and St. Louis universities have withdrawn from the Sugar Bowl basketball tournament at New Orleans in December, and other teams have advised officials they will not be available for invitations to any of the events.

New Orleans Jaycee Says Bias Views Cost Him Job

Blames Dismissal On Opposing Segregation

Daily World
Atlanta Ga.

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — A New Orleans Chamber of Commerce executive charged yesterday he was fired from his job because he opposes segregation.

F.M. 3-30-56

Robert D. Barnes, former editor of the Chamber of Commerce Weekly News Bulletin, said another factor in his dismissal was his membership on the board of directors of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

P.3 8a

* * * *

The fund, directed by James Dombrowski, has been investigated by Congressional committees for possible Communist ties.

Barnes said in a statement that the fund has been "cleared of any evidence of wrong doing" each time it has been investigated.

He added: "This dismissal is a blow at the basic right of every individual to think for himself—an effort to intimidate those who sincerely believe that the days of segregation and discrimination are numbered."

* * * *

Whittaker Riggs, executive vice president of the Chamber of Commerce, said it was "damn presumptive" of anyone to think Barnes was fired for any of the reasons listed in the statement. He said, "Mr. Barnes left this morning by mutual consent." Riggs refused to comment further.

Robert W. Elsasser, president of the Chamber of Commerce, said he had no comment and referred newsmen to Riggs.

Barnes is the second New Orleans man in recent days to charge that his dismissal stemmed from the heated segregation controversy.

Herman Liveright was fired as program director for WDSU-TV on March 20 after he refused to tell the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security whether or not he is or ever has been a Communist.

Liveright, who refused to reply on the grounds that the committee had no right to pry into his personal beliefs, said he believed pro-segregation forces in the New Orleans area engineered his appearance before the committee.

The committee, headed by Sen. James O. Eastland (D) Miss., is scheduled to hold hearings on alleged subversive activity in New Orleans next Thursday and Friday. The subpoenas have been sent out. One of them was received by Betty Liveright, wife of the fired TV executive.

* * * * *

Mrs. Liveright, who said today she was suspended from her job at WDSU because of her husband's appearance before the committee, said she was "shocked and outraged" at receiving the subpoena.

Another person subpoenaed was a former restaurant worker, Pitts O'Dell. He has not been located by investigators. It has not been disclosed who received the other eight subpoenas.

Segregation Foe Forced To Resign

Daily World
Thurs. 3-29-56
Atlanta Ga.

SHREVEPORT, La. — (INS) — A Shreveport probation officer who wrote letters to local newspapers in support of integration resigned his post Wednesday under pressure from the Caddo Parish police jury.

Chief probation officer Louis Rains said his resignation was requested by the police jury's juvenile committee in a special meeting

The police jury which direct supervision over rains' office, has publicly supported the interposition movement to maintain continued segregation in the South.

Rains was invited to make a statement before he committee members after the group met in a two hour closed-door session today.

He told the committee he "may have been indiscrete" in his letter but defended his right to express an opinion.

Rains' most recent letter, which appeared in the Shreveport journal yesterday called the pro-segregation white citizens councils "twentieth century Klans and charged that murder of Negroes in Mississippi "has been made legal."

Wants Ruling On Legality Of Louisiana Segregation Law

Informer Houston Tex.
Sat. 4-21-56

WASHINGTON, D C (NNPA)—In an unusual proceeding, the Orleans Parish (County) School Board and James F Redmond, New Orleans superintendent of schools, Thursday asked the Supreme Court for leave to file a petition for writs of mandamus and prohibiton to compel a three-judge Federal court to pass on the constitutionality of Louisiana laws requiring racial segregation in the public schools.

P. 20

The petition asks the court to direct Judge Wayne G Borah of the Fifth United States Circuit Court of Appeals and Federal District Judges Herbert W Christenberry and J Skelly Wright to show cause why such writs should not be issued against them.

Chief Judge Joseph C Hutcheson, Jr, of the Circuit Court, designated Judges Borah and Christenberry to sit with Judge Wright as a special three-judge court to hear the suit brought by the NAACP challenging the constitutionality of the Louisiana school segregation law.

The NAACP asked for the convening of a three-judge court to hear its complaint to enjoin the Orleans Parish School Board and Supt. Redmond from enforcing racial segregation in New Orleans public schools.

The three-judge court heard oral arguments last Dec 2. On authority of the Supreme Court decisions in the school segregation cases, the three-judge court held that Louisiana laws requiring or permitting segregation in the public schools were invalid.

The three-judge court also held that no serious constitutional question was presented and a three-judge court was not required.

The two judges designated by by the Chief Judge to sit with Judge Wright withdrew trom the case with the direction that the case proceed in the District Court where it was originally filed.

Judge Wright later held the Louisiana Jim Crow laws unconstitutional and enjoined the Orleans Parish School Board and Supt Redmond from enforcing racial segregation in any school under their supervision.

The school board and Supt Redmond are now asking the Supreme Court to:

1. Order the three judges to show cause why they should not be required to decide as a three-judge court the issues raised in the suit and whether or not an injunction should be issued.

2. Order Judge Wright to expunge from the record his opinion holding the Louisiana school segregation law unconstitutional and also expunge the decree enjoining its enforcement.

3. Prohibit Judge Wright from taking any further action in the case.

The suit was a class action brought by the NAACP in behalf of colored children in New Orleans.

MIXING OF RACES IN PARKS SCORED

Times-Picayune
Thurs. 4-5-56

Recreation Leaders Prepare for Opposition

By JAY HALL
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

BATON ROUGE, La., April 4 — Three resolutions aimed at keeping racial separation in the parks and play centers were passed here Wednesday by park and recreation officials of nine Louisiana cities.

They said the resolutions will be put up to the Legislature for enactment into state law.

The resolutions contain some of the strongest language yet observed in the legislative efforts of Southern states to maintain separate facilities for the white and Negro races.

New Orleans, La.

Unanimous Passage

Leaders from New Orleans, Monroe, Thibodaux, Baton Rouge, Zachary, Arabi, Lake Charles, Lafayette and Shreveport gave all three resolutions unanimous passage.

No. 1 proposes passage of a resolution of interposition. It also proposes that legislative action be taken to remove responsibility for noncompliance with the supreme court's "Black Monday" ruling from the individual and place it instead on the state itself.

Times Picayune

No. 2 calls for a constitutional amendment which would withdraw the consent of the state of Louisiana to be sued, or to allow any of its subdivisions to be sued, in connection with the conduct and affairs of the parks and recreation centers.

No. 3 flatly declares that separate facilities will be maintained. Moreover, it stipulates a fine or prison sentence, or both, for any individual or firm who violates the segregation principle.

P. 2

Refuse to Abide

In the interposition matter, resolution No. 1 asked wording declaring "that the sovereign state of Louisiana refuses to recognize or abide by any federal court decision or act of Congress ordering integration in the public schools, public parks or public recreational facilities in Louisiana until such time as the authority of the federal government in this field is clearly established by an amendment to the constitution of the United States which shall clearly abrogate all state laws, rules and regulations having the effect of segregating the members of the white and colored races in such matters."

It also asked for a companion measure "in order to protect state and public officials from federal contempt proceedings or civil suits in the exercise of their duties under the above resolution."

The companion piece would direct "any public official involved not to comply with any federal court order or act of Congress directing integration in such matters, under pain of fine, imprisonment, or removal from office, and to provide that the state of Louisiana shall hold such state and public officials free from loss or damage in the premises, such legislation to have the effect of placing the responsibility for noncompliance directly upon the sovereign state of Louisiana, rather than upon any particular individual."

The constitutional amendment asked for in resolution No. 2 contains this paragraph:

Consent Is Withdrawn

"The consent of the state of Louisiana to be sued in connection with the conduct and affairs of the state parks commission of Louisiana, the recreation and park commission for the whole of the parish of East Baton Rouge and any recreation district created under the terms of article XIV . . . as heretofore given by provisions of this constitution or legislative enactment is hereby expressly withdrawn. This withdrawal of consent shall apply not only to suits filed in the future but also to any pending litigation."

Then followed wording which would "expressly" withdraw the consent of the state to the institution of suits against any "municipal corporation, parish or other subdivision of the state" in respect to the operation or maintenance of parks and other recreational facilities.

Resolution No. 3 declares, "All public parks, recreation centers, playgrounds, community centers and other such facilities at which swimming, dancing, golfing, skating or other recreational activities are conducted shall be operated separately for members of the white and colored races.

"This shall not preclude mixed audiences at such facilities provided special sections and rest room facilities are reserved for members of the white and colored races."

Punitive Clause

The punitive clause states, "Any person, firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction therefor by a court of competent jurisdiction for each such violation shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1000, or sentenced to imprisonment in the parish jail not less than 90 days nor more than six months, or both, fined and imprisoned as above, at the discretion of the court."

It further provides that if any part of the act is held to be unconstitutional, all parts not so held "shall continue in full force and effect."

Spokesmen for the group said resolution No. 1 was introduced by Lester Lautenschlaeger, director of the New Orleans recreation department, seconded by Jack Hesketh, Monroe director of recreation; No. 2 introduced by Hesketh, seconded by Earl Brown, Thibodaux recreation director; No. 3 introduced by Brown, seconded by Gernon Brown, executive assistant director of the New Orleans recreation department.

They said the resolutions were drafted by William Shaw, special attorney for the Legislature's joint segregation committee, headed by Sen. William Rainach of Claiborne parish.

Among those attending the closed session in the Heidelberg hotel, spokesmen said, were William Wells, New Orleans, superintendent of state parks, and state Sen. Louis H. Folse from St. Bernard-Plaquemines parishes.

They stated that G. Norman David, Zachary, presided at the session. They stressed that the action was that of separate park and recreation units working jointly, not as a new, single organization.

NEGROES DON'T PLAY IN BATON ROUGE PARK

Commercial Appeal p. 25

Lake Charles Game Postponed By Umpires

Memphis Press-Scimitar

BATON ROUGE, April 25.—(AP)—The listing of a Negro player in the Lake Charles Giants' lineup caused postponement of an Evangeline League game with the Baton Rouge Rebels Saturday night.

Negroes are barred from the park used here by the Class C baseball clubs, but the problem was solved Friday night by a "gentleman's agreement."

Mem. 4-30-56

Under the agreement, the Giants benched Negro shortstop Ralph Crosby and centerfielder Felipe Alou for subs while the Rebels benched their white shortstop and centerfielder. Baton Rouge then beat the league-leading Giants, 7-4.

Saturday night, however, Lake Charles presented its lineup which listed Crosby. Chief Umpire Joe Powers in turn gave the lineup to Bob Breazeale, president of Baseball Fans, Inc., which operates the Baton Rouge team.

The public address system then read a statement to approximately 600 fans, explaining that the game had to be postponed because of the segregation ban.

The Baton Rouge club had expected Lake Charles to use at least one Negro tonight and had not opened the ticket office. The fans drifted in to see what would happen.

Powers next will report to Ray Mullins, president of the Evangeline League, who will rule on the situation. Mullins was expected to declare it a forfeit.

Sam Tarleton, general manager of the Lake Charles team, previously warned that the "gentlemen's agreement" would not be in effect Saturday night.

'Me and My Shadow'

Crackers Hurled At Lewis' Act

Courier p. 2, Sat. 4-14-56

By JOHN E. ROUSSEAU

NEW ORLEANS, La.—"Me and my shadow" were objected to by patrons in the lily-white Roosevelt Hotel's Blue Room as Ted Lewis and his partner, Elroy Peace, underwent bombardment by cellophane-wrapped crackers and a silver bread tray.

580

Very much in evidence at the demonstration was Dixiecrat kingpin, Leander H. Perez, both Lewis and Peace told the Courier.

Perez, a leader in the state's fight against desegregation, is district attorney for Plaquemines and St. Bernard parishes. Efforts of the Courier to contact him for a statement proved fruitless.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

PEACE, WHO has been with Ted Lewis for eleven years and has played all over the South declared that the incident was the first that he had experienced. He told the Courier that during his act in the Blue Room he noted cellophane-wrapped crackers on stage and narrowly avoided slipping on them. Then, he said, someone began throwing more crackers and later a heavy silver bread tray sailed up onto the stage.

This demonstration occurred during the "rock and roll" routine of the act, and brought about a commotion in the audience.

When Lewis returned to the stage after the act he told the patrons, "Ladies and gentlemen, I have played this number all through the South for the past thirty years with a little colored boy and I feel badly here tonight and I am sure you know the feelings of the little fellow have been hurt. If we have offended anyone in this room please accept my apologies."

■

THE AUDIENCE is then said to have responded with a rousing cheer for Lewis and then yelled in the direction of Perez' table, "throw him out!"

Te Courier sought to contact the owner of the Roosevelt Hotel, Seymour Weiss, but he was reportedly "out of town."

The incident was hushed up in the New Orleans daily papers.

LONG GIVES WARNING TO MINORITY GROUPS

Commercial Appeal p. 14

Senator Points Out Rights Could Be Lost

Memphis Press.

SUPREME COURT LASHED

Thurs. 5-10-56

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, May 9. — Senator Russell Long (D., La.) cautioned the nation's minorities Wednesday that the civil rights they have gained could be lost.

"Minorities should remember," the Louisiana Democrat declared in a Senate speech, "that the rights they enjoy would be endangered if the majority should turn against them."

Decisions Hit

He assailed recent Supreme Court decisinos and declared they amount to "amending the Constitution of the United States without the consent of the people."

"The rights enjoyed by minorities," he said, "would be much more secure were our Supreme Court composed of men who have demonstrated through the years their ability to dispense justice fairly and impartially.

"Likewise, the rights of all Americans would be more secure were they able to depend upon a court that would follow long established precedents."

He introduced a proposed constitutional amendment that would limit Supreme Court justices to 12-year terms, instead of their present life tenure, and would require at least five of the nine justices to have had a minimum of six years of prior experience on a court of record.

Justice Sherman Minton, who served from 1941 to 1949 as a United States Court of Appeals judge before joining the Supreme Court, is the only member of the present court who could qualify under Senator Long's proposal.

Senator Long's prior experience proposal was one of a series that have been offered in the Senate. Senators John Stennis (D., Miss.) and George Smathers (D., Fla.) have introduced comparable measures.

Says Form Changed

Senator Long centered most of his fire on the Supreme Court decisions interpreting the interstate commerce and general welfare clauses.

He declared these and other decisions have changed the form of the Federal Government from one of closely limited powers to one of almost unlimited powers.

"I am confident," he said, "the vast majority of level-headed persons, familiar with our history and our laws, will agree that the Supreme Court of recent years has exercised powers far beyond those intended by our founding fathers."

He said such actions have had the effect of enacting new laws and of amending the Constitution. Urging consideration of his proposed constitutional amendment, he said:

"The power to amend our constitution or change our laws should not be an unlimited authority vested in men appointed to serve for life. Like every other power in our Government, it should be subject to checks and balances."

2 Louisiana Segregation Bills Signed

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 7-18-56

BATON ROUGE, La., July 17 (AP)—Gov. Earl Long today signed two more segregation measures passed during the recent session of the Legislature.

One would require employers to furnish separate eating and restroom facilities for Negro and white workers. Segregation leaders said it was aimed at industry in the New Orleans area.

The other would remove from the Orleans Parish (New Orleans) school board the power to decide which schools are for Negroes and which are for white students and transfer the power to the Legislature. The measure was designed to help public schools in the city avoid a federal court order to end segregation.

LSU EDITOR BLASTS SEGREATION BACKER

Commercial Appeal

Charges State Senator With Censorship Attempt

Wed. 8-29-56

REPERCUSSION IS SEEN

Memphis Press-Scim.

By The United Press

BATON ROUGE, La., Aug. 28.—An LSU newspaper editor Tuesday cried "hands off" to a prominent legislator who said the university newspaper is promoting integration.

Summer editor of the Daily Reveille Darnell Eiland, a 27-year-old Korean War veteran, called State Senator W. M. Rainach "our high priest of segregation."

May Echo In Legislature

He told the legislator to peddle his "Hitler-Stalin technique for eliminating the free press" some place else.

Senator Rainach is the leader in Louisiana's fight to preserve segregation and the bitter verbal fight could have repercussions in the special session of the Legislature which begins Thursday.

The dispute was reminiscent of one in 1934 when the entire seven-man editorial staff of the LSU Reveille was expelled from the university in a dispute with the late Senator Huey P. Long.

Huey Long demanded and got dismissal of student editors after the newspaper criticized his appointment of football star Abe Mickal, through Gov. O. K. Allen, to the state Senate.

Senator Rainach has not threatened to expell Mr. Eiland or any other student, but Saturday he said changes will be made:

Heads Citizens Council

"We will see in a short time that the policy of the Daily Reveille will be changed," he said. "But not through censorship." Senator Rainach heads the Citizens Council Association and is chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation.

"The trouble lies not in the students, but in the people who have been planted in the faculty, administration and off the campus to bring about integration in Louisiana," Senator Rainach told a Citizens Council rally in Alexandria, La.

But Mr. Eiland said Senator Rainach misstated the facts.

"Senator Rainach's persistent attacks on LSU and the Daily Reveille are not only inaccurate and contradictory, but also smack strongly of the Hitler-Stalin technique for eliminating all opposition by first eliminating the free press," Mr. Eiland said.

Mr. Eiland said he was not an integrationist, but he would continue to oppose Senator Rainach "in his reckless assaults upon the basic liberties of Louisiana's citizens, white as well as Negro."

Pro-segregationists are rarely criticized publicly in Louisiana. LSU officials could not be reached for comment.

U. S. Grant was actually named Ulysses Hiram. But, at West Point he was entered as Ulysses Simpson (his mother was Sarah Simpson) so he became U. S. Grant.

In Their Fight For Civil Rights

Weekly, N.O. New Orleans, La. Sept. 7-56

The Proud Record Of Louisiana Negroes

By Marcus Christian

Poet, Writer and Historian. Unit Supervisor, Federal Writers' Project, 1939-42; Rosenwald Fellow, 1943-44; University Librarian, 1944-50.

Long before the Louisiana Purchase of 1803, the free colored class of our state was held in almost universal esteem for their high standards of education, achievement and deportment. During the antebellum days, when black men were sold like cattle, white indentured servants were shipped like Negro slaves, and Indians were banished, burned or sold into slavery, the position of the free colored group in Louisiana was the highest yet achieved by any similar group in a slaveholding land. They monopolized most of the skilled trades and had reached a high state of literacy under Catholic tutelage. For higher education they sent their sons-and occasionally, their daughters - to colleges and seminaries in the northern United States or the European continent. This group produced highly-trained men in the fields of medicine, literature and the arts. It produced mathematicians, inventors, poets, playwrights and journalists of no mean repute. Thi class also included several men of large wealth who were worth individually from one hundred thousand to a quarter of a million dollars.

When the United States authorities arrived in New Orleans, Negroes were practically in possession of the city. Many of them were joined to the wealthier white group by blood or through church or common-law marriage. They far outnumbered the whites. It was practically a Negro city. Whites, 3551; free people of color, 1566; Negro slaves, 3105; "all other persons,' 253. And there were so many free women of color "sweet sixteen" and older living in household setups with white bachelors that those in authority set about immediately to the passing of "additional laws for the regulation of slaves and free people of color."

Since the position of Negroes in other parts of Louisiana was similar to that of their kin in New Orleans, it was but natural that as a group they became proud and jealous of their rights as freemen. In colonial days they frequently addressed petitions to the French or Spanish governors for redress of wrongs. In the more liberal days of Spanish justice these petitions sometimes went all the way to Cuba before being passed upon. A few finally ended up in Spain for final disposition. In most instances, however, decisions were handed down by the old Spanish Cabildo here in the city. One of the earliest of the famous batture cases was concerned with a free man of color named Belly or Bailey. Many years before the Civil War two free men of color named Boisdore and Goule brought successful suit against the old Citizens Bank when that powerful institution sought to eliminate their names from its original list of stockholders. There was also the antebellum suit brought by the members of historic St. James A. M. E. church against the city of New Orleans when the latter sought to close their place of worship.

Negroes were especially vigorous in their drives for civil rights during the war and Reconstruction. They sued to wipe out Jim Crow on the city's "star cars;" sued to abolish segregation on steamboats; sued to wipe out segregation in schools and on railroads; as well as for equal rights in public places. The case upong which all subsequent Jim Crow cases have been decided was the famous case of PLESSY v. FERGUSON, a Louisiana case. All of this prior to 1900. No wonder George W. Cable, himself a champion of Negroes, called them "litiguous,' and Thurgood Marshall, in a speech some years back, asked his hearers where were those traditionally militant Louisiana Negroes, when some type of white racist action had been allowed to pass unchallenged.

Yet, today, they have allowed their legislators, elected by their votes as well, to enact laws which will yoke their children and grandchildren to the status of second-class citizenship, without a single protest to the legislature; without one protest to the governor, whose election in a large measure was due to "the good colored people;" without one petition to President Eisenhower, who might be prevailed upon to lend his good offices in this "season of unreason." The highly-vaunted "free Negroes' of today dare not do what their forbears, the "free Negroes' of yesterday, did in regard to governors, legislators and lawmakers. At the very outset of American rule, Governor W.C. C. Claiborne was forced to treat with Negroes in regard to their civil rights. When the whites began to plan a memorial to Congress for themselves, the Negores, learning that they would not be asked to sign it, began to make plans for one of their own. An unnamed free man of color, an "influential character" among them, wrote an address and then took it to the printer, but that worthy would not have anything to do with it. Then Governor Claiborne called nine of the Negro leaders together and "convinced them of their error." Having St. Domingo in mind, he afterwards wrote, he proceeded quite mildly with them instead of taking the harsh measures advocated by the disgruntled whites. The whites, intent-as always-upon their own rights, were so frightened and upset by the Negroes' action and so fearful of setting a bad example, that they abandoned their plans for a memorial.

The Negroes, however, were undaunted. In 1830, with the rise of vicious enactments against them, they again went to the front and delegated one of their group to present a petition to the Louisiana Legislature. For this task they selected Jean Fleming, a rich free colored planter, living in the upper suburbs of the city. They knew that their action could be productive of dire consequences for themselves, but they did not flinch. In the year of 1836 Fleming, acting upon their instructions, presented the petition to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. There is no record of the outcome, but Negores still pressed forward. Later, when one of them was charged with having violated one of these restrictive measures, they literally swarmed into the courtroom and had the pleasure of hearing a liberal judge decide the case in their favor. In 1863 New Orleans Negroes presented a petition to Military Governor George F. Shepley. A few months later they sent a committee to call upon him. In 1864 they sent two of their numbers to Washington to call upon President Lincoln and they were kindly received by them. In 1865 Negroes again presented three successive memorials to one or the other branches of the state legislature.

Just recently I asked two white women why is it that with all of the harsh measures being passed by the legislature, no Negroes-with the exception of the school teachers - had drawn up protests, petitions, or memorials to the men they helped to elect? With whites journeying to Baton Rouge, voting groups threatening to recall legislators, the newspapers screaming, and legislators being placed on the griddle-why is it that the Negroes have remained silent or have spoken out only "at the big gate"? One of the women, after reminding me that it was generally said that Long would not have been elected had it not been for Negroes, turned away and held her head down. The she replied quickly: "I'll tell you why-it's because they're jackasses-that's why."

Sugar Bowl Hit By TV Boycott Threat

Afro-American Sat. 9-8-56

Baltimore Md.

BATON ROUGE, LA. — A reported reluctance on the part of prospective sponsors to sign for the telecasting of the Sugar Bowl New Year's Day activities, last week led to an effort to bypass the recently enacted segregated law.

P. 14

A prominent legislator, who preferred to remain anonymous for obvious reasons, is said to have admitted polling 140 representatives and senators on the advisability of softening certain aspects of the bill.

THE MEASURE, which takes effect Oct. 15, prohibits "any dancing, social functions, entertainments, athletic training, games, sports or contests and other such activities involving personal and social contacts, in which the participants or contestants are members of the white and Negro races."

It further requires separate seating and sanitary facilities.

Although not yet in effect, the law struck hard at the Sugar Bowl. Three teams dropped out of the Sugar Bowl basketball tournament because of the new law.

The legislator said there also was a provision to get around the segregated seating clause for the football game. Both Navy and Pittsburgh, the last two visiting teams in the New Year's Day contest, opposed segregated seating, requiring special provisions.

* * *

THE PROPOSAL is to exempt the Sugar Bowl activities, the Shreveport baseball team in the Texas League and college sports at Tulane, Loyola and Louisiana State Universities.

One way of doing this, the legislator pointed out, is to reword the bill so as to suspend the law for cities with 100,000 population or over.

They Can't Win

Chicago Defender

Louisiana's backward law forbidding interracial sports events became effective on October 15 amid great rejoicing by the segregationists.

P. 4

Their joy will be short-lived.

The law cannot stand, not only because it does violence to human dignity and decency and the Constitution, but because it declares war with history.

Baltimore Md.

Many in generations past have engaged in frantic efforts to push back the hands of progress, but history has yet to suffer a defeat.

Sat. 10-27-56

We are confident it won't lose this time either.

La. Sports Segregation Complete

Enquirer P. 28

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 15 (AP).—Louisiana today segregated all sports.

Tues. 10-16-56

It will be illegal for white and Negro amateur professional players to compete in the same "athletic training, games, sports or contests." Spectators also must be segregated. The maximum punishment is a $1000 fine and one year imprisonment.

Philadelphia Pa.

Although the law passed in the regular May session of the Legislature but did not take effect until today, its provisions have been felt for weeks.

Soon after Gov. Earl Long signed the bill July 17, some colleges began cancelling their commitments to appear in Louisiana. Some withdrew because of Negroes on their squads. Others said they were withdrawing on grounds of principle.

The University of Wisconsin was the first to act. It ended its 1957-58 home-and-home agreement for football games with Louisiana State University at Baton Rouge.

SUGAR BOWL HIT

Seven schools called off basketball games set for next season. Notre Dame, Dayton and St. Louis quit the Sugar Bowl tourney. The Sugar Bowl substituted Alabama, Houston and Virginia Tech to play with Kentucky, only team remaining of the original four invited. The Sugar Bowl football game New Year's Day will also be affected.

Santa Clara dropped out of the Louisiana Invitational Tournament at Shreveport and was replaced by Virginia Military Institute. Loyola, of New Orleans lost Harvard, Marquette and American University from its basketball schedule.

Boxing previously was the only sport specifically segregated throughout the State. That ban was applied through a rule of the Louisiana State Athletic Association. The new State law goes further; it will prohibit white boxers from working out with Negro boxers in gyms, a not uncommon practice here.

FEW EXHIBITIONS

Because of the new law, only a few major league baseball exhibition games are expected in the State each training season. But the biggest baseball question is what will happen to take care of Shreveport's entry in the Texas League.

Shreveport has no Negroes, but other clubs in the loop play Negroes there. Some solution may be forthcoming at tomorrow's league meeting in Dallas.

Asks Army To Halt Tulane Tilt At N.O.

Informer P. 1

Houston Tex.

Sat. 11-10-56

NEW YORK — Citing Louisiana's new Jim Crow law which would impose segregated seating of Negro Army personnel and other Negro spectators, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has urged Secretary of the Army Wilber M. Brucker "to order withdrawal of the Army team from Tulane football game" scheduled for November 16 in New Orleans.

Informer P. 10

Sat. 11-10-56

Since enactment of this law, Mr Wilkins pointed out in a telegram to Secretary Brucker, several northern and midwestern universities and colleges have cancelled both football and basketball games with Louisiana teams. For the West Point Cadets to participate in a game under these circumstances, he said, "would be conspicuous endorsement of racial segregation."

"Distorted" Segregation Views Ban 3 Magazines

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Sun. 5-6-56

SHREVEPORT, La. — (INS) — The Bossier Parish School Board has placed a ban on three national magazines — Time, Life and Look — because of what it called their "distorted" view of the segregation issue.

Subscriptions were cancelled and back issues of the magazines were ordered removed from the libraries of the parishes' nine high schools.

The resolution banning the magazine was adopted at a board meeting Thursday night but the action was not made public until late last night.

At the same time, it was learned that the neighboring Claiborne Parish School Board had taken a similar action several weeks ago.

The Bossier Parish School board passed the resolution without a single dissenting vote. It was introducted by board member J. B. Waggonner, Jr., of plain dealing.

Three of the nine schools affected are Negro. The action affects all the public night schools in Shreveport.

The resolution accused the three magazine of "waging a systematic campaign to prejudice the American people against the south by presenting in their columns bisaed and distorted views on the institution of segregation of races in our schools."

School Superintendent R. V. Kerr would not say how he is going to dispose of the thousands of copies of back issues of the magaines.

Mrs. Kenneth Butler, booier High School librarian, said that her school alone was 1,300 copies of life magazines.

Mrs. Kenneth Butler, Bossier High School Librarian, said that her school alone has 1,300 copies of Life Magazine dating from 1935 to the present.

The resolution banning the magazine was adopted at a board meeting Thursday night but the action was not made public until late last night.

At the same time, it was learned that the neighboring Claiborne Parish School board had taken a similar action several weeks ago.

The Bossier Parish School board passed the resolution without a single dissenting vote. It was introducted by board member J. B. Waggonner, Jr., of plain dealing.

Three of the nine schools affected are Negro. The action affects all the public night schools in Shreveport.

The resolution accused the three magazine of "waging a systematic campaign to prejudice the American people against the south by presenting in their columns biased and distorted views on the institution of segregation of races in our schools."

School Superintendent R. V. Kerr would not say how he is going to dispose of the thousands of copies of back issues of the magazines.

Mrs. Kenneth Butler, Bossier High School Librarian, said that her school alone has 1,300 copies of Life Magazine dating from 1935 to the present.

Survey of L. A. Negro's status on CBS Sunday

Bulletin P. 3 Los Angeles, Calif. Fri. 3-9-56

"Minority Report," an hour-long program, first in a series of three examining the status of three minorities in Los Angeles, will be presented on KNX Radio, Sunday at 9:45. The program, an appraisal by prominent Los Angeles Negroes of their relationship to the whole community, was prepared by the KNX News Bureau under a grant from the Fund for the Republic.

With Dan Cubberly as narrator, the program is composed of expressions of opinions by members of the Negro community. Among those whose opinions will be heard are Under-Secretary of the United Nations, Dr. Ralph Bunche, Norman O. Houston, George A. Beavers, Jr., Dr. Ruth Temple, Bernard Jefferson, Mrs. Betty Hill, Woodley Lewis, Kenny Washington, the Rev. L. L. White and Dr. James Kirk.

The Negro spokesmen represent business, press, legal profession, education, sports, politics, medical profession and labor.

"Distorted" Segregation Views Ban 3 Magazines

World Tues. 5-8-56 P. 1 Atlanta, Ga.

SHREVEPORT, La. — (INS) — The Bossier Parish School Board has placed a ban on three national magazines — Time, Life and Look — because of what it called their "distorted" view of the segregation issue.

Subscriptions were cancelled and back issues of the magazines were ordered removed from the libraries of the parishes' nine high schools.

BOSSIER BOARD BANS MAGAZINES

Times-Picayune

Three Are Revoked from Libraries

Sun. 5-6-56

SHREVEPORT, La., May 5 (INS)—The Bossier parish school board has placed a ban on three national magazines — Time, Life and Look—because of what it called their "distorted" view of the segregation issue. P. 28

Subscriptions were cancelled and all back issues of the magazines were ordered removed from the libraries of the parishes' nine high schools. New Orleans

The resolution banning the magazines was adopted at a board meeting Thursday night but the action was not made public until late Friday night. La.

The neighboring Claiborne parish school board had taken a similar action several weeks ago.

The Bossier parish school board passed the resolution without a single dissenting vote. It was introduced by board member J. B. Waggonner Jr. of Plain Dealing.

Three of the nine schools affected are Negro. The action affects all the public high schools in Shreveport.

The resolution accused the three magazines of "waging a systematic campaign to prejudice the American people against the South by presenting in their columns biased and distorted views on the institution of segregation of races in our schools."

School Supt. R. V. Kerr would not say how he is going to dispose of the thousands of copies of back issues of the magazines.

Mrs. Kenneth Butler, Bossier High school librarian, said that her school alone has 1300 copies of Life magazine dating from 1935 to the present.

La. Governor Raps Both 'Extremists'

Defender Sat. 5-12-56 Chicago, Ill. P. 1

BATON ROUGE, La., — (INS) — Incoming Gov. Earl K. Long of Louisiana called for moderation on the segregation issue and criticized both the White Citizens Councils and the NAACP last week.

Long, who goes into office on May 15, declared that "extremists" on both sides of the issue are injuring their respective causes.

"There are a lot of hotheads," he told a news conference, "who will try to make themselves politically popular by befuddling the people on this issue. But I believe the people will spot them."

MILD CRITICISM

Long, who reaffirmed his segregation stand, said the NAACP wasn't needed in Louisiana "because the colored people here can get a square deal without it." The NAACP has been kicked out of the state through court action.

Speaking of the prosegregation White Citizens Council, he said: "They may be doing some good. But this could be misused by any hotheads. For instance, right now I understand they have knocked out some good white voters."

Long referred to reports that in some areas the White Citizens Councils have been accused of pressuring election officials into stiffening requirements for registration in order to cut down the list of Negro voters. In some cases, this has resulted not only in eliminating Negro voters but also white voters.

Long also said that Adlai Stevenson has lost strength in the South because "he is too frank."

Long, who personally favors favors Stevenson, said: "I still admire and like Stevenson, but he seems to have a hard time getting down to earth."

He added: "He's too frank. That may be a good thing as president but not as a candidate for president."

Long said he believes a good vote-getting combination for the Democrats would be Sen. Paul Douglas of Illinois, and Gov. Frank Lausche of Ohio.

He has mentioned such a team in previous conferences.

Anti-Segregation Magazines Banned

Post-Herald Mon. 5-7-56

SHREVEPORT, La., May 6 (AP) —The Bossier Parish School Board said today it has banned "Time," "Life" and "Look" from school libraries because of the magazines' views on segregation.

The school board oredered subscriptions canceled and back issues removed from school library shelves in the nearby parish (county). The ban is effective immediately.

The resolution accused the three magazines of "waging a systematic campaign in their columns biased and distorted views on the institution of segregation of races in our schools."

LEADERS AGREE ON SEGREGATION

Times Picayune New Orleans, La. Fri. 5-18-56

Long, Rainach Announce 'Firm Policy'

By JAY HALL

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

BATON ROUGE, La., May 17 —Gov. Earl K. Long and the state's foremost segregation leader said Thursday they have agreed on "maintaining a firm policy of segregation in the state."

State Sen. W. M. Rainach, representing Bienville and Claiborne parishes, announced the agreement at the governor's "Little Mansion" during a press conference.

Rainach said, "I have been conferring with the governor regarding segregation" policies for the four years of the Long administration which moved into control Tuesday.

"Our legislative group expects to work with the governor in maintaining a firm policy of segregation in the state," Rainach said.

Long Approves

Said the governor: "I subscribe to that."

Rainach said he was making the statement as a legislator and in his capacity as a member of the joint legislative committee on segregation. Rainach is also chairman of the Louisiana Association of Citizens Councils, the state's biggest organized force for promoting the continuance of segregation.

Election result statistics indicate that Long got a heavy Negro vote in the gubernatorial primary. He has said frequently that he will "continue to be a friend to the Negro."

Long disclosed a number of appointments at the meeting and Jack P. F. Gremillion, new attorney general, announced the appointment of several assistants.

The governor also said at the conference:

He is going to look into the Webster parish voting registrar's situation in which Mrs. Winnice Clement has been embroiled in controversy the past few months.

New Commission

He advocates a seven- or nine-member board of commissioners to replace the present one-man voting machine custodian system now under the duties of the secretary of state.

He thinks the Legislature will probably introduce bills to double the severance tax on timber, and there will "be a dozen bills" to repeal a present law exempting growing timber from taxation.

He thinks the cities will introduce legislation for a 20-cents a gallon tax on whiskey to compare with the tax only New Orleans now has, with revenues being distributed statewide on a pro-rata basis.

'Mighty Good Man'

And, he said, "I still think Adlai Stevenson is a mighty good man."

as far as Democratic presidential nominee prospects are concerned, "but not as good a politician as Eisenhower or Kefauver." Long said he has never been to a Democratic national convention and won't go this time.

Wednesday he announced the appointment of former New Orleans Mayor Robert Maestri to membership on the Louisiana tax commission. Is it likely Maestri is to move into the chairmanship, he was asked, if chairman Graydon K. Kitchens, Minden, should resign as requested by the Legislature?

Long said, "I'm sure he wouldn't want to be chairman. I'm not even sure he'll ever take the oath as a member" since Maestri did not seek the job, though Long wants him.

On his voting machine board suggestion, the governor said the membership should include one representative each from Tulane, Loyola, and Louisiana State university; one from the state board of registration; the secretary of state, "and maybe the Police Jury Association would name one."

Would the governor also be a member? Long replied, "We have not got that far. I don't think so."

Race Track Tax

He also got around to renewed discussion on the possibility of increased state revenues from the New Orleans Fair Grounds race track.

Reminding that New Orleans gets $1.5 million from this source, he said he felt the rest of the state should get as much. He said he believed a bill would come up giving the other parishes of the state $1 million and LSU a half million dollars out of race track proceeds.

The governor said he felt the reforestration program should "carry its own load." He called the timber severance tax "a myth—what timber and nothing is, is the same thing," as far as revenue is concerned. The severance tax, he said, should at least pay for the fire-fighting necessary for the protection of forests.

Money for LSU

Long said he thought "maybe a fourth" of any additional timber severance tax could go to LSU's school of forestry.

"This would not really be a tax increase. It would be just clearing up a misunderstanding. I think the people think that timber is paying its own way

LONG URGES CAUTION IN RACE ISSUE LAWS

Commercial Appeal 5-19

Legislature Advised On Eve Of Opening

Memphis Tenn.

HE TAKES POST TUESDAY

Mon. 5-14-56

By JAMES McLEAN

Associated Press Staff Writer

BATON, ROUGE, May 13. — Earl K. Long, who becomes Governor of Louisiana a third time Tuesday, Saturday called for "reasonableness and caution" in legislative handling of racial issue.

The newly elected Legislature opens Monday, bringing 60 days of controversies in the politics-loving state.

While for segregation, Mr. Long is in the camp of Southern moderates on race questions.

No Need For Classes

Mr. Long said while he sees no need for mixed classes of Negroes and whites from the high school level down, "I don't see any need to pass a lot of segregation bills—even though I would favor them—when the Supreme Court probably would knock them out anyway."

Segregation leaders, with Senator W. M. Rainach of Summerfield in front, have been drafting a heavy load of the new bills—everything from an interposition resolution, holding the state has the right to nullify the Supreme Court school segregation ruling, to a proposal directing state and school officials not to comply with the integration decision.

Sen. Rainach and his leaders pushed through a willing Legislature in 1954 special laws to bypass the Supreme Court on classroom integration. But Federal courts already have ruled the laws unconstitutional.

Rainach is president of the Louisiana Association of Citizens Councils. He wants an interposition resolution. Several weeks ago, when asked for comment on the issue, Mr. Long countered, "Let Rainach do all the talking on it."

Five States Act

Interposition resolutions against the 1954 court decision have been passed by Mississippi, Virginia, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina.

"I think the colored people of Louisiana will listen to me," Mr. Long insists. He declared the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, now banned by court order in this state, ought to tone down. And Mr. Long said such segregation - minded groups as the Southern gentlemen's organization "should not stir up Negroes in reverse."

"Even though I received a splendid Negro vote," Long commented, "I didn't make any promises to the white citizens or colored people which could be considered unreasonable by either side."

The same views, he added, apply to opponents and proponents of organized labor's legislative drive to kill the right to work law banning compulsory unionism.

Uproar Touched

The fight to pass the law two years ago touched off the greatest legislative uproar in years.

"I'll remain neutral in this right to work controversy," Governor-elect Long declared, "and I'll be fair to both sides."

SEGREGATION PLANS FOR LOUISIANA TOLD

Commercial Appeal

Legislative Unit Will Offer Interposition Resolution

Mon. 5-21-56

OTHER ACTIONS DRAFTED

Memphis Tenn.

By The Associated Press

BATON ROUGE, May 20.—Legislative leaders said Sunday they will introduce a seven-part segregation program this week which would make Louisiana the sixth Southern state to defy the United States Supreme Court with interposition.

Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia have passed interposition resolutions which declare they consider the court ban on school segregation to be invalid.

New Pattern Of Laws

The 10-member Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation has been drafting a new pattern of laws to bulwark Louisiana's official stand against mixed races in public classrooms.

The committee was responsible for the recent lawsuit in which a state court stopped activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Louisiana. The segregationists dug up a 1924 law which had wiped out the Klan and used it against the NAACP.

Senator W. M. Rainach, head of the committee, made public the new segregation package after a conference with Gov. Earl K. Long.

"The Governor has agreed to co-operate with us in our program to maintain segregation," Senator Rainach said.

To Be Introduced

To meet the changing situation brought about by Federal Court decrees, Senator Rainach and his committee will introduce in the new Legislature:

1. The interposition resolution.

2. A legislative resolution continuing the work of the Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation, chief foe of the NAACP in this state.

3. A proposal for constitutional amendment withdrawing consent of the state to any lawsuits, except for contract questions, against city, parish or state public park and recreation agencies. Sponsors said this would have the effect of blocking integration lawsuits.

4. A bill tightening college and university entrance rules by calling for a certificate from lower school officials attesting to the applicant's eligibility and good moral character. This would stiffen colleges against undesirable applicants, whether white or Negro.

Waiting Rooms Bill

5. A bill guaranteeing white waiting rooms at air, rail and bus terminals, by stipulating white passengers traveling within the state must have a separate room, even though another will be available for Negroes and any interstate passengers.

6. A bill placing city, parish and state parks under the sovereign police power of the state, a segregation step.

7. A bill eliminating compulsory school attendance wherever integration occurs. This would allow white pupils to ignore the attendance law while awaiting new steps to bring back segregated schoolrooms.

Segregation Rally Planned For Tonight

Daily Herald
Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 5-17-56

NEW ORLEANS --(INS)-- The biggest segregation rally ever held in modern America is scheduled tonight in New Orleans--on the second anniversary of the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation.

The meeting will be held in Pelican Stadium, home of the New Orleans baseball club, which seats 14,000.

George Singleton, chairman of the arrangements committee, predicted, however, that some 20 000 persons would attend the rally. He described the meeting as a "protest against the Supreme Court decision."

The "celebration" will begin in the afternoon with a parade down New Orleans' famed Canal Street.

Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia and Sen. James O. Eastland (D) of Mississippi, will lead the parade. These two segregation leaders will be the keynote speakers at the Pelican Stadium rally tonight.

The entire program is being sponsored by the Citizens Council of New Orleans, one of the all-white, prosegregation groups that have sprung up in the South since the May 17, 1954 decision of the Supreme Court.

Following the parade, Mayor DeLesseps S. Morrision of New Orleans, will present Griffin and Eastland with keys to the city and proclaim them honorary citizens.

Today's rally follows the biggest promotion campaign ever staged by the White Citizens Councils. A total of 14,000 leaflets advertising the meeting were dropped from an airplane over 12 cities in South Louisiana in one phase of the campaign.

Louisiana Archbishop Warns Of Excommunication Over Bias

Herald Tribune Sat. 2-25-56

New York, N.Y.

By Francis Sugrue

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 24.—The Most Rev. Joseph Francis Rummel, Archbishop of New Orleans, one of the most controversial figures in the Southern integration issue, today approved of an editorial that warned Roman Catholics they face "automatic excommunication" if they vote for or support laws to forbid integration in Catholic schools. P. 1

This was the second time in a week that Archbishop Rummel's voice has been heard in major statements on the Church's position that integration must eventually come to the Catholic schools of southern Louisiana. On Sunday, in a pastoral letter that left little room for theological argument, Archbishop Rummel told his flock—the majority of whom oppose integration—that segregation is "morally wrong and sinful."

Catholics in Dilemma

Now he has approved an editorial that appeared today in "Catholic Action of the South," the official publication of the church in New Orleans, that Catholics can have nothing to do with laws that in any way hamper Archbishop Rummel in his control over Catholic schools.

The archbishop's position has become so positive that Catholics in New Orleans are in a dilemma that stirs the deep roots of their consciences. They would like to put off for years the idea of Catholic white children and Negro children going to the same parochial schools and, if it were possible, forever and a day. These are devout, sincere Catholics who believe that they belong to the "true church." These are also people who believe fervently in the separation of the races and wish to support all attempts to keep the traditional relationship between whites and Negroes, even though they belong to the same church.

Legislative Plans

The moment is fast coming when the souls of Catholics in New Orleans will be sorely tried.

Today's editorial was prompted by the announcement on Feb. 15 of four Catholic representatives in the Louisiana Legislature that they would seek legislation that would not only maintain segregation in the public schools but broaden it to include parochial schools to protect the children of the private schools "from the evil effects of integration of the races."

On the same day a special three-man Federal court declared all Louisiana school segregation laws were unconstitutional. But the joint committee of the Legislature began immediately to give consideration to new laws that would give the state the same power to stop integration.

This was the reason for today's editorial—that Catholics would clearly understand the dangers of any legislation that gave the state any control over the Catholic schools.

The seriousness of the movement was expressed in these words: "The proposed legislation would certainly impede the exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, in this instance the operation of Catholic schools. If the laws were put into effect automatic excommunication would be incurred by those who worked for and voted for their passage and by those who appeal to lay authority for their application, such as persons who besought sheriffs, chiefs of police or courts to put provisions of the laws into effect." P. 4

Canon Law Cited

The editorial explained that the issue is so grave that under certain conditions the offenders automatically incur excommunication. Canon 2334 of the church law was quoted. It reads: "The following incur an excommunication latae sententiae (automatic) specially reserved to the Holy See: 1. Those who issue laws, mandates or decrees contrary to the freedom or rights of the church. 2. Those who directly or indirectly impede the exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction either of the internal or the external forum, and for this purpose have recourse to a lay authority."

The editorial makes it clear that the Catholic school system of any diocese operates under the ordinary, be he a bishop or an archbishop. "No other group has any right to dictate the operation of the schools, least of all the state," the approved policy declaration states. At one point it warns: "The precedent is most dangerous, for, if political leaders can dictate to the church on one matter under its jurisdiction, the way is open for them to dictate in others. The end result could well be complete state control of religion."

Long's Comment

Asked to comment on the archbishop's position, Earl K. Long, who has won the Democrat primary election for Governor, which is tantamount to election, said that on the one hand he is "a million per cent for segregation," but on the other hand he would not attempt to tell the Catholic Church what to do about segregation in the Catholic schools."

"From a religious standpoint," Mr. Long said, the Archbishop "is undoubtedly right" in condemning segregation as morally wrong and sinful. But the incoming Governor said Archbishop Rummel "is going too strong" on the issue.

"Maybe he is a little too advanced," Mr. Long said. "From a religious standpoint he is undoubtedly right. But at this time it may be the wrong time to push it. I'd hate to have his job right now."

The chancery office of the Archdiocese also issued a comment on the editorial. The chancery attempted to make it clear that the Archbishop was not "threatening" any one with excommunication, because excommunication was "automatic" under certain conditions of canon law.

One of the Catholic legislators, Joseph Casey, who was defeated in his campaign for re-election in the recent primary said he wished he had a chance to vote on any new proposed law to maintain segregation.

"The only one that has that right (to excommunicate) is the Pope himself," Mr. Casey said, "it becomes a matter of whether the Pope would designate that right to his bishops and so on. I don't think he would."

Associated Press

Gov.-elect Earl K. Long of Louisiana.

Archbishop Stirs Fight With Integration Pressure

Evening Star P. 2-A Thurs. 2-23-56

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 23 (AP).—Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel, who caught the eye of the late Cardinal Hayes as a struggling young pastor in New York's Harlem, meets the same problems today on a far larger scale as shepherd of the Deep South's largest Catholic flock.

"Negroes were just beginning to move into Harlem in large numbers at that time," said the New Orleans prelate of his four years (1924-28) as rector of St. Joseph of the Holy Family Church in Harlem. Wash. D.C.

"The neighborhood was still predominently white, but Negroes were on the increase. Already they were attending masses and sending their children to our school. Times were changing."

And the 80-year-old archbishop feels that times are changing in the South, too.

Actions Bring Bitter Fight

Last Sunday, after months of prayer and study, he denounced segregation as "morally evil and sinful" in a strongly worded pastoral letter read at all masses throughout the archdiocese. The letter left little doubt that it is only a matter of time, very short time, before parochial schools in the archdiocese are desegregated.

When Archbishop Rummel came to New Orleans 20 years ago, he was widely acclaimed both by Catholics and non-Catholics for his efforts in restoring historic old St. Louis Cathedral, bringing the city its first Eucharistic Congress and fostering numerous charities.

—AP Wirephoto

ARCHBISHOP RUMMEL
Segregation Fighter

Today, in the winter of a half-century priestly career, he is the taciturn center of a bitter segregation controversy that already has closed one church, brought excommunication threats and bids fair to be a major issue in the coming May Legislature.

Native of Germany

In the resulting furor he has been called everything from a man of God to a Yankee, a word devoid of devotion in the present day South.

The designation Yankee is both geographically and rhetorically incorrect.

Born in Baden, Germany Archbishop Rummel came to America at the age of 6 with his immigrant parents and settled in Yorkville, the big German community on Manhattan's East Side. Here he experienced the deep loneliness of an immigrant boy learning a strange language in a strange country and the deep pride of a proud son separated from a proud mother country.

The combination of outcast and patriot no doubt has influenced his handling of the touchy problem of integration vs. tradition.

In his pastoral letter denouncing segregation as "sinful," the archbishop sympathized with the century and a half of Southern tradition and pleaded with his flock to pray for an orderly solution to the problem.

Ordained in Rome

The dual appeal to prayer and reason is characteristic of his own approach to life. From his shoemaker father, Archbishop Rummel early learned that life must be "dutiful before it can be beautiful." He learned to pray at the knee of his mother.

Quickly overcoming the language barrier, Archbishop Rummel built an outstanding academic record in the New York parochial school system and was selected from his class at St. Joseph's Seminary to continue his studies for the priesthood at the North American College in Rome.

Ordained in Rome in 1902, he stayed abroad long enough to obtain a Doctor of Sacred Theology degree, then began a career as curate, pastor, monsignor in the New York Archdiocese and finally Bishop of Omaha in 1928.

Everywhere he went, he was known as a builder, an organizer, and a leader, but the talents he showed for bringing the races together at St. Joseph's Church in Harlem may prove the capstone of his stewardship in New Orleans.

Waning health and failing eyesight have not dimmed the archbishop's vision of a church unified, even in the New Orleans Archdiocese, where one out of every five Catholics is a Negro.

SEGREGATION WRONG, SINFUL, LONG AGREES

Daily Tribune
Dat. 2-25-56
Chicago, Ill.

New Orleans, Feb. 24 (AP)—Earl Long, the incoming governor of Louisiana, today said Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel "is undoubtedly right" in declaring segregation morally wrong and sinful.

"Maybe he is a little too advanced," said Long. "From a religious standpoint he is undoubtedly right. But at this time it may be the wrong time to push it. I'd hate to have his job right now." P. 3

The archbishop, in a pastoral letter read at all masses in his New Orleans archdiocese Sunday, said racial segregation was "morally wrong and sinful" and gave clear indication he would order the parochial schools desegregated.

Face Excommunication

Long made his statement after the official archdiocesan newspaper Catholic Action of the South said Catholic lawmakers preparing bills to enforce parochial school segregation may be excommunicated if the measures become law.

"I wouldn't attempt to tell them how to run the schools," Long, a Baptist, said of the Catholic church. Long is the younger brother of the late Huey P. Long, the governor who gave Louisiana parochial schools free text books and buses.

Long, who will take office May 15, said he is inclined at present to oppose any amendments which would put Catholic schools in Louisiana laws providing for segregation. These laws have been declared unconstitutional by a special three judge federal court.

Thinks He Can Keep It

